SOWING AND REAPING.

Sow with a generous hand,
 Pause not for toil or pain;
 Weary not through the heat of summer,
 Weary not through the cold spring rain;
 But wait till the autumn comes
 For the sheaves of golden grain.

Scatter the seed, and fear not,
 A table will be spread;
 What matter if you are too weary
 To eat your hard earned bread!
 Sow, while the earth is broken,
 For the hungry must be fed.

Sow,—while the seeds are lying
 In the warm earth's bosom deep,
 And your warm tears fall upon it,—
 They will stir in their quiet sleep;
 And the green blades rise the quicker
 Perchance for the tears you weep.

Then sow,—for the hours are fleeting,
 And the seed must fall, to-day;
 And care not what hands shall reap it,
 Or if you have passed away
 Before the waving corn-fields
 Shall gladden the sunny day.

Sow; and look onward, upward,
 Where the starry light appears,—
 Where, in spite of the coward's doubting,
 Or your own heart's doubts and fears,
 You shall reap in joy the harvest
 You have sown, to-day, in tears.

A Letter.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

BELOVED IN THE LORD:—Your letter is at hand. I am too weak to say much in reply, but can perhaps present a few thoughts for contemplation. I hope you are doing a good work, and pray that the Lord will keep your heaven open, so as to have ever an open vision of the celestial ascent and descent. John 1: 51. Keep low down, and meet all heaven-hindering circumstances with the cross, not with "as I will." All self pleasing has its back toward Golgotha, and its face toward the plain of Jordan." Gen. 13: 10, 11. We need not write much, but in order to make five biscuits feast a multitude, we must live much. Life must be great in general before the insignificant particular of two mites can overbalance all the contributions of a well-filled treasury. We have not a few able writers, but only here and there one that contributes to a genuine Christian literature. Our periodicals are becoming more and more intellectual, and, once in a while, we get a fragment that might be termed scholastic. These are two powerful elements, if written of the truth. It is not easy for human nature to hide itself. It assumes many masks, but their presence awakens suspicion, and they are seldom fitted on so well as not to reveal what they would conceal. We have solid articles in the interests of truth which lack the elements of truth. They lack the quality of that which they defend. What is uttered may be all truth, while the utterance is self-originated and self-terminating. Eloquent representations of truth do not necessarily mean the ingrained in working power of what is represented. Great things are put into type which are ignored in the life. Better write five words out of the consciousness of the Divine being, than ten thousand out of the intellect not sealed with the honest amen of heart and life. There is great self-deception possible in this matter, and we all would do well to hold up our articles to the light of the sun of Righteousness, to see whether we discern the water marks of the Holy Ghost.

"Eloi, Eloi, Lama, Sabachthani?" Mark 15: 34.

BY H. P. BRINKWORTH.

Dear reader, what a depth of meaning there is contained in the above words! Have you read them and passed them thoughtlessly by? If so, let us return to them, and see what has caused our blessed Redeemer such agony of mind; such heart-felt grief and agonizing cries. "He was made sin for us who knew no sin." "He bore our sins in his own body on the tree." Oh think of him nailed to the rugged cross on Calvary's brow, hearing the taunts, the jeers, the mocking and scoffings of an excited multitude; and in the midst of all he calmly looks beyond the scene, and cries to his heavenly Father, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." What condescending pity and love! Here we surely see the divinity of the God man. Nature's retaliating principles, where are they? "Father, forgive them," "FATHER, FORGIVE THEM," is still the cry. Oh, wondrous love! And yet, dear reader, that love was for you; that sacrifice for sin was for you. Do not trample under your feet the blood-bought ransom. Do not reject a loving Savior. Open not those bleeding wounds; but, I "beseech you, in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God."

God has such an abhorrence of sin that he could not look upon it; and whilst his own dearly-beloved Son was bearing in his own body the sins of a rebellious world, he has to withdraw. Yes, he forsakes his Son; and thus we hear our loving sin bearer crying in the deepest agony of a sin-stricken soul, "My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

Neither can God look upon us if we are sinful. We must crucify the flesh, and the sinful lusts thereof. We must draw a dividing line between our carnal desires and Christ. The lust of the flesh, the pride of life, the God of this world, must be daily brought under subjection; for we cannot be followers of God and still adhere to the "world's trinity." We must wear the whole armor of God; for to serve our Lord and Master just enough that we will not offend the devil, is a very poor Christian doctrine. Brethren, think you it is safe? and yet how many are there who have gone thus far? Where are your self-denying principles? where your loyalty to king Emmanuel? Arise, thou that sleepest, and call upon thy God. Through much tribulation shall we enter into the kingdom of God. The enemy of your souls is on the alert; he is working zealously; he is leading many captive at his will; he has desired you. Awake, O professing Christian, shake off dull sloth! Gird on thy armor, the Lord demands thy full service, thy consecrated heart, wholly to himself. Oh! reserve not one part, though ever so small, for Satan to lurk in. He finds some work for idle hands; but thy Savior demands thy service. Be strong in his might. Love him sincerely; serve him faithfully.

Behold! behold! the lamb of God
 On the cross! on the cross!
 For you he shed his precious blood
 On the cross! on the cross!
 Oh! hear his all-important cry,
 "Eloi! Lama! Sabachthani!"
 Draw near and see your Savior die
 On the cross! on the cross!

Elmore, Neb.

Christian Ministers and Peace.

The indifference of ministers of the gospel to the cause of peace is amazing. One would suppose that these prominent disciples of the Prince of Peace would oppose war as zealously as they do intemperance, dueling or idolatry; for there is nothing in the wide world so much at variance with christianity as war; nothing which interferes so much with its extension and universal prevalence; nothing which counteracts so much the influence of ministers, and renders their teachings from the pulpit nugatory. There is nothing which degrades, imbrutes, enslaves, demoralizes and unfits men for heaven so much as war, and there is nothing which brings such terrible evils on innocent women and children.

But we are disappointed. While these ministers of Christ are generally peace men in times of peace, they are as generally war men in times of war, especially if their own government is engaged in it. Instead of manfully telling their people that they ought to obey God rather than man, they yield to the mad current of popular opinion, and are carried away by it. Indeed, they add fuel to the flame, by preaching what they call patriotism, instead of universal brotherhood, and incite their hearers to engage in the work of blood. They have done so, not ever since the first establishment of christianity, for during the first two or three hundred years christian ministers as well as christian members, were consistent peace men, and refused to fight and encourage fighting. But they have done so since christianity became partially paganized by its union with the state, under the half christian half heathen Constantine. During the many centuries since then, the world has beheld the surprising spectacle of Christian arrayed against Christian of human slaughter, and for Christian ministers on both sides inciting them to acts of carnage and bloodshed.

What has rendered ministers more guilty, is the power which they have all along possessed, of preventing war entirely. Who doubts that if the 60 000 ministers in our country, north and south, had preached peace as zealously as they urged enlistment, they would have so influenced public sentiment, that some better way out of our national difficulties would have been found than the one adopted. He who does doubt it, does not know the power of 60,000 educated men, speaking weekly or oftener, from as many pulpits, to millions of the most intelligent and influential of our people.

But, alas, ministers are like other men, instead of leading as they should, they are led by public opinion. When it becomes as unpopular for nations to fight as it is now for individuals to do so; when it is generally admitted that it is a thousand times worse to kill a thousand men than it is to kill one man, and that it is just as wrong to murder at the command of another as it is to do it of one's free will, then we may hear as many sermons against war as we do now against intemperance. But who hears sermons against war now? And who has heard them since the church abandoned its primitive testimony against this crime? There have been a few such sermons, but compared with the whole number, they have been as a drop in the bucket, or a sand on the ocean shore. A celebrated French historian once wrote as follows:

"Of the five or six thousand sermons of Massillon, are there a couple where you could pick out a word or two against the scourge and crime of war? Bourdalou preached against impurity, but what sermon did he ever direct against the murder, rapine, brigandage and universal rage which desolate the world? Miserable physicians of souls! you declaim for five quarters of an hour against the mere pricks of a pin, and say no word of the curse which tears us into a thousand pieces!"

Reader, when did your pastor preach on peace and war, and present the Bible view of them? And when will he do it, unless you interest him in these subjects by calling his attention to their importance, and placing peace documents in his hands? We have no hesitation in saying that there will be no next war between our country and another, or between different sections of the United States, if the ministers will do their duty, and that if there is another war, they will be more responsible for it than any other class, because they have greater power to prevent it.

The Chief Concern.

BY J. C. JUDY.

The following thoughts though framed in weakness may be beneficially read by all who are thoughtlessly passing through this world, being busily engaged in the trifling cares of this world. A certain poet tells us that 'Religion is the 'Chief concern

Of mortals here below.'

But when we look around over the world, we are sorry to know that religion is not appreciated as being what the poet terms it.

We fear that there are other things that are considered the chief concerns with many of our fellow travelers, who are, with us, fast approaching the judgment bar of God. We fear that religion, to a certain extent, has been trampled under foot with many, and the perishing things of this world have taken its place. Let us look around and see those who have accumulated the wealth of this world, and we will see those who do not consider religion the chief concern, but with many of them it is carelessly overlooked and passed by as an idle story, and in the perishing objects of this world they are most earnestly engaged.

Oh, what folly, what folly! When we look at ourselves, what are we? What is this life through which we are traveling? It is a vale of tears, a journey from the cradle to the grave. It is a journey through which you, rich men, are traveling as well as I am. It is a journey at the end of which all must meet a judgment seat. Then my friendly readers, consider what folly it is to put religion by, because to-morrow you may die. We can live without religion; we can accumulate wealth without it; we may become great in the estimation of great men without it; but what is all this? When the messenger of death will come there is no defense; we will then have to leave it all; we will then look back, and bid farewell to life, and wealth, and fame, and go down into the silent tomb, and there be hid from the view of those around us. Then it is, though too late, that we will begin to consider with the poet that religion is the chief concern with us poor mortals here below.

Then "awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee life."

Peace. Luke 2: 14.

BY Z. ANNON.

How sweet, oh, how sweet, is that word peace! Sweet was the song that the heavenly host did sing—"Glorry to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to ward men."

John Walker, an English writer gives the following: "1st, Peace, respite from war; quiet, rest, stillness, reconciliation, silence. 2nd, Peace, a word commanding silence, a word enjoining peace." What a comfort it is, even to nations, to be in peace. Well may the people of God pray for the time to come when swords may be beaten into plough-shares, and spears into pruning hooks, when nations may learn war no more. How many of us have seen peace broken, and war would take its place. Look, if you please, at the late war of the United States, when peace was broken and war declared. See the broken families, the departing of friends. Hear the roaring of guns, the clattering of swords, the jingling of bayonets. All, all to shed blood. But when peace prevails, everything is to the contrary, and the sweet, melodious song is sung, "Peace, sweet Peace"

Again, when peace is in the church, how smoothly everything works—the God of peace reigning in our hearts. Sinners will say, "How those Christians love one another." But when there are confusion, backbiting, hard sayings, divisions, malice, and such like, it gives the Infidel great room to say there is no reality in religion. Brethren, such things ought not to be.

But again, come to the family where peace prevails. How consoling it is to hear such news that all is peace; to visit such kind ones and talk about the Holy One, the Redeemer. But if jars and jangles are amongst them, our visit is not so pleasant; a dark cloud arises up before us instead of a ray of divine light from the God of peace.

Paul says, "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Rom. 5: 1. "Having abolished in his (Christ's) flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace. And came and preached peace" Ephesians 2: 15, 16. "And having made peace through the blood of the cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself." Col. 1: 20. Let me say to those who may chance to read it, "Live in peace." Isaiah says, "I create the fruit of the lips; peace, peace to him that is far off, and to him that is near, saith the Lord, and I will heal him."

The Lake of Galilee.

It is sometimes said that the Lake of Galilee is very like Windermere. I think that the comparison must have originated with some traveller who holds the opinion of a friend of mine, that all lakes are alike. To any one who has discovered the differences between one lake and another—differences at least as great as those between one mountain and another, and almost as great as those between one book, or one man and another—the comparison could never have occurred. Of course, if anyone thinks that Loch Lomond is at all like Derwentwater, or Grasmere like Wastwater, he may also think that the Lake of Galilee is like Windermere. I know Windermere pretty well. I have seen it every month of the year except one, and hardly know in which month it is most beautiful; I have seen it in most of its moods as well as in most of its tenes—in storm and in sunshine; with snow on the surrounding hills; with the fresh bright green of June on the meadows; with the splendid heights about the head of the lake covered with the rich browns and the gold and the amber of November, as with the robe of a king; I have seen it lying pale and white in the light of the early morning, and looking angry and sullen under gathering clouds. The Lake of Galilee is no more like Windermere than Monmouth is like Macedon. Both of the lakes are long sheets of fresh water lying among hills, but there the likeness ends.

The form of the Lake of Galilee is familiar. Its eastern shore is bordered by a long line of steep hills, having a level ridge. My first impression was that, with the exception of a thin covering of grass which was too thin and too patchy to cover the rocks, these hills were bare; but on looking more carefully I could see a few bushes and trees. The sides are broken with occasional ravines, and down these ravines I noticed strips of more vivid green, indicating the presence of mountain streams.

On the northeast the hills are not so steep; they slope up to high plains covered with forests of oak; and beyond these is a range of loftier mountains. Far away in the north Hermon rises grandly with its perpetual snows. The hills on the western side are much less steep than those on the eastern side. They are covered with grass to their very summits, which rise about 1,200 feet, or perhaps more, above the lake.

The water is said to be full of fish, but there were only two rickety boats to be seen. They were so old and battered that they looked as if they might have been the very boats which Peter left on the shore when he gave up fishing at the call of his Master.

The lake seemed to me to have more of the awe of Christ's presence about it than almost any of the sacred sites that we had seen. The very desolation deepened the solemnity, and left the mind more completely alone with Him. I remember one curious illustration of the power which its sacred memories had over me. My revolver had been loaded some days, perhaps some weeks before, and one or two of the chambers still had cartridges in them. I wanted to discharge them, and I could have fired over the lake without the chance of hurting anybody; but when I took the pistol in my hand I felt that to make a rude noise on those shores and among those hills would be as great an act of irreverence as to make a rude noise in a church.

In the time of our Lord the shores of the Lake, now so lonely, were densely populated. It was in the cities, towns, and villages which then surrounded these inland waters, that most of His mighty works were done. The only city which, so far as the Gospels inform us, our Lord never entered, still stands. Tiberias was founded by Herod Antipas when our Lord was still a youth in Nazareth, and there are many remains of its ancient magnificence. But its walls and towers are miserably dilapidated, and the site which they enclose is much larger than the present population can cover. The mean little town—it contains about two thousand inhabitants—looks like a shrivelled kernel lying in a broken shell. The only brightness and relief come from the trees which rise here and there among the houses.—R. W. Dale.

WE may divide thinkers into those who think for themselves and those who think through others; the latter are the rule, the former the exception. The first, therefore, are original thinkers in a double sense, and egotists in the noblest meaning of the word, it is from them alone that the world learns wisdom. For only the light which we have kindled in ourselves can illuminate others.—Schopenhauer.

CONTENTMENT is not to be found in sitting still, and waiting for blessings to drop into one's mouth. This is mere slothfulness. Contentment is an act of virtue. It denotes repletion of joy—"full measure pressed together, shaken down, running over." Inertia brings languor, weariness, discontent. It is a stagnant pool, which frets, and seethes, and bubbles, and gives off poisonous gases. Running water is ever the brightest.

None can love his neighbor as himself, unless he first love God. And none can love God unless he believe in Christ; unless he have redemption through his blood, and the Spirit of God bearing witness with his spirit that he is a child of God.

IN BEREAVEMENT.

I linger by the river side,
That rolls so deep, so dark, so wide,
And sadly gaze and sweetly dream
Of loved ones who have crossed the stream.

My feet are on the crumbling brink,
Nor shall my spirit faint and shrink
To know that I must soon explore
The mystery of that hidden shore.

I will not doubt that I shall meet
In new communion, pure and sweet,
The ransomed ones, whose hearts with mine
Were wont on earth to intertwine.

I seem to see them waiting stand,—
Grown native in that better land,—
Expectant when I too shall come,
And they shall bid me welcome home.

I cherish not the thought unblest
That would disturb their sacred rest;
I would not summon back my dead,
Earth's troubled paths again to tread.

I thank my Lord that when I've stood
And watched my friends essay the flood,
A blessed calm the air has filled
And every billow has been stilled.

His word, whose voice all storms obey,
Has bound the winds and smothered the way;
His angel guards have hovered near,
And faith and love have conquered fear.

And so may I in peace embark,
Nor find the passage cold or dark,
By angel convoy guided o'er,
And lauded on the shining shore.

I'll patient wait till I can see
The spirit hands that beckon me,
And break, without a fruitless tear,
The ties that would detain me here.

How sweet shall be my new employ!
What holy, consecrated joy,
To join the friends I there shall find,
To welcome those I've left behind!

I cannot praise his grace divine
Who makes a hope so precious mine;
I cannot aim to fitly sing
The love I owe Salvation's King,

For, over all, I feel the while,
The beaming of the Savior's smile,
And every hope and joy combine
In the sure sense that he is mine.

An Admonition.

BY G. W. ANNON.

"Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth." Col. 3: 2.

"Set our affections," says the apostle, "on things above." Then our minds should be deeply impressed with the language of the apostle. We sometimes think, and are almost sure, that we are too negligent in this all-important matter—things that pertain to our eternal salvation. Our affections are set too much on this earth and the transitory things thereof; for we are all hastening to the tomb, whether prepared or unprepared. We must die; for "dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." Solemn words; oh, how true! How many have we seen called from time to eternity. Some have been transplanted into the regions of eternal glory, and some, on the other hand, have gone, we fear, to the under world, to die the death that never dies. Oh, how solemn, to think that one soul is lost and gone to eternal perdition, "where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched!" Then let us set our affections on things above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God; who died that we might live; who was bruised for our sakes.

"Where sickness, sorrow, pain and death,
Are felt and feared no more;"

How negligent we are! How indifferently we treat Jesus, who has done so much for us! No other friend we treat so ill. Then those who are in Christ are safe so long as they do their duty; but there is danger of getting cold and lukewarm as did the Laodiceans, and for this coldness there is danger of being spewed out of his mouth. Then let us keep our affections on things above. If our affections should run in that direction as they do on things of the earth, how much nobler we would be! We are married to the world, too much, and the things therein. Our affections are too much on our farms, fine horses and cattle, and the fashionable things of this life—things that are highly esteemed among men, which are an abomination in the sight of God—things that are sinful. Let us watch over one another as becometh Christians, and not backbite, nor engage in evil surmises. Let us all look at one another's welfare, and try to build one another up in the most holy faith; and if we do these things, we shall never fail—we will be neither barren nor unfruitful. "Love not the world neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father but is of the world. And the world passeth away and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God, abideth forever." 1 John 2: 15—17. Set not your affections on things of the earth, but on things above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God, where angels and powers, and authorities are being made subject unto him. Then what I say unto one, I say unto all, watch.

Two Ways of Preaching Illustrated.

BY J. S. FLORY.

Rev. Kid Glove D. D., in passing his neighbor A's house discovers smoke coming through the roof. On approaching the door he finds it locked and a card thereon giving the information that the owner is across the way at a neighbor's. He goes leisurely along the beaten path, leading around over smooth ground arriving at the place he expects to find his neighbor. In a careful manner he brushes the dust from his silken robes, and, in a ceremonial way, presents himself at the door, inquires for Mr. A. After some preliminary remarks he enters upon an elaborate and scientific discourse upon the subject of the combustible nature of wooden houses in general, and his neighbor's house in particular. Having noticed this part of his subject, under its various headings, he next proceeds to enter upon a thorough exposition of the nature of fire when brought in contact with any thing of a combustible nature. Mr. A. becomes interested upon the subject, purely from a scientific standpoint, and the speaker notices his discourse is being admired. Now and then he throws in a foreign adjunct—a few latin phrases—no matter whether understood or not, all for effect, that people may not be ignorant of the world of learning in so small a compass as his head. Having got through his "first," "secondly" and "thirdly," and his notes giving out, he in conclusion informs neighbor A, that from visible evidence, ocularly demonstrated, he is of the impression his house is on fire! Mr. A. is somewhat undecided whether to accept of the learned D. D.'s individual conclusions as applicable to himself and his house or not. After Mr. A. is required to compensate the minister for his trouble in coming out of the way to inform him of his discovery, he concludes the object in view was the money, so he rests at ease, and eventually he finds his house and his all has been consumed.

As a contrast to the above we will notice how Mr. Plain-speech does under similar circumstances. No sooner does he make the discovery of the danger his neighbor B's house is in, than he puts spurs to his steed and gallops across the rough way, over hills, through slough, more regardless of his personal ease or comfort than of his neighbor's interests; and arriving at the place he expects to find Mr. B., without much ceremony, other than an earnest zeal, informs him his house is on fire and to make all haste ere it be too late.

Mr. B. would tarry a moment to thank him for his trouble; but no, he wants nothing for doing his duty and so urges him to run. Mr. B. is convinced from the earnest and evident interest manifested in his favor by Mr. Plain speech that there is some truth in his information, and, without hesitating, hurries home in time to save his house and effects.

In preaching there are two ways of doing it. One man goes about it in a sickly, sentimental way, which has for a basis system, after the order of men. Christ may be the theme, but there is no Christ in the theories spun out thin as cob-webs, yet thick enough to blind the eye, or, at least, dazzle the vision. Stylish, high-toned affectation may reach the intellectual faculties of a pompous, ear itching congregation, but how impervious is the heart to such theology.

Ministers who travel on circles, keeping at a distance from the grand centre of truth, seldom hit the mark. Sermons hatched in the brain, and fledged from a smooth tongue, take aerial flights, that in their beautiful gyrations fascinate the wondering crowd; but the end—like a comet's tail—vanishes in air. It is fashionable to have the pulpit to conform to the wants of the unregenerate throng. Every period must be rounded, the language of holy writ so softened and polished as to come up to the standard of an accomplished, sensitive people, and the length of service measured with the line of human endurance, which, in matters of religion, has become very short, but in matters of worldly pleasure and revelry has become extremely long.

Finally, when sinners are told, in conclusion, that from apparent evidences their home is on fire—that they are subjects of God's wrath, they sit seemingly unmoved; not comprehending the situation, they are indifferent as to the application of the subject of salvation to themselves. Is it any marvel that men and women are so indifferent to their interests while the offers of mercy are so bountiful? Water may be abundant near a burning house, but the house will burn, nevertheless, unless men are urged to make use of the water in extinguishing the fire in good time. So it is important that the unregenerate world should be plainly taught the importance of laying hold and seeking salvation through the present means of grace. To most successfully accomplish this important necessity, we want more of that other kind of "pulpit eloquence." We want such as the apostles were, that "shun not to declare the whole counsel of God; that spur their energies up to all their might; that will take the short cut to the sinner's heart, regardless of the difficulties in the way; tell him candidly that the smoldering fires of hell are smoking within his house, that the kindlings of Divine wrath are flickering in his heart. Tell it in a way that he will feel that you are concerned about his interests, and that your sympathies are with his soul's salvation more than with his pockets. Throw fine polished speeches and long drawn out technical terms and honey-tongued threads of discourse to the "dogs, sorcerers, and whore-mongers."

Better wake a man with a harsh sound and a jar than let him burn to death while contriving some quiet way to reach him. Sermons that proceed from the heart over even an unpolished tongue are likely to reach the heart, especially when they are seasoned with love and have the accompaniment of the Holy Spirit. Sermons in demonstration of the divine element are sermons that melt the heart and awake a slumbering people to act for eternity. If Christ is the theme of discourse—and he that would preach the gospel must preach Jesus—let Christ be the sum and substance also. An exhibition of self always leads the speaker and the congregation away from Jesus, and is calculated to extinguish the divine elements so important in effectual preaching. A man that in his discourse keeps close to the fountain of truth flowing from the cross of Jesus, need not fear a tumble from the pinnacle of the temple. The tendency of frail humanity is to a state of exaltation, and when apparent in the pulpit, it savors of corruption, and sooner or later brings its dire results. On the other hand, affected humility hath the seal of hypocrisy; hence what best becometh a herald of the cross is "I am what I am." The natural man, clothed with his own abilities and filled with the Holy Ghost, is far better qualified to "preach the gospel" than he that would appear in a borrowed dress, or is dependant on his literary abilities and powers of oratory. Either or both of these last qualities are not to be despised when duly tempered in the mould of Divine knowledge and held under the powers and influence of the Holy Spirit.

To sum up the two ways of preaching, we have one that has for its aim to please the world, bring popularity, and be a source of worldly prosperity; to move with the masses and organize powerful organizations of a religious character. The other has for its aim to please God rather than men, save the ungodly, and reprove the world of sin and all unrighteousness; to separate a people from the world, who may live soberly and righteously in this present world as pilgrim strangers, seeking a better country. In religious organizations, seek for the Divine power rather than a power upon the political arena of the world, or upon the world's stage of action.

Which of these two ways of preaching most accords with the principles of the gospel, and is most likely to meet with divine approbation, we leave the reader to decide, believing no one will be at a loss to come to a proper and right conclusion, and act accordingly.

Cheer Him.

Mr. Moody tells a thrilling incident of the great Chicago fire. A child was in an upper room, screaming for help, while the devouring flames were wrapping the building in the fiery winding sheet of death. A stalwart fireman thrust his ladder against the wall, and began to ascend. A crowd gathered, and as the brave man was about to enter the window, volumes of smoke and fire burst forth, and he stopped, hesitated, faltered. Suddenly a man cried "cheer him," and loud exulting cheers immediately burst from every lip, which, like a thundering avalanche, urged the man forward, who, springing upward with renewed energy, dashed through the fiery billow, grasped the child, and bore it in triumph from the very jaws of death.

A hard-worked pastor, pinched and cramped by the sickly stipend of a sickly religion, is discouraged and well-nigh overwhelmed, he is on the point of relinquishing his holy office and turning to the filthy lucre of the world, when some noble spirit, actuated by the mind of the Master, speaks a word of comfort that like a magic talisman dissolves every doubt, inspires new courage, and places his foot firmly on the ladder of duty. Oh, these cheering words, how noble, but how few!

A man becomes almost omnipotent when a whirlwind of cheering bears him on. Fire may roll, and surge, and glow, and smoke may ascend, but when life is imperiled, every impediment is swept aside, danger is faced, opposition overcome, and victory is ours. We little think how much a whispered cheer will nerve another. It may be echoed in life's success, and thunder in the chorus of heavenly song. Shall we not plant roses rather than thorns?

Cheer the despondent soul intent on duty, and struggling like a hero for the right. The cheer may be taken up by others, and that which to day is whispered hesitatingly, may to-morrow be the chief note of your battle song.

How many weary, faint hearted ministers are longing and waiting for the cheers of their people? Year in and year out they toil, and dig, and plough, and sow; praying, weeping, hoping looking for the harvest; and when it does appear, there are no cheering words to nerve their hands as they grasp the heavenly sickle. How many thus pass down to the grave, feeling that they have had the approbation of heaven, with its warmth, and rapture, and glory, but from men, nothing but the frigidity of criticism, and the hollow formality of assumed friendship.

When God cheers let men cheer. When He paints the rose with its delicate hues, let no human hand blast its beauty or hide its glory. There is night enough in this dark world without Christians casting shadows about them, instead of a halo of light.

The young man seeking to break the iron fetters of old associations needs a cheer. Give it to him, and tell him it is manly, bold, true, and God-like to flee from sin. There are dangers all about him, but tell him the ladder leads upward. Cheer his sinking courage, nerve his brawny arm, assure his fainting heart that there are friends who are ready to shout "BRAVO" with every gallant step toward hope and triumph.

There are fainting wives and mothers who need cheering. From the morning dawn till late at night they are subject to a constant drain upon the vital energies of life, until weary and hopeless they drag themselves away from the drudgery of the day, to seek shelter beneath the dark wings of night. Not a word of cheer strikes the broken harp of the soul, and overcome with the burden, they sink into premature graves, where the sun, which never seemed to shine during life, kisses kindly and benevolently the little hillocks which mark their last resting place. Oh, give the wives and mothers a cheer. Life is bitter enough, and why will we withhold that small pittance of encouragement, which will cause their hearts to leap with joy. Cheer them, ye gray-haired fathers, ready to die, and go to your reward; let your sunset scatter the gleaming glories of open day. Cheer them, young men, strong to labor firm in hope; your strength is the result of sterling character in your ancestry, and will you not sustain the tottering form that leans upon your arm and heart? Cheer them, ye grown daughters, ye mischievous urchins, ye prattling children, ye cooing babies; let all the world cheer the right and detest the wrong; and so shall life's burdens be lightened, and sorrow's gloomy night become vocal with the notes of praise.—*M. ### Home.

BY PHEBE A. LEHMAN.

If you will permit me space in your columns, I will try to write a few lines for your valuable paper on the subject of Home. Having been absent from Home for some time, and just returned, I think I can more than ever realize and appreciate the worth of Home, and the presence of the loved ones from whom I was separated.

I left Feb. 21st, 1875, for a visit to my brothers and sister in Iowa, where I spent nearly seventeen months, and returned July 17th, 1876. I can truly say I feel thankful to the giver of all good and perfect gifts for protecting me during my absence, and also my friends with whom I have again met. Although, when I look around, I see quite a change through the neighborhood. Some of my former associates have changed time with eternity; and a near and dear neighbor woman has been taken out of this world, from her dear family and friends who miss her very much; but we have yet been spared that we could still better prepare for that great and solemn change, for which we should certainly feel thankful.

I often think if it is such a pleasure to return to an earthly Home, what must be the enjoyment of gaining a Home in heaven, to which there is no end, where there is no parting, no sorrow, sickness or death, but all is joy. With pleasure I can say that, during my absence, many of my associates have entered the ark of safety and put on Christ; and I do hope they will remain therein and proceed to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. I would now say to all, persevere in this good work in which you have begun. You will always find enough to do. The more we exercise in God's words and laws the more we find to do, and the more ready and willing we become to obey them. Oh, how necessary it is for us to be up and doing, when we consider, for a moment, how short our lives are, and how apt we are to become conquered by that enemy, the destroyer of souls. We should certainly strive our utmost to follow in the very footsteps of Jesus. We may sometimes think it is a hard matter to live a Christian life; but it seems to me when such thoughts enter our minds it always is when we are not watching closely enough, for the more closely we are on our watch and guard the easier and pleasanter it is for us to live a Christian life. When we consider in how many various ways we may be tempted, then we can see the worth of prayer and watching, for the Savior says, "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation." Although our circumstances may not be favorable to our living a life as holy and acceptable unto God, as we would desire, and hence we often grow cold and careless in the discharge of our duties to God. Because of this I think it a duty to always try to obtain a situation in this life that we may live a life devoted unto God. If even we should have to deprive ourselves of some of the pleasures and comforts of this life, what is that compared to eternity? Our reward will only be the greater. I cannot help but think we cannot be too much concerned about the manner in which we spend this life; for I have experienced that when we are surrounded by people who do not seem concerned, or stop to think when they approach their tables of refreshment, or retire to their beds of repose, from whom they receive all these blessings, we are led from our path of duty before we are aware of it, and grow so cold and careless that we often fall short of doing what we ought to do. Therefore I think we should always prefer a situation that we may live a godly life, although friends should shun us for it, or despise us and talk disrespectfully of us. They may term it unbelieving or "green," so to say, yea, even brothers and sisters in the church may be inclined to talk disrespectfully of us and grieve us very much, yet when we think of what encouraging passages of Scripture we have, we should rejoice. It teaches us that we should not fear man who is only able to destroy the body, but afterwards hath no more power, but rather fear God who is able to destroy both body and soul in hell.

"How careful then ought we to live,
With what religious fear,
Who such a strict account must give
For our behavior here!"

How necessary it is for us to be on our watch that we do not talk disrespectfully of our brethren and sisters, or accuse them wrongfully; for we very often talk of others' doings and actions and know nothing about their design or their reason for doing so. I believe if we were always in the footsteps of Jesus, we would not find so much fault in our fellow man, but would be more apt to see our own errors, which may be greater than those about whom we talk.

To those of my dear friends who are still outside of the ark, I hardly know what to say, for it seems to me that your duty must be so plain to you that it would not be necessary for me to explain it, or the consequence of neglecting it; but I hope there may many more of you soon see the errors of your ways, and turn to God, and seek rest for your souls, that when time will cease with us here, we may all be prepared to meet in that Heavenly Home where parting will be no more.

PACKAGE—No. 7.

Some persons when spoken to concerning the salvation of their souls, express themselves as being willing to come to Jesus, but say they are waiting for some one that they want to go with them. We know of some who say they are waiting for their husbands. Wait for no one, but go alone, and perhaps your example may be the means God will employ to bring the one you are waiting for. Did you ever think of it, that you will have to die alone? Alone you will cross the river of death; alone you will stand before God in judgment; though you should appear before Him with assembled millions yet none can support or comfort you. You will be judged alone. Consider. Have you time to wait for any one? To-day you may reach the end of time. You remember on one occasion Jesus commanded a certain man to follow him, and the man requested that he might first go and bury his father; but Jesus suffered him not. If, then, when Jesus calls, you dare not take time to bury a father, is there anything or any person you dare wait for?

—How absurd seems the idea of Paul's standing before a congregation and calmly reading a sermon from manuscript. He could not have impressed such multitudes if that had been his manner of proclaiming the story of the cross. A sermon read from manuscript may be very good, but it cannot be so impressive as if delivered without notes of any kind. The heavens can not but feel that the speaker is more concerned about the style and delivering of his sermon than he is about the salvation of sinners. The words did not seem to come from the heart of the man, and consequently they did not go to the hearts of his hearers. Suppose a man endeavoring to cross the Niagara River in a boat. He is being, imperceptibly to himself, drawn into the rapids. Two men on the shore perceive his danger. One draws a manuscript from his pocket and reads him a discourse on the folly of trying to cross the river so close to the rapids. He raises his voice so as to be heard, and closes with directions how to escape; but the man heeds him not. The other man, his voice choking with emotion, calls to him and warns him of his danger, and tells him what to do till he can render him assistance; at the same time earnestly preparing to help him. The man in the boat, perceiving how earnestly he calls and works, is impressed and thinks there certainly must be danger ahead, and he watches and listens anxiously. So it is with preaching. If a minister is anxious and earnest himself, he will inspire the same feeling in the hearts of his hearers. Once a preacher feels the weight of souls, as Paul did when he said, "I could wish myself accursed from Christ, for my brethren my kinsmen according to the flesh," he will not have much need of manuscript.

—It is a common, and in some respects a true, saying, "that one might as well be out of the world as out of the fashion;" but we think the expression unbecoming a Christian, when given as an excuse for following the fashions. Christians are out of the world, and the fashions and opinions of the world should have no power over them. A Christian is a pilgrim passing through the world to a better country. How can a pilgrim follow the fashions? He cannot be continually stopping to learn the latest styles; besides, some of the fashions would be a great hindrance in traveling. Plain, comfortable clothing suits a traveler best. If a Christian woman wants to know whether it is wrong for her to wear a "pin back" dress, let her consider how difficult it is for her to kneel in one, and the answer will be plain.

We sometimes wonder that ministers are not more discouraged when they see so little fruit of their labors. Often for many days they throw out the gospel net and catch nothing. Is it because they fail to "cast on the right side?" with some, we think, their failure is due to lack of earnestness. They throw out the net in a listless manner, scarcely expecting or caring to catch anything, and consequently they draw the net in empty. But we are sure there are many earnest souls who mourn because they cannot do more. To such we send a morsel of manna in the following lines:

THE FISHER.

Sorrow and strife and pain
Have crushed my spirit with resistless hand,
Long have I toiled, O Lord, and wrought in vain,
But still, at thy command.

Into the wide blue sea,
Clinging to thine own word, I cast the net;
Thy covenant of old was made with me
And I will trust thee yet.

Lord, it is hard to stand
Waiting and watching in this silent toil,
While other fishers draw their nets to land,
And shout to see their spoil.

My strength fails unawares,
My hands are weak—my sight grows dim with tears;
My soul is burden'd with unanswered prayers,
And sick of doubts and fears.

I see across the deep,
The moon cast down her fetters, silver-bright,
As if to bind the ocean in his sleep
With links of living light.

I hear the roll and rush
Of waves that kiss the bosom of the beach;
That soft sea-voice which ever seems to hush
The tones of human speech.

A breeze comes sweet and chill
Over the waters, and the night wanes fast:
His promise fails; the net is empty still,
And hope's old dreams are past!

Slow fade the moon and stars,
And in the East the new dawn faintly shines Through dim grey shadows flecked with pearly bars,
And level silver lines.

But lo! what form is this
Standing beside me on the desolate shore?
I bow my knees; his garment's hem I kiss;
Master, I doubt no more!

"Draw in thy net, draw in,"
He cries, "behold the straining meshes break!"

Ah, Lord, the spoil I toiled so long to win
Is granted for thy sake!

The rosy day blooms out
Like a full-blossomed flower; the joyous sea Lifts up its voice; the winds of morning shout

All glory, God, to thee!

A Word to Busy Women.

Do we realize, we busy people, how recklessly we abbreviate our hours of devotion? How little space we spare for God! Hours? Some of us can compress into one poor, meager hour a week, exclusive of Sundays and prayer-meeting nights, our time spent in reading the Bible and in prayer. To be blessed and tranquil, and spiritually to grow, we must commune with the invisible. A few hurried moments in the morning, a few tired moments in the evening, a fragmentary dash at Matthew or Mark, and a few verses hastily read with the sense of a duty accomplished, are not enough to lift one over the roughness and materialities of every day. They are better than no reading, and better than no prayer, but to have a living sense of the nearness of God, one must abide in him. We ought to read more of the Bible at a time than we do.—Sel.

MEN bear with each other's faults and vices for years, and shoot each other for a careless remark. A man bears with his wife's faults, and the wife with her husband's shortcomings, for a score of years, and flash up in an unlucky minute about the merest nothing, to undo the work of all the year—to forget the tender memories—to repudiate the affection—to sneer at the idea of love.—Church Advocate.

Natural History—Ornithology No. 2.

BY HOWARD MILLER.

PHILOHELA MINOR.—This is the scientific name of a bird which nearly every body living in the country has seen, but of which few know very much as to its habits and natural history.

Philohela minor very much resembles, in general appearance and feather markings, the partridge, or quail; and although it differs widely in everything but size and general looks, yet a very superficial observer seeing one in a cornfield might mistake it for a partridge, or Oryz Virginiaus, as ornithologists know it.

Philohela minor comes from the south in March or late in February, and builds its nest very early, sometimes in March. The nest is found in the swampiest places and very few persons have ever seen the poor affair, which it constructs out of dead leaves and a little grass at the foot of a stump or on a fallen tree, and in which from two to four eggs are laid. The eggs are nearer round than most other birds' eggs. They measure about an inch and a half long, not quite so much through, and in plump roundness resemble the layer.

The color is a light clay, variously spotted with brown or gray markings. When the young are hatched, they resemble the old ones except in the markings. Most readers have observed the peculiar ground-squirrel stripes on the back of some little chickens, and the young of Philohela minor are similarly striped.

The remarkable feature about the bird under consideration is its length of bill, which is very long, and is used for probing down into the mud for slugs, worms, and other inhabitants of such places. No solid substances have ever been observed in this bird's stomach. Its food seems to be squeezed into a jelly in the bird's beak in the process of swallowing. It is a very stupid looking bird and has no song. In the mating season it has been noticed flying from a great height to the ground, crying in a quiet way, "clucky, clucky, clucky;" and when it gets to the ground, "squawk" is what it says. Sportsmen hunt this bird mercilessly and it is regarded as a prime delicacy, and is very expensive food for those who like it served up the way it is usually at the restaurants.

The swamps seem to be the home of this bird, though I have seen it in the cornfields, and in the woods, turning over leaves hunting for worms. The place in which boys would most likely find it is along a spring run, and I have known a pair to remain all winter in such a location. They are not easily disturbed when not hunted, and will go dodging along the banks and over the mud as carelessly as a chicken in the yard.

It is a question among naturalists as to how widely diffused Philohela minor is, as it is certain that in some localities it is unknown, but east of the Rocky mountains it is found, and probably west. Some young reader in the territories can probably tell. As this is rather a difficult exercise, you can talk to the old folks about the common name, and, may be, learn something new about it, which you may put in your letter or on your card to me.

The Golden Rule Exemplified.

Early one morning, while it was yet dark, a poor man came to my door, and informed me that he had an infant child very sick, which he was afraid would die. He desired me to go to his home, and, if possible, prescribe some medicine to relieve it. "For," said he, "I want to save its life if possible." As he spoke the tears ran down his face. He then added:

"I am a poor man; but, doctor, I will pay you in work as much as you ask if you will go." I said, "Yes, I will go with you as soon as I take a little refreshment."

"O, sir," said he, "I was going to try to get a bushel of corn, and get it ground to carry, and I am afraid the child will die before I get home. I wish you would not wait for me," and then added—"We want to save the child's life if we can."

It being some miles to his house, I did not arrive there until the sun was two hours high in the morning, where I found the mother holding her sick child, and six or seven little ragged boys and girls around her, with clean hands and faces, looking as their mother did, lean and poor. On examining the sick child, I discovered it was starving to death! I said to the mother—

"You don't give milk enough for this child."

She said, "I suppose I don't."

"Well," said I, "you must feed it with milk."

She said, "I would, sir, but I can't get any to feed it with."

I then said, "It will be well then for you to make a little water gruel, and feed your child."

To this she said, "I was thinking I would if my husband brings home some Indian meal. He has gone to try to get some, and I am in hopes he will make out."

She said all this with a sad countenance. I asked her with surprise, "Why, madam, have you nothing to eat?"

She strove to suppress a tear, and answered sorrowfully, "No sir, we have had but little these some days."

I said, "What are your neighbors, that you should suffer among them?"

She said, "I suppose they are good people; but we are strangers in this place, and don't wish to trouble any of them, if we can get along without."

I thought I would give the little child a little manna, so I asked for a spoon. The little girl went to the table drawer to get one, and her mother said to her—"Get the longest handled spoon."

As she opened the drawer, I saw only two spoons, and both with the handles broken off, but one handle was a little longer than the other. Thinks I to myself this is a very poor family, but I will do the best that I can to relieve them. While I was preparing the medicine for the sick child, I heard the oldest boy (who was about fourteen) say—"You shall have the biggest piece now, because I had the biggest piece before." I turned round to see who it was that manifested such a principle of justice, and I saw four or five children sitting in the corner, where the oldest was dividing a roasted potato among them. And he said to one, "You shall have the biggest piece now," etc. But the other said, "Why, brother, you are the oldest, and you ought to have the biggest piece."

"No," said the other, "I had the biggest piece before."

I turned to the mother, and said: "Madam, you have potatoes to eat I suppose?"

She replied, "We have had, but that is the last one left; and the children have now roasted that for their breakfast."

On hearing this, I hastened home, and informed my wife that I had taken the wrong medicine with me to the sick family. I then prescribed a gallon of milk and two loaves of bread, some butter, meat and potatoes, and sent my boy with these, and had the pleasure to hear in a few days that they were all well.

The principle of justice manifested in those children delighted my soul, and was a rich reward for all my labor. O, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity and love! To see them in time of distress and starvation so just and liberal as to give each one his full share of roasted potato, was a pleasant sight. O, the sweet words, "You shall have the biggest piece now, because I had the biggest piece before!" May every child embrace this just and loving principle!—N. Y. Cabinet.

A timid person is frightened before a danger, a coward during the time, and a courageous person afterwards.—Richter.

Miscellaneous.

Insect Statistics.

In 1872 the caterpillars of the brown tail moth were so numerous as to defoliate the trees of a very large part of the South of England. The alarm was so great that public prayers were offered in the churches that the calamity might be stayed. The poor were paid one shilling per bushel for collecting caterpillars' webs to be burned under the inspection of the overseer of the parish; and four score bushels were collected daily in some parishes. But on the other hand, the benefits derived from the labor of some insects should not be overlooked; some species feed on noxious weeds, and other prey on still more noxious insects. One of the greatest friends of the agriculturist is the family of ichneumon flies, which lay their eggs in the bodies of living caterpillars, in which they are hatched, thus destroying them; although the caterpillar, after being "ichneumonized," has still a voracious appetite. The caterpillars which feed on the cabbage eat twice their weight in a day; the larvæ of some of the flesh flies eat a much larger proportion than this. The productive powers of insects vary very much. Some lay only two eggs; others, such as the white ant, 40,000,000, laying them at the rate of sixty a minute. The queen of a beehive is capable of laying 50,000 in a season; the female wasp, 30,000. The majority of insects, however, lay but one hundred; in general the larger the insect, the fewer the eggs it lays. Most insects have two generations in a year; some have twenty; others take seven years from the time the egg is laid until their death in a perfect state. But probably not above five per cent. of the eggs laid become perfect insects. Our insectivorous birds are diligent in destroying the larvæ of insects, but they will not do all that is required; hard labor is also needed.—London Times.

China's First Railway.

On the last day of June, the first railway of China was opened after much delay, with great ceremony and success. It required much management, discretion and patience for the English engineers to inaugurate this enterprise, that is small, indeed, compared with the ordinary advantages of more civilized communities. It is a single line, with a very narrow gauge, employing three very small locomotives, and, at present, completed for a distance of five miles only, from Shanghai to Kangwan. It is expected that the other half, from Kangwan to Woosung, will be opened in a few weeks. During the day after the opening, the natives were allowed to travel free upon the new road, and the privilege seems to have been appreciated by large numbers. During the succeeding week, in which six trains ran daily each way, the patronage was so good that the receipts were very encouraging. Everything that helps to break down the barriers between nations, contributes to the strength of the influences that seek to make all men one in Christ Jesus. Steam and electricity will never regenerate the world, but they are mighty forces in his hand who maketh the clouds his chariot and who walketh upon the wings of the wind.—N. Y. Observer.

Jews in the Old World.

From statistics published in a French journal it appears, says the Pall Mall Gazette, that Jerusalem does not contain more than eight or nine thousand, and that the Jews are rather more numerous in North Africa than they are in Judea. There are scarcely any Jews in Italy or Spain, and in Great Britain they do not form more than one in a thousand of the inhabitants. In France they are in the proportion of four to one thousand of the whole population, but this comparatively high proportion is due to the fact that the Jews are very numerous in the departments on the German frontier, the Bas-Rhin alone containing 20,935. In the annexed provinces of Alsace Lorraine the Jews number 40,928 out of a total population of a million and a half, while in Switzerland there are only 7,087 Jews to a total population of more than two millions and a half. Germany, including the Polish provinces and Alsace Lorraine, contains no more than 512,160 Jews; while in Austria they number 1,376,000, or 3.8 per cent. of the whole population. Nearly a third of the Austrian Jews inhabit the province of Galicia, where they form nearly an eighth of the whole population, and where at the rate of increase observed during the last twenty years, they will eventually be in an absolute majority. The sixty-three million inhabitants of Russian Europe comprise 1,829,100 Jews, who, until the recent decree authorizing them to reside in any part of the empire, were confined to certain districts in Southern Russia, to Courland, and the ancient provinces of Poland.—More than a million and a half of the Russian Jews reside in the Polish provinces, and as the inhabitants of those provinces number but 12,113,085, they form more than eleven per cent. of the whole population, outnumbering the Poles, properly so called, by nearly half a million.—The Jews are still more numerous, proportionally, in the kingdom of Poland itself; there being 783,000, or thirteen per cent. in a total population of 5,706,000. In 1867, Hamburg contained 13,457 Jews out of a total population of 306,407; Berlin 27,565, out of 699,981; and St. Petersburg only 2,612 out of 539,128; while in Warsaw there were 72,776 Jews in a total population of 222,006. Their numbers have increased since, and they now represent 35.9 per cent. of the whole population.—Examiner and Chronicle.

Educational Progress.

Reviewing the history of education in this country, in his address at the opening of the National Educational Association in Baltimore, President Phelps gave the following statistics:

"Prior to 1776 but nine colleges had been established, and not more than five of these, we are told, were really efficient. Now more than four hundred institutions bearing the titles of "college" and "university" are distributed throughout forty of the States and Territories, with nearly 57,000 students and 3,700 Professors and teachers. Then little was done for the higher education of women. Now there are 209 female seminaries, with 23,445 students, and 2,285 teachers.—Then says a writer in the "New England Journal of Education" for June 10, 1876, professional schools were almost unknown. The candidate for the honors of the law, the dignities of the ministry, and, generally speaking, for the toils of medical practice, was obliged to pursue his studies under private tutors. Now there are 322 professional schools of the various classes, excluding teachers' seminaries, with 23,280 students and 2,490 instructors. Then normal schools had no existence on this continent. Now 124 are reported in the United States, with 24,405 students and 966 instructors. Then there were no commercial colleges; now 127 are in operation, with 25,892 students and 577 teachers. Then secondary and preparatory schools had scarcely a name by which to live; now 1,122 exist, affording instruction to 100,593 pupils, and giving employment to 6,163 teachers. The kindergarten, that last and best of educational inventions, is a very recent importation. In 1874 we were blest with fifty-five of these human nurseries, with 1,636 pupils and 125 teachers. May their numbers rapidly increase.

"We have no means of giving the school population of those earlier days. It is not likely that it was ever ascertained. Now thirty-seven States and eleven Territories report an aggregate of more than thirteen millions, or more than four times the total population of the country in 1776. Then the school enrollment was, of course unknown. Now it amounts to the respectable figures of 8,000,000. Then the schools were scattered, and their number was correspondingly restricted. Now they are estimated at 150,000, and as employing 250,000 teachers. The total income of the public schools is given at $82,000,000; their expenditures at $75,000,000, and the value of their property at $165,000,000. The figures thus far exhibited indicate what we have done; there are others which tell us with impressive emphasis what we have not done. With a school population of 13,000,000, we have an actual enrollment of 8,600,000. The number of illiterates in 1870, above the age of ten years, was, in round numbers, 5,500,000.—Of these more than 2,000,000 were adults; upwards of 2,000,000 more, from fifteen to twenty-one years of age, and 1,000,000 between ten and fifteen years old. Of the number between fifteen and twenty-one years it is estimated that about one-half have passed the opportunity for education, and since it is well understood that a large proportion of the children in this country leave the schools perhaps at an average of ten or twelve years, the conclusion is irresistible that tens of thousands of those who are reported as illiterates between ten and fifteen years of age will forever remain so. Of the 930,000 illiterate persons between fifteen and twenty-one years of age who have passed their opportunities for instruction, 137,000 are in the Northern States, 15,000 in the Pacific, and 778,000 in the Southern."

THERE are in Brooklyn 253 churches, distributed as follows: Baptist, 32; Congregational, 16; Jewish, 6; Lutheran, 11; Methodist, 52; Presbyterian, 28; Protestant Episcopal, 35; Roman Catholic, 39; Reformed Dutch, 15; Reformed Episcopal, 2; Unitarian, 3; Universalist, 4; miscellaneous, 18. [What about the Brethren?]

It was only a few years ago that Christianity obtained a foothold in Madagascar. Now there are in that island 1,200 churches and 260,000 worshippers.

- I. The Editor does not hold himself responsible for the opinions of correspondents.
- II. A free and fraternal interchange of thought will be allowed on all important subjects; but the Editor reserves to himself the right to determine the time for admitting controverted questions, and the time for discontinuing the discussions.
- III. Personal character must be respected; personal quarrels will not be admitted; and bitter and unkind words must not be used.
- IV. Articles should be short and pointed, and written only on one side of the paper; and if the paper is closely ruled, only on every alternate rule. Manuscript paper should be about 4 or 5 inches wide.
- V. Important Bible and Historical quotations should be accompanied with references to chapter and verse, book and page.
- VI. Every article should have for its object the glory of God and the edification of the readers.
- VII. Every article for publication must be accompanied by the name of the author as a guarantee of good faith. An assumed name, however, is allowable in print.
- VIII. Unaccepted manuscripts will not be returned unless their writers make request accordingly, and enclose stamps for postage, at the time they submit them.

RULES FOR AGENTS.

1. At the head of every letter give the name of your own post-office, county and State; and the date on which it is written.
2. Write the name and give the full address of every subscriber you send, as legibly as you can.
3. Write "New" before the names of all new subscribers.
4. In ordering a change of address, give the post-office, county, and State, to which the paper is sent, as well as the post-office, county, and State to which it is to be sent.
5. Do not mix up different items of business; but take up and finish one item before you take up another.
6. Write items intended for publication on a separate slip.
7. Make every lawful effort to obtain subscribers, and to do good in whatever way you can.
8. Send money by drafts, post-office money orders, or registered letters.
9. Observe the above rules, and you will expedite business, save us from much trouble, and yourselves and our subscribers from disappointments and vexation.

SOUNDNESS OF HEART.

"Let my heart be sound in thy statutes."
—Psalm 119:53.

Whatever was wanting in the age of the world in which David lived to complete, both in knowledge and experience, the holiness of character that the remedial scheme of mercy started immediately after the fall, and perfected only when our Redeemer made his first advent into the world, required, that devoted and faithful man of God, with his various gifts and numerous duties had a remarkable clearness of vision, and correctness of experience in regard to many of the elements constituting a holy character. The evangelical meaning of a heart sound in the law of God, is very expressive and suggestive. The condition of our moral constitution as affected and produced by sin, as being one of a morbid or diseased character, is a condition attributed to it very frequently in the Scriptures. The following passage, with its hyperbolic or figurative coloring used by the speakers and writers of the east to give force and effect to their derision of character and things, is one used by the inspired prophet to describe the effects of sin upon our moral nature, by a figure drawn from a diseased condition of the body: "The whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint. From the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in it, but wounds and bruises, and putrefying sores. They have not been closed, neither bound up, neither mollified with ointment."—Isaiah 1:6.

Such being the condition of a sinner in whom and upon whom sin has exerted its direful, its sickening, and its deadening influences, the prayer of David, "Let my heart be sound in thy statutes," can be readily understood. A sound heart means a healthy heart, a heart recovered from sin, and restored to its proper position and relation in the moral universe of God,—a heart warm and pure in its affections, with those affections placed primarily on God, and secondarily on what bears some resemblance to God in purity, dignity and excellency. "If ye be risen with Christ," says the Apostle, "seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth."—Col. 3:2,3. That is, meaning by "things above," not only the things that are in heaven, but also the things that are above the sordid; groveling, and sensual things of earth;—or, as the apostle elsewhere expresses it, " whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report."—Phil. 4:8. A sound heart will have its affections directed to noble and worthy objects. And whatever is impure in its character will be repelled by the pure affection of a sanctified heart.

As men differ much in their natural tastes, so they do in their moral or spiritual. Holy society, and holy conversation, holy subjects and holy exercises, possess no attractions, and impart no pleasure to many, while things of a sinful character do. Things of the same nature and of the same habits affiliate with each other. It is a painful sight, and a painful subject to contemplate, when we see both young people and old preferring places of carnal and even sinful amusement, to places of sacred, religious, or of a devotional character. An acquaintance with the state of things in our towns and cities would inform us that while the sanctuary of God and the place of holy devotion are but poorly attended, the theatre, the ball room, the drinking saloon, and the places open for carnal and sensual pleasure are much better patronized. And why is it so? It is because the popular heart is not sound in the statutes of the Lord, not sound in its moral tastes. When the apostle tells us of certain characters who "had pleasure in unrighteousness," 3 Thes. 2:12, he gives us a dark picture of human nature.

In any man who bear the Christian name, there is a sad want of soundness of heart, and we may ask with the prophet, "Is there no balm in Gilead? Is there no physician there? why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?" Jer. 8:22. As health is better than sickness, and holiness better than sin, it is a strange perversion of taste, judgment, and freedom of will, which leads men to prefer a sinful course of life to rectitude and holiness. Too many, ignorant of the spirituality and fulness of the requirements of God's holy law, rest in a nominal Christianity; falsely imagining themselves to be rich, and increased with goods, and having need of nothing, while the Lord beholds them as wretched, miserable, and poor, and blind and naked. Rev. 4:17. It is no doubt often with the Christian in regard to spiritual health and soundness as it is with many in regard to bodily health. There are many who seem, to the inexperienced and passing observer, to be healthy and sound, while a closer examination by the skillful physician, will detect some fatal disease seated in the system, and working death.

So it is to be feared it is with many in regard to their spiritual state. Their Christian character as it appears to the multitude, and as it is judged by the popular standard of Christian life, is tolerably fair, if not altogether faultless. But when it is closely examined by the perfect law of the Lord, it may be found to be wanting in much, and instead of being what it should be, a character without spot or blemish, it may be without sincerity, humility, or faithfulness. And lacking any of these as well as some others, it will not be recognized as meet for the society of the pure in heaven. John the revelator when describing the saints in heaven, says:

"These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the first fruits unto God and to the Lamb. And in their mouth was found no guile; for they were without fault before the throne of God." Rev. 14:5. The standard of holiness to which we are to attain, as a preparation for heaven, is one of no ordinary degree of holiness. And well may David say, "Let my heart be sound in thy statutes."

The importance of a close and impartial examination of our hearts to ascertain whether they are sound in the statutes of the Lord, must be very apparent. And to be sound in the statutes of the Lord, there must be a hearty acceptance of those statutes from the first to the last, and from the least to the greatest. We have in the gospel the term sound applied to the following things: "Sound words," "Sound doctrine," "Sound faith," and a "Sound heart," or a "Sound mind." And a heart sound in the statutes of the Lord does not only imply a hearty acceptance of those statutes as remarked above, but it also implies that those statutes or principles have so moulded the heart that its feelings, dispositions, inclinations and temper be in strict accordance with the teaching of those statutes.

A sound heart is a complete heart—a heart containing all that belongs to it. Such is the heart the Lord requires and such must be the heart if he accepts of it. Under the law, the trespass offering was to be without blemish. Lev. 5:15. So must the heart be sound, renewed in all its faculties, and wholly devoted in its entirety to God.

"O for a heart to love my God !
A heart from sin set free ;
A heart that always feels the blood,
So freely shed for me.
A heart in every thought renew'd,
And fill'd with love divine ;
Perfect, and right, and pure and good,

OUR ALMANAC FOR 1877.

Being anxious to have our reading matter for our Almanac ready at as early a day as possible, we would say to our friends, and the friends of this enterprise, we shall feel under obligations to them for any contributions suitable to our work that they may send us. We are desirous of making a good church Almanac. This, we are well aware, is what our brethren, as well as ourselves want. We therefore solicit all who can render us any assistance in getting up the work to do so, and to do it as soon as possible, as we want to get out our Almanac in good time. Brethren, please let us have favorable responses from you as soon as you conveniently can.

Gleanings and Gittings.

ON Tuesday the 8th inst., brother L. S. Snyder and his wife, from Missouri Valley, Harrison county, Iowa, who have been visiting their friends in the East, stopped with us. They are now on their way westward, toward their home. Brother Snyder seems to be an earnest worker in the Master's cause, and reports favorably of the progress of truth in his field of labor. He has at this time no help in the ministry, but, fortunately for him, he is well circumstanced in life ; and happily for the good cause, he is willing to spend and be spent in the Master's service. We hope they may reach their home in safety.

B

BRO. Wesley Adams, Lavansville, Pa., says :

"I think Brother Hope, in Denmark, is not treated by the brotherhood as the golden rule teaches. I am sorry that so much prejudice is manifested against missions. Enclosed find $2.00 for Bro. Hope."

BRO. M. Neikirk, Williamsport, Md., sends his contribution to the Poor Fund, and says :

"I would have written long ago, but was sick up to this time. I would like to give often and more for charitable purposes, but I almost always see it abused more or less. Only a year ago we were sending our money to the starving people of Kansas, now, this year, they have twenty-five thousand dollars to spare for the Philadelphia's big restaurant, or catch-penny show. I think it is a big mistake for people to sit down and fold their hands and let politicians and rowdies vote their money away. When we have a hand to work for us who does not do what we think is right, we will not be likely to have him again. So if their delegates did vote their money away without their consent they can remember them in the future. We had our delegates properly instructed before they went, and if they had voted one dollar for that purpose, we had intended to mark them, and had it not been for Baltimore they would not have got one dollar from Maryland. I am a strong believer in the saying that "God helps those who help themselves."

BRO. J. W. Gephart, of Cornell, Livingston Co., Ill., writing under date of July 24th, says :

"As we are progressing in the work of the Lord, I thought I would write a few lines for our paper. We have had several additions to the church by baptism within the last month. Yesterday we had three meetings, and deep impressions were made. There are a few more souls that are about ready to come and go with the Children of God. Oh! brethren, let us all be earnestly engaged in the work of the Lord. We intend, the Lord willing, to hold a council meeting for the purpose of making arrangements for a communion same time in August. As soon as we make out what time we will hold our love-feast, we will give notice through the paper."

BRO. Albert M. T. and sister M. C. Miller, of Marshalltown, Marshall Co., Iowa, under date of July 19th, write :

"We believe there has been nothing from this little congregation, in the P. C. since we are living here, and we thought it would be all right for us to write a few lines and let the brethren know there is a church in Marshall county, Iowa, which does not wish to be forgotten or overlooked. We are a little congregation of about forty members. About a dozen of us live up here on the prairie, eight or ten miles from the church, which stands in a grove not far from the Iowa river. It will be one year the first of September since we came here and settled in this beautiful country. It is running quite a risk to leave home and settle among strangers, but we were very fortunate, not only in joining ourselves to a church which is kind and noble-hearted, but in settling in a community which is sociable and intelligent. As we are so far from the brethren, our Elder told us he would like to see us have preaching up here whenever brethren passing to and fro would stop with us. We were very much pleased with the prospect, and hope we will not be passed by when our ministering brethren are traveling in these parts. And those looking up a home, and not wishing to risk the far west, would do well to come and see the country here. It compares favorably with Ogle, Carroll, and Lee counties, Ill. though of course, a newer country. Crops look well ; barley is being harvested ; wheat is ordinary, oats is good ; corn is splendid. The prospect of a rich harvest of edibles always inspires the mind with vigor, but to have the prospect of a rich harvest of souls would be more invigorating, more lasting, more profitable."

BRO. Henry Jones, Pleasant Mound, Ill., says :

"We have had fifteen added to our little band, by the initiating ordinance of baptism, this summer. Thanks to the Lord. May they, with all the Lord's believing children, prove faithful, is the prayer of your unworthy brother."

BRO. David Brower, Salem, Oregon, says :

"The ark of the Lord is still moving slowly. Last month there were three accessions by baptism and one by letter. A few others seem to be counting look the cost.—Grain and grass generally well. The prospect for fruit is very good. Health, generally, good."

BRO. S. C. Keim, of Salisbury, Pa., says :

"You will please announce the love-feast to be held at Cherry Grove meeting-house, Garrett Co., Md., on Saturday the 19th of Aug., commencing at 3 o'clock. Meeting next day. Brother Merrill and I were there and held two meetings. One more was added by baptism, and still more will, no doubt, make up their minds to be added at the lovefeast, if God will permit them to live. We had a very spirited and interesting meeting. They hold their council on Saturday Aug. 12th, and preaching next day. If some of the brethren would go to their aid, much good would result from it, even at the next meeting."

WANTED.

An honest, moral, active boy or girl, about fourteen or fifteen years of age, to serve as an apprentice to learn the art of printing. Should be good in orthography, and have some knowledge of English grammar. One preferred who can board at home. Apply at once.

Correspondence.

A Philological Error Corrected.

To Bro. R. H. Miller :

In your discussion with Mr. Hodge you admitted a secondary meaning of the word baptizo in a tropical sense. This admission enabled Mr. Hodge to make his escape from utter discomfiture. I know this admission is made by many Baptist writers from whom you may have borrowed it; but the admission is a solecism that no one accustomed to thinking ought to be guilty of. If you admitted that twice two made seven, your admission would be just as reasonable as a metaphorical secondary meaning. A primary metaphorical meaning would certainly precede the secondary. Metaphors are not meanings of words, but similitudes of the meanings. When Christ called Herod a fox he used the word fox figuratively, from the fact of having applied the word to something that had a name which disqualifies the literal use or meaning. There must be some resemblance between Herod and a fox. And according to your philology, the primary meaning of fox refers to the fox and the secondary meaning, to the resemblance of a fox. How can the resemblance of a fox be the secondary meaning of fox? How can the resemblance of immersion be a metaphorical secondary meaning of immersion?—Is the word converted into a figure because figuratively used? Then the reality is converted into its likeness. A word can have no meaning without appropriation. And that meaning can never be changed; neither can that word assume a secondary meaning without a change of appropriation. Apply this rule to the word baptizo in the ordinance of baptism, and the absurdity of a secondary meaning will at once appear. A change of appropriation must first be proved before a secondary meaning can be proved. To elucidate this matter so the weakest mind can comprehend it, I will take for example the word switch. When I say, switch the cow, a child will understand me; and if I say, switch the car, any child living along a railroad will understand me. The sense of the word switch is changed because of a change of appropriation. The word switch will always have the same meaning when applied to the cow, and a different meaning when applied to the car. Both meanings, or as many as use may confer on a word, may have figurative applications. How then can a word have a metaphorical secondary sense? If figures were meanings of words, no one could distinguish between figured and unfigured diction.

I hope you will keep this loop hole closed if you should have occasion to again encounter such inconsistent gladiators as Mr. Hodge. My reasons for addressing this article to you through the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN were to get your special attention on this point and at the same time correct an error that was general. I know of no Baptist writer that has not fallen into this error except Mr. Carson, and Mr. Hinton in speaking of this point, says, "The position is harder to assail than the higher grounds taken by Mr. Carson." But Mr. Hinton is very much mistaken or else my judgment is at fault. Mr. Carson may not be precise enough on this point, but it is easy to see that he considers a secondary meaning destitute of any foundation. I am ready to hear from you if you have any remarks to make.

LEWIS O. HUMMER.

To a Lady in Ohio.

Probably you remember the conversation we had on the difference of faith and practice in our respective churches, during the third day's session of A. M., in Logan county, Ohio. That difference existed not from a want of honesty, but from a misconception of gospel teaching. The subject, if you remember, was fully discussed, and as to what are and what are not ordinances of the house of God, and the proper observance of them in a way to insure full salvation, we finally fully agreed.

Since that time I have often wondered if you have changed to what you then admitted to be a more safe pathway to the celestial city. And trusting you will not consider it a breach of Christian etiquette, I address you these feeble thoughts in the interest of truth and my Master's cause, believing that the only true road to happiness in both the present and future of our existence is a free interchange of thought, a consciousness of right, and a full study of the laws and nature of God.

There are three ways by which we can study God. 1st. We can learn of him by his providence; 2nd. By what he has done for us; 3rd. We can learn of him through the revelation he has given us.

1. We learn in his providence, our littleness—his greatness; our weakness—his power; our sinfulness—his holiness, and, in short, all about our ungratefulness in life and God's mercy toward us in our most sinful moments, as well as when we are on the scale of full obedience and amid the higher graces of life.

2. By what he has done for us while we were strangers to grace and unappreciative of his kindness toward us, we learn his desire for our welfare and happiness, and what we should give in return.

3. By revelation we learn what he demands of us as creatures; what he has in store for all his servants who obey from the heart his will; what he will do for us if we are not honest within ourselves in observing his laws; and, in fact, all we do know of heaven and true happiness is what we learn in his word. Outside of the sacred page we are lost in the maze of imagination and speculation. If we read the teachings of Jesus and do all his commands, we have the promise of enjoying the full rest of the people of God; but if our service is not according to revelation, we have no promise of salvation. God comes to us in our sinfulness and poverty and asks us to do certain things which are neither expensive nor laborious, and says, "If ye know them and do them, happy are ye," John xiii. 17—promises us more than the world can give if we will just do them in faith.

Some of these things appeared to the Jews as stumbling-blocks and to the Greeks as foolishness, from the fact that they looked at them naturally and not understanding the spiritual import of them. But to those who did understand and gather the spiritual force of them, it was the power of God unto salvation. I some times think that the same ordinances we talked of were the cause of Israel's stumbling, and which appeared as foolishness to the Greeks. Hence they were ashamed of the church of God. We have the same learned classes to day, (Jews and Greeks) who stumble and fall, and others who believe but are ashamed to obey.—The first will perish in their own wisdom, while to the latter Christ says, "Of you will I be ashamed before my Father, because you were ashamed of me and my works on earth before men." But those who seek for "glory, honor and immortality by patient continuance in well-doing shall have eternal life"—just what all desire. Then, considering the lightness of the labor and the greatness of the reward offered, the shortness of life and the impenitent's doom, should we not first seek the kingdom of God? Then all essential to happiness will be ours.—There is a feeling of security sometimes pervading the souls of those who are not enjoying the full sanctity of the gospel covenant, yet, like Paul of old, are only right in their own sense of security.

It is to our highest interest in both the present and future to render full obedience and walk in the sure paths of duty. The only real happiness is derived from a consciousness of our pleasing and receiving the smiles of Jehovah. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all the heart, mind, soul, and strength," is the command of Creation's Head. And when we do this, all that is essential to our highest interest and that of others will be done.

If in the course of life we fail to do things which we feel to be right—that would lead to the conversion of others—we can hardly say we feel that our duty has been well and fully done. Our conduct hangs, probably, the salvation of some dear friend with whom we are wont to sing the sweet songs of immortality.—May God arouse all to a sense of their duty, causing each to labor to save the precious souls of men, over whom Jesus wept that they might not be lost.

Now, in conclusion, allow me to say that our conversation in Logan Co., Ohio, to me was a pleasant one, and shall ever be remembered as a bright oasis in the desert of life, and it is my humble prayer that as our minds and conversation were once in heavenly places on earth together, amid the celestial shades of that upper world, having done our whole duty here, those associations will be remembered, where songs will be sweeter, faces more radiant, and the sin and trouble that establishes Annual Meeting will be o'er.

Yours in the hope of immortal glory.

In Memory of Bro. David Young.

Bro. David Young was born in Lancaster county, Pa., December 21, 1820. He emigrated to Wayne county, Ind., where he resided at the time of his death, which occurred July 5, 1876. He was therefore 55 years 6 months and 14 days old. A devoted wife and ten children are left to mourn his loss.

Our brother's affliction was an ulcer in his right side, which probably followed the ribs to the spinal column, causing an abscess there which by pressure on the spinal cord paralyzed his lower extremities. In this condition he lay for several weeks, dying inch by inch, till finally it pleased God to end his sufferings.

but we are not "as others which have hope." He left behind him an eric that is certainly consoling to friends left. A few weeks before his death, on the messenger was knocking at his door, when "the last scene in nature's course, the first in wisdom's sight," was approaching, he requested admission into the church. Although Young was too weak to receive baptism, he was admitted with the understanding that he would comply with that requirement as soon as health permitted. In that time on he was often, and we love, fervently, engaged in prayer to God, for the pardon of his sins, and "that might be justified by his grace and be made an heir according to the hope of eternal life." He frequently called upon Brethren who visited him to sing and pray with him, and to read from God's word, all of which seemed to be a pasture, wherein his soul loved to range under the guidance of the great Shepherd. But the end drew near. He rested for his departure. The messengers were ready, and without a warning struggle that invisible and mysterious train moved out from the shores of this dreary world, laden with its spiritual cargo, and hope winged its flight to the shore of the blissful country "where seraphs gath- ered immortality," and "the justified pluck golden joys that cluster on the great of Life."

Bro. Young formerly advocated the doctrine of the annihilation of the soul of the body. He frequently told us that if we could be convinced of a future existence, he would embrace Christianity at once. He believed that all that was necessary was for him to be convinced and conviction would follow. And being especially interested in his case by the ties of friendship, we labored with him in our weakness, praying for the Holy Spirit to give conviction to his soul. We believe our prayers were answered, for when the "onset hours" came, when death began to raise the curtains suspended between life and eternity, when earth and the things of earth, took on their real character, he came to a speedy conclusion and accepted Christ as the captain of his salvation, and we hope he died the "death of the righteous."

The funeral services were conducted by Brethren Jacob Bowman and Louis Kin- igh, at the brick church near Hagers- town. The text for the occasion was the 13th verse of Num. xxiii. 10, "Let me see the death of the righteous, and my end be like his."

Church News.

Other Quinter:

As you request church news, I take the liberty to say that this arm of the church is in a living condition, for we trust in the living God, through Jesus Christ, his Son, the head of the church and are one in faith and practice. Our ministers are in good number—brethren Adam Numer, William Stockmayer, and W. W. Reynolds are all in the first degree. Our Elder, Bro. John Hoover, has moved into Mis- sissippi, about one hundred miles east of his place, and our deacon and much-loved brother, David Bolinger, also moved to the same place. May the Lord bless and prosper them in the inner life, is my prayer. Our church consists of forty members, less or more. Two of our brethren are absent on visits to Illinois and Pennsylvania. May the Lord our God be their strength and stay until their return.

The State Council will be held with this arm of the church, commencing on the first Friday in October and continuing until Lord's day evening. We cordially invite the brethren that can to be with us at that time and place, as the brethren have decided to have a lovefeast at the same time. We want to say to the ministering brethren that we want to have some of the best talent that the church can afford, to be present with us at that time, for this is a Macedonian call to come over and help us. May the God of our fathers and the Lord Jesus Christ ever keep the church in the primitive faith and practice.

M. D. WATSON.

Point Creek, Kansas.

FLOWERDALE, Neb., July 16, '76.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:

As we are not blest as most of you are with happy privilege of going to church every Sabbath, but are sometimes nearly one year without hearing a sermon preached by the Brethren, I thought I would pen a few lines for the Primitive Christian, as through it is all the preaching we hear; and I am often made to weep when I read of the many happy meetings that are held through the east, and often think if only a few of the surplus ministers at those meetings could be scattered, how much more could be done in the work of the Lord. And as there are no other denominations, I think much good could be done here. There is no preaching of any kind, only once in a great while, and people generally seem anxious for preaching. If any brethren think of going west, this is a beautiful country, soil good, and climate healthy. Unimproved land sells for from $5 to $10 per acre. Crops, generally speaking, are splendid. If any ministering brother or lay members think of going west and will write us, we will cheerfully give them all the information we can concerning this country.

Bro. P. B. Porter, from Kansas, was here and preached three sermons for us, which were the only ones for about a year. We felt very much encouraged, as we felt that the Lord had answered our prayer. But as that is in the past, our prayer still is that the good Lord would send us a ministering brother soon that will settle here.

Now, brethren, do not think this does not mean you; it is for any one that can come. With this I close, asking your prayers in our behalf that we may be faithful in our isolated condition, as we have many more temptations to endure than if we were surrounded by the Brethren. There are three sisters and two brethren here, though we are considerably scattered.

If any brethren think of writing to us, address Isaac M. Royer, Flowerdale, Richardson county, Neb.

From your weak sister,

JOSE E. ROYER.

A few Solemn Reflections.

Many of God's people to-night are enjoying the sweet repose which nature has given. Naught of that grand, eternal rest is thought of. They move on with the accustomed weight of timely matter. How soon they may be transferred to eternity is unknown. While this is the condition of some, it is our lot to be at the death-bed of our beloved sister in the Lord, Esther B. Snyder, who departed this life this evening (July 18th).

I stood looking in the face of Sister S. when the awful change was made. A solemn moment! Oh! that we might think of it more.

I thought of Sister S.'s habitation here, everything comfortable and plenty, and yet she must leave for another home.— Here she leaves husband, children, and friends, and when shall she see them?— Never, never in this world. She can nevermore appreciate any kindness done her. All is done!

I thought of the land she had gone to dwell in, not for two score and ten years (her age), but forever and ever.

I thought of the way God has given us to change from time to eternity. The distance how great! No human being once there ever gets back, and yet one faint blast can safely land us there.

We now pass from the death-bed scene to the tomb. Friends are gathering in; the hour to leave with the corpse has come; the procession is formed; the tomb is open; the departed is laid therein; the clouds begin to rattle down on the covering; a hymn is sung; the grave is finished; the funeral sermon is delivered; the audience disperse; and so closes a very solemn scene. How many of us realize that we, too, very soon, must go the way of Sister S. One century hence not one of the vast number who joined the solemn procession, can expect to stand this side of eternity.

E. J. HARRISON.

Marion, Iowa.

From the Willamette Valley Church, Oregon.

Dear Brethren Editors:

"Grace, mercy, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ" be with us and you. Our object in writing is to let the brotherhood at large know something of our condition.

In the first place we will say that we are friends to the missionary cause by a quiet and peaceable emigration. We believe it to be in strict obedience to the word of the Lord: "Go ye into all the world and preach my gospel to every creature."

Now, brother ministers, deacons, and lay members—here is an open door to do good in our Master's cause. Come over here into this goodly land and help us.— You can all do something toward spreading the gospel; but our especial invitation is to those in the ministry, who seem to be most needed. It seems to us that some one out of the many in the east might volunteer to come to this valley and help us spread the gospel, especially where there are six or eight in one congregation. It seems to us that every minister ought to ask himself the question, "Am I doing all the good I can?" and if not, then strike out, brother, and come over here and help us. There is plenty to eat and wear here. We have only two ministers here in this large valley, and they are some thirty miles, or more, apart, Elder David Brower and Daniel Leedy. Bro. Leedy's bodily health is poor, and he does not speak much; Elder Brower's health is good and he is sowing the good seed to the world as fast as he can; but the field is too large for him: he cannot get over it alone. We believe that he is also feeding the little flock with the best of spiritual food he can get. Oh! that the Lord would send more such laborers into this large western field. There are members living in five counties, Marion, Linn, Lane, Benton, and Polk, but the meetings are mostly held in Marion county.

The general feeling for the upbuilding and the general order of the brotherhood we believe is good; but we here, like in all other places, are not left without trouble. All children must learn to walk before they are able to run. So it is with the babe in Christ, it must learn to walk orderly before it can run, otherwise it will fall. But we are in a fast age, and so some will even dare to run before they learn to walk orderly, and consequently they fall, because they are not willing to be taught to observe all things whatsoever the Lord has commanded them.

We are also progressing a little. A short time ago there were three added to our number by baptism (Abram Lehman and wife and her sister), all in old age, and one by letter. They were zealous members of the Campbellite church for many years, and are astonished that they could not see the true light sooner.

Now, brethren, since our main object in writing to you is to awaken some to come over here and help us to build up the church, we would say there is no doubt that we have a good country here and a mild climate. But for all that, we have reason to believe that there are hundreds of good, zealous, honest-hearted people that are starving for want of that true bread which cometh down from heaven. Now, you that feel like evangelizing to the world more than has been done by the Brethren, give this subject a serious thought; and not only so, but you will do all in this direction you can. Bring your families along, if you have any, and settle among us somewhere, and speak by your actions as well as by words, which we believe is the best and surest way of spreading the gospel. Dear brethren, do not merely read this our request and then think no more of it, but let it be like us to heaven that it may leave the whole lump. Written by John B. Lehman, and read to and sanctioned by the following brethren:

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the State Centre Church, Marshall Co., Iowa, on the morning of the 26th of June, 1876, sister ELIZABETH SPOUFER departed this life, aged 70 years, 4 months, and 34 days. She was born in Washington county, Md., Jan. 27th 1806. She had emigrated to Illinois in the year 1845, and from there to Iowa in 1869, where she lived among her children until her death. She was a consistent member of the church for some fifteen years. She bore her afflictions with fortitude and christian resignation. Just shortly before she died, a few brethren and sisters met together and for the last time she participated in celebrating the holy ordinance of God's house—the humble ordinance of feet-washing, the supper and communion. She leaves a large circle of children and friends to mourn her departure. We trust their loss is her Eternal gain. The funeral occasion was improved by the Brethren, from Rev. 14:13.

J. W. TROUBLE.

(Pilgrim please copy.)

In the Limestone congregation, Washington county, Tenn., July 21st, 1876, ELIZABETH, consort of Daniel Bowman, and daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth Miller, aged 67 years, 2 months and 24 days. She had been a lively and faithful member of the church of the Brethren about 30 years; had been an ornament to the church and to the society in which she moved. She was a mother to the motherless and a friend to the needy, ever administering to their wants, turning none away empty; was loved and respected by all who knew her. Her sufferings, which were intense, were of short duration. She was attacked on Sunday the 16th inst., and on the next Sabbath her remains were interred in the family burying ground, by the side of her father, mother, daughter and brother, who had preceded her many years, to the spirit land. She leaves a kind family, consisting of a husband, two daughters and one son, and a large circle of friends and relatives to deplore her loss; but while her body lies quietly in the tomb, her spirit is with the God who gave it, for a long and bright evidence that she was going home to that land that is free from sorrow and pain, saying she had "a sweet and smiling Savior waiting" for her. She prayed as the inspired Apostle, that she might be absent from the body, and present with the Lord. Her funeral will be attended to at some future time.

J. E. KLEPPER.

In the Nettie's congregation in Wayne county, Indiana, on the 23rd day of July, 1876, brother DANIEL TEEPER, aged 34 years and 9 months. He was sick only six days, during which time he suffered much from inflammation of the bowels, but he bore all with christian fortitude and resignation, and a few hours before his departure he was anointed with oil in the name of the Lord by the elders of the church, thus manifesting in his last hours a desire of obeying all the mandates of the Gospel. He was a consistent member of the church for about twenty-five years. He leaves a widow, a dear sister and seven children, four of whom are members of the church, to mourn the loss of a dear husband and father. Brother Daniel was a prominent citizen in the community an honorable and unassuming but deeply devoted church member, and a kind and affectionate husband and father. The funeral on the 21st was very largely attended. Services by the Brethren, from Rev. 14:13.

Modern Women.

It is a sad commentary upon our boasted civilization that the women of our times have degenerated in health and physique until they are literally a race of invalids—pale, nervous, feeble and back-ache, with only here and there a few noble exceptions in the persons of the robust woman ladies characteristic of the sex in days gone by. By a very large experience, covering a period of years and embracing the treatment of many thousands of cases of those ailments peculiar to Women, Dr. Pierce, of the World's Dispensary, Buffalo, N. Y., has perfected, by the combination of certain vegetable extracts, a natural specific, which he does not extol as a cure all; but one which admirably fulfills a singleness of purpose, being a most positive and reliable remedy for those weaknesses and complaints that afflict the women of the present day. This natural specific compound is called Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. The following are among those diseases in which this wonderful medicine has worked cures as if by magic, and with a certainty never before attained by any medicines: Weak back, nervous and general debility, falling and other displacements of internal organs, resulting from debility and lack of strength in natural supports, internal fever, congestion, inflammation and ulceration and very many other chronic diseases incident to women, not proper to mention here, in which, as well as in the cases that have been enumerated, the Favorite Prescription effects cures—the marvel of the world. It will not do harm in any state or condition of the system, and by adopting its use the invalid lady may avoid that severest of ordeals—the consulting of a family physician. Favorite Prescription is sold by dealers in medicines generally.

SPECIAL NOTICE TO OUR READERS. SPECIAL CALL. Agents Wanted

To sell the New Patent Improved EYE CUPS. Guaranteed to be the best quality of eye cups ever made. Agents by any House. An easy and pleasant employment.

The value of the celebrated new Patent Improved Eye Cups for the relief of eye troubles is attested by the evidences of over 6,000 genuine testimonials of cures, and recommended by more than one thousand of our best physicians in their practice.

The Patent Eye Cups are a scientific and philosophical discovery, and as ALEX. R. WYETH, M. D., and WM. BEATLEY, M. D. writes, they are certainly the greatest invention of the age.

Read the following certificates: FERGUSON STATION, LOGAN CO., KY., June 6th, 1872 DR. J. BALL & Co., Oculists:

GENTLEMEN: Your Patent Eye Cups are, in my judgment, the most splendid triumph which optical science has ever achieved, but, like all great and important truths, in this or in any other branch of science and philosophy, have had to contend with the ignorance and prejudice of a too sceptical public; but truth is mighty and will prevail, and it is only a question of time as regards their general acceptance and endorsement by all. I have in my hands certificates of persons testifying in unequivocal terms to their merits. The most prominent physicians of my county recommend your Eye Cups.

I AM, respectfully, J. A. L. BOYER. WILLIAM BEATLEY, M. D., SALVIA, KY., writes: "Thanks to you for the greatest of all inventions. My sight is fully restored by the use of your Patent Eye Cups, after being almost entirely blind for twenty-six years."

ALEX. R. WYETH, M. D. ATCHISON, PA., writes: "After total blindness of my left eye for four years, by the paralysis of the optic nerve, I have, to my astonishment, your Patent Eye Cups restored my eyesight permanently in three minutes."

ROY. S. B. FALKENBERG, Minister of the M. E. Church, writes: "I have used your Eye Cups to restore my sight, for which I am most thankful to the Father of Mercies. By your advertisement I saw at a glance that your invaluable Eye Cups performed their work perfectly in accordance with physiological law; that they literally led the eyes that were starving for nutrition. May God greatly bless you, and may your name be enshrined in the affectionate memories of multiplied thousands as one of the benefactors of your kind."

HONABLE B. DURANT, M. D., says: "I sold, and effected future sales liberally. The Patent Eye Cups, they will make money, and make it fast, too; no small catch-penny affair, but a superb, number one, tip-top business, promises, as far as I can see, to be long-ling."

MAYOR E. C. ELLIS wrote us, November 16th, 1869: "I have tested the Patent Ivory Eye Cups, and am satisfied they are good. I am pleased with them, they are certainly the greatest invention of the age."

Hon. HORACE GARDNER, late Editor of the New York Tribune, wrote: "Dr. J. BALL, of our city, is a conscientious and responsible man, who is incapable of intentional deception or imposition." Prof. W. MERRICK writes: "I am most grateful to your noble invention. My sight is restored by your Patent Eye Cups. May heaven bless and preserve you. I have used them for over two years. I am seventy-one years old. I do all my writing without glasses, and I bless the inventor of the Patent Eye Cups every time I take up my old steel pen."

ADOLPH BORNBERG, M. D., physician to Emperor Napoleon, wrote, after having his sight restored by our Patent Eye Cups: "With gratitude to God, and thankfulness to the inventors, Dr. J. Ball & Co., I hereby recommend the trial of the Eye Cups (in full faith) to all and every one that has any impaired eyesight, believing, as I do, that since the experiment with this wonderful discovery has been so successful on me, at my advanced period of life—90 years of age—I believe they will restore the vision to any individual if they are properly applied."

ALFRED M. D. Commonwealth of Massachusetts, Essex, ss., June 5th, '73, personally appeared Adolph Bornberg, made oath to the following certificate, and by him subscribed and sworn to before me.

WM. STEVENS, J. P. LAWRENCE CITY, MASS., June 9th, 1873.

We, the undersigned, having personally known Dr. Adolph Bornberg, do hereby certify that he is an honest, moral man, trustworthy, and in truth and veracity unspotted. His character is without reproach. M. BONNEY, Ex-Mayor.

S. B. DAY, Mayor. GEORGE MERRILL, P. M. ROBERT H. TEWKESBURY, City Press.

Reader, these are a few certificates out of thousands we receive, and to receive still greater, be your old and diseased eyes can be made new, your impaired sight, dimness of vision and overworked eyes can be restored; weak, watery and sore eyes cured; the blind may see; squinting be cured; sight restored, and vision preserved. Spectacles and surgical operations useless.

I please send your address to us, and we will send you our book, A GREAT WORK! DR. J. BALL & CO., 91 LIBERTY ST., NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.

HOLLOWAY'S

PILLS AND OINTMENT.

ISSUE THE ATTRIBUTE OF MERIT.
 ERYSIPELAS AND CUTANEOUS DISEASES.—
 If popularity be the test of a medicine, Holloway's Pills and Ointment are assuredly the greatest remedies of this or any other age, as they are unconfined to nations or people, being as familiar to the dwellers on the backwoods as to the citizens of New York, London, Paris, Vienna, Berlin, St. Petersburg, &c. Their universality is, however, the least of their merits. Their safe and speedy cures of Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, King's Evil, Scrofula, and all skin diseases, are their chief recommendation. Persons afflicted with any of the above disorders should have immediate recourse to them.

*** Sold at the Manufactory of Professor HOLLOWAY & Co., New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the civilized world, in boxes at 25 cents, 63 cents, and $1 each.

CAUTION!—None are genuine unless the signature of J. HADDOCK, as agent for the United States, surrounds each box of Pills and Ointment. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

"It is I."

Matt. xiv. 27.

The lone and tolling voyagers
Whose hark was on the sea,
When night hung dark above the wave
Of stormy Gallilee,
In terror gazed on what they then
But dimly could descrie,
Until they heard those cheering words:
"Fear not, for it is I."

The dearest, truest friend on earth,
In that dark hour of gloom,
Seemed some pale phantom come to tell
A dire and dreadful doom;
And then from each affrighted lip
There burst the trembling cry,
That naught could still but those sweet words:
"Fear not, for it is I."

'Tis often thus with voyagers
Across life's stormy main,
Who strive to stem its rushing tide,
Yet seem to strive in vain;
The waves are white with spectral fears;
And darkly frowns the sky,
Till some sweet voice speaks softly out:
"Fear not, for it is I."

Oh, ever thus, my sister dear,
When life seems dark to thee;
When clouds enwrap a cloudless sky,
And storms are on the sea—
In fearless faith and joyful hope
To Christ lift up thine eyes,
And heed the gentle voice that says,
"Fear not, for it is I."

A Midnight Call. No. 1.

BY JOHN CALVIN BRIGHT.

One night early last fall my father's household was awakened by the sharp earnest calls of mother: "Boys, up, somebody stealing in the house." This caused quite a stir. It was near the hour of midnight, the moon had not yet arisen, and thickest darkness enveloped Thimble Creek, when an ugly visitor made his unbidden, unwelcome, and unceremonious call.

It has been said in referring to the watchfulness of mothers, that they sleep with one eye and one ear open. Perhaps, this was the case with our mother. Any-way her quick ear detected the villains' movements as he drew the drawers from father's desk, and heard his soft stealthy cat-like tread hither and thither. She concluded that all was not right, arose, went into the sitting room, and struck a match.

At this moment the thief entered the room, and, as she made the appeal aforesaid, precipitately fled.

Deep sleep had fallen on all beneath the roof except mother, and it was sometime before we were awakened from our sound slumber. At length, however, three brothers and our father responded to her call and scouted the premises, but he was secure under the thick shades of the night. And as we could not discover upon examination, that he had acquired much booty, we concluded that he had just commenced his operations, and with this thought retired to our beds. An unusual occurrence always sets me thinking, and while the rest of the family were busy discussing the situation, the following cogitations rushed through my mind.

1. Preaching. "Preach the word." Mother's call was short and pointed. The thief was in the house, we were asleep, and hence there was no time for delay or apology. This is suggestive. Brethren, watchmen on the walls of Zion, the devil as a roaring lion goeth about seeking whom he may devour. Satan is transformed into an angel of light and his ministers into ministers of righteousness. "Deceitful workers," and many spirits are gone out and the slime and trail of the Old Serpent is seen in every nook and path, therefore "Cry aloud and spare not." Millions of souls are on the road to everlasting ruin and woe. Christ tasted death for every one of them, and to you is the word of the Great Salvation given; hence, preach the word in demonstration of the spirit and with power. Preach the word glorying in the cross of Christ. Preach Christ and him crucified in season and out of season, rightly dividing the word of truth, as a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. Preach Christ unto them and not your bodily ailments. Preach with the burning zeal of Paul, the boldness of Peter, the mighty eloquence of Apollos, and the martyr spirit of Stephen. "Preach the gospel to every creature, baptizing the penitent believers in the names of the Holy Trinity, teaching them to observe all the commandments and sayings of Christ, and to cultivate all the Christian graces and thus be made meet for the inheritance of the saints in light,

2. Light. "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Our father on account of his deafness did not hear mother's appeal, but seeing a light, arose, and inquired into the cause of the midnight disturbance. Here is a nice point. It has been said, and that truly, that actions speak louder than words. Mother might have called until her decease but father would not have heard her. But the light called him. So many on the broad road to hell cannot be reached by the mightiest eloquence. Yet the light produced by the Christian graces—by a godly walk and a chaste conversation, will carry conviction to the heart. There is a mighty—an ALMIGHTY power in godly consistency. "It is the 'still small voice' with the power of the Almighty in it. On the other hand inconsistent professors—those who put their light under the bushel, are among the mightiest agents of the devil. The following circumstance will illustrate this point:

A gay young man attended an evening meeting where an eloquent young speaker preached. He portrayed with great clearness the sinfulness of man, his fallen, sinful, helpless, and undone condition without divine aid. He also set forth the Savior as all sufficient. He impressed all with his kind gracious invitations; the assurance that he is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance; that he who comes to him he will in no wise cast out, and he that seeks shall find. The young man was convinced. He determined to become a Christian. He was glad to learn that the speaker and a number of his brethren were going the same road home that he was as it would give him a chance to open his heart. But his astonishment knew no bounds when he saw their loose conduct, and heard their jokes, loud laughter and tall yankee tales. He could not see any Christianity in that and hence became a confirmed infidel. Years rolled on and both became old and gray.

The infidel grew sick and on his death bed sent for this preacher. When he came the infidel said:

"When I was a young man I heard you preach and then and there I determined to become a Christian."

"Thank God for that," said the minister.

"Hold cried the infidel, wait until I am through and see whether you have any reason for being so thankful. As already said, I determined to become a Christian, but when I saw the bad conduct of you and your members that same evening, and heard your unholy conversation, I concluded that Christianity was a wretched farce. I am on my death bed now and know better. But it is too late. And when I am brought before the bar of God I shall lay my damnation to your charge." "If the light that is in thee is darkness how great is that darkness?"

3. Darkness. "Men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil." This is a stubborn fact. The great robberies and murders are concocted and executed in the dark. Darkness is the glory of the bacchanalian, the debauchee, the gambler, and their master the devil. Then their business flourishes and their kingdom is enlarged. But to such is reserved the blackness of darkness forever.

4. Treasures. "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and thieves break through and steal. But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth or rust doth corrupt or thieves break through and steal." Earthly treasures are exposed to much danger. Moth and rust corrupt them, and thieves steal them. Nothing on the one hand has been discovered that will keep them from corroding, or on the other hand nothing invented that will secure them from thieves. One of the professional thieves lately made his boast in a New York City court that the latest Mammoth Safe invention could be opened and its contents taken out in a space of time not much longer than it takes to tell it.

But the treasures laid up in the Bank of Heaven are secure from harm on every hand. No moth or rust to corrupt or thieves to steal. And treasures laid up there will increase with a geometrical compound interest. Heaven's bonds are stamped and sealed with the blood of Jesus. Here our treasures take wings and fly away. Men who were millionaires in the morning were penniless ere the night. But over there they abide forever. Earthly wisdom suggests, "Hoard and get rich;" heavenly, "Distribute to the poor &c., thereby lending to the Lord."

We discovered in the morning that different articles of value were missing. The thief had acquired considerable booty after all. We were disappointed, and this caused us to think of the great disappointment of many at the day of reckoning. "Many will say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? and then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me ye that work iniquity." Dear reader, make sure work for heaven. Resist the devil and all his agents, flee to Christ casting all your care on him for he careth for you.

New Lebanon, Ohio.

Things to be Laid Aside.

A careful reading of God's word will make it evident that there are many things even in Christian men that are inconsistent with growth in grace. They are a second growth of weeds not wholly rooted out. They are like bad habits formed before conversion and into which there is constant danger for awhile of relapsing, and into which many do again fall. If these old motions of sin in the flesh are not mortified they will work great detriment to a man's spiritual interests. Yea, many of them are of such a nature that they will work death.

Now such is the infinite wisdom of the author of our holy religion that he has expressly warned us against many of these things. He has named them and condemned them, and has laid upon us the duty to put them away from us. Some of these evil things we are exhorted to lay aside, cast off, put off, put away, all translations of the same Greek term. This form of representing the duty of Christians in this respect intimates our personal and almost violent activity. We are not to wait on God to do this thing for us. True, our help and sufficiency are in him, our recourse is always to him; but notwithstanding we are to be personally active in the matter.

Too many Christians never get along because they expect God to do all. If they are quick-tempered, they simply ask God to make them otherwise, and put forth no effort. If they are irritable, they pray God to make them dispassionate, and then go as usual. If liable to certain temptations they ask God not to lead them into temptation, and then walk right into them with open eyes. God never does that which he has commanded us to do. We are to cast off the works of darkness, and no one can do it for us.

The violent effort implied in this act of casting off intimates how tightly these things are apt to cling to us. Nor are we dependent upon a mere inference as proof of this fact. There is a wonderful cleaving of sin to man. There is a fearful tenacity in the hold that evil habits have upon us. The weeds of sin are deep-rooted. To cast off some sins requires the plucking out of an eye, the cutting off of a hand. Only those who have tried to lay aside every weight know how they are fastened to us.

The Scriptures, too, would intimate a special degree of finality in this work. These things are not to be laid aside to-day and picked up to-morrow. Such a thing cannot be in morals. In order that a man may enjoy a divine cleansing there must be, as to the then present purpose, a final casting away of the evil. An experiment with God will not succeed. An attempt, a trial, is a failure. A man must depart finally and forever, as to present purpose, from iniquity in order to enjoy favor with God.

But Christian men are addressed in the text where this duty of casting off evils are spoken of. So that weeds of sin may again grow up. And what are they? In his epistle to the Romans Paul classes them all together as "works of darkness," saying: "The night is far spent, the day is at hand; let us therefore, cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light." Among these works of darkness he places, in the context, dishonesty, rioting, drunkenness, chambering, wantonness, strife and envying. In his letter to the Ephesians he sums them all up and calls them "the old man." This "old man which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts" is to be put off. The old man is the old habits, purposes, and actions of a man living in sin. All that is the outflow of a bad heart is to be put away. Hence he goes on to say: "Wherefore putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbor." Further on he specifies anger, indolence, dishonesty, corrupt conversation, bitterness, wrath, clamor (vociferousness), evil-speaking, and malice. In the epistle to the Colossians, Paul further adds blasphemy, filthy communication, covetousness, and sundry grosser sins as among the things to be put off and away. Peter and James in their epistles thoroughly agree with Paul, also speaking of filthiness, malice, guile, hypocrisy, envy and evil-speaking as things to be laid aside and put away.

It might seem strange to some that such evils find place among Christian men. It is, however, but too true that at times they do.

That is, there are Christian men that will sometimes fall so far from grace as to commit these evils. Men of extensive acquaintance can point out those who have a name to live, those who once were lively stones, but who are now guilty of many, if not of all these sins. There are men in churches who use filthy communications; men who manifest malice in some of their actions; men full of guile; men who in some things are hypocritical; men who are envious; men guilty of evil-speaking, blaspheming, calumniating and slandering their neighbors and brethren; yea, men guilty of all their forms of sin which we are commanded to cast away. They must be taught that these things cannot live in the same heart with Christ. They must be cast away, else the men that indulge in them will be bound in bundles as tares and cast into the fire. Christianity is pure, is free from any suspicions of countenancing evil, and those who would enjoy the heritage it promises, must be pure, free from all sin through the blood of Christ. Nothing that is unclean can enter heaven, though it may enter the visible church and sit in the seat of the elders.—Church Advocate.

Obedience to Faith.

SELECTED BY S. J. HARRISON.

Faith increases by use. Weak faith soon becomes strong by obedience. The true way to get more grace is to use what we have. The gospel is the power of God unto salvation to all who believe, if they obey what they believe. Many obey their doubts, and so strengthen doubt. Every sinner doubts the power of Christ to save. If he acts on his doubts, darkness becomes still darker; unbelief depletes his moral power, cripples his soul, and deends his aspirations for peace in God.

It is folly to obey doubts rather than faith; for the former leads to despair, while the latter begets hope, brings assurance, and imparts rest. Since Jesus spoke on earth, this has been the uniform experience.

It is wiser to obey weak faith than strong doubts. Results of trials for centuries prove this to be true. A very little faith obeyed brings peace and opens the door for more peace. Millions of souls have found it so. We need not wait to believe without any doubts until faith is masterful. Christ welcomes and blesses those who act on faith that even trembles, for very weakness, that scarcely dare claim existence, that is so beset by doubts as to be nearly lost in confusion. And as they follow on, faith and peace, strength and joy, light and rest wonderfully increase. The thousands who now hesitate on the borders of life, would quickly and sweetly enter into rest if they would cease obeying doubt, and begin to act on the small amount of faith they possess.—Baptist Union.

Scraps.

The most unreasonable reasoning I heard of for some time is this: If we Baptists are satisfied to await to await the conversion of sinners as God may seem to move upon them and it so happens that they are of considerable age before we baptize them, we do a great wrong; and then when the Lord works on the hearts of the young, and they make a confession of faith and we baptize them, we hear them howl "They will now soon baptize infants." So then, if we baptize old ones, it is wrong; and if we baptize young ones, it is also wrong. Well, so be it; but rest easy, we shall never interfere with your infant baptizing institution.

In glancing over a work written by Geo. B. Russell, (Reformed church, entitled "Creed and Customs," on page 189, I find the following: 'Dunkards' sing at their "dippings;"

"Come every mother's son and daughter, Here's the gospel in the water."

Brethren, you that use that hymn at your baptisms, would you please give us, through the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, the entire hymn? I wonder why it is that some of the brethren are so fearful about receiving young folks into the church. While at the same time, their children of the same age on a sick bed lament their fears of being lost, lost for not having attended to the ordinance of baptism, spare no pains to have the minister brought and have it attended to. Is it more necessary on a death bed than at any other time?

C. G. LINT.

True Prayer.

One reason why your prayers profit you so little is that you do not pray for what you want. You know that your wishes are not in harmony with the divine will, and you hush your wishes to silence, and pray for what God will give to sincere seekers. But you are not—pardon our frankness—you are not a sincere seeker. You would blush to ask the thing you covet. Your foolish heart is set on the evil and frivolous, and for that only could you really pray. You must want the good heaven offers you before your prayer will be effectual. It must be in harmony with two wills—yours and God's. Until it is in such harmony it may do you some services by fixing your attention upon the cause of your troubles. A worship in which the worshiper tries to bring his heart into acquiescence with the divine will may do him a great service; but it cannot be effectual prayer. When prayer flows out of our true wishes and responds to the promise of our Lord, we "ask what we will and it is done unto us."

The man whose prayer is always answered is a man whose wishes revolve in the sacred circle of duty and honor. This man is hearty in his prayer and God is quick in answer because of the heartiness. Can anything be simpler or clearer than the logic of effectual prayer? The human wish is an answer to the divine order; the soul cries on earth for the things ordained for it in heaven. The preparation of the heart means, then, a great deal—means "a heart in every thought renewed and full of love divine." Our Savior gave a Magna Charta to prayer, but he conditioned it by, "If ye abide in me and my words abide in you." "No great work is hard in the doing" was a lesson of our childhood. The great worker has learned to do easily what is beyond common hands. Nothing better illustrates the truth than prayer, wherein everything is easy when once the heart's wishes rest and play in the lap of sovereign law.—The Methodist.

I am deeply convinced of one thing as I grow older, and that is, God never sends me to preach a sermon, anywhere or on any occasion, but he sends some one into that congregation to receive just that truth which he has sent me to utter. Oh, there are hearts—I cannot point them out to-day—but there are men and women in this audience whose souls are beginning to be stirred, and to whom God is speaking, even through my feeble voice, this morning. God grant to speak more fully and more loudly to their consciences; rouse them from the stupor of sin and bring them to Christ! And there are men saying, "God helping me, I will be a better minister than ever before." God help you to carry out your purpose! —Bishop Sanborn.

Many profess themselves ready to die for Christ, yet cannot bear the cross of humiliation without complaint.

TRUST.

I cannot see with my small human sight
Why God should lead this way or that for me;

I only know he saith, "Child, follow me."
But I can trust.

I know not why my path should be at times

So straitly hedged, so strangely barred before;

I only know God could keep wide the door.
But I can trust.

I find no answer, often, when beset
With questions fierce and subtle on my way;
And often have but strength to faintly
pray.

But I can trust.

I often wonder, as with trembling hand
I cast the seed along the furrowed ground,
If ripened fruit for God will there be found.
But I can trust.

I cannot know why suddenly the storm
Should rage so fiercely round me in its
wrath;
But this I know, God watches all my path.
And I can trust.

I may not draw aside the mystic veil
That hides the unknown future from my sight;
Nor know if for me waits the dark or light.
But I can trust.

I have no power to look across the tide,
To know, while here, the land beyond the river;
But this I know, I shall be God's forever.
So I can trust.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

A Fragment.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

The world is full of devils who are ever busy to turn our hearts from the Cross, and entwine our affections around the things that perish. He knows how much quicker the five senses of the body respond to tangible objects, than the five senses of the soul to the objects of faith. He is "the prince of the power of the air." He enters, as it were, by our breath. Sin is the gravitation of our moral being after the flesh. To go to hell is as easy as to slide down hill. To get to Heaven we must toil and climb. No one ever yet reached the Golden City with his hands in his pockets. The localities of Heaven and Hell are not designated, only that the one is up and the other down. Sin comes from beneath and drags down. Holiness is from above and lifts up. The earth is cursed with thorns and thistles, and till we get through all these prickly hindrances we will be so scratched and torn that we reach the Gates of Pearl covered with blood from head to foot. We are now in the height of the blackberry season, and the fences are lined with pickers. They joke and laugh over their work till echo mocks their folly. Little do they think that every berry calls for a tear, and every thorn is a preacher of Divine wrath, and every scratch a repetition of the curse of Eden, and a premonition of the sinners' doom. No sin, no blackberries. If they impose toil and draw blood they also afford nourishment. Another great moral lesson. The wreath of thorns on the Godman's brow calls forth blood for the redemption of the world. No one ever got to Heaven without losing blood. If Jesus bled for us, we must also bleed for Him, and both through sin. Briers spring up spontaneously; wheat must be cultivated. We are always ready to serve the flesh, and slow to act from that which is born of the Spirit. When the hand is prompted to grasp the forbidden fruit, we must nail it to the Christ-bearing tree, and that costs blood. When the foot inclines to step out of the narrow way, we must give it a nail, and that brings blood. When the tongue is ready to send forth its idle words, or hell-kindled sparks, we must fasten it to the gum with one of the clamps of Calvary, and this will fill our mouth with blood. If we go through the world bleeding with crucifixion, we will have little disposition to take part in the vanities of the flesh. We must deal largely with blood, Christ's and our. Blood and myrrh and gall. Bile to drink, none to spew. There is no gall in a saint. Milk and honey are under his tongue. If we boil over we may be sure the devil is stirring the fire. The old man cannot bear a slap in the face. The new man gives both cheeks to the smiter. The passions must be subdued, the flesh crucified, the life surrendered. Without this there is no salvation. We must be born again.

BORN AGAIN. The all of God and Heaven is in these two words. A new Father brings a new character and temper. Without this our profession is a monstrous lie. Such liars swing their censurs by the thousand. All law—civil, traditional, ecclesiastical—is overtopped by the Law of the Divine Nature. What is God? What revelation has He made of Himself? What was His life in the flesh? This is the Christian's whole concern. The first birth is Ishmael, and must be cast out. The second is Isaac, and is heir to the whole estate of God. O that we better understood the allegory of redemption. O that we were deeper in the mystery of the Divine enigma. A genuine faith, a holy life, the Cross in the heart, has, seminally, all the fullness of God.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN
Glory not in Man.

"Therefore let no man glory in man; for all things are yours." Cor. 3: 21.

In the Corinthian church there was division. Some were for Paul and some were for Apollos. Paul tells them it was not Paul or Apollos that was crucified for them; it was Christ. Christ gave us all things; "therefore let no man glory in man." We might suppose Paul to be a good man and a wise man; to him all glory belongs. It is our faith in him. If we are his and he is ours, in him we live, move and have our being. If all the preachers would preach the word, and the members would believe it and live it out, we then would be one in Christ and Christ in us: there would be no need of wrangling; but so long as the preacher preaches anything but the word, and the member tries to live out the word, so long there will be division; and if the preacher preaches the word, and we as a congregation or individuals do not live out the word, there will be division. If we want a unity of the Spirit let preachers preach the word, and nothing but the word, and the believer obey the word, and nothing but the word, and then we shall all know him from the least to the greatest.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Modern Jerusalem. Antitype of the Seven Churches of Asia.

BY J. SENGEL.

Ancient Jerusalem was a seat of government, principally occupied and controlled by a peculiar people, styled the people of God. Their laws and ordinances were not the result of human legislation, but were regarded as the oracles of God. That city included a temple designated as a special dwelling place for the Spirit of God, or a place where God would meet his people as long as they strictly lived up to his law. Those laws were not without a penalty, and all those who, for want of faith in their Legislator, or through negligence, disregarded his law, had to suffer the penalty without respect of person or nobility; and in every violation of God's law, he warned them with a victory over his people by their enemies. The building of that temple was given into the hands of Solomon, who was called a wise Master-builder. The material was gathered from various parts of the country, after being dressed in its original location and remodeled by the line and plummet; and such material as could not be remodeled constituted no part of the temple, and consequently was not gathered. The material was not all of the same character nor quality, some gold, silver, iron, brass, wood, stone, &c., yet each filled its station equally acceptably, and, all combined, formed a grand receptacle for God's law and Spirit.

But in the course of time the temple became defiled with the introduction of the traditions of the fathers who administered the law to the people, who became designing men, turning necessities to speculations (John 2: 16), and laying heavy burdens upon men's shoulders (Matth. 23: 4); and because of their tradition and degeneration, blindness happened them, and a final rejection of those who lived in the days of Christ. Through their blindness they failed to comprehend the Savior as their long looked for Messiah; hence the Jewish temple became defiled, and the sanctuary corrupted.

These were only types and shadows of things to come in the Christian era. Every brother and sister that has left the covetous craft, and dishonest traffic of this world, and turns to God, constitutes a temple for God to dwell in. So soon as we let sin reign in our mortal bodies, the fleshly temple becomes defiled, and the heart, (the inner court, or holy sanctuary) becomes corrupted and fails to be a receptacle for God's Spirit to dwell in; but through this remodeling process we become dressed and polished by the gospel line and plummet as material fit and ready to be gathered out of the wilderness of this world, so that not the sound of a hammer will be heard, but "he that is unjust, let him be unjust still; and he that is filthy, let him be filthy still; and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still; and he that is holy, let him be holy still." Rev. 22: 11. So that which is dressed will be gathered, and that which is unjust will remain so and not be gathered, unfit for the temple, which Christ the wise Master-builder will erect at his coming, where God will visit his elect during the thousand year's reign of Christ, personally, as he did our first parents in the garden of Eden.

But as sin and corruption grew so intolerable amongst the peculiar people of God under the Jewish economy that the abomination of Roman idolatry was placed in the holy temple, which was given by the prophet Daniel as a token of its downfall, so will also corruptions of every conceivable kind, enter those human temples professing Christianity; and when sin has entered the inner court, the Spirit of Christ withdraws, and the rule and government of that temple will be changed from spiritual to carnal. Then will the abomination that maketh desolate be placed in the spiritual temple (the church). Hence a time of trouble will ensue; the fathers themselves being more or less tainted with corruption, will come together to adjust matters of variances, suffering flesh and blood, with self-interest, to pervert their judgment, having invariably the law of Christ for their object, but which is virtually ruled out by the law of carnality, their variances terminating in a forced settlement that would scarcely satisfy the laws of nations, leaving reconciliation a blank, while this alone will satisfy the laws of heaven. Hence the charge to the seven churches of Asia, being directed to the angels or bishops (who had the keys of the kingdom and were in charge of the church), but was more specially designed for the instructions of the church at his coming.

Now let us bring the picture of the seven churches of Asia before us, and compare them with the covetous corruptions and carnal designs and overruling pride, of the various branches of the church at the present day, from the bishop in his palace, down to the laity in his most humble cottage, and what is the conclusion? Why, the prophet would say, we are "weighed in the balance and are found wanting," Dan. 5: 27. The Savior says, "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Luke 18: 8. "Because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold," Matth. 24: 12. A want of love and faith is the result of iniquity, which is a root of covetousness. Covetousness prompts men and women to lie, to defraud, steal, murder, rob, gain by false pretence, fornication, &c. Paul in his first letter to the Corinthians 5: 11, says: "But now I have written unto you not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolator, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such a one no not to eat." Do the angels or bishops with the churches under their influence heed these charges? Verily not. May not then the charge be more direct to us in the latter days? "I know thy faith, and thy patience, yet I have a few things against thee; because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked." Rev. 3: 17. Ye have also those who say in their hearts, "Let us go to the place of strong drink, and quench our thirst with wine and strong drink, for water satisfieth not. Ye have also them who covet their neighbors' wives, their sons and daughters, to gratify their lust. Ye have also those who rob their fellow heirs of their inheritance, and devour widows' houses, through covetousness and false pretense, by which to get gain, yea, with false writing, with false speaking, with false witness. Yea, in my sanctuary they worship me outwardly, and in the sanctuary of the world they worship mine adversary with fashion and fame. Yea, these ye have, with whom ye sit down in my holy sanctuary and eat my flesh, and drink my blood (communion), saying, 'Let us judge ourselves that we come not into judgment,' for it is written, 'He that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body.' With these abominations standing where they ought not, ye defile my temple, ye corrupt my people, ye pollute my sanctuary; yea, ye delame my name, and reverence mine adversary."

O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou modern city (America), with temple (church) decked with fine gold (Christian graces), rich with pearls (charity) of great price, how art thou fallen!

What causes Hard Times.

SELECTED BY UNCLE JOHN.

1. Too many spend money, and too few earn it.
2. Too much money is spent wastefully and uselessly, and too little saved and made productive and accumulative.
3. We buy too much abroad that we ought to produce at home.
4. We buy too much that we do not pay for cash down—too much of what we buy being what we do not actually need.
5. We are too wasteful—know too little how to economize, and have too little disposition to do so.
6. We are too speculative, unscrupulous, and, actually, dishonest in our efforts to make money.
7. Too many of us prefer idleness to industry, and too few of us know how to work and derive pleasure and profit from our labor.
8. We spend too much time in learning what is not useful, and too little in informing ourselves upon the best methods of promoting our material prosperity.
9. We know too much of politics, spend too much time and money as politicians, and know too little about political economy and science of a stable and economical, successful public policy.

10. Our actions are governed too much by passion, prejudice and partisan feeling, and not enough by broad, political, intelligent, liberal and patriotic conception of the duties which American citizenship involves.

11. We are too superficial and impatient, and lack the clear purpose and persistent, patient application necessary to permanent success.

12. We depend too much upon our "sharpness" and "cuteness" and readiness to take advantage of circumstances, and not enough upon earnest, honest labor.

13. We talk and read too much, and think and act too little.

14. We spread ourselves over too great a surface, and thus fail to dig deep enough in one place for the nuggets that will surely enrich us.

15. We lack in that higher morality which frowns down venality and elevates and encourages purity of life, probity of conduct and a scrupulous regard for a good and honorable name.

16. We do not teach our children that they must know how to earn their own living; and are too willing to commit them to a life of easy unscrupulousness, depending on their skill as make-shifts rather than upon their solid acquirements as men and women.

17. We roll about too much like stones that gather no moss, enriching carrying corporations and speculating capitalists, and defrauding ourselves of the substantial profits of our own industry.

18. We are devotees of show rather than substance, and pay homage to the glitter of a "success" which is but a robe covering filth, rotteness and corruption—social, commercial and political.

19. We build too many churches cultivate the christian virtues and spirit too little; we have too many schools and too few real teachers; we are too undivided in certain directions and not enough so in others, we adhere too closely to what we ought to depart from, and refuse to take hold of that to which we ought to cling.

20. In short we are too much what we ought not to be, and not enough what we ought to be.

Is our theory satisfactory ?

Perfect Law of Liberty.

BY P. S. NEWCOMER.

"Whoever looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed." James 1: 25.

These words, falling from the mouth-piece of inspiration, convey, to every intelligent and reflective mind, much food for spiritual digestion, that we may profit thereby by making available the means of grace secured to us for our redemption. The word liberty, so prominent in this connection, in all its potency is suggestive of freedom in its divine attribute. Freedom of thought, expression, and action, and above all, freedom of conscience, are the great essential elements necessary to the enjoyment of this life, as pertaining to our spiritual physical and temporal comfort, as the freedom of heaven will be our precious and perpetual boon in the life yet to come. But that we may obtain this blessing, either in a physical spiritual or temporal sense, it is necessary for us to discharge certain peculiar obligations, whether in submission to the laws of nature for our physical comfort, to the demands of civil justice for our temporal relief, or to the laws of God for our spiritual advancement. Each one of these, in its various requirements, must be implicitly complied with, according to the best authenticated specifications, in order to be effectual. But whilst two of these only afford temporary relief and unending, this "perfect law of liberty" confers blessings and benefits spiritually which endure eternally.

The civil law, under certain peculiar circumstances, guarantees unto us liberty of thought expression and action, yet it has its adverse side; yet it has its restrictions, which we dare not transgress without exposing ourselves to grievous penalties, often rigidly enforced. Although the vilest of the vile may have recourse to the law, and have able counselors to defend them, subjected to the variety of constructions that may be placed upon it by eminent jurists, which, if convincing, consigns us to such condign punishment as the law and the discretion of the court may see proper to inflict. So also in our violation of the laws of health, which brings on physical affliction and pain. If we transgress the divine law, we suffer spiritually, which will eventually consign us to a life of eternal perdition and misery.

We do not claim perfection as an attribute of our civil law givers and in no sense infallible, being liable to err either in acquittal or condemnation; but it is our object to draw an analogy between the civil law—the old ceremonial law under the Levitical priesthood—and the law of perfection grace and truth, which came by Jesus Christ. It is obvious to every reflective mind, that perfection did not and does not exist under the two former administrations named. But whilst we do not claim perfection under either of these, we do most absolutely claim perfection under the law of grace and truth, in its largest significance, and that under the new dispensation it is possible for us to attain unto such perfection in our sphere, even as our Father in heaven enjoys perfection in his sphere, with all the divine attributes clustering so profusely around him. Hence the injunction: "Be ye perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." But it is more than probable that this perfect law of liberty, here referred to by St. James, stands out in bold relief in contradistinction to the old ceremonial law, which can be shown conclusively to have been imperfect as pertaining to our best spiritual interests, because it only consisted in types and shadows of the good things to come, often foreshadowing very significantly the coming Messiah that taketh away the sins of the world. "For the law, having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually make the comers thereunto perfect. For then, would they not have ceased to be offered? because that the worshippers once purged should have had no more conscience for sin. But in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year. For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins. * * * Thensaid he, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the first, that he might establish the second. By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all. * * * For by one offering, he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified. This is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my laws into their hearts and in their minds will I write them; and their sins and iniquities will I remember no more." Heb. 10: 1—17. Our blessed Redeemer is represented to us "as a lamb slain from the foundation of the world;" and in reading the prophets we discover a continual unfolding of his coming and the character of his great mission, after which we have the glorious confirmation of his goodness and wonderful works toward the children of men, and of that love wherewith he loved us and gave himself for us, to redeem us from under the curse of a broken law, that our hearts might be purified in obeying the truth, and thus become a "peculiar people zealous of good works," not only hearers but doers of the work, that we may be blessed in our deeds.

When we turn back to the history of creation, and read of the formation of man out of the dust of the earth and his being placed in the paradise of God, we already discover this law of liberty developing itself by an exhibition of God's love. Good and evil were placed before the newly created intelligences, with full privilege accorded them to partake of all the luxuriant fruit of the garden with one exception, and this with the death penalty closely allied to the prohibition. As it was then, so is it now.

In the further revelation of the divine will our privileges are only abridged when fearful consequences are to ensue from the violation of his holy and righteous will. In the infinitude of the wisdom of God he deemed it expedient that man should be a free moral agent. Hence good and evil were placed before him, that he might freely exercise this free-will agency, which was to be perpetuated until the final consummation of all things.

God has given us a better motive for loving, serving and obeying him than that of force. His divine attributes of love and mercy are the great incentives to bring us to repentance, and a knowledge of the truth as it is in him, knowing that the goodness of God leadeth us to repentance; for he "so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." From this fundamental truth emanates this "perfect law of liberty."

When our blessed Redeemer left the shining courts of heaven, took upon himself the form of sinful flesh, he brought with him a saving gospel; for "in the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God." Already at the premature age of twelve years we find him about his Master's business, opening up and developing the great plan of redemption, which, at the close of his career on earth, was fully and wisely matured; and after he had ascended to the right hand of the Father in heaven, in full consummation of the divine will, he sends the comforter, even the Spirit of truth, to abide with us forever. In his inspired work we have a full revelation of his divine will, and hence it is our blessed privilege to look into this perfect law of liberty. "Search the Scriptures" is the divine injunction, "in them ye think ye have eternal life," these "are they which testify of me." Faith, it is written, "cometh by hearing; and hearing, by the word of God," but be "not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work."

Whilst God in his infinite love and mercy has done so much for us toward securing our redemption, there is still an important work for us to do. We must give attendance unto the means of divine grace made accessible to us. It is our imperative duty to render obedience to his holy will, whether in word or epistle, fully complying with all the requirements so permanently set forth in this law of gospel liberty, giving each and every demand made upon us its full spiritual significance, that they may redound toward our advancement in the divine life, that we may live in continual anticipation of the enjoyment of a life of blissful immortality beyond the confines of death hell and the grave. "Whoso looketh into" this "perfect law of liberty and continueth therein," is continually seeking and grasping after a knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ. We should have this transcendent fact ever impressed upon our minds and indelibly stamped upon our hearts. To whom shall we go, but to thee, O Lord? "Thou hast the words of eternal life." There is no other name given under heaven whereby we can be saved—saved by implicitly believing that God exists, and that he is the rewarder of all who diligently seek him.

And whilst penetrating farther and farther into the great design and plan of salvation, accepting of all the saving efficacies so wisely ordained and so life-giving in their essence, it is then we may be virtually regarded as looking unto the perfect law of liberty, with a pure motive that will meet the divine approbation, and hence be the recipients of his grace, by which we are saved through faith.

"Whosoever cometh to me, and heareth my sayings, and doeth them, I will show you to whom he is like: he is like a man which built a house, and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock; and when the floods arose, the stream beat vehemently upon that house, and could not shake it; for it was founded upon a rock." The foundation rock of our salvation is Christ. Other foundation than this can no man lay. The building fitly framed together, and built upon this sure foundation stone, will grow up into a holy and stately temple unto the Lord, against which the surging waves of temptation may beat vehemently without effect, in "the wreck of matter and the crush of worlds." The Christian who has looked into this perfect law of gospel liberty, not having been a forgetful hearer but a doer of the work, will still survive; his name will be indelibly recorded in the Lamb's book of life as an heir of God and joint heir with Christ, having a right to the tree of life. Having been the recipient of this perfect law of liberty, conferred by the gospel in this life, he will finally enjoy the more glorious and eternal felicity of the freedom and liberty of the life that is to come, bask forever in the sunlight of God's countenance, see him as he is, and be made like unto his own glorious image. Turn back, if you will, to the prophecies of Isaiah, and hear him speaking of Christ as the coming Messiah, and his office, saying, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me; because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor. He hath sent me to heal the broken hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, recovering of sight to the blind; to set at liberty them that are in bondage." Hence we find the old prophet foreshadowing very beautifully and significantly the efficacious administrations of our blessed Redeemer, long before he was manifest in the flesh, after which we have a full confirmation of his prophesy, showing conclusively that this perfect law is the product of his infinite love, and that all physical, temporal, as well as spiritual blessings emanate alone from him. Hence we should truly love, serve and obey him, whom to love and serve aright is life eternal; because he first loved us, and gave himself for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him, being made free from the law of sin and eternal death, transported from the kingdom of darkness into the glorious light and liberty of the gospel—the kingdom of his dear Son.

Self-Condémnation.

A celebrated author lays down a number of principles, as deduced from Paul to the Romans, on which we are assured all men are to be judged. The first of these is: He who condemns in others what he does himself. That is the act of self condemnation. It is remarkable, saying nothing about the correctness of this principle, how often we do the very things we condemn in others. Not, perhaps, the precise outward act, but we violate the same general principle or rule of action. Who does not condemn others for that species of self-will which insists on having its own way or none at all? And yet a careful examination will reveal in all men this same disposition to some extent. It is a matter that we should carefully inquire into. If we stand self-condemned, who will justify?—Church Advocate.

How Jesus Comes.

One evening the children in Falk's Reformatory at Weimer sat down to supper. When one of the boys had said the pious grace, "Come, Lord Jesus, be our guest, and bless what thou hast provided," a little fellow looked up, and said: "Do tell me why the Lord Jesus never comes. We ask him every day to sit with us and he never comes."

"Dear child, only believe, and you may be sure he will come, for he does not despise our invitation."

"I shall set him a seat," said the little fellow, and just then there was a knock at the door. A poor frozen apprentice entered, begging for a night's lodging. He was made welcome; the chair stood ready for him; every child wanted him to have his plate; and one was lamenting that his bed was too small for a stranger, who was quite touched by such uncommon attentions. The little one had been thinking hard all this time:

"Jesus could not come, so He sent this poor man in his place; is that it?"

"Yes, dear child, that is just it. Every piece of bread, and every drink of water that we give to the poor, or the sick, or the prisoners, for Jesus' sake, we give to Him: 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, you have done it to me.'"

The children sang a hymn of the love of God to their guest before they parted for the night.—Little Sower.

The Young Man of Principle.

A young man was in a position where his employers required him to make a false statement, by which several hundred dollars would come into their hands which did not belong to them. All depended upon this clerk's serving their purpose. To their great vexation, he utterly refused to do so. He could not be induced to sell his conscience for any one's favor. As the result he was discharged from his place.

Not long after, he applied for a vacant situation, and the gentleman, being pleased with his address, asked him for any good reference he might have.

The young man felt that his character was unsullied, and so fearlessly referred him to his last employer.

"I have just been dismissed from his employ; you can inquire of him about me."

It was a new fashion of getting a young man's recommendations, but the gentleman called on the firm and found that the only objection was that he was "too conscientious about trifles." The gentleman had not been greatly troubled by too conscientious employees, and preferred that those intrusted with his money should have a fine sense of truth and honesty; so he engaged the young man, who rose fast in favor, and became at length a partner in one of the largest firms in Boston.

"A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches." Even unscrupulous men know the worth of good principles that cannot be moved.

A gentleman turned off a man in his employ at the bank because he refused to write for him on the Sabbath. When asked afterwards to name some reliable person he might know suitable for a cashier in another bank, he mentioned this same man.

"You can depend upon him," he said, "for he refused to work for me on the Sabbath."

A gentleman who employed many persons in his large establishment said:

"When I see one of my young men riding out for pleasure on Sunday, I dismiss him on Monday. I know such a one can not be trusted. Nor will I employ any one who even occasionally drinks liquor of any kind."

Honor the Sabbath and all the other teachings of the Bible, and you will not fail to find favor with God, and with man also.—Banner.

A Boy's Influence.

The following incident, related by the late Dr. Neal, of England, beautifully illustrates the power of example. We give it hoping it may be an encouragement to all young people to be faithful to their obligations, that they may realize in their own lives "that whosoever honors God, God will honor."

Dr. Neal says that he was visiting a large school, and among other places, he was shown a room, or dormitory as they called it, where as many as eighty boys slept. It is at present a rule of the school, that before they retire, silence shall be kept for a certain length of time, so that all the boys may kneel and pray undisturbed. Now twenty years ago, of all the eighty boys that were there, not one ever knelt in prayer, and it may be interesting to know how such a radical change was effected. A boy entered the school about that time not more than eleven or twelve years of age; he was not strong in health and was rather backward in learning. The first night he was surprised to see all the boys get into bed without praying. It occurred to him that if he only prayed from the heart, that was all that was necessary, and that he might say his prayers after he went to bed. Then he remembered what our Lord says, "Whosoever therefore shall deny Me, before men, him will I deny before My Father which is in heaven." And after a great struggle, he knelt, but he had no sooner done so, than there arose such an outcry, such a hooting, as might well have frightened a brave man, much more, a poor, weak boy. Night after night this was repeated; day after day he was mocked and ridiculed. But by-and-by some of the better boys grew ashamed of their conduct, and began to defend him, and take his part, and finally followed his example in kneeling and praying. And so it came to pass by degrees that they all knelt in prayer. Thus we see how the truth in this one boy overcame a schoolful of iniquity. And this one thing I am sure of, that of all things that are called glorious now, great victories, great conquests, great overcoming of difficulties, this is one of the most truly glorious. And something of this kind any of you may be called on to do at some future time.—Sci.

The Great Master.

"I am my own master!" cried a youth proudly, when a friend tried to persuade him from an enterprise which he had on hand, "I am my own master!"

"Did you ever consider what a responsible post that is?" asked his friend.

"Responsible? Is it?"

"A master must lay out the work which he wants done, and see that it is done right. He should try to secure the best ends by the best means. He must keep on the lookout against obstacles and accidents, and watch that everything goes straight, else he must fail."

"Well."

"To be master of yourself you have your conscience to keep clear, your heart to cultivate, your temper to govern, your will to direct, and your judgment to instruct. You are master over a hard lot, and if you don't master them they will master you."

"That is so," said the young man.

"Now I could undertake no such thing," said his friend. "I should fail sure, if I did. Saul wanted to be his own master, and failed. Herod did. Judas did. No man is fit for it. 'One is my master, even Christ,' I work under his direction. He is regulator, and where he is master all goes right."

"One is my master, even Christ," repeated the young man slowly and seriously; "every body who puts himself sincerely under his leadership wins at last."—Christian Weekly.

A Christian lady who had recently lost her husband was weeping in the presence of her little boy. Upon asking her why she was weeping, she told him that it was because his father was dead. He at once replied, "Is Jesus dead too?" Some time afterwards, when on one occasion she was complaining and fretting about her difficulties, he said to her, "Are you tired trusting in Jesus?"

Miscellaneous.

Stanley Heard From.

Five letters have been received from Stanley, containing full accounts of his journeys and discoveries during the period of more than a year, in which no word had been received from the explorer.—His last letter was written on the 24th of April, not far from Ujiji, on Lake Tanganyika, where he found Livingstone. These letters describe voyages on Victoria Lake, including violent storms, and encounters with savages; journeys across the country between Victoria and Albert Lakes, including the ascent of the lofty mountain Gambaragara. Stanley did not explore the Albert Lake, and remained near it but a short time. This explains why Gessi, who sailed around it in April last, returned with no news of Stanley. He writes that he is well, and also his white companion, Frank Poceok.

This successful intrepidity in fathoming the mysteries of the African continent appeals to the sympathies of mankind far more than the comparatively fruitless feats of Arctic exploration. We see in Africa the working of a Providence that opens door after door to the light of Christian truth and human progress.—N. Y. Observer.

The World's Population.

The latest estimate of the number of people in the world, and their division into religions, may be thus tabulated:

Protestants.....	89,000,000
Roman Catholics.....	170,000,000
Greek Church.....	76,000,000
Jews.....	5,000,000
Mohammedans.....	160,000,000
Heathen.....	788,000,000
Totals.....	1,288,000,000

This is largely an estimate only, as many of the countries are very inadequately enumerated by census. Parts of Africa and Asia must be guessed at, with very few data to go upon. But if we drop the surplus above the thousand millions, supposing that the heathen nations are less correctly counted than the others, we still have the appalling fact that at least 600,000,000 of the human race are in the midst of Pagan or Mohammedan darkness, and are in the ways of sin and death.

The thought is eloquent! A matter-of-fact people and age ought to be moved more by its statement than by the most exciting appeals. With the powers of civilization, with wealth and means of making the money instrumental in conveying our civilization and Christianity to the darkest and most distant parts of the earth, why should we not evangelize the world without delay? All the real power of the world is in the hands of nominal Christians. They ought to give their religion to the rest.—N. Y. Observer.

ARE WE JEWS OR PAGANS?—Some time since the old Lutheran Church officially closed its pulpits against ministers of other Churches. Some of their preachers have since been busy defending the action. Dr. Krauth has proved one of the ablest of these defenders. He reasons analogically, thus: "The Apostes accepted invitations from Jews and Pagans to preach in their assemblies, but they never returned the courtesy, &c. Ergo, We are the successors of the Apostles, teach the 'apostolic faith, and remain steadfast in the doctrine of the Apostles,' and hence may 'accept pulpits most thankfully and use them freely,' but never exchange. Now the question comes in, 'Who are the Jews and the Pagans with whom these Lutheran ministers cannot exchange?' The answer is, 'The other denominations. Will they be pleased with such logic, and such a conclusion? This does not agree with Dr. Krauth's words written in 1861. Then he said: "We acknowledge the Christian character of the true disciples of our Lord throughout the world. * * * We propose no sectarian hedge to our pulpits, nor bar to our communion table, nor abnegation of the sweet bonds of Christian fellowship, which would exclude any who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity." The Doctor evidently made progress in bigotry if not Christian grace.—Church Advocate.

ENGINE WHISTLES AND HORSES.—In a case recently tried in Pennsylvania, in which damages were claimed from a railroad company for injuries resulting from the frightening of a horse by a locomotive whistle, it was ruled by the Court as follows:—

"A railroad company having a chartered right to propel their cars by steam are not responsible for injuries resulting from the proper use of such agency. Whether alarming a horse and causing an accident by a rapidly moving train, or sounding a whistle, will make a company liable for damages depends upon whether it was from want of proper care in those in charge of the train. What would be due care in running a train through a sparsely settled rural district might be negligence in approaching a large city. A train was passing through a city on a railroad which had a number of short curves, so that persons could see the train but for a short distance; it was crossed by several streets and passed over a river on a drawbridge; the rule of the company required that the whistle should be sounded about a certain point, to warn the bridge-tender and persons about to cross at other streets. Held, the use of the whistle at that point in the ordinary manner was not negligence. If the whistle had not been sounded at such point and one had been injured by reason of the omission, it would have been negligence per se. One driving an unbroken or vicious horse, or one easily frightened by a locomotive, along a public road running side by side with a railroad, does so at his own peril; the right of the company to move their trains on their road is as high as that of the individual to use the public road."

The Boston Journal of August 1 says: "During the last heated term Mr. Mark Carr, of Walpole, Norfolk county, Mass., a very worthy laboring man about sixty years of age, received a severe sunstroke. The day following the attack he wandered away, and though a thorough search was instituted, no trace of him could be found. His friends gave up all hopes of him, and his estate was about to be administered upon, when news came from a farmhouse about a mile distant from where he lived, that Mr. Carr had appeared there. His friends immediately went to his relief, and found him emaciated and weak. He says that he left his home, and that is the last he remembers. He came to his senses in the woods, and crawled to the nearest house. The fact is well substantiated that he must have remained in the woods in a state of unconsciousness for a period of three weeks, without food or water. Mr. Carr is recovering, and the case is regarded as one of the most remarkable on record, as our informant is thoroughly conversant with the facts as here stated.

CAPTURE OF A LARGE PORPOISE.—The Trenton (N. J.) State Gazette of August 1, says: "Yesterday morning a number of young men saw a large fish sporting in the Delaware River, just below the rolling mill. A number of persons started in pursuit of the monster and they finally succeeded in capturing it. They first caught him in a net, but he treated the meshes with contempt. They then procured boats, boat hooks and a harpoon, and ran the fish on the bar below the mill. He was harpooned by William Ent, and struck by others, and finally overpowered and killed. He was brought to shore and discovered to be a porpoise, measuring ten feet and six inches in length, forty inches across the back, and weighing six hundred pounds. The party were fully three hours capturing him."—Sci.

THE SEA SERPENT.—Baltimore, Aug. 3.—Capt. Joshua Shaw, of the Baltimore Board of Pilots, reports that while piloting the Spanish ship Augustina, on her outward voyage from that port, about two weeks ago, the vessel was becalmed off Cape Henry, at the mouth of Chesapeake Bay. While thus detained, a serpent, twenty-five feet long, and as thick as a flour barrel, wriggled up the chain cable over the bow, and got its head up to the hawser hole. The crew, armed with pistols, handspikes and capstan bars, drove it three times into the sea. The last time it disappeared altogether, leaving red stains in the water. It is supposed to have been fatally injured. The reptile had a horrid looking head, with eyes protruding an inch from the sockets.—Sci.

The will of the late Daniel Goodwin, of Hartford, Conn., bequeaths $1,000 to the Connecticut Historical Society, $2,000 to the Hartford Hospital, $2,000 to Trinity College, and to Wadsworth Athenæum of Hartford, a portrait of his father, by Malbone, painted on ivory.

There are 713 Sunday Schools in the State of Minnesota, with 33,000 scholars, and 1,285 persons from the Sunday school have been added to the church membership during the past year.

A sense of our insufficiency to do any good thing without Divine assistance, will, I trust, whatever our trials or temptations may be, so humble us as wholly to prevent a vain dependence upon anything of our own; but surely there is as much need for watchfulness and prayer at this day, as when the disciples were immediately recommended to it.—*Sarah R. ### SPECIAL NOTICE.

- I. The Editor does not hold himself responsible for the opinions of correspondents.
- II. A free and fraternal interchange of thought will be allowed on all important subjects; but the Editor reserves to himself the right to determine the time for admitting controverted questions, and the time for discontinuing the discussions.
- III. Personal character must be respected; personal quarrels will not be admitted; and bitter and unkind words must not be used.
- IV. Articles should be short and pointed, and written only on one side of the paper; and if the paper is closely ruled, only on every alternate rule. Manuscript paper should be about 4 or 5 inches wide.
- V. Important Bible and Historical quotations should be accompanied with references to chapter and verse, book and page.
- VI. Every article should have for its object the glory of God and the edification of the readers.
- VII. Every article for publication must be accompanied by the name of the author as a guarantee of good faith. An assumed name, however, is allowable in print.
- VIII. Unaccepted manuscripts will not be returned unless their writers make request accordingly, and enclose stamps for postage, at the time they submit them.

RULES FOR AGENTS.

1. At the head of every letter give the name of your own post-office, county and State; and the date on which it is written.
2. Write the name and give the full address of every subscriber you send, as legibly as you can.
3. Write "New" before the names of all new subscribers.
4. In ordering a change of address, give the post-office, county, and State, to which the paper is sent, as well as the post-office, county, and State to which it is to be sent.
5. Do not mix up different items of business; but take up and finish one item before you take up another.
6. Write items intended for publication on a separate slip.
7. Make every lawful effort to obtain subscribers, and to do good in whatever way you can.
8. Send money by drafts, post-office money orders, or registered letters.
9. Observe the above rules, and you will expedite business, save us from much trouble, and yourselves and our subscribers from disappointments and vexation.

RIGHT FEELINGS, AS WELL AS RIGHT ACTIONS ARE ESSENTIAL TO CHRISTIAN CHARACTER.

It is not uncommon when brought into the relation of peacemakers to parties who have difficulties to settle, to hear one or both declare with much positiveness and appearance of sincerity, that they want nothing but what is right, and that they want to do right and nothing else. Now, every man ought to have his rights, and whatever is his own. And in their expressed intentions to do right, they may be very sincere. But in a world lying in sin as the world is in which we live, and consequently presenting many temptations, trials and difficulties to those who would "live soberly, righteously, and godly," those who succeed in living a holy life according to the standard of gospel holiness, should make their calculations not always to receive what is just and right, but to take much less, and to endure losses and crosses. And this it becomes our duty under many circumstances to do, according to the Christian law of forgiveness and forbearance.

A difficulty occurs between brother A and brother B in a settlement that they have. Brother A claims one dollar more of brother B than the latter is willing to acknowledge. Brother A may know that his claim is altogether just, and if it is so he surely should have all he is entitled to. But brother B, either through ignorance or a want of honesty, refuses to pay brother A the amount he claims, and there is no testimony whatever to prove that his claim is correct. In such a case brother A cannot recover by an ecclesiastical court his money, and he would do well to exercise his Christian graces of forgiveness and forbearance, and let the matter rest quietly until the awards of the judgment day are given. So in many cases when we have one brother against another and no testimony on either side, and nothing from which to judge but the declaration of each party, and these being directly opposite to each other, the church, or committee, or whoever sits as judge in the case, can make no decision for want of testimony. And the innocent party, if one is altogether innocent, can only bear meekly, though he may have to do it unjustly, his burden, and cultivate a quiet and forbearing spirit.

The point or leading idea we had in view when we took our pen to write this article, and which we want to make prominent and plain, is this: We, as Christians, must not only want to speak and do right, but we must also feel right. And in doing this, we often must be satisfied with less than our own, since this cannot always be obtained, and we must cultivate a sufficient degree of brotherly love to a brother that we know has failed to do right, to enable us to live together as brethren. This is an important feature in Christian character and experience. We must want to feel right as well as to do right. And we may sometimes be called upon to feel right when we have been injured, or when injustice has been done us. Indeed we are never justified in feeling otherwise than right, however unkindly, unjustly, ungratefully or unfaithfully we may have been treated, either by a fellow-Christian, or by a person of the world. And a right, or Christian feeling is a feeling of meekness, patience, forgiveness and forbearance under whatever treatment we are called upon to suffer. It is said of our blessed Lord, and we must not forget that we are to have his mind and spirit, that "when he was reviled, he reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously. 1 Peter 2:23. And the Apostle Paul, when representing himself and his brethren under trials, says, "Being reviled, we bless; being persecuted, we suffer it; being defamed, we entreat." 1 Cor. 4: 12,13. And the Savior teaches us that if we would be the children of our heavenly Father, we must "love our enemies, bless them that curse us, do good to them that hate us, and pray for them that despitefully use and persecute us."—Matt. 5: 44,45.

It is frequently, and perhaps generally, more easy to do right, or maintain a Christian character or deportment in the estimation of our fellow-men, than to maintain a Christian spirit within us and before God. The fact that our actions are observed by, or are open to the world around us, while our feelings are not, will act as a restraint upon us to prevent us from doing wrong. If our feelings were as much exposed to the world as our actions are, we would be more anxious to restrain and govern them, and to have them just what they should be. We do not generally feel the same anxiety to have our feelings right that we do to have our actions right, from the fact that it seems difficult for us to attach the degree of guilt to our feelings that should be attached to them. It is to be feared that a wrong feeling, however bad it may be, if it is not carried out, or manifested in an action, is passed over by us, and but little notice taken of it by us, because it was only a feeling, and not an action. It should, however, not be forgotten by us that the Christian law requires correctness and purity of feeling, as well as of action, and that it teaches that men may commit adultery and murder in their hearts and feelings, as well as in their conduct and actions.—Matt. 6: 58.; 1 John 3: 15. "The Lord seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart."—1 Sam. 16: 7. Brothers, do not only say when you have occasion to do so, that you want to do right, but also say you want to feel right, remembering you are as responsible for your feelings and thoughts, as you are of your actions, and that whatever respect a correct exterior deportment may obtain for you from the world, "the ornament of a meek and a quiet spirit" is in the sight of God of great price."—1 Peter 3: 4. And while you should have what is justly your own, nevertheless, it may sometimes appear that it may be to the honor of your christian character, and to the preservation of your spiritual enjoyment, and to the promotion of the cause of Christ in the world, to waive your right, sacrifice some pecuniary interest, and suffer wrong.

"To err is human; to forgive is divine."

And is the gospel peace and love!
Such let our conversation be;
The serpent blended with the dove—
Wisdom and meek simplicity.

Whene'er the angry passions rise,
And tempt our thoughts or tongue to strife,
On Jesus let us fix our eyes,
Bright pattern of the Christian life.

O how benevolent and kind,
How mild, how ready to forgive;
Be this the temper of our mind,
And those the rules by which we live.

AN APOLOGY.

The discussion of the propriety of a full board was introduced into the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN some time ago, and as is usually the case when controversies are started, a number of brethren took part in it, and wrote upon the subject. There was some language used that was objectionable, and this with the known objections of many of our brethren to the subject occupying so large a space before the public in our paper, led us to consider seriously the propriety of continuing the discussion, and we have come to the conclusion that for the present it will be best to discontinue it. We want to be impartial, and if we would insert one, we would have to insert a number. We have several articles on this subject now on hand, some on one side, and some on the other. Both sides of the subject are pretty well sustained, and we do not think that either side will lose anything by us withholding from the public its production, neither do we think that either side would gain much by us publishing its articles. We ask the forbearance of our brethren concerned in this matter. We think we appreciate their feelings, and hope they will appreciate our position.

THE VISIT OF THE COMMITTEE TO THE GEORGE'S CREEK CHURCH.

The committee that was appointed by the A. M. to visit the George's Creek church, in Fayette county, Pa., to settle difficulties in said church, met and entered upon its duties on Monday, the 31st of July, but owing to the death of brother J. I. Johnson, which occurred while the committee was engaged in its labors, and to the amount of labor which devolved upon it, it did not close its labors until Friday noon.

The committee found the church anxious to have the existing difficulties settled, and the members entered with spirit upon the work with the committee. There was considerable found wanting, and the labors of the committee were arduous. But thanks to the Lord, who assisted us by his grace, the combined efforts of the committee and church proved apparently very successful. The labors of the council closed with an excellent feeling. The report of the committee was accepted without a dissenting voice, and a strong determination was manifested on the part of the church to be more careful, watchful and holy in the future. The papers, that had accumulated to a considerable amount were collected and burned, that no temptation might arise from them in the future to renew the trouble. The committee felt hopeful, that with care and judicious management the future of the George's Creek church would be successful and prosperous. And what a pity that it, or any other branch of the church of Christ should be otherwise, with all the helps and encouragements afforded it. Surely there is no occasion for strife in the household of faith. "All ye are brethren," said our Lord to his disciples. And brethren should love one another, and not strive. We find there is no more space in our present paper for us to occupy, and we must close.

A NEW PAPER IN THE WEST.

A notice of the new enterprise of our brethren of Lanark, Ills., will be found in our present number. Our brotherhood is being well supplied with periodical literature, and if it all possesses the Christian character that it should, we trust its influence, both upon the church, and upon the world, will be salutary. Some of our brethren in the west urged a consolidation of some of our periodicals before the new enterprise was determined upon, thinking it would be better to have a less number of papers, with the improvement that the publishers could make if the number were reduced and the patronage of those published increased. But instead of having less papers, it seems we are to have more.

That our brotherhood is able to support another paper in addition to what we now have, there is no doubt. But whether the cause of Christ among us as effected by the press can be best promoted by a multiplication of periodicals and the division of patronage and the writing talent of the church, which a multiplication of papers will produce, or by a concentration of the means necessary to conduct a paper successfully, is a consideration that should have due attention given it by all upon whom the responsibility of conducting our periodicals devolves. And we hope it will receive such consideration, and be disposed of wisely and discreetly.

But whatever the number of our periodicals may be, we hope they will be so conducted that the edification of the church, the good of the world, and the glory of God will thereby be promoted, and that Christian courtesy will characterize the conduct of the editors and publishers towards one another. We assure our brethren of the press that we shall endeavor to act upon the foregoing principles, and to co operate with them in the spirit of love, in performing the work our common calling imposes upon us.

PLEASE NOTICE.

We have a number of accounts on our books that have been there since we commenced to do business at this place. And such upon the whole is the state of our books and business, that we have thought it advisable to send out bills to those who are in arrears with us. This our clerk is now doing. And bills will be sent to those who have accounts on our books unsettled. In many cases the amount is small, owing to the nature of our business. But the number of these small accounts is such that in the aggregate they amount to considerable, and hence they are not passed by. As our books have been kept by different clerks, and as some of the accounts have been running for some time, there may be some errors in them. Should this be the case, we shall cheerfully make corrections.

Our friends being reminded by the notice they will receive that there is a business relation existing between us, will please give the matter their attention, and let us hear from them that we may understand each other. And when there is anything due us they will please to remit the amount. We trust our position, and the propriety of our course will be appreciated. While we are admonished by the apostle to be "fervent in spirit" we are also admonished to be "not slothful in business."

On Thursday, July 27th, Elder D. P. Saylor made his appearance among us. He was to preach in our meeting-house in the evening, but he felt too unwell to do so. The next day he and the editor went on a mission of love and duty to the Brethren in Fayette county, Pa. They continued there until the 4th inst, when they returned to Meyersdale arriving here about midnight. Brother Saylor remained with us over Sunday. On the Lord's day, at 10 o'clock a. m., he preached at the Mechanicsburg meeting-house, about three miles west, and in the evening, at our meeting-house in town. In both places there were good congregations, which were well served. On Monday, about noon, brother Saylor left for home. We have not heard from him since, but hope he reached home safely.

Dear Brother James :

Some one writes a letter from Elkhart county, Indiana, to Hannah M. Burket, Franklin county, Pa., stating in conclusion, that if a piece were written for the paper, it would answer the purpose for all to learn how she is getting along. To make our article interesting to strangers as well as others, it may be proper to give some account of her early life, before writing anything, more particularly intended for those among whom she resided before coming to this part of the country.

Her native place may be said to be Elkhart county, state of Indiana. She was born in Montgomery county, Ohio, on the 6th of September, 1831. She lost her eyesight at the age of thirteen through chills, fever, and great pain, inflammation of the eyes taking place so rapidly that in twenty-four hours time no signs of light remained. After recovering from sickness some little light returned, but again all disappeared. When one year and a half old, her parents moved to Elkhart Co., Ind., near the yellow creek on a tract of unimproved land they had bought, built a small house in the woods, and commenced farming by deadening the trees. After some time they built a better house, and here it was that Hannah spent the best days of her life. A little story which she tells of those days, told in this place may not be amiss.

In the neighborhood there were some people living who were poor; one day the man came to their house, staying some time, but did not say that he wanted anything. After a little while one of the girls came in after him and said: "Father, you are to come home; the children are all crying for bread, and we can't stand it any longer."

The man then said he had just come to see whether he could get the loan of some flour, as they did not have any in the house. Hannah's mother said she had just baked up the last flour they had, but there was some bread left of the old baking which they could have. The man took the bread and went home. Afterwards the mother of the family told Hannah's mother how glad they were for the bread; saying, "That little Johnny ate dry bread until he fell asleep."

Hannah's father, George Burket, died in June 1850 of inflammation of the piles, caused by overdoing himself in hay-making time, aged 51 years. Her mother, Catherine Martin Burket died in October following of inflammation of the lungs. From the time she took very ill to her death was less than a week. Two days before her death she said to the family, "Children, you must be obedient one to another, there is nothing else before me but to die.

Two weeks afterwards Hannah was taken to another place, and house-keeping was broken up. She says she could hardly think that the like had ever occurred before. Sale had been advertised of the personal property of the estate, and on the day the sale was to be, her mother died. Since that time she has seen various changes, and after being in search of a home that was like the home of her parents for seventy years and finding none, she finally made her way to Pennsylvania, where she had the offer of a room, and some assistance otherwise to make a start in keeping house for herself.

She left Elkhart county, Indiana, on the 30th of December 1873, having left Kosciusko county some weeks before, and reached Quincy, Franklin county, Pa., on the first of January following, having traveled a distance, alone, of nearly seven hundred miles, not meeting with any delay or trouble of any kind.

She took the cars at Millersburg at 7 o'clock on Tuesday morning, and reached Cleveland in the evening. Over night she and another woman were locked up in the passenger house, where there was a good warm stove. The other woman had lost the check to her trunk, and was in trouble. Early in the morning of the second day, the cars were in motion, and continued running all day, passing thro' Pittsburg, and running all night, reaching Harrisburg, Pa., at 4 o'clock in the morning. During the night, Hannah thought the cars were moving most wonderfully rapid. At 8 o'clock the cars moved for Chambersburg, 51 miles, reaching Mont Alto, 10 miles south at about 12. In the afternoon she took the stage for Quincy, 4 miles. The entire distance appears to be about 695 miles. Cleveland, Ohio, 236 miles. Pittsburg, 150 miles. Harrisburg 249 miles. Mont Alto, 60 miles. Total, 695.

While sitting at the station at Mont Alto, some children came in, and she asked for some water and a piece of bread. The children ran home and brought her some coffee and some cakes. For her journey she had provided herself with such things as were convenient, but did not get anything warm to eat on the way.

Since Hannah is here, she has been staying at one place, keeping house for herself, getting along better than some that have eyes to see. Her support is derived from different sources; it is intended to by the few, not by the many. I do not know that I should say anything more about it for the present than about this: I have always thought there were yet people enough left in the land who would cheerfully do something towards providing for all she needs, if we could just find out where they were. Some of her time she spends in knitting, which she can do very well. She spent several years at the institution for the blind, at Indianapolis, where she learned bead basket making. A bead basket for 25 cents makes a very pretty present for children. Persons at a distance could have them sent by mail. A very good way is to put two or three of different sizes in a paper box, on which the postage will be one cent per ounce. If any persons do not recollect how the colors in the rain-bow are placed, they can have them arranged in a basket.

For the information of those who might want to know something about the Pennsylvania Assylum for the Blind, I would say the proper way to direct letters is, William Chapin, corner of Race and 20th streets, Phila.

Bibles for the blind can be obtained of J. P. Rhoads, corner of 7th and Walnut streets, in eight volumes, at about $2.50 a volume.

The following is a list of places where books for the blind are to be had.

N. B. Kniss Jr., 1126 Market street, Philadelphia. American Printing House for the Blind, Louisville, Ky. Perkins Institution for the Blind, Boston Mass. Institution for the Blind, Staunton, Virginia.

Books for the blind are printed in raised letters. They must be read with the fingers.

Neglected, but not Forgotten.

Brother Quinter :

The record of many a noble life remains unwritten by any recording pen in this world, but it is retained in grateful memories of those favored few who shared in the blessings which such a life confers upon those who come in continual contact with it; retained, too, in the memory of God.

But while the bloody tales of earth's heroes are written and handed down to posterity for grateful remembrance, we should not neglect the hallowed lives of the soldiers of the cross. One of these faithful followers of Jesus was found in the person of our sister—the mourned and missed—Ruth Shoemaker, wife of brother John Shoemaker, of the Red Bank congregation, Armstrong county, Pa., who died May 2nd, 1875, aged 60 years and 27 days.

Funeral services by brother J. C. Johnson, of Uniontown, Pa. Text, Gal. 3:9.

A husband and 11 children are left to mourn her loss, who will all do well to follow her noble example of christianity and virtue. She was one of the few of whom it can truly be said, she was respected by all who saw her, and loved by all who had the pleasure of her associations, while on earth. She had many friends, but no enemies, save that is the enemy of the cross of Christ, in which she gloried. She was unkind to none, but courteous to all. During the last years of her life she was often a great sufferer; she was also a noble example of that patience in which we possess our souls.

Often have we seen her eyes moist with tears, while in the sanctuary of God.

We trust, as she lived the life of the righteous, adorning her profession with the doctrine of godliness, she has attained the rest of the people of God, where tears forever cease to flow.

Written as a tribute to the memory of our sister.

Editors Primitive Christian :

It is about one year since I wrote an article for publication in your valuable paper. The object then was to answer many questions asked by brethren and friends concerning this country and climate. Our present object is to give our experience for nearly two years. We think the climate is all it is claimed to be. There are no cold snow-storms in winter, but, instead, vegetation grows in winter. There is seldom any frost. Summer is cool and agreeable. The north-west trade-winds keep the atmosphere cool and agreeable. The soil is very productive, and is especially adapted to fruit culture; yet there is a soil adapted to farming purposes, good for vegetables; potatoes, beets, cucumbers, melons and pumpkins grow very prolific.

We also find this climate very healthy. Many invalids come here for their health and the most of them are not disappointed. "Health is better than wealth," yet we think we can make a living here with the same labor we could in Indiana. Wages $1 00 to $1.50 per day, or from $24 to $30 per month.

Price of produce. Corn is worth 75 cents per owl; barley the same; potatoes 50 cents per owl; butter 40 cts. per lb; eggs, 25 cts per dozen.

We will say to brethren and friends that they need not fear to come to this country. The sooner, the better it will be to procure homes. Land is worth from $50 to $100 per acre, on easy terms. All churches, or nearly all, are represented, but the Brethren in this place. We feel satisfied if the Brethren knew the advantages of this climate over a cold one, they would not hesitate to come and help us build up a church, or send us missionaries, the same as to other lands, where souls are as precious. We invite you to come. We might give a fuller description, but this must suffice for this time.

Brother Quinter, I think my year's subscription must be about expired, so I will renew it by sending you the money to pay for it another year. I will enclose $2.00 for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, and full report; $1.00 for the poor fund, and $2.00 for the missionary fund.

LEVI W. RILEY.

Anacoenosis.

To C. H. Balsbaugh:

Dear Brother:—In answer to your "Anachronism" I wish to say that the origin of the "River Brethren," is considerably mixed. One tradition says that about the year 1800 William Otterbein, Martin Bæhm, and George A. Geeting united themselves and commenced holding meetings. They soon gathered together quite a congregation; that among their members were a good many Brethren (Dunkers); that they were settled in three different localities in Pennsylvania, Virginia, and Maryland, and that a society of them lived near the Susquehanna River, in Pennsylvania; that this portion of them became detached, and were called "River Brethren," and the other two factions became what is now known as "United Brethren in Christ."

Another version is that about the year 1800 two Mennonites, by the name of "Angel," came to old brother Stull in Lancaster county Pa., being a worthy ministering brother of the "Old Brethren," and requested of him to baptize them; that they wished to unite with the Brethren, provided they might preach. This brother Stull could not grant. They then went and baptized each other in the River, and hence the name "River Brethren." But before they were fully organized into a denomination, quite a number of their members were such as came from the "old Brethren," especially those who had a desire to exercise their oratorical powers, as they gave more liberty than the "old Brethren" did. So by the time they were organized the principal elements of the church originated from the "old Brethren."

On page 198, 2nd Vol Cospel Visitor our worthy (now deceased) brother Henry Kurtz says that the sect called "River Brethren" separated from the Mennonites, perhaps less than fifty years ago. (1855)

It is claimed, and I think history will bear us out in the assertion, that the church of the Brethren can be traced in a direct line to the "Waldenses," and thence onward to the time of the Apostles. Now, if tradition is correct, the first "River Brethren" were Mennonites, and the Mennonites are the followers of Menno Symon; and Menno was a Waldensian Preacher, and left them for some reason and formed a church of his own. Thus I see no impropriety in saying that the "River Brethren" originated from the "old Brethren, as brother Kurtz frequently calls the Waldenses "our old brethren."

I have been informed that about the year 1811 a considerable number of brethren emigrated from Pennsylvania to Canada. There is a possibility that the "River Brethren in Canada are the descendants of that "little flock," as they are known by the name of "old Brethren" or "Dunkers." I am informed that a prominent "River Brethren" preacher from O., paid a visit a few years ago to his brethren in Canada, and they refused to acknowledge him as a full brother, because in the states they did not observe the ordinances as they do in Canada. It seems that the "River Brethren" of Canada, and the "old Brethren" of the states observe the ordinances of the house of God almost, if not altogether, alike.

The above is nearly all dictum de dicto, and as I see no practical utility in the discussion of the subject, I will close, and hand the subject over to you to dispose of as you deem proper.

Brother Quinter:—

Enclosed you will find $1.00 for our Danish Mission. I only wish it were more, but think it wrong to withhold from giving an account of the smallness of the sum. I feel so very anxious that our dear brother Hope should be free from all unnecessary care on account of his support. Surely, we cannot expect him to do much, if anything, toward the support of himself and family, and be an efficient missionary. Should we not relieve him of all care, by each one giving something? The poor can spare a little, and the rich of their abundance, could do much good.

The Danish Mission is a good and great work, and we should uphold it by pecuniary aid, and earnest prayer. We should not look upon it as a charitable object, to which we can give, or not, as we please, but as a church debt, which we have, personally, obliged ourselves to pay. The poorest can do something, and let the rich remember they are only stewards of the Lord's money, and must give an account of their stewardship. I believe it to be more blessed to give than to receive.

I am quite sure that what I have given always has given me more pleasure than what I have kept. In giving to these worldly objects, we should not wait until we can easily spare the money, but deny ourselves and give first, and afterwards attend to our wants; for self, if given the preference, will always take the Lion's share.

My dear brethren, still go on in the good work, and may God own and crown this effort of the Brethren to do good to our fellow-men. I wish those who can, would make an appeal for the mission, and keep the Treasury full. I think, sometimes, we let small matters take too much of our thoughts and time, while we neglect the "weightier matters." The small matters must be attended to, but not to the neglect of the greater. Excuse me for saying so much. I only intended to write a few words.

Yours in the Christian hope,
A. A. BONSAK.

The Brethren at Work.

Brother Quinter:

Inasmuch as there has been, for years, a great demand for pamphlets and tracts ably defending the doctrine and practice of the Brethren, and it seemed impracticable to supply this demand with simply individual enterprises, many have suggested the propriety of forming a Tract Association, having for its object the publishing and distributing of literature fully setting forth the faith and practice of the Brethren.

In order to successfully work up an institution of the kind, it was thought best to have a paper published in connection with it, and as there were three in the east, it was finally concluded to move one of them west.

Brother J. T. Meyers, of Germantown, Pa., has completed arrangements to move the Brethren's Messenger to Lanark, Illinois.

Instead of the Messenger being printed part in English and part in German, two papers will be published; one a weekly, in English, entitled The Brethren at Work, price, post-paid, $1.35 per annum, and the other, a German monthly, entitled Der Bruederbote, price 75 cents per annum, both of which will be edited and published by J. H. Moore, J. T. Meyers, and M. M. Eshelman. Associate Editors, R. H. Miller, J. W. Stein, and Daniel Vanaman. Associate Editress, Mattie A. Lear.

Subscriptions may be sent in at once, as the first issue will appear about the first of Sept. Any person sending eight names and $10.80 for the weekly, will receive one copy one year free of charge. Those sending five names and $3 75 for the monthly, will receive one copy one year free of charge. For $2.00 both papers will be sent to one address.

Address, J. H. Moore,
Lanark, Carroll Co., Ills.

SHOALS, MARTIN CO., IND. }
June 27th, 1876. }

Dear Brother Quinter:

Please give this a place in your paper. There is a great work to do here. Here is county after county where the word never has been preached in its purity. I humbly crave, and beg ministers to come into southern Indiana, Martin county. I live four miles from the Shoals. Any ministers coming from the east or west, get off at the Shoals station, on the Ohio and Mississippi railroad, at East Fork of White River. If any inform me of their coming, I will meet them there. There are nine members here. If a preacher would spend or be spent, here is the place. I would like if a ministering brother would move into this neighborhood to live here and preach to the people. Much good could be done. Remember, Shoals, Martin county, Indiana.

LEONARD STEPHEN.

Announcements.

Sunday School Conference.

Please announce to the brethren, that the Lord willing, we will hold our Sunday School Conference for the northern district of Indiana, Friday and Saturday the 15th and 16th of September next at the Pleasant Mound Church, near Wawaka, Noble county, Ind. Those coming by way of the B. & O. R. R. will stop at Albion. All coming by that road should give due notice in order that they may be supplied with conveyances to the place of meeting. Those coming by way of W. S. and M. S. R. R. will stop off at Wawaka.

Superintendents of Sunday Schools should address Dr. J. Sturges at Wawaka, Noble county, Ind., and receive a form for filling out a report of their respective schools. A general invitation is extended to all, and a special invitation is extended to the ministers, Sunday school workers, and those that are friends to the cause.

DR. J. STURGES.

MARRIAGES.

By the undersigned, Aug. 13 1876, at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. FRANKLIN MERRY and Miss CIVILIA SAYLER, all of Somerset Co., Pa.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Somerset congregation, June 16th, 1876, our friend JOHN BAIN, aged 80 years, 9 months, and 5 days. He has lived in Grant Co., Indiana, on the farm he entered, for at least 30 years. He had a good constitution, and was seldom or ever sick. He leaves a wife and ten children (three of whom are dead), to mourn his loss. The children living are all married. He had been a member of the Lutheran church for 45 years. As he requested, the funeral services were attended to by the Brethren, from Rev. 3:5, at the Mt Vernon meeting-house. Attendance large.

H. R. MINNICK.

In Madison county, Ind., December 31st, 1875, brother DANIEL MOORE, aged 74 years 2 months and 5 days.

Brother Moore was born in Hanover Co., Va., and emigrated to Indiana many years ago, being in communion with another church, but when brought in contact with the Brethren, became satisfied of our truer ways, and in his later years was identified with us. He died in the hope of a bright immortality. He left an aged companion, a bright sister, wishing the summons to meet him in the better land. Funeral sermon on the second Sunday in June, by Elder George Hoover and the writer.

MARTIN J. M'CLURE.

[Indicator please copy.]

From a fall from a buggy, July 31st 1875, in Madison county, Indiana, brother MOSES STINSON, aged about 59 years.

Funeral services by brethren Enoch Fry, George W. and Frederick Fessler.

MARTIN J. M'CLURE.

In the Lafayette church, Allen county, O., of consumption, RACHEL ELIZABETH DAVIS, on the 1st of Aug. 1876, aged 13 years, 10 months and 29 days.

Funeral discourse by the Brethren, from 1 Peter 1:24, 25, to a large number of friends and neighbors, especially her young associates and school mates. It could truly be said of her that one knew her but to love her, as she was always amiable and kind, even from a child; but while she was thus lovely, yet she passed away as the flower of the grass.

DAVID EARLY.

In the Coal Creek arm of the church, Fulton county, Ills., sister SUSANNAH ESHELMAN, wife of Daniel Eshleman, on the 20th of July, 1876, aged 42 years 6 months and 23 days.

Sister Eshleman leaves a husband and six living children,—3 boys and 3 girls,—the youngest about 5 or 6 years old, to mourn their loss, besides a large connection of relatives. Her disease was a carbuncle on the back of the neck, with Erysipelas on the forehead. She suffered much, but patiently, for four or five weeks, when death relieved her, and sorrow seized her loving family. Funeral text, Rev. 14:13.

Also, on the 16th of July, 1876, Infant son of friend Isaac Chase and wife, aged 1 year, 11 months, and 4 days.

Funeral text, Rev. 3: 20. Services by the Brethren.

JACOB NEGLY.

In the Indian Creek Church, near Harleysville, Montgomery county, Pa., of typhoid fever, on the 4th inst., sister COUKR, wife of John Court, aged 43 years, 7 months, and 4 days.

On the following Sunday her remains were conveyed to their last resting place in the grave-yard, and the occasion was improved by brethren H. A. Price and William Nice, to an interesting concourse of people. The deceased was the mother of twelve children, and so far as we know her life was consistent with her profession.

JAS. Y. HECKLER.

In Logan Church, Logan county, Ohio, July 15th, 1876, of Diptheria, SAMUEL, son of brother Joseph and sister Eliza Plank, aged 8 years, 4 months and 16 days.

Funeral services by the writer in English, and by friend John Warie in the German, from St. John 13:3.

Also, in Champaign Co., O., July 16th, 1876, friend SOLOMON STUTZMAN, a Minister of the AMIST church, aged 65 years 8 months and 16 days.

Funeral services by John Warie, Amish minister in German, and the writer in English from 2 Tim. 4: 6, 8.

Also, in Logan Church, Logan Co., O., July 18th, 1876, ALBERT LEE, son of friend William and sister Wright, aged 9 months and 9 days.

Funeral sermon by Eld. Jos. M. Kauffman from Rom. 5: 14.

Also, in the same church, Logan county, O., July 20th, 1876, of consumption, brother HENRY BRENNER, aged 20 years 8 months, and 27 days. Funeral sermon by Elder Jos. N. Kauffman, from Heb. 4: 9. The above subject was baptized in the morning, and died in the evening of the same day. Solum warning to others, and to his brothers and sisters that are yet out of Christ.

Also, in Logansville, Logan Co., O., CHARLEY B., son of Mr. and Mrs. Ware, July 20th 1876, aged 1 year, 4 months and 4 days. Funeral sermon by Elder Joseph N. Kauffman from Cor. 15: 50.

J. L. FRANTZ.

In the Allison Prairie Church, Lawrence Co. Wis., July 30th 1876, CLAIRIE, only child of brother J. and sister E. Jellison, aged 1 year, 3 months, and 5 days. Funeral occasion improved by brother Jacob Gerhart from Luke 18: 16, to an attentive congregation.

T. M. CALVERT.

In the Lower Twin church, Preble Co., O. July 30th, 1876, sister MARGARET MCNETT, aged 50 years, 4 months, and 4 days.

She leaves a husband and five children. She was afflicted for several years, but bore her afflictions with Christian fortitude. A few days before her departure she called for the Elders of the church and was anointed. After that duty was attended to, she said that she was fully resigned, and willing to leave this world. Funeral sermon by the writer, from 2 Tim. 4: 6, 8, at the Twin Valley meeting-house.

Also, in the same church, Preble Co., O., June 23d, 1876, sister SARAH BRUBAKER, wife of brother George Brubaker, aged 31 years, 3 months, and 29 days. She is gone, we hope, to a better home, as she was a very pious sister. She leaves a kind husband and infant child, and many friends. Funeral sermon by the writer, in the Brethren's meeting house, from Rev. 14: 12, 13, to a large congregation of friends and neighbors.

Also, in the same church, Aug. 3d, 1876, of Erysipelas, sister FRANCIS EMBICK, aged 60 years, 8 months, and 26 days. She united with the church some four years ago, and lived an exemplary life until her death. Her husband had gone before her some six or seven years; also three of her children preceded her in death, while she leaves ten children living. The funeral services were attended by Samuel Garber and the writer, and in presence of a large concourse of friends and neighbors. Text, 1 Cor. 15: 21, 23. The body was then taken to West Alexandria, and buried in the Lutheran cemetery.

A. YOUNGE.

In the George's Creek church, Fayette Co., Pa., July 31st 1876, brother JOSEPH I. JOHNSON, aged 32 years 2 months and 28 days. The deceased was a deacon in the church, and he filled his office with satisfaction. He called his friends to him on his death-bed, and said to them that he was at peace with all men as far as he knew.

The funeral was attended by a large number of relatives and sympathizing friends, and the services were conducted in the Fairview meeting-house by the brethren, the undersigned with others.

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

Not a Dye; makes harsh hair soft and silky; cleanses the scalp from all impurities, causing the hair to grow where it has fallen off or become thin.

Can be applied by the hand as it does not stain the hand or soil the finest linen. As a Hair Dressing it is the most perfect the world has ever produced. The hair is renovated and strengthened, and natural color restored without the application of mineral substances.

Since the introduction of this truly valuable preparation into this country, it has been the wonder and admiration of all classes, as it has proved to be the only article that will absolutely without deception, restore gray hair to its original color, health, softness, lustre and beauty, and produce hair on bald heads of its original growth and color.

This beautiful and fragrant perfume article is complete within itself, no washing or preparation before or after its use, or accompaniment of any kind being required to obtain these desirable results.

HERE IS THE PROOF OF ITS

SUPERIOR EXCELLENCE.

Read this Home Certificate, testified to by Edward B. Garrigues, one of the most competent Druggists and Chemists of Philadelphia, a man whose veracity none can doubt.

I am happy to add my testimony to the great value of the London Hair Color Restorer, which restored my hair to its original color, and the hair appears to be permanent. I am satisfied that this preparation is nothing like a dye, but operates upon the secretions. It is also a beautiful hair dressing and promotes the growth. I purchased the first bottle from Edward B. Garrigues, druggist, Tenth and Coates streets, who can also testify my hair was quite gray when I commenced its use.

MRS. MILLER,

No. 730 North Ninth St., Phila.

Dr. Swayne & Son—Respected friends: I have the pleasure to inform you that a lady of my acquaintance, Mrs. Miller, is delighted with the success of your London Hair Color Restorer. Her hair was falling rapidly and quite gray. The color has been restored, the falling off entirely stopped, and a new growth of hair is the result.

E. B. GARRIGUES,

Druggist, cor. Tenth and Coates, Phila.

BOSTON TESTIMONY.

July 22d, 1871.—Dr. Swayne & Son: Last winter, while in Trenton, N. J., I procured six bottles of London Hair Color Restorer, which I like very much, in fact better than anything I have used in the last nine years. If you please, send me one dozen bottles C. O. D., care of W. S. Fogler & Son, druggists, No. 723 Tremont street, Boston.

Respectfully yours,

ADA BAKER,

No. 59 Rutland Square.

London Hair Color Restorer and Dressing has completely restored my hair to its original color and youthful beauty, and caused a rapid and luxuriant growth.

MRS. ANNIE MORRIS,

No. 616 Seventh street, Phila.

Dr. Dalton of Philadelphia, says of it: The London Hair Color Restorer is used very extensively among my patients and friends, as well as by myself. I therefore speak from experience.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.

SUCCESS THE ATTRIBUTE OF MERIT.

ERYSIPELAS AND CUTANEOUS DISEASES.—If popularity be the test of a medicine, Holloway's Pills and Ointment are assuredly the greatest remedies of this or any other age, as they are unconfined to nations or people, being as familiar to the denizens of the backwoods as to the citizens of New York, London, Paris, Vienna, Berlin, St. Petersburg, &c. Their universality is, however, the least of their merits. Their safe and speedy cures of Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, King's Evil, Scrofula, and all skin diseases, are their chief recommendation. Persons afflicted with any of the above disorders should have immediate recourse to them.

* * * Sold at the Manufactory of Professor HOLLOWAY & Co., New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the civilized world, in boxes at 25 cents, 62 cents, and $1 each.

CAUTION!—None are genuine unless the signature of J. HOLLOWAY, as agent for the United States, surrounds each box of Pills and Ointment. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE Brethren DEFENDED

A WORK OF 400 Pages

Lately published, is a defense of the faith and practice of the Brethren on the following points: The Divinity of Christ and the Holy Spirit, Immersion vs. Affusion, Trine Immersion, Feetwashing, the Holy Kiss, Non-conformity, or Plainness of Dress, and Anti-secrectism. The work is complete, and is so arranged that the arguments on each subject may be easily found and understood. It should have a wide circulation both among members and the world.

The work is printed in large, plain type, is neatly bound in cloth, and sells at the low price of $1 60 per copy by mail. When ordered by the dozen, a reduction of 10 per cent. and the express charges will be made. The work may be had at this office or from the author,

The Primitive Christian.

is published every Tuesday at $1.60 a year, postage included.

This Christian journal is devoted to the defense and promotion of Primitive Christianity, as held and practiced by the Church of the Brethren, or German Baptists.

They accept the New Testament as the only proper rule of faith and practice, and hold to the observance of all its commandments and doctrines; among which are Faith, Repentance, Baptism by Trine Immersion, Prayer, the Washing of the Saints' Feet, the Lord's Supper, the Communion, Non-Resistance, Non-Conformity to the world, and the Perfecting of Holiness in the fear of the Lord.

As space will permit, some attention will be given to such secular matters as may be judged instructive to our readers.

Subscriptions may begin at any time. For further particulars send for a specimen number. Address,

AN ANGEL VISITANT.

Selected by C. A. MINNICK.

The door opened to my heavenly guest,
And listen'd for I thought I heard God's voice ;

And knowing whatsoever he sent was best,
Dared neither to lament nor to rejoice.

Thou, with a smile that filled the house with light,

"My errand is not Death, but Life," he said ;

And ere I answered passing out of sight,
On his celestial embassy he sped.

Then fell upon the house a sudden gloom,
A shadow on those features' fair and thin ;
And softly from that hush'd and darken'd room,

Two angels issued where but one went in.

All is of God ! If he but wave his hand,
The mist' collect, the rain falls thick and loud ;

Till with a smile of light on sea and land,
Lo ! He looks back from the departing cloud.

Angels of life and death alike are His .

Without his leave they pass no threes'old o'er ;

Who then would wish, or dare, believing this,

Against His messenger to shut th' door.

Perfect Law of Liberty.

BY GRABILL MYERS.

"Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed." James 1 : 25.

Jude, the brother of James, in the fifth verse of his epistles, says :
"Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered to the saints." James, in connection with the forgoing, says :
"Lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls."

This law is perfect, first, in its salvation ; and second, it is perfect in its liberty, which God has designed for all. This law "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." It is so perfect for time and eternity that no other institution, even the best, can be admitted. It would be superfluous to admit any other "how fair soe'er it seem."

It will bring us down to a commonness. It is a levelling system, when carried out systematically.
It is also self-supporting ; when all superfluities are laid aside, there will be money enough, and to spare, to support the cause. I am confident that, if we become truly religious, come down to commonness, it will stop all unnecessary expense, and we will have money to spare for the good cause ; that is if we lay aside whatever things are merely for show, or the gratification of the flesh, or self-will. Self is a great foe in the cause. Self, causes prejudice, ill-will, fault-finding with others. There is such a thing as becoming insane on some points and yet sensible on others. Again
I may be conscientious in not doing things that my brother thinks are right. If the perfect law of Liberty is silent in the case, let conscience dictate ; as long as there is no violation of law, there is no judgment.
If our forefathers did as well as they knew, we hope that it is all right with them ; but, religion being a progressive work, looking at the pressure of the times, by their intelligence we at the present day ought to be able to judge from the same stand point that they did—from that perfect law of liberty.
Faith in Christ demands a full surrender to Christ and not to men.
I will now close, desiring the welfare of all.

The Sword of War.

BY ILLANDER MYERS.

The subject before us seems to be a mystery to some of us. "He that hath no sword, * * * let him buy one." Christ spoke thus to his disciples, which was as much as to say that some of them had swords and some had not. We think this is easy to understand. When they at that time confessed it, and said,
"Here are two swords," he said,
"It is enough." They sold not their garments to buy one, but they had two already, and they confessed it.

I have read several articles on the sword question, but there is a mystery in it that all have overlooked. I think it not necessary to mention the connections of the mystery. The part we will mention is that Simon Peter, and one other disciple, whose name is not mentioned, had concealed weapons on that occasion. You may think this a strange idea, but we will read Luke 22 : 31, 32, which reads thus :

"And the Lord said, Simon, Simon, behold Satan hath desired to have you that he may sift you as wheat ;
but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not ; and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren."
God knew that when Peter was converted he would make a useful man.

But perhaps you are not yet satisfied that Peter had a concealed weapon. Turn again to Luke 22 :
36. "Then said he unto them, but now, he that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his scrip ;
and he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment, and buy one."
38th verse, "And they said, Lord behold, here are two swords. And he said unto them. It is enough."
Do you see the plan Christ took to get them to acknowledge they had the swords. "He that hath none" is as much as to say that he knew they did not all have swords.

What do we understand by "It is enough ?" We understand it to disannul the command "sell his garment and buy one ;" and again, enough to accomplish his design, was to give the command to put up the sword. As we are all to be "tried as gold tried in the fire," this is one trial that they had to undergo. Christ gave no commandment to use the sword ; but they ask for a command, in Luke 22 : 49, which reads thus : "When they which were about him saw what would follow, they said unto him,
Lord, shall we smite with the sword ?"
50th verse, "And one of them smote the servant of the high priest, and cut off his right ear." 51st verse,
"And Jesus answered and said, suffere ye thus far. And he touched his ear and healed him." You see here that Christ was still doing good for evil. The command to put up the sword is as binding today as it was then, and will be good until he comes in the clouds of heaven to redeem them that keep the faith until he comes.

It was not so strange that Peter had a concealed weapon, at that time, when he was not yet converted, as it is now in this enlightened age of the world, when church members carry revolvers when traveling. This is wrong; they should not do it. We are commanded to follow Christ in non-resistance; and "who soever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also." John 18: 10. Then Simon Peter having a sword drew it, and smote the high priest's servant, and cut off his right ear. * * * Then said Jesus unto Peter, put up thy sword into the sheath." This is the last command Jesus gave them, and then he went to prepare a place for all that keep his word until he comes. But there will be war among the wicked as long as the world stands. We read "of wars and rumors of wars," and "famines and pestilences and earthquakes in divers places." Be ye not troubled. God will never call you to war. The devil may but you are not to obey him.

The Fearfulness of Atheism.

Atheism is without hope, without glory, as it is without reason. It has its own terrors, with nothing to calm them. It gives the soul no security against the direst conceivable evils, whilst it takes away every moral ground or reason for believing in ultimate triumph of truth and goodness. Such a hope illumines the darkest aspect of atheism: "Clouds and darkness are round about God, but righteousness and judgment are the foundation of his throne." There is reason for everything. In the godless view there is reason for nothing. Every destructive movement is conceivable, possible, and even probable—only give it time enough, as a class of scientists are so fond of saying. There may be retrogradations, deteriorations, if we may use such words where there is no standard according to which they may be reckoned, no hyperphysical measure by which they may be determined. There may be a progress, seemingly such, yet only a progress in honor. There is no security, even, against the direst forms of evil that are feared or fancied as connected with the religious view itself. This awful, unknown nature may have its devil and its hell. As it has produced monsters in the past, so may it continue to produce monsters in the future. It may supersede man by the evolution of a new race, transcending in depravity as it transcends in strength and demoniac sagacity, the one that for six thousand years—twenty thousand, say some—has made this world a Golgotha of crime and misery. If we follow on the analogy we cannot refuse to admit that there may be involved a state of things which shall throw into the shade the enormities of all preceding periods. Take away the ideas for which we are indebted to religion and revelation; view man simply as a product of nature, with no other hopes than nature gives, and we are safe in saying that no one of the geological ages has surpassed in destructive enormity, in irrational waste of human life, the human cycle. Had we remained gorillas, the earth would not have been so filled with blood—with crimes against nature exceeding in honor all actions that beasts could commit. My hearers will not mistake me here, nor misunderstand the hypothesis of total and hopeless irreligion on which such statements of human facts and human possibilities are grounded. We may take a step beyond this Paradoxical as the language seems, nature may produce a false God. Give it time enough, and there may come out of the physical evolutions some dire consciousness, corresponding to that awful being whom the infidel imagination gives us in its deformed caricature of the scriptural deity—a power vast, malignant, irresistible, having in it the concentrated evil drawn from all the productive forces of the universe. Given a past eternity for nature's working, she may have long since produced such a being, having his seat of power somewhere in the infinite space, and extending to remote distances his malignant rule. And so, too, in regard to another life, another state of being for man. Irreligion sometimes boasts that she has slain that chimera of superstition. Man may now eat and drink without that haunting fear of something after death. But neither for this does atheism give any security. The human protoplasm may live on, carrying with it the human consciousness, the human identity. It has one of the forces of the universe, and may preserve its individuality in other conditions, or as correlated to other forces. Science can give no security against this, or against any evils its changed physical condition may involve. It may still be true that the conscious sensualist "lifts up his eyes, being in torment"—the torment of an unknown physical hell.—Taylor Lewis.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
A Sabbath Evening's Musings.

BY JOSEPH STAYER.

The sermon in the morning and the Sunday-school lesson in the afternoon had filled my mind with noble and elevated thoughts. I wish that my mind, and the minds of all men, were oftener engaged, like mine was upon this particular occasion. I was seated—comfortably seated—on the "front porch," a porch so large in comparison with others in the community, that it frequently reminds me of Solomon's porch. The day of rest was nearly a thing of the past; the golden sun was about shedding his last ray upon the surrounding landscape, giving to everything a brilliant hue; it seemed to have a desire to linger on the lilies and dahlias near by; and the flowers, leaves and all nature, it seemed to me, wanted to hold to this nourishing element, this life-giving agent; but all these things, without a groan or murmur, yield to the plan and design of the Creator. How transcendent and sublime; how elaborate, and exquisitely wrought! Everything seemed to be a heavenly smile and even the image of God seemed to rest upon everything, from the tiny dewdrops or blade of grass to the grand dome of heaven: I imagined that everything had been painted with that holy beauty by the hands and brushes of angels.

The little birds in the tree-top near by, I thought, were chanting their evening prayers and retiring to rest, safe in the hands of their Maker; and the howling of the herd, the howling of the dog, the croaking of the owl, all seemed to have a tone that praised him on high; the gentle zephyr infused my whole being with divine feelings and thoughts, the lightning flash, in the far distant, conveyed to my mind, as instantaneously and vividly as it itself occurred, an idea of the power, wisdom and infinite goodness of Our Father who is in heaven. The stars, as they stepped out one by one into the firmament, seemed to be only so many angels, glowing with holiness, coming to welcome christians home. How appropriately did that beautiful hymn (written by Phoebe Cary) apply to myself, and how plainly it presented itself to my mind, beginning with "One sweetly solemn thought

Comes to me o'er and o'er
I'm nearer to my home to-day
Than e'er I've been before."

New enterprise, Pa.

What Holiness Does For Us.

In general, it purifies our entire nature, saving us from all sin, by destroying the carnal mind. In particular—

1st.—It removes all pride from the soul, so that we think, speak, and act without attributing any merit in; or attaching any honor to ourselves. We do all to please God, and nothing to please ourselves. We feel that "Jesus is all in all, and we are nothing at all.

2nd.—It destroys all selfishness, by filling us with love to all men. We can "Lay down our lives for the brethren," "In honor preferring one another." It makes us "Seek another's wealth"—i. e. his prosperity and success, even at the expense of our own.

3rd.—It takes away the fear of man, by giving us a holy boldness to do our duty, and declare all that Jesus has done for us. We are not afraid of our reputation. We glory in having our "names cast out as evil." We obey God without reference to what people will do, or say, or think.

4th.—It entirely destroys all angry feelings. Circumstances do not provoke us. We have the mind of Christ, and can say with the poet,

"Anger I no more shall feel, Always even, always still."

All propensity to get mad is taken out, and gentleness rules the heart. Glory be to God.

5th.—It removes all impatience. A holy person never frets, nor scolds; is never sour and disagreeable; never repines under adverse conditions; can suffer "joyfully the spoiling of his goods," and "glory in tribulations." He feels as ready to suffer for Jesus' sake, as to shout and sing for him. He can say in all things, "Thy will be done."

6th.—It destroys all love of the "world and the things that are in the world." The person having true holiness does not "conform to the world in dress, in conversation, or behavior."

Holy people are plain in their dress. They hate fashion. Gold, and pearls, and costly array, and all outward adornings are an abomination to them. Their "conversation is in heaven." They cannot jest, or joke, or smilingly give countenance to those who do. They do not seek after worldly honor, or wealth. Their entire "affections" are on "things above;" hence they labor to please God, and advance his cause by giving themselves, their children, and their property into his hands, giving him praise when he takes and uses any part as he will.

7th.—It keeps us from "appearance of evil." We cannot fellowship wickedness of any sort, nor seek company in worldly associations. A holy man cannot affiliate with Masonry, or any oath-bound secret society. The command is, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." He loves to obey. He does not trust in that doctrine of devils, that "all means are sanctified by the goodness of the end sought, or aimed at." Consequently he will not endorse church fairs and lottery festivals, nor countenance other doubtful expedients of supporting the Gospel; such as auctioneering seats of worship, and making the paragon a "house of mirth, and frolic, and dancing."

8th.—It saves from all filthiness of the flesh. God not only requires purity of soul, but also holiness of body. We are "to cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh, and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God."

A holy person after a Bible sort will not become nor remain a slave of any sensual or depraved appetite. He cannot use tobacco, nor opium, nor morphine. He loathes and abhors all such filthiness. He feels that he cannot use such hurtful and vain things, in the "Name of the Holy Jesus giving thanks unto the Father by him." To claim holiness while a slave to habit, is to practically "deny the power of God." They who possess Bible holiness, are neat in their persons, and surroundings. A woman that is slovenly in her appearance, and in her house work, is not transformed soul and body to God's pattern of entire purity. We are to have our "bodies washed with pure water" as well as our "hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience," if we "enter into the holy of holies, by the blood of Jesus."

10th.—In conclusion, Bible holiness transforms the whole being. Paul's prayer was, "I pray God that your whole Spirit, and soul, and body, be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Thess. v. 25.

This prayer is answered in the hearts of such as have "gone on unto perfection," and have continued in the faith. Holiness lifts the whole being up into God. Perfect peace, perfect rest, perfect joy, perfect love. Such is the state of those who walk before God with a perfect heart. Jesus is the "Author and finisher of our faith." "Now hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." Then said he, "Lo I come to do thy will, O God." "By the which will we are sanctified."

May God help us all to believe and receive all that Jesus hath wrought for us. Amen.—Earnest Christian.

Moral Reflections.

BY JAMES WIRT.

Man is a being endowed with moral powers and social capabilities, and with perceptive and reflective faculties. These functions are improved by being brought under favorable influences, that tend to raise his aspirations toward a higher scale of intellectual advancement.

His social nature is improved by freely mingling in the society of his fellow-men. By this means our views may be exchanged, each others sentiments may be made known, information imparted, friendly associations formed, ties of love and true affection strengthened, and the higher qualities of human nature are enhanced to useful activity.

Man's perceptive faculties enable him to justly appreciate the many events which are in constant review before him, by taking a right view of things as they really exist in the social and moral economy.

Man's reflective faculties will cause him to revert to former incidents of his life, and he can profit from these reminiscences.

To experience the advantage of this function of the mind, the memory must not be lacking in its capacity. Meditating in hours of calm devotion improves the memory.

There is in some persons a great degree of mental acumen that is inherent in their constitution, enabling them to raise their themes in the lofty regions of eloquent display, satiating their eager longings.

Moral principles are such as these, Love, mercy, and equity. Where love dwells harmony prevails. To be kind and of a forgiving disposition is becoming a christian. Justice demands what is right and proper. Truth and Righteousness will prevail universally when sin, its effects and contingencies, are removed from the world.

Many rules have been given to man for him to observe in order to secure permanent enjoyment and lasting happiness; but those precepts found in the Bible are far superior to any prescribed by ancient Sages or Philosophers.

The Word of God is called the sword of the Spirit used by the christian soldier in the defense of the truth as it is in Jesus.

All Scripture is given by inspiration of God.

The sacred penman continues and says that it is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness that the man of God may be perfect thoroughly furnished unto every good work.

Many wholesome truths are learned by rightly investigating the sacred oracles. Jesus says, "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me."

The physical powers of man subserve a very important end in forwarding his own spiritual interests, in securing his future happiness thereby, obtaining a blessed immortality beyond the grave.

THE COMFORT OF THE HOLY GHOST.

When the leaves of life are falling,
When the shadows flit appalling,
When the twilight voice is calling ;—
Mighty Spirit, comfort !

When youth's verdure all is fading,
When I pass into the shading,
Life's long load at last unloading ;—
Mighty Spirit, comfort !

When the frost of time has found me,
When the chains of age have bound me ;
When the evening mists surround me ;—
Mighty Spirit, comfort !

When the worn-out flesh is sinking,
When from burdens it is shrinking,
And from earthly ties unlinking !—
Mighty Spirit, comfort !

When the gates of life are closing,
All its latches-bolts unloosing,
And the spirit seeks repasing ;—
Mighty Spirit, comfort !

When these skies look wan and dreary,
When the inner man is weary,
Worn out by the adversary ;—
Mighty Spirit, comfort !

When the one keen eye is failing,
When the steadfast heard is quailing,
Flesh and fiend, and world assailing ;—
Mighty Spirit, comfort !

When past sins are flocking round me,
When the fiery arrows wound me,
As if hell would then confound me ;—
Mighty Spirit, comfort !

When I think on manhood wasted,
Cups of pleasure vilely tasted,
Holy longings madly blasted ;—
Mighty Spirit, comfort !

When my farewell's I am taking,
And these lower rooms forsaking,
To my upper home betaking ;—
Mighty Spirit, comfort !

Holy Spirit, strength in weakness,
Holy Spirit, health in sickness,
Give me comfort, patience, meekness !—
Mighty Spirit, comfort !

Ah ! thou wilt not then forsake me,
Strong in weakness thou wilt make me,
To thy bosom thou wilt take me ;—
Mighty Spirit, comfort !

Perfect Law of Liberty.

BY P. S. NEWCOMER.

"Whosoever looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed." James 1: 25.

Who is it that would not aspire unto such liberty as this, in order to become joint-heirs with Christ, and to that eternal inheritance held in reservation for all who bow in submission to the divine will ? St. Paul gives us this comfort, "because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." "For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear ; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. "Now the Lord is that Spirit ; and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty." Then our great, vital object should be to stand fast, therefore, in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, that we do not become again entangled with the yoke of bondage.

But Peter says, "There were false prophets among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who shall privily bring damnable heresies, denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction ;" for whilst they promise them liberty, by false prophecy and delusive doctrines, even they themselves are but the servants of corruption ; for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought into bondage. Thus he becomes the servant of sin unto death eternal.

It may have been your prerogative once to have looked into this perfect law of liberty with a virtual effect ; but it is possible for you to fall from your steadfastness, not continuing therein, become a forgetful bearer of the word, and not a doer of the work. Such cannot, will not, be blessed in their deeds, having none to come up before God as a memorial that we may become the recipients of divine favor like the women at Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper, who anointed the head of our Savior with costly ointment of spikenard, which created such indignation among the people, who declared that it might have been sold for so much ; but we discover the Lord kindly rebuking them, saying, "Let her alone, she hath wrought a good work ; she hath done what she could ; she has come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying. Verily, I say unto you, whosoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her. And of Cornelius it is written, "Thy prayer is heard and thine alms are had in remembrance in the sight of God." These, with many other instances we might narrate, are plain evidences that blessings from God are absolutely conferred upon those who are happily engaged in good works. Such shall be blessed in their deeds. Although they may appear insignificant to us, to God they are of vast importance. "The wisdom of this world," it is written, "is foolishness with him." The simple prayer of the poor publican, "O Lord, have mercy upon me a sinner !" was more effectual than that of the pharisee who stood and prayed with himself, thanking God that he was not as other men, who were "extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or as this publican," rehearsing his deeds of self-righteousness, as if God was not conversant with them, or did not fully appreciate all the virtue that was in them. But behold the contrast of this poor publican, standing afar off, not so much as lifting his eyes up toward heaven, shrinking away as if he felt his own insignificance and unworthiness, smiting his breast, saying, "God, be merciful to me a sinner !" It is said, "This man went down to his house justified, rather than the other." "For every one that exalteth himself shall be abased ; and he that humbleth himself (before God) shall be exalted." He looks not at the outside of the platter, but at the motive that induces our action. He is a discerner of the thoughts and intent of the heart, and hence his divine favor is dispensed accordingly. Whatever virtues we possess, or whatever advancement we may make in the divine life, we must virtually ascribe the merit to him and not to any works of our own ; for through his merits and mediation there has been made accessible to us a throne of grace, whereby we may obtain mercy and find grace to help in every emergency—justified, sanctified, and redeemed from the thralldom of bondage, transported from the power of darkness, sin and iniquity into the marvelous light of new creatures in Christ Jesus our Lord.

I feel unhappily conscious that there are thousands, and tens of thousands, who are yet living under the yoke of bondage, slaves to the pernicious influences of sin and iniquity, subject to the wrath of the Almighty, of whom it is said, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord, although enjoying the exalted privilege of living in a land of civil and religious liberty, free from the oppression and tyranny of a monarchical form of government—a land in which all are allowed to worship God under their "own vine and fig tree" with no one to molest or make afraid. But yet, whilst these in valuable privileges are happily accorded, whilst the bounds of civilization and religious liberty are being extended to every race color and condition of mankind, freedom of speech and a free press are casting their enlightening influences throughout the length and breadth of the land, penetrating the domains of idolatry and superstition whose populace are fast succumbing to the power and healthy influence o civilization, and many are being brought to a knowledge of the living and true God, and to the enjoyments and blessings of Christianity.

"O shame! where is thy blush?" Shall it be said that there are scores who have been born under the banner of civil and religious liberty, who are struggling under the laws of sin and iniquity, slaves to the base passions and appetites of fallen and depraved humanity, being led captive by Satan at his will, strangers and aliens to the common-wealth of Israel?

If there be such among those under whose observation these imperfect jottings may fall, let me say to you that you are standing on treacherous ground. A hidden volcano lies slumbering at your feet, ready to swallow you up and engulf you in the vortex of interminable ruin. With scarcely a moment's warning the brittle thread of your existence may be snapped assunder, when you may be called upon to pass through the dark valley and shadow of death with no David's rod or staff to comfort you, but with the fear of evil forebodings still clinging to you in your last expiring breath. Then the waters of death will indeed be chilly, and the lurid flames of hell will loom up before your sunken visage. The remorseful pangs and eternal terrors of the damned will then be your unwelcome messengers, adding fuel to the flames of reproach and condemnation.

There is no repentance in the grave whither thou goest. These are some of the dread realities, but lightly colored, consequent upon a misspent life—the unhappy termination of those who have lived without God and without hope in the world. But thanks be to God the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who giveth us the victory over death hell and the grave, there is a sovereign balm for every sin sick soul. All these awful calamities and disasters may be averted. The means are easy of access and adaptation, applicable to all who call upon him in truth. Whoso looketh into this perfect law of liberty, "being not a forgetful hearer but a doer of the work;" they that do this, shall be blessed in their deeds; blessed in this life and the life to come and shall enjoy eternal rest in the city of our God, where sickness, sorrow, pain and death are felt and feared no more forever.

Fellow pilgrim, do you desire such unalloyed happiness as this? Do you feel the necessity of the pardoning power? Do you feel oppressed by a sense of wrong, sin and guilt? Are you weighed down and oppressed by the cares and anxieties of life? Are you struggling against the surging tide of adversity? Under these vicissitudes, come to Jesus for comfort. Or if, perchance, you are luxuriating in the lap of wealth and affluence, or wearing the laurels of distinction and honor upon your brow, come, all these will perish with the using of them, and end with death. If you are dwelling in the abode of poverty, with but the rude surroundings and comforts of life, under whatever circumstances or condition of life you may exist, the invitation is, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath appointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek. He hath sent me to bind up the broken hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound. Blessed office, blessed administrator, and sanctified the means necessary to procure our salvation, how easy of access! The redemptive plan of gospel liberty is continually unfolding its protecting branches developing their luxuriant fruit, nourished and sustained by the omnipotent hand of Jehovah. The waters of life are freely flowing, bearing upon their placid bosom the sparkling diadem, the pearl of great price. "Ho, every one that thirsteth; come ye to the waters; and he that hath no money, come ye, buy and eat, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price." "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found; call upon him while he is near; for behold the Lord's hand is not shortened that it cannot save, neither his ear heavy that it cannot hear." "But your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you that he will not hear."

My dear, unconverted friends, to-day his saving arm of love and mercy is being extended you, and that pathetic pleading voice is now whispering in your ears, "Whosoever will may come and partake of the waters of life freely;" and negatively we have the retributive injunction and warning, "Whosoever shall be ashamed of me and my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and in the holy angels."

"Ashamed of Jesus, yes, I may,
When I've no guilt to wash away,
No tears to wipe, no good to crave,
No fears to quell, no soul to save."

Feeling an interest in your eternal welfare, then, as "ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us, we pray you in Christ's stead be ye reconciled to God." Let this be the interrogative sentiment of your hearts,

"What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits so copiously vouchsafed unto me through the atoning blood of his Son? and this the hearty response of your will, "I will take the cup of salvation and call upon the name of the Lord." "Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation." Look into this perfect law of gospel liberty; accept of the liberal offer of love and mercy, and become the recipients of all the blessings and benefits it so happily confers, by rendering implicit obedience to the Master's will. "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul. The testimonies of the Lord are sure, making wise the simple. The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart. The commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes. The fear of the Lord is clean, enduring forever. The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether. More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold, sweeter also than honey and the honey-comb. Moreover, by them is thy servant warned, and in the keeping of them there is great reward."

The words of the indomitable Peter, on that eventful, pentecostal occasion, were, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost; for the promise is unto you, and your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord your God shall call." And Jesus said: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned." The price of your liberty was no less than the precious blood of Christ. This perfect law of liberty requires belief in him and obedience to his will. May God flash conviction into every unregenerate heart, and may it dart from soul to soul, until the muddy waters of the fountain of sin and perdition are broken up, and scores of precious souls may come flocking to the blood stained banner of king Immanuel, prince of life and peace, and have their robes washed and made white in the blood of the immaculate lamb who taketh away the sins of the world.

"Whoso looketh into this perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work," this man, and this woman too, shall be virtually blessed in their deeds.

May the Lord bless and sanctify every legitimate effort put forth for the promotion of his holy cause, the advancement of his glory, for the spiritual edification, and, finally, the salvation of souls, is my prayer.

Music.

BY C. H. BALSEAUGH.

An outside inquirer sends me the following: "Did Jesus, or His Apostles, ever invent musical instruments, and introduce them into Divine worship? If so, where will I find it?" On this he requests "a good, long lecture." The lecture will be brief, and to many, doubtless, not good.

There is no record that I know of to show that Christ or His Apostles either invented or used musical instruments in the service of God. How carefully the musical part of worship was ordered in the temple service of God's elect, is known to every reader of the ancient Scriptures. The choirs of singers and players on instruments were arranged with great precision, and both grief and gladness found expression through strings and tubes. In the everlasting dispensation all the sacred ingenuities of song will be brought into concert, and the choral multitudes of praise will swell into a Te Deum that might make even the foundations of the Upper Zion tremble. The everlasting song will have its harps, as representative of all the musical devices that Jubal and his festal progeny ever invented. Gen. 4: 21. Rev. 5: 8.—14: 2.—15: 2. Whether instrumental music is admissible in the present economy, must be determined by the principle that rendered it proper in the Levitical ritual, and gives it a place in the worship of the upper sanctuary. God is full of music. The instrument He plays is the Universe. Love and joy must sing with heart and tongue and hands and feet. David's jubilation became pedal. He danced before the Ark of God with all his might. 2 Sam. 6: 14. Christ enjoins us to "leap for joy." Let us note the occasion, and not fail to obey. Luke 6: 23. The soul was made for music,—for its performance and enjoyment. Col. 3: 16. Light is not to be smothered under a bushel, neither is song to be denied expression. When the earth was yet non-existent, Heaven was ringing with all the melody angelic hearts could hold, and angelic lips and hands execute. Jehovah is a great musical performer, only we are dull of hearing. "The music of the spheres" is more than a poetic concert. Under the hand of the Great Architect, every thing becomes organ, harp, or cymbal. To hush all the instruments of music would be to annihilate both "the things that are made" and the Maker. The harps of glory were in God before they were in the hands of angels or redeemed saints. The Holy Three were in concert from everlasting. No danger that the "new man" will sing or play overmuch. There is too little genuine Christian jubilation in us all. When our "feet are fast in the stocks" then is the time to "sing praises unto God." If you have an instrument, sweep the strings with all the vigor of your Christian nerve, or put in all the breath the Holy Ghost has given you "Consider what I say, and the Lord give thee understanding in all things." 2 Tim. 2: 7. Union Deposit, Pa.

That Deceiver.

BY JAMES Y. HECKLER.

"The disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his Lord. It is enough for the disciple that he be as his master, and the servant as his lord: If they have called the master of the house Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household?" Matt. 10: 24.

These are some of the words that Jesus spake to his disciples when he first sent them out to preach the gospel to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. And after his mission was fulfilled, and he had finished the work assigned him to do, when he was "despised and rejected of men, wounded for our transgressions, bruised for our iniquities," nailed to the tree and laid in the grave, "the chief priests and Pharisees came together unto Pilate, saying, Sir, we remember that that deceiver said, while he was yet alive, After three days I will rise again," &c. Math. 27: 63. Now, I suppose you will recollect that Pilate told them to make everything safe, so that there could be no deception, and there was none.

Oh! I am glad that all was real and true about the resurrection of Jesus, and that he himself is the truth, that there is no imposition, no deception, whatever, about the doctrine and resurrection of Jesus, as there is about that false prophet, Mahomet. How will those deluded Mussulmans be surprised in the day of judgment! Not so the christian; he knows that his Redeemer liveth, and that he lives with him, by him, and in him. The deceived seldom know, until it is too late, that they are deceived; but we know that we are not deceived. We know that, "we have not followed cunningly devised fables;" but we have followed the Son of the living God, the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world; we have followed that form of doctrine which will make us wise unto salvation; we have followed that same Jesus whom his enemies called a deceiver; and he was in all things a pattern for us. Now it is nothing strange if his enemies also hate us, and call us deceivers. There are no greater enemies to the cross of Christ than the hypocrites are. And if we glory in the cross, there will be none more ready to hate us and to call us deceivers than they are. Living in a neighborhood where there are scribes and pharisees, you may be sure that among them there are any number of hypocrites, and they, in going about to establish their own righteousness, readily call those deceivers who contend for the righteousness of God, and the faith once delivered to the saints. Therefore, my brethren, do not seek the friendship of the world, but turn your backs to the kingdom of darkness, let the world sneer at you, and even speak evil of you falsely, for Jesus' sake, and he will reward you openly in this world already, and in the world to come, with eternal life.

Be Kind to the Afflicted.

BY SYLVANUS ANNON.

Who can say, "I have always been kind to the afflicted?" It surely is a great comfort to those who can look back upon the past and think of those who now sleep in their graves and can say, "I rejoice, for I can say I know that I have done all I could to comfort the afflicted! Oh, what a comfort, what peace, I now enjoy; for I have been a comfort to those who now are in the tomb." But what sorrow what grief, what trouble, to those who stand by the graves of departed ones, and must say, "Silent be thy slumbers; in peace thy body rest; and can and must I say, I remember my unkind words; I remember when I caused your tears to flow. Now your trouble in this world is over. No more can I see you in this world, but when we meet again it will be in eternity. My disobedience has caused an aching in my breast that disturbs me now. What might have been my peaceful rest?" Oh, doleful, if this should be the case! whose heart would not condemn in a case like this? And if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our hearts. O brethren and sisters, do you not think that this would cause the good Lord to look down with displeasure? Let us remember the dying words of St. Stephen. When he was stoned to death, he kneeled down and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." And when he had so said, he fell asleep. If Stephen had such a forgiving spirit to those, how much more should we show kindness to our brethren and sisters? While I am talking about charity, has it not been the case when contributions were wanting and required of the church, some would begin to say, "I can't do this, and I am not going to keep this one and that one," and at the same time they would have full and plenty. Oh, think of what the scripture saith. If I see my brother stand in need of those things and shut up my bowels of compassion, how dwelleth the love of God in me? And yet let me say, if I only keep my brother or sister because I get pay for it, where is my reward? But if we do it for love for them and God, then "blessed are ye."

Now I must close by saying that I have written this in love. If I cared nothing for my soul's salvation, and for my fellow-man and my Creator, I would not have written this. I trust those few lines may be productive of some good. Brethren and sisters remember your unworthy brother when it goes well with you. My prayer is that we walk worthy of our calling, and finally receive a crown of life.

Speak It Out.

There is no doubt that one of the prime sources of strength for a preacher is found in speaking his latest thought. Back of all strong expression is the life of the speaker. This life, through exercises of mind and soul, is continually getting larger and larger development. A man who thinks, grows fast, and his latest growth is always best. It is the best because it is the freshest, and because it represents the ripest experience. The character of the thought decides the quality of the expression, also, in public speaking. Stale thought can never be eloquently expressed. The sympathies of the heart, and the tones of the voice, will not respond to it. The best part of pulpit speaking is born of new ideas. Vivid conceptions give illumination to oratory and cause it to brighten and glow as it moves on in its puissant course.

Now, many preachers keep their latest thought to themselves, through fear of saying something heretical, or strange, or sensational. Many preachers are timid by nature and conservative from habit. Hence they hold back from saying what they feel in their hearts to be true. Their reason is ahead of their utterance. In thought they are radical and progressive; in speech they are old foggy and repetitious. They dread nothing so much as the charge of unsoundness. They know that if they say only what has been said a thousand times before, they are perfectly safe from all attack and suspicion; so they keep saying it over and over, week after week. Drowsy orthodoxy sleeps undisturbed in its napping, and the pews keep getting more and more empty. The young people desert the sanctuary, and the old folks cry out against the irreligious indifference of the rising generation.

The true way to preach, as we conceive, is to preach your latest thought. Each successive sermon should give indisputable evidence to the congregation that the pastor's mind is growing. Scholarship is discovery, and preaching is but the announcement of the new discoveries that the preacher has made of divine truth. A true sermon is not deduction, is not inference, is not conclusion. It is, above everything else, suggestion. It should start lethargy into thoughtfulness. It should act as a spur to quicken the pace of the lazy intellectual life of the people. To keep back any new idea that the Spirit has given a man, is to defraud the Spirit, is to thwart the divine purpose of the pulpit. The ministry of the Spirit is an ever-operant ministry. Its finest work is yet a thing of the future. God's messages are not all delivered yet, nor his prophecies uttered. The prophetic gift is born with each generation, and the prophet who denies his gift sins against the Holy Ghost. "Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery." Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them; that thy profiting may appear to all.—Golden Rule.

"Mine!"

"And they shall be mine saith the Lord of hosts"—Mal. 3: 17.

How sweet are these words of divine promise. "Mine." Yea by creation, by redemption, and by adoption in Jesus, the believer belongs to God. The Lord has bought him from sin, and death, and hell, with a great price. The blood is spilled. The ransom is paid. The Redeemer's claim is good. The ownership is sure. Now, "none can pluck them out of my Father's hand." No longer a slave of sin, or a child of the devil, he rests secure, sheltered in the everlasting arms. God is his God. He is God's son. He is God's property by right. And because God's power is equal to his love, he will surely accomplish his purpose in Christ regarding his own, and save them with a mighty, and an eternal salvation.

"Mine." In seasons of great trial the saint may realize this heavenly relationship and be strong. The prince of this world who sought to sift the Master as wheat, found no goods within him that bore his evil stamp. Christ was God's. He was the obedient Son and wholly the Father's child. "Mine!" said Jehovah, and the fiend fled away. And that they that are Christ's may in God's strength say to Satan, thou hast "nothing in me." The shout of faith, "I am the Lord's will vanquish the enemy.

"Mine!" Disease and waiting may wear and pale the form and face made in the image of God; nevertheless God says of the one bruised "and mangled by the fall," he is "mine." What God claims and loves is ever safe. Amid fightings without and fears within; amid the anguish of mortal weakness, and faintness of the dying pillow, and the pang of fleeting breath; that sweet voice steals through the gloom saying, "Still thou art mine!" Though death set his seal, and corruption made her home within the shattered body, when the best earthly friend shrinks from what the enemy has smitten, God's love wastes not. It is never withdrawn. Even when man is weakest and death is strong, his victim is "precious" in God's sight. A never forgotten "jewel." Death may conquer for a season, but the saint shall one day conquer death forever and ever. Death is in the power of the believer, for "all are yours," yea, even life and death; things present and to come.

"Mine!" Into the caverns of the dead, Jehovah will look. The king of terrors will cower before those burning eyes. Shouting over the sleepers, "They are mine!" the hand that is strong to deliver will snatch his jewels from the enemy's grasp, and lo, his dungeons are now vacant. Oh, the grandeur, the glory, when that glad, countless host rise into the air to meet the Lord. "My beloved!" he will cry. And they will see the King in his beauty, and sing, "he is mine and I am his." And now he wakes up his crown-jewels, and through the ages that will have no end, Paradise will ring with the music of that one word, which alone, were there neither green new earth nor golden city, expresses a full heaven of bliss.—"Mine!"—D. D. T. in Methodist Free Press.

THE greatest man is he who chooses right with the most invincible resolution; who resists the sorest temptations from within and without; who bears the heaviest burdens cheerfully; who is calmest in storms and most fearless under menaces and frowns; whose reliance on truth, on virtue and on God is most unflinching.—Seneca.

For The Young.

Story-telling.

More than thirty years ago there was a little boy in Glasgow who was very fond of stories. He was accustomed to go in the afternoon to a neighbor's house, where stories were told all around by the boys like himself. There were stories told about robbers, and stories about ghosts—foolish stories! And stories about poor boys who went to rich London and became great men; and stories about sailor boys who had been shipwrecked and cast on desert islands in the midst of the tumbling sea—fine stories! It was a very pleasant sight to see the fire blazing on the hearth, and the boys all seated within its light, each telling his story in his turn.

The boy I speak of would have been entirely happy at that fireside, but for one little fear. In the street where he lived there was a graveyard. His father's house was on one side, and the house where the stories were told was on the other. To go back to his father's house he had to pass this graveyard, and he was afraid to pass that way after dark; so he had to leave every evening before the stories were ended. Sometimes, in the midst of a very good story, he would be seen turning his eyes to the window, and watching the darkening sky, as if he would keep the night from coming on.

One day the boys happened to be alone in the house. The stories were all fine, and the fire was warm, and they all forgot that the hours were passing away. The sun went down; the sky grew dark; nothing was to be seen at the window but blackness. But just as they had reached the middle of a story there came a flash of lightning from the sky, and after that a peal of thunder, and then rain, thick and heavy, dashing against the panes.

My little friend remembered the graveyard in a moment, and wished he were home. He went to the door; but the light of the fire, as it fell forward across the street, made the darkness seem more dark.

"I wish I were home," he said.

He was a timid little boy, and began to weep. He was afraid of the dark night and the rolling thunder, but especially he was afraid of the graveyard.

After a long while he got courage to say, "Keep the door open, and cry after me till I am out of hearing, and I will not be afraid." The other boys agreed, and opened the door to let him out. But just at that moment there came another flash of lightning, and another roll of thunder, and they ran back and cowered beside the fire.

"Come with me, some of you," he next said. "Come, two of you; I am afraid to go alone." But the other boys were very little older than himself. And now they also were afraid, and they began to cry.

"Eight o'clock! Nine!

"O, I wish I were at home!"

Ten and still he is afraid to go.

Half-past ten! Eleven!

"I wish—I wish I were at home."

He went to the door a third time. He still saw nothing but the black, wet night. He cried more bitterly than before. He cried as if his heart would break, "I wish—I wish—I wish I were at home!"

While he was sobbing out these words, he saw a star of light twinkling through the gloom. It came nearer and nearer, and grew bigger the nearer it came. Joy! It was light from his father's house! His brother, carrying a lantern, had come to bring him home. It was as if daylight had come back again. His crying was at an end; his tears were dried up. He became bold as a lion. The fear of the graveyard went away, and he stepped out into the darkness with a smile on his face. His brother was by his side, and the light of his brother's lantern would light him home!

Now Christ does for his dying brothers and sisters just what this boy's brother did for him. He comes for them, with light from their Father's house, and takes them by the hand to lead them home.

Our life upon the earth is like the story-telling of these boys. We are all story-tellers, telling our stories to each other. The hour of death comes, to bring our story-telling to an end. Suddenly we find that the day of life is spent, The sun goes down. The night comes up. We cannot remain on the green earth and beside the ruddy fires any longer. O, it is pleasant in that hour—it dries up all our sorrows—when the Elder Brother is seen by the soul of the dying one coming from the home in the sky!—Dr. A. Macleod.

A Bulfinch Finding a Thief.

A poor musician had an ebony flute, with silver keys. The flute, however, like many other things, had more beauty than use, for there was a defect in one of the upper keys, so that the note had to be skipped.

The musician had for a friend a tailor, who, having some taste for music, would often come to the musician's room to sing; and when he came he liked to try his skill on the flute with the silver keys. One night, when the musician was out, the flute was stolen. The tailor seemed sorry for his friend's loss, and tried to help him ferret out the thief. They suspected an old woman that was around the house, but as there was no proof against her she was let off, and the real thief, whoever he or she was, escaped detection.

In a few months the tailor went to live in another town. After a year or so the musician paid him a visit, and he found his friend had for company a beautiful bird, a bulfinch, who could whistle several tunes very correctly. This, of course, delighted the musician, and he liked to hear it; but what was very curious, he soon found that the bulfinch, whenever it came to a certain high note, always skipped it and went on to the next. He was greatly puzzled to make out how this could be; but as he pondered over the matter, it struck him at last that the note which the bird skipped was the very note which had ceased to sound on his own old flute, and so he came to the conclusion in his own mind that the bulfinch must have been taught in some way from his stolen flute.

He charged the tailor with having stolen the flute, and the miserable man, pale and trembling, confessed the theft.

Causes of War.

A certain king sent to another king, saying, "Send me a blue pig with a black tail, or else——"

The other replied, "I have not got one, and if I had——"

On this weighty cause they went to war. After they had exhausted their armies and resources, and laid waste their kingdoms, they began to wish to make peace; but before this could be done it was necessary that the insulting language that led to the trouble should be explained.

"What could you mean," asked the second king of the first, by saying, "Send me a blue pig with a black tail or else——?"

"Why," said the other, "I meant a blue pig with a black tail, or else some other color. But what could you mean by saying, I have not got one, and if I had——?"

"Why, of course, if I had I should have sent it."

The explanation was satisfactory, and peace was accordingly concluded.

The story of the two kings ought to serve as a lesson to us all. Most of the quarrels between individuals are quite as foolish as the war of the blue pig with a black tail.

Prayer requires more of the heart than of the tongue, of signs than of words, of faith than of discourse. The eloquence of prayer consists in the fervency of the desire, in the simplicity of faith, and in the earnestness and perseverance of charity. Our trust and confidence ought to proceed from that which God is able to do in us, not that which we can say to God.

—Fashionable life is a merry ground, that first makes us giddy and then ill.

NOT TOO OLD TO STUDY AND LEARN.

It is surely an inestimable blessing to be favored in early life with good opportunities for cultivating both the mind and the heart. Youth is the best season both for acquiring knowledge and for forming a pious character. At that age the mind is most susceptible of improvement. It is not pre-occupied with objects that will interfere with a close application to study, neither has it then formed habits of a criminal character that must be broken or subdued before those of a pious character can be established. But while youth has decided advantages over age as a season for improvement, it is a fact susceptible of the clearest proof, and one established by a multitude of witnesses, that persons at an advanced age may greatly improve themselves, both in knowledge and godliness. It is true, the degree of mental improvement which the old are susceptible of, will depend in a great measure upon the degree of health they enjoy. If the body is wrecked by disease, and its powers diminished, the mind acting in sympathy with it, will feel the debilitating effects of the body's prostration. But when the body retains its ordinary health and vigor to advanced age, the mind may successfully study, and add to its stores of knowledge. And here we may remark upon the importance of preserving health, that the mind may be more likely to retain its faculties, if not altogether unimpaired, so much so that its usefulness to its possessor may be prolonged.

There is a duty devolving upon us in regard to the preservation of our health, and the prolonging of our lives which it is to be feared is not appreciated as it should be. The body is the medium through which the mind in the present state of things exerts its influence upon the world, and also the source from which the mind is in a great measure supplied with its power. Hence a good, healthy bodily organization becomes very desirable to all who would render themselves as useful as possible, and who would prolong their usefulness as much as possible. Sin is no doubt often committed by a violation of the laws of health, in overworking the body, in failing to take the proper rest, in an intemperate use of the food designed to sustain it, in receiving into it substances which are destructive of life, and in imprudent and careless exposure. In these ways diseases are often contracted, and premature death brought about. Whereas, if the laws of life and health had been more strictly observed, in many cases we have reason to believe life would have been prolonged, and an increased amount of good accomplished. And as we shall be held accountable for life and health, a prudential course of living should be observed, and our existence, a precious gift of heaven, continued as long as possible, and made in every way as useful as possible in doing good to our fellow-beings, and in promoting the great cause of Christian truth.

With the foregoing introduction, we come to the subject of mental improvement and successful study in old age—a subject worthy the consideration of all, and especially of such as have had but poor facilities of an educational character in early life, for the acquiring of useful knowledge. And this has been the case with many of our brethren. Although they feel the need of education or knowledge, and youth, or the best time for obtaining it, having passed away, they feel but little encouragement to study in after life. We would like to give some encouragement to such, especially to those who are anxious to labor successfully in the Sabbath-school, or in the ministry, or in some other department of Christian labor, the providence of God having placed them in some such position, and feeling that some more knowledge would increase their capacity for usefulness, they would like to obtain it, if they thought there would be any chance of their doing so.

1. There seems to be no good reason why progress in knowledge should not continue to be made while the mind retains anything like a common share of its native vigor. Indeed, after some of the faculties, such as memory, may begin to decline, still some improvement in knowledge may be made. It is true, knowledge may be pursued and obtained under disadvantages in after life that would not have existed at an earlier period in life. But if it can be obtained at a later period, though it may be done under disadvantages, still had it not better be done even then, than to lose the advantage of it? Many things are remunerative, though obtained under great disadvantages, and at great sacrifice. It is a fault with a great many men, perhaps with a great majority, that they cease to be students at too early a period in life. If a judicious course of reading and study was pursued, and an active service in some useful calling continued, instead of mental indolence, and a cessation of useful labor, it would often be promotive of health, happiness, usefulness, and holiness.

2. History furnishes us with many interesting cases of men who after they had advanced to considerable age, prosecuted their studies very successfully. Cato a distinguished Roman, at eighty years of age, commenced to study the Greek language. It is said that Plutarch when between seventy and eighty commenced the study of Latin. Dr. Johnson, the great English author, died at the age of seventy-five, and but a few years before his death, applied himself to the study of the Dutch language. Ogilby, the translator of Homer and Virgil, was unacquainted with Greek and Latin until he was past fifty. Dr. Benjamin Franklin did not fully commence his philosophic studies till he had reached his fiftieth year. John Wesley informs us that he was far abler to preach at the age of seventy-three years, than he was at the age of twenty-three. And he attributes his capacity for enduring such great labor at such an age, under the providence of God, to exercise, early rising, sound sleep, and evenness of temper. The Apostle John, according to Chrysostom, was one hundred years old when he wrote his Gospel. And there was the prophetess Anna, eighty-four years of age, and notwithstanding her great age, she constantly attended the worship of God in the temple, morning and evening, and on all occasions, and "served God with fasting and prayers night and day."

We do not mean to say that we all can bear our age, should we live to be old, or do in old age what those have done to whom we have referred, but we do mean to say, that with care, and judicious living, and with the blessing of God, we may be successful students, and active workers in the vineyard of the Lord, at an age when many abandon both study and work.

THE PROPRIETY OF CONSIDERING TIMES AND CIRCUMSTANCES IN APPLYING THE PRINCIPLES OF TRUTH.

"The children of Issachar were men that had understanding of the times to know what Israel ought to do."—1 Chron. xii. 32.

David, in his eventful life, is at Hebron. God had directed him here. His way to the throne of Israel, had been, by diligence and perseverance, pretty well cleared of difficulties, and the time for him to be crowned had arrived." Then all Israel gathered themselves to David unto Hebron, saying, Behold, we are thy bone and thy flesh." 1 Chron. xi. They met to establish David in his kingdom.—The various tribes of Israel were represented, and the historian mentions several traits of character for which the tribes or their leading men were distinguished. Of the tribe of Issachar it is said, they "were men that had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do."

In the administration of the government of nations, and of the church, as well as in the accomplishing of enterprises in general, while power and courage and money are needed to give success to the undertaking, understanding or wisdom is highly important and absolutely necessary in order that a judicious application of the available and necessary means may be made. However rich and abundant the resources of material for accomplishing any enterprise may be, if there is not understanding or wisdom to apply that material to advantage, the enterprise may fail. Many enterprises have failed, not from a want of means to accomplish them, but by a misapplication of those means. In the trials and perplexities and dangers which at the time alluded to surrounded the nation of Israel, the wisdom or "understanding" of the men of Issachar, by which they "knew what Israel ought to do," no doubt had much to do in conducting the affairs of the nation to the successful issue which they reached in establishing David upon the throne. From the "understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do," it was seen that the providence of God pointed to David as king of Israel, and hence the assembling of the tribes at Hebron to crown him.

The words, "The children of Issachar were men that had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do," are very suggestive and instructive. The doctrine of expediency, though liable to be abused, is highly deserving of our attention, since we have so many occasions in life to apply it, and since our faithfulness often depends much upon a judicious application of it. And it is mentioned to the honor of the tribe of Issachar that it possessed and practically applied this doctrine. And the success of the nation in settling its difficulties, and in securing peace and prosperity, was no doubt owing in a great measure to the application of this principle. The world in which we live is constantly changing, presenting new wants and new forms of evil; and to meet those wants and to successfully oppose those forms of evil, new applications of the great principles of gospel truth must be made, to successfully meet the emergency of the case. Hence the necessity of having "understanding of the time to know what ought to be done" to meet the wants of the times. Ministers of the gospel, statesmen, men of business, heads of families, and indeed all men should have more or less of that understanding of the times to enable them to know what to do in their respective callings of life, that they may best apply the principles of truth to the accomplishment of the object for which those principles were designed.

The practical rule to be deduced from the character of the children of Issachar, which is honorably mentioned by the historian, is this: The manner in which we apply the principles of Bible truth must often be affected by times and circumstances. That we may not be misunderstood, or the rule we are applying not abused, we would say that it is to the manner of applying the principles of truth, and not to the principles themselves, that we refer when we speak of it as being affected by times and circumstances. The principles of Christian truth must abide.—"Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away," said our Lord, Matth. xxiv. 35. And the apostles were to teach the nations to whom they would come in the prosecution of their great work, what the Lord had taught them. Matth. xxviii. 20. And Paul said to Timothy, "The things that that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men who shall be able to teach others also." 2 Tim. ii. 2. The principles of truth themselves must not be changed.—They need no modification. They are the principles of the perfect law of liberty, and therefore will admit of no improvement. Our love to God, to our fellow men, our regard for truth, honor, and purity, our devotion to our Redeemer, and our obedience to his precepts, must be strong and abiding, and rather than depart from them, death itself must be endured. But the manner in which these principles must operate, and must be applied, will often depend upon times and circumstances. And therefore understanding and discretion are necessary that we may know how best to apply and manifest them.

While the rule under consideration may be applied to many things in life, it especially concerns us to make a judicious application of it in both manifesting and promoting our Christianity. The Apostle Paul affirmed that all things were lawful for him, but all things were not expedient, 1 Cor. x. 23. He admitted the principles of the church supporting its spiritual laborers, but in his own case he judged it expedient for him not to use the liberty he might have used, as by so doing he might have "hindered the gospel of Christ." 1 Cor. ix. 6—15. He also sustained the general law of matrimony, declaring "marriage is honorable in all," Heb. xiii. 4. But in his own case, he thought it expedient for him not to marry. 1 Cor. vii. 8. Our Lord said to Peter and Andrew his brother, "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men. And they straightway left their nets, and followed him." Matth. iv. 19, 20 After the man of an unclean spirit had been cured by the Savior, "he prayed him that he might be with him. Howbeit Jesus suffered him not, but saith unto him, Go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee, and hath had compassion on thee."—Mark v. 18, 19. In both the above cases our Lord gave commandments. In one case he required those to whom the commandment was given, to follow him.—They obeyed, and followed him.—In the other case the restored man desired to be with Jesus, but he commanded him to go home, and tell his friends what the Lord had done for him. In both cases the spirit of obedience was exemplified, in the one case by following our Lord, and in the other in going away from him, and by going home.

It remains for us to apply the rule to the present times and to our brotherhood. It is now over eighteen hundred years since the Christian church was organized, and since the first earnest Christian workers did their work, which accomplished so much. If the same faithful band now lived to labor for the promotion of a cause which was so dear to them, as Christianity was, it is not at all improbable that they would use means now to further the work which they did not use in their day, simply because they had not those means to use. We may instance the press.—When we look at the excellent facilities afforded by the press for the dissemination of truth, we cannot but think the primitive church would have used, and that liberally, the press as an auxiliary to the ministry to enlighten and reform the world. In the organization of the Christian church, it was made the duty of the church to teach the nations. But it depends much upon the men in the church that have "understanding of the times to know what Israel ought to do," to choose and apply the means best calculated to accomplish the work.

Again: The youth of the Jewish commonwealth, and of the families of Christians were to receive special attention. To Jewish parents it was said, in regard to teaching their children the law, "Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk to them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." Deut. 6: 7. To parents under the gospel dispensation it is said, touching their duty to their children, "Bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," Eph. 6: 4. Here we have our duties to our children stated in very general terms. And it is for us to apply the principle as we best can in the times which we live, and under the circumstances under which we live to accomplish the object to be sought, namely, the Christian education and salvation of our children. And if the Sabbath-school properly conducted, is likely to prove an auxiliary to the church and family for instructing our youth, may we not, and should we not, avail ourselves of it, and use it to subserve the cause of truth? We should like to make farther applications of the rule, but our article is too long already. May we have understanding of the times to know what we ought to do, to make the most successful application of Christian principles.

Gleanings and Gittings.

OUR MANUSCRIPT BOX.—No. 13. D. A. L., Hamlin, Kansas. This article has reference to the baptism of the Holy Spirit and of fire. The author calls attention to an editorial comment on the baptism of fire and to an article by Bro. Longancker on the same subject. These presenting different views, the author ventures to give still another. He quotes from the second chapter of Acts, first the 16th verse, then the 2nd, then the 38th, and concludes: "Here we see the baptism of the Holy Spirit and of fire were simultaneous and synonymous; the two constituted the one great baptism predicted by the prophet Joel." He argues, too, from the 11th verse of the same chapter "that none but the apostles were included in this baptism." As he introduces no argument to sustain his position, with this notice we pass the article into the waste box. B.

THERE is no service so honorable nor so remunerative as the service of Christ: it makes us children of God, gives us a hundred fold in this life, and eternal life and all that the pure soul can desire in the life to come.

BROTHER S. H. Bashor, writing from Maitland, Mifflin county Pa., under date of Aug. 7th, says:

"Our meetings at McVeytown, are now over. We commenced on the 28th of July, and preached every evening up to Aug. 6th—ten discourses in all. The congregations, at first, owing the unfavorable state of the weather, were small, but there was an increase in the attendance every evening to the close. Baptism was put off until the last discourse, when we came together with twenty-two candidates who desired to go with Christ. They were examined, and found in full faith. After the services we gathered at the water-side, where they were all immersed "in the name of the Father," etc. It was said by some that the congregation was the largest ever known there; only about two-thirds were in the house. About one thousand people witnessed the scene. Many tears were shed, and a solemnity, such as I never before saw, pervaded the whole assembly. There were several lawyers and doctors present, but they did not scoff as the same class did at Jordan. We are now at the Dry Valley meeting house. Announce my address, till further notice is given, Clover Creek, Blair Co., Pa."

BRO. Z. ALBAUGH, Elsie, Clinton Co., Mich., Aug. 14th, 1876, says: "It was wet here in the forepart of the season, then it turned in dry, and still continues so. Crops are not very good. Weather is very warm. Health is tolerably good. The Lord's flock here is small—only sixteen—with no minister within less than sixty miles. Brethren, here is a field open in which to work for the Lord.—Who will be the first one to respond to the Master's voice to preach the gospel in our country, and make his home here? This is a timbered country, and land is cheap. Brother Isaac Miller, our Elder, and Bro. Fryfogle were here with us yesterday and preached for us. It truly was encouraging to the children of God, and sinners were made to feel that if they died in their sins, where Christ and God are there they cannot go; but still none were willing to come out on the Lord's side.

We expect to hold a lovefeast here on the 16th of September, to which we extend an invitation. If any feel to be present with us, we will gladly receive them; and if any desiring to come will drop me a few lines, we will meet them at Oakley, on the Jackson and Saginaw railroad, or Ovid, on the Detroit and Milwaukee road."

D. W. ROWLAND, Centre View, Mo., says: "A sad accident occurred on Saturday evening, Aug. 12th, about 5 o'clock, p. m., whilst the westward-bound train was about entering our town. A young man about 19 years of age attempted to ascend the cars, while moving up grade; but he fell with one hand across the railing, the car passing over his wrist, almost severing it from his body. Amputation was performed by Dr. James Hill of our town."

Moral.—As the hazardous attempt of this young man resulted in a great loss and in much suffering; and as his head might have been crushed (what then?) as easily as his wrist; and as a similar attempt by others may bring about similar results; therefore, Let the adventurous take warning and hazard no such experiments. B.

MINISTERIAL LIST FOR OUR ALMANAC FOR 1877.—Do you want a full and correct list? If you do, please help us to make it so. Do not depend on others to do this work for you, for they will not do it. We know they will fail just as they did last year. What you did, was well done; but what you left for others was left undone, as it always is. Your help will be appreciated and thankfully received. B.

BRO. James McBride of Hazel Dell, Ill., some time ago sent us an item of church news, in which he speaks of a visit paid them by Bro. Ananias Hensel, of Indiana. He came to them on the 28th of April and stayed with them till May 1st, during which time he preached six sermons at three different places to the apparent satisfaction of those who attended. In conclusion he says:

"So we feel truly thankful to our brother from Indiana for the visit he made us: and we hope that the brethren in distant churches will not forget to follow his example to visit our lonely church in Cumberland county, Ill."

BRO. J. H. Moore has changed his address from Urbana, Ill., to Lanark, Ill. Persons who have occasion to write to Bro. Moore should note this change.

BRO. Abraham Molsbec, of the Cedar Grove congregation, Hawkins Co., Tenn., under date of Aug. 12, writes:

"Our visit meeting is among the things of the past, and a very pleasant one, indeed, in part, it was to us. However, we were much pained at the request of one of our number, who wished to be cut off from the body. There was very little laid in on the visit, except the usual warning against pride, and too much worldly talk. The remarks on the occasion were excellent, as we thought. Some souls have been received in the Cedar Grove church, by baptism, since the first of January.

Why this Contention.

I have been a reader of the Christian Family Companion and PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN for about four years in all, during which time a good many strange things were brought to my notice and consideration. The year previous to my conversion and baptism (being the latter part of 1870), the C. F. C. was for the first time brought under my notice, at which I greatly rejoiced, not knowing, previously, that there was such a paper published, wherein the doctrine of our blessed Redeemer was held forth to full view. I immediately subscribed for it, being under serious impressions at the time. I read it with much satisfaction for some time, at the same time carefully reading the word of God and comparing, as I thought, the spirit of the word with the spirit in which some of the communications were written that appeared from time to time; and I was brought to the conclusion that they were not in the self-same spirit, for I can nowhere find that the Spirit of Christ is a spirit of contention. So firmly was that riveted on my mind that I ceased to be a subscriber until after Brother Quinter took the editorship. Hoping for better things, I again became a subscriber, and have been tolerably well satisfied thus far. Now and then, however, an article appears which, I think, is void of that spirit of charity which brethren that are called by that "one calling," should manifest toward each other.

Last spring an article appeared setting forth that several of your ministering brethren were on a visit to Canada. They were kindly received and hospitably entertained, and yet, sad to relate, they found no Brethren there. They must have been a little more partial than the Apostle Paul was; he found brethren everywhere, even where the gospel had not been preached. After this, it appears, a centennial war broke out—Brethren vs. River Brethren. Bro. Mishler fired a tremendous volley into the quiet camp, when his ammunition cart was happily upset by Bro. Balsbaugh. Several articles have already appeared since the sword was first unsheathed, but to what purpose I cannot tell. It appears to me that it is only proving what has already been proved, that we differ about as much from you, as you differ from yourselves, and surely, if "charity covers a multitude of sins" at home, it ought, at least, to shade ours also, and not, as did Bro. Bucher, take one man to condemn a whole society. I, too, might do the same thing, but I do not wish to condemn a whole order for what I see wrong in one man, or family, or one neighborhood, as we do not all see or understand things exactly alike. Delay in baptism, upon confession of faith, is by no means general, so far as I know; neither is it approved of by the church in the North to my knowledge; neither is it maintained that the bread and wine—"the emblems of the Lord's body"—is the supper; at least I do not believe so, and I think I have many dear brethren who will testify to the same; consequently we are wrongfully accused.

He is also very careful to give us tradition of the rise of the River Brethren, and that they were refused baptism by the Brethren, for certain reasons which he does not state, except that they refused to comply with their requests. But he is very careful not to give us a word about how or where the Brethren originated—whether it was likewise or different.

He then says: "The difference at first seems not so great. They are a plain, honest people; seem full of love; and pretend to have the forgiveness of sins." I would ask, is it only "a pretense"? Is not the tree known by its fruits? Will not the motive of the heart show itself by the outward actions? I care not what a man's pretensions may be, the principles imbibed in the heart will manifest themselves outwardly, and this our brother calls "a pretense." Show me an instance in the word of God where any person was baptized without showing fruits of repentance (upon which, I claim, is the forgiveness of sins). Faith and repentance always do and must precede baptism in every case of genuine conversion, unless it is, as our brother has said, "they pretend to have the forgiveness of sins." The apostle says, "Therefore thou art inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest; for wherein thou judgest another thou condemnest thyself." Rom. ii. 1, 2.

After he has given us all he knows about it, he asks the question: "Who was the real originator of their church? Was it of God? If so, is God, then, divided against himself?" No, I think not; but some who claim to be his children, are divided against themselves and their God.

We might continue to turn his own guns toward himself, but charity saith, "forbear." A little more consideration, a little more forbearance, a little more humility, a little more brotherly kindness, a little more love, and the sword can again be sheathed, so that we no more see its glistening blade, which will but tend to cut the bonds of love asunder.

Now, I hope that I have not been too tedious. I have tried to be as brief as I possibly could, to give my view of the matter. I beg for patience of my older brethren, as I am but a babe in Christ; and correction, if I am wrong. And may the God of peace and all comfort guide and direct our ways into the paths of peace and true holiness, is my prayer.

Yours in love, FAIRPLAY.

Dear Brother Quinter:

Perhaps it would not be uninteresting to the readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN to hear from this part of the brotherhood. We have had several additions to the church in the past year, and have a very interesting Sunday-school. Our whole number of scholars is 65, of which about fifty are in New Testament classes. I see that our brethren in different places are suggesting the holding of a Sunday-school convention. This is a move in the right direction; and I hope our brethren will fall in with it. We suggested to Bro. J. T. Meyers the propriety of such a move and requested the suggestion to be published in the Brethren's Messenger.

We are having very hot and dry weather here now; and have had little rain since spring. The earth is parched; vegetation is dying under the scorching rays of the sun; the streams are dried up; springs and wells are failing. The weather has been the hottest ever known in this locality. The mercury has run up as high as 109° in the shade. Showers have passed around us, with very heavy thunder and vivid lightning. Considerable damage has been done by it. On Thursday night of last week a heavy cloud passed with very light rain fall, and I understand that no less than six buildings were burned by lightning.

Fraternally yours,
AMOS CHAMBERLIN.

Dear Brother James:

As I see nothing from this part of God's moral vineyard I thought I would write a few lines to let the brethren know, through the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, that we are still trying to serve our Redeemer. I sometimes think that we are persecuted, but when I consider the language of our Savior, "Happy are ye when men shall revile and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake," I think it is all as it should be; and I hope all our brethren will pray for all those who speak evil of us. And in connection with our prayers may our light so shine that others may see our good works, and glorify our Father who is in heaven.

I feel, however, that our heavenly Father has done better for us than we could ask. Our crops are good; not only wheat, but everything. Then, when we consider his kindness to a sinful world, should we not pour out our hearts in giving all the praise to him?

I would say to the brethren that, if there is any one who would like to come to this country who does not wish to buy, I will rent my place on shares, or for money, for two or three years. If any brother wants to come to Nebraska to stay and see how he likes it, I do not think he can do better than to come here.

Dear Brethren Editors:

Inasmuch as there has been no church news sent for publication from the Cowanshannock congregation for some time I take the liberty to send as follows: As far as my present knowledge extends, we are in love and union, trying to labor together for the advancement of the cause of our divine Master. On last Lord's day one expressed a willingness to become united with Christ by yielding obedience to one of his sacred institutions—Christian immersion. Four weeks prior to the above time, two others were in manner as the one above stated, numbered with the disciples of Christ. During the last two years ten were immersed into Jesus Christ, and arose to walk in newness of life.—May they be kept by the power of God unto salvation is our sincere desire.

In the Glade Run congregation, there was one more added to the church on the 31st of July, which makes 33 in number since the 13th of Feb. 1876. May the blessings of heaven attend them, and all God's dear children elsewhere, so that the great name of our God may be glorified, his kingdom be advanced, and an innumerable host of the children of earth be saved, through Jesus Christ, our dear Redeemer, who shed his precious blood for the human family.

J. B. WAMPLER.

NEW FLORENCE, Penn'a, }
August 14, 1876. }

Beloved Brother Quinter:

I will for the first time attempt to write a few lines for your excellent paper for the purpose of informing our dear brethren and sisters of the prosperity of our little congregation, which has lately sprung up in this neighborhood, in the north east corner of Westmoreland Co., Pa. We are in the lower end of what is known as the Ligonier Valley, three miles from New Florence, on the Pennsylvania Central railroad. This is a very thrifty settlement, and the prospect is that we will have a large church here in a few years.

It is only a little over one year since I came from West Virginia to this, my native place, having united with the Brethren while there. Up to the time of our moving here, there never had been any of the Brethren in this vicinity. In fact the were but few that had ever heard of them, and those that had, it seems only heard the various misrepresentations that are afloat. And really it seemed almost an impossibility to make a beginning; but we are glad to know that that all things are possible with God. Truly the hand of the Lord has been with us, and we feel that our prayers have been answered in behalf of the people of this community.

We were favored with a visit from Bro. Solomon Bucklew, of W. Va., on the 16th of last February. He stayed with us one week, in which time he baptized seven. And there were two other members moved here, which increased our number to eleven. Then we were without preaching, until the 14th of June, when the same brother visited us again. He preached four sermons and there were eight more added to our number by baptism. We were also favored with a visit from Bro. Valentine Blough on the 15th of July, and though there were none added to our number during his short stay with us, we feel that he made good impressions upon the minds of many.—Also, Bro. Stephen Hildebrand paid us a short visit. He came here on the 30th of July, and stayed until the following Thursday, and preached six very interesting discourses while with us. He is very much liked by the people in general.—He also baptized two while with us, which makes our number twenty-one in all. It is true, we are few in number compared with the brethren in some places; but though we are few in number we are glad to know there is no restraint in the Lord; he can work by few as well as many, and we feel that he is working powerfully in our midst at this present time. May his Holy Spirit ever continue with us to guide us in the way of all truth, that all things may be done in accordance with his will and to the honor and glory of his name. We desire the prayers of the entire brotherhood, that we may through grace divine be enabled to stand up bravely in the service of our blessed Master, and so live that others may see our good works and be constrained to glorify our Father which is in heaven. Though we have had considerable preaching of late late, we still feel the need of more. We cannot get too much here, for truly the harvest is great compared with the number of laborers that are enabled to visit us. And I would here say to any of the brethren to pass this way, we would be glad if you could give us a call. We are always ready and willing to welcome you into our midst.

S. L. DECKER.

My Dear Brother:

Thinking it may be of interest to some of the readers of your valuable paper, I will state that Elder Jacob Wine and myself, at the request of the Lost River congregation, visited Hardy county, W. Va., and attended seven meetings, two of which were council meetings. The first was a council meeting held in a new and as yet unfinished meeting house on Crab Run. Two of the ministers—Caldwell and Teets—were absent attending a funeral; however, E. d. C. Whitmore and a respectable number of members being present, we proceeded to business, and after adjusting some matters, the church agreed and elected Henry Moyers and William Dove to the office of deacon. The council passed off pleasantly and in union, and may he "who trieth the hearts and reins" bless the labors of the day to the advancement of his kingdom.

Our next appointment was at the house of friend Jacob Ellek near Morefield, to which point we were accompanied by Bro. Lorenzo D. Caldwell, friend Ellek is a native of Germany, but does not allow his judgment to be shackled by the tenets of his early years. He takes an interest in furthering the cause of truth in his neighborhood. This meeting was followed by a council meeting held at Powder Springs school house. This was the first regular council meeting held in this section. Much of the time was occupied in defining the rules of the church as drawn from the New Testament. Upon agreement the church called Brother Jonathan Pope to the office of minister and Bro. Job Wilkins to the office of deacon. There was also a number of applicants for baptism, among whom was a man by the name of Ben, a miller by trade, formerly a resident of the Valley of Virginia, who, though not an Apollos, is at least in some degree, "mighty in the Scriptures." May they prove faithful. Powder Spring is situated about four miles east of Morefield in the spurs of the Branch Mountain. The members living in the locality are not in possession of much of this world's goods, yet they ask no favors. We met with the people of this section twice for public services, and then went to Morefield, where Bro. Wine addressed the people from Gal. vi. 7, 8. Here we had the pleasure of meeting Bro. N. Leatherman, wife and daughter, of Hampshire county. This town is on the South Branch of the Potomac. Here is bottom land of apparently inexhaustible fertility.

From here we proceeded to Oak Grove, nearly four miles distant, where the people were addressed from Matth. v. 8, on the subject of "heart religion," showing that if the heart, the seat of the affections, becomes pure, it will manifest itself outwardly, according to John xiv. 15; Rom. vi. 17.

Upon the whole, our trip was a pleasant one. It is gratifying to see the cause of the Redeemer advancing, and to see the people of God dwelling together in peace.

Dear Brethren:

The communion meeting of the Sandy congregation was held at Bro. David Shively's, on the 10th of June. The weather being fair we had a large attendance, and, all things considered, we think we had a very good meeting. God's covenant children were built up and much strengthened and we are assured by observation as well as from the expressions in words, that the many lambs of the Shepherd's fold who partook for the first time of the sacred emblems of the broken body and shed blood of our blessed Redeemer, enjoyed a feast of good things long to be remembered with feelings of joy and gratitude. The uncovered were warned to flee the wrath which shall come upon all the ungodly who hold the truth in unrighteousness.

We were favored with the ministerial aid of brethren Conrad Kahler, Moses Weaver, Henry Brumbaugh, Josiah Keim, B. B. Bollinger, Jacob H. Kurtz, and J. J. Hoover. At this meeting Bro. Simon B. Stuckey was called to the ministry, and brethren Levi Heestand, D. E. Bowman, and Robt. N. Shively to exercise in the duties of deacons. May they prove to be faithful laborers in the plentiful harvest, and be led by the Holy Spirit, helping to build up the household of faith, and be the means through which God may call many from the power of darkness to the true and marvelous light of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. A short time previous to our communion meeting there were four souls added to the number that gladly received the word of God, and recently four more, making a total of 59 soldiers of the cross who have enlisted with us in the Christian warfare since the dawn of the great American Centennial year. May the Lord enable them with us all to prove more than conquerors through him that loved us, and finally enjoy the society of God, Christ, and faithful loved ones gone before.

Brethren Editors:

I have been sick for several weeks, not able to be out much, though still able to be up and about. I know that my days will soon be numbered, as I am pretty well up in years, and soon what little is left, after my departure, of this world's goods, will fall into other hands. A man has a perfect right to do with his own as he thinks best. The subject of spreading the gospel is before the brotherhood, and a great many plans proposed. Many brethren favor immigration as the best and safest way. That is my opinion.—But brethren that move to the far West as Bro. J. S. Flory and a great many more have done, when they organize in their new fields of labor very often labor under great disadvantage, not having houses to worship in, and not being able to build meeting-houses. Would it not be a great help for the spreading of the gospel if brethren that live in the eastern churches, that have their meeting houses and are rich enough to keep their poor, for those among them that have no children to make a will and have what is left after their departure used in building meeting houses where brethren are too poor? But, brethren, let me say right here, Let us be careful how we build, and not build more costly than we can afford, so that people cannot say, as we read in Luke xiv. 30, "These people began to build and were not able to finish." And as I am one of the brethren that have no children, and may have some little left after my departure, I would have it used to the best advantage in the cause of the Master. Now, members, you have my idea, and as I am a poor scholar, I hope some abler members will take the subject up and give their opinion, if it is thought proper.

ELD. JACOB MILLER.

In Memoriam.

Little Ellie May, daughter of Brother John M. and Sister Mary A. Fike, died Aug. 8th, 1876, in Marshall county, Ill., aged one year two months and two days. Disease, whooping-cough. "Suffer little children to come unto and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Funeral services by the Christian minister.

Beneath that mound our Ellie lies,
Who once was with us here;
God sent a summons from the skies
And claimed our Ellie dear.

Our Ellie now has gone to rest
With those who've gone before,
And, in her angel garments dressed,
She stands on Zion's shore.

By faith we can her yonder see,
Upon the farther shore;
And there she waits for you and me,
And many, many more.

Though hard it was for us to part—
For parting gives us pain—
Yet this shall cheer the aching heart:
Our loss is her great gain.

We will not weep for Ellie, then,
Whose troubles all are o'er;
But trust in God to meet again
Where parting is no more.

GREELEY, Colo., July 31, 1876.

Brother Quiter:—

We quite recently took a drive through the agricultural sections surrounding this town and within the bounds of the colony enclosures, and must say that notwithstanding the flattering accounts we had heard concerning the crops, we found the wheat crop in particular, beyond our expectations. Such a heavy crop of wheat as will be harvested here, nothing preventing, during the next 15 days, we have never seen anywhere. We saw square miles of wheat ready for the sickle that to look over, looked like a golden sea. Many fields will doubtless average 40 or 50 bushels to the acre. It would be difficult to conceive how more could grow to the acre. Harvest has just fairly commenced. The bulk of the crop will be out this week. There are fine fields, however, that will not be ripe for several weeks yet. Competent judges estimate the wheat crop of the Greeley colony at from 200,000 to 250,000 bushels. The oat and corn crop are such that there will be a large surplus. The potato crop is very large. Farmers are in good spirits and times are improving. Now that Colorado is a State, coming in with bright prospects after a season of discouragements, it is thought she will make rapid advancement in developing her resources and proving beyond a doubt that if farming will pay anywhere it will here. As a stock country it has no superior. Considering the abundant blessings we are receiving from God we should indeed be thankful to him and in prosperity learn to put dependence in God.

J. S. FLORY.

IOWA CENTRE, IOWA, }
Aug. 15, 1876. }

As nothing has appeared from this part of the "vineyard" for a long while in the way of church news, I will try to give a brief notice of our condition, prospects, &c.

Through the plenitude of God's mercy, the Indian Creek church is still prospering. Though accessions are not by the scores, as I am glad to hear is the case at other points, yet, occasionally a few become tired of sin and unite with the people of God, while many others, convicted of sin, as of olden time, send out the message, "Go thy way for this time, at a more convenient season I will call for thee." Our largest addition this summer has been by emigration. Seven loving members from Illinois and two from Indiana located in this arm of the church this last spring, and more are expected. I would here say, there are excellent opportunities here yet of securing good, cheap homes among a congregation of Brethren that are in love and union, and trying in meekness and wisdom to live to the gospel standard of humility. Numerically, we number some 48 only, as it has been but recently that the Des Moines Valley church has been set off from this arm of the church. Besides, others of our dear fellow laborers have borne the gospel banner further west, where no doubt they are trying to lead sinners to the Cross. This arm of the church was the home of our much-esteemed and beloved brother, Henry Flora, who, by consistent living, purity of Christian character, and fervent zeal in the ministry and eldership, built up a strong membership and won the confidence and love of all the brotherhood where he was known, and exerted a powerful influence for good on the community at large. His widowed companion (a most exemplary member) still occupies the same farm that they first purchased 21 years ago. We have preaching every Lord's day in the month. We have but one speaker, hence we desire some consistent minister to locate with us.

I am indeed glad that some of our able contributors are writing up the subject of "Secretism," and while they are aiding the light to "shine into the dark" haunts and abodes of Grangism and Odd Fellowship, I should hail with gladness a few well-directed rays of the same light on the subject of Free Masonry. Although the tick of public sentiment seems just now to be turning against this giant monster of corruption, yet our brotherhood cannot be too cautious about questioning applicants, on this point, in order to keep out this Satanic agency, as our brotherhood has always been fortunate in doing in the past.

Health good. Crops, except wheat, abundant. There will be but little wheat to export from Iowa. I think, this season, yet there will be plenty for home supply. Apples abundant, selling at from 25 to 50 cents per bushel.

Fraternally,

D. E. BRUBAKER.

In Memory.

"Precious is the memory of the just."

It is with a sad heart I sit down to hastily record the death of Bro. Leonard Emmert, who died August 12th, 1876, aged 54 years nine months and four days.

Truly a good man has fallen. The sad circumstances attending his death, as near as we can collect them, were these: On Saturday evening last, after having partaken of supper, a heavy shower of rain having fallen, he repaired to his farm a quarter of a mile distant from his place of residence, to adjust some destruction incidental to the flood. Being of an excitable temperament it was apprehended that undue excitement and over exertion superinduced a pain in the region of the heart, after which he was assisted upon his horse by his son David, who held him on until his arrival home, where by continued suffering for the space of three quarters of an hour from the time he was affected, in perfect consciousness he calmly and peacefully expired, surrounded by his sorrow-stricken family.—The last triumphant expression falling from his lips ere they closed in death was this: "Oh, what a blessed thing it is to be prepared to die!" We may add, "Yea, verily, blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." His life was virtually an exemplification of a pure Christian character. He was a living epistle, not written with ink, but known and read of all who knew him. The family has lost in him a good husband and a kind father, the community an estimable citizen and neighbor, and the church a beloved brother and a zealous minister in the Master's cause, who never shirked any responsibility that was upon him. But he is gone. Though dead yet he speaketh. May we use our best efforts to imitate his many virtues, so that we may die the death of the righteous—that our latter end be like his.

"The passing spirit gently fled,
Sustained by grace divine;
O may such grace on us be shed,
And make our cud like thine."

THE LUNGS!

CONSUMPTION!

This distressing and dangerous complaint and its preliminary symptoms, neglected cough, night sweats, hoarseness, wasting flesh fever, permanently cured by DR. SWAYNE'S COMPOUND SYRUP OF WILD CHERRY. BRONCHITIS—a precursor of Pulmonary Consumption, is characterized by catarrh, or inflammation of the mucous membrane of the air passages, with cough and expectoration, short breath, hoarseness, pains in the chest. For all bronchial affections, sore throat, loss of voice, coughs,

DR. SWAYNE'S

COMPOUND SYRUP OF WILD CHERRY

IS A SOVEREIGN REMEDY.

Hemorrhage or Spitting of Blood, may proceed from the larynx, trachea, bronchia or lungs, and arises from various causes, as undue physical exertion, plethora or fullness of the vessels, weak lungs, overstraining of the voice, suppressed evacuation, obstruction of the spleen or liver, &c.

Dr. Swayne's Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry

strikes at the root of disease by purifying the blood, restoring the liver and kidneys to a healthy action, invigorating the nervous system.

The only standard remedy for hemorrhage bronchial and all pulmonary complaints. Consumptives and those predisposed to weak lungs should not fail to use this great vegetable remedy.

Its marvelous power, not only over consumption, but over every chronic disease where a gradual alterative action is needed. Under its use the cough is loosened, the night sweats diminished, the pain subsides, the pulse returns to its natural standard, the stomach is improved in its power to digest and assimilate food, and every organ has a purer and better quality of blood supplied to it out of which new recreative and plastic material is made. Price one dollar. Six bottles $5. If your druggist or storekeeper has not got it, we will forward half dozen to any address on receipt of price, freight pre paid.

Should the bowels be costive, or headache accompany your disease, the patient should procure a box of

DR. SWAYNE'S TAR PILLS.

Take first a few doses of pills and follow with Swayne's Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry. The Pills will evacuate the bowels, which is of the first importance, relieve the congested liver, purify the blood, strengthen the nerves, improve the appetite and remove all biliousness.

They are purely vegetable and act specifically on the liver as Blue Mass or Calomel, without any bad results from taking. Price 25 cents. 5 boxes $1. Sent by mail on receipt of price.

HOME TESTIMONY.

I was sorely afflicted with one of the most distressing of all diseases, Pruritis or Prurigo, or more commonly known as Itching Piles. The itching at times was almost intolerable, increased by scratching, and I not infrequently becoming quite sore. I bought a box of Swayne's Ointment; its use gave quick relief, and in a short time made a perfect cure. I can now sleep undisturbed, and I would advise all who are suffering with this distressing complaint to procure Swayne's Ointment at once. I had tried prescriptions almost innumerable, without finding any permanent relief.

WISHES.

A man in his carriage was riding along,
A gaily-dressed wife by his side;
In satin and laces she looked like a queen,
And he like a king in his pride.

A wood-sawyer stood on the street as they passed;
The carriage and couple he eyed;
And said, as he worked with his saw on a log,
"I wish I were rich and could ride."

The man in the carriage remarked to his wife,
"One thing I would give if I could—I'd give my wealth for the strength and the health
Of the man who is sawing the wood."

A pretty young maid, with a bundle of work,
Whose face as the morning was fair,
Went tripping along with a smile of delight,
While humming a love-breathing air.

She looked on the carriage; the lady she saw,
Arrayed in apparel so fine,
And said in a whisper, "I wish from my heart
Those satins and laces we re mine."

The lady looked out on the maid with her
work,
So fair in her calico dress,
And said, "I'd relinquish my position and wealth,
Her beauty and youth to possess."

Thus it is in the world: whatever our lot,
Our mind and our time we employ
In longing and sighing for what we have not,
Ungrateful for what we enjoy.

We welcome the pleasure for which we have sighed,
The heart has a void in it still,
Growing deeper and wider the longer we live,
That nothing but heaven can fill.

To a Sinking Disciple.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

May the Everlasting God, manifest in the flesh, come to your rescue on the rolling billows, and snatch you from the yawning gulf of perdition.

It is easy to sin. A thought, a look, an emotion, may be the germ of eternal death. A word may be a spark from the furnace of endless woe, and may kindle a flame of unquenchable torture. The arrows in the infernal archer's quiver are ethereal, and he can shoot into our closets, and send hell-barbed thought into our hearts when we are on our knees. He is a bold, cunning, unprincipled foe. He inaugurated a rebellion in the realms of glory, and dragged many angels down to hell. He is a great liar, a great strife-maker, and a great murderer. Nothing is too mean or wicked for him to do. He snared Adam and Eve, and ruined all their posterity. He tempted Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, David, Elijah, Job, and Peter. He assailed the sinless Son of God. He made war in Heaven, filled hell with sin-blacked, wrath-scarred souls, and turned the world into a vast aceldama. He is still at work. He has broken into the fold of which you are a sheep, and is trampling many of you under his fiery hoofs. A mighty, fierce, cruel, ugly devil is he.

But he is not invulnerable. Mighty, he is not all mighty. He has been met and conquered by a Greater than he. The Cross is his terror. The blood of the Lamb is hemlock to him. One drop throws him into spasms. The sword of the Spirit, bathed in the blood of Emmanuel, is the only weapon that will drive him back. "It is written, it is written, IT IS WRITTEN," met all his wilderness-temptations with an eternal overthrow. If we fight with our fists, or tongues, or sell-will, or with any weapon of our own, he will soon crush us beneath his hot, hell-baked stampers. He is afraid of nothing but the Tree of Calvary. It is a terrible Bohon Upas to the devil and his angels. The weakest saint can rout him by showing his pierced hands and feet. He stands aghast at a single scratch of the thorn-crown. If we are crucified with Christ we are devil-proof. But as soon as we become self-pleasing, or petulant, or angry, or vindictive, we invite the devil to a tussel, in which we are certain of being worsted. Just as soon as we pull the nails out of hands and feet, and run and do the errands of the flesh, we are in the clutches of the soul-devouring Abaddon. Better lie down in the dust, and let the world and the church trample us into a jelly, than give the devil an inch of advantage.

I love you, and pity you, and deplore the wounds which backbiters have given you, and pray that you may be endued with power from on high to "tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy." Let not "the gates of hell prevail against you." Strain every fibre of body and soul to keep your heel on the old serpent's head. You have been sorely tried, and I fear some of Apollyon's arrows have reached the quiek. You must not allow an asp-tongued, refractory sister to overmatch your Christian valor. If you suffer her to drive you from the church, you proclaim to the world that you were overmastered by a woman. The devils would clap their hands. "Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might." What can all the legions of hell do with a man who stands on the Rock of Ages, panoplied from the armory of Jehovah. If you fall in the rear, and get over the wall, you have lost the battle. But I will not believe it. You are too much of a man to let an ecclesiastical Xantippe whip you out of Zion. You have many warm friends in the church, and your influence for good has been felt; and if you would desert the ranks of Emmanuel, there would be sad hearts on earth, and a drooping of wings around the throne of God. Throw yourself anew into the breach, do violence to yourself, and take the kingdom of Heaven by force. That will be a glorious victory, which will make the arches of the Upper world ring with angelic applause. This is the crisis of the fight for you. Victory or death; victory by death; victory at all hazards. March through the crystal doors of the New Jerusalem blind, halt, maimed, mangled, bleeding, SAVED. Give no quarter; sabre the old man and the devil to death, and you will not only "escape with the skin of your teeth," but you will be a Jachin or a Boaz in the temple of the Lord. 1 Kings 7: 21.

Do not make your difficulty the subject of conversation. Send all gossips to Siberia. Strike your roots deep down around the rocks in the mountain of the Lord, and be firm as a cedar of Lebanon. Dig a grave four thousand miles deep—stop not this side of the earth's centre—and bury your scandal, and roll the Rocky Mountains on the mouth of the sepulchre, so that all the furies in hell cannot drag the putrid, stinking carcass to the light. Let all that love the Lord Jesus, say Amen

What Eminent Pedobaptists Say of Romans vi. 4. and Col. ii. 12.

Prof. Lange: "Baptism in the apostolic age was a proper baptism—the immersion of the body in water." "As Christ died so we die (to sin) with him in baptism, the body is as it were buried under water; is dead with Christ; the plunging under water represents death, and rising out of it the resurrection to a new life. A more striking emblem could not be chosen." Infant Bap., p. 81.

Archbishop Tillotson: "Anciently, those who were baptized were immersed and buried in the water, to represent their death to sin; and then did rise up out of the water to signify their entrance upon a new life. And to these customs the apostle alludes, Rom. vi. 2-6." Works, vol. i. p. 179.

Dr. Macknight: "At the beginning he (Christ) submitted to be baptized, that is, buried under the water by John, and to be raised out of it again, as an emblem of his future death and resurrection. In like manner, the baptism of believers is emblematical of their own death, burial and resurrection." Comment on Rom. vi. 4

Dr. Albert Barnes: "It is altogether probable that the apostle in this place had allusion to the custom of baptizing by immersion." Comment on Rom. vi. 4

Dr. Adam Clarke: "When he [the person baptized] came up out of the water, he seemed to have a resurrection to life. He was therefore supposed to throw off his Gentile state, as he threw off his clothes, and to assume a new character, as the baptized generally put on new or fresh garments." Comment on Rom. vi. 4

Dr. Knappe: "We are like Christ, buried as dead persons by baptism, and should arise like him to a new life." "The image is taken here from baptize 1 persons as they were immersed (buried) and as they emerged (rose again)."

Dr. Whitby: "It being so expressly declared here (Rom. vi. 4. Col. ii. 12.) that we are buried with Christ in baptism by being buried under the water; and the argument to oblige us to a conformity to his death by dying to sin, being taken hence; and this immersion being religiously observed by all Christians for thirteen centuries, and approved by our church, (Episcopal,) and the change of it into sprinkling, even without any allowance from the author of this institution or any license from, or council of, the church, being that which the Romanist still urges to justify his refusal of the cup to the laity; it were to be wished that this custom might be again of general use." Note on Rom. vi. 4

Conbeare & Howson: "With Him, therefore, we are buried by the baptism wherein we shared his death [when we sank beneath the waters and were raised from under them], and even as Christ was raised up from the dead." &c. In a foot note, referring to Col. ii. 12, as explaining what is elliptical in Rom. vi. 4, they say: "This passage cannot be understood, unless it be borne in mind that the primitive baptism was by immersion." Vol. ii. p. 169, and vol. i. p. 439.

Tholuek: "In order to understand the figurative use of baptism, we must bear in mind the well known fact, that the candidate in the primitive church was immersed in water, and raised out of it again." Comment on Rom. vi. 4

Blomfield: "There is here (Rom. vi. 4) plainly a reference to the ancient mode of baptism by immersion; and I agree with Koope & Rosenmuller, that there is reason to regret it should have been abandoned in most Christian churches, especially as it has so evident a reference to the mystic sense of baptism."

John Wesley: "Buried with Him in baptism—alluding to the ancient manner of baptizing by immersion." Comment on Rom. vi. 4

Rosenmuller: "Immersion in the water of baptism and coming forth out of it, was a symbol of a person's renouncing his former life, and on the contrary beginning a new one. The learned have rightly reminded us that, on account of this emblematical meaning of baptism, the rite of immersion ought to have been retained in the Christian church."

George Whitefield: "It is certain that, in the words of our text (Rom. vi. 4) there is an allusion to the manner of baptizing by immersion." Eighteen Ser. p. 297

Dr. Doddridge: "'Buried with him in baptism.' It seems the part of candor to confess that here is an allusion to the manner of baptizing by immersion." Fam. Expos. Note on Rom. vi. 4

Dr. Samuel Clark: "We are buried with Christ by baptism. &c. In the primitive times the manner of baptizing was by immersion, or dipping the whole body in water. And this manner of doing it was a very significant emblem of the dying and rising again, referred to by St. Paul in the above-mentioned similitudes." Exposition of the Church Cat. p. 294

Dr. Chalmers: "Jesus Christ by death underwent this sort of baptism, even immersion under the surface of the ground, wherein he soon emerged again by his resurrection. We, by being baptized into his death, are conceived to have made a similar translation. In the act of descending under the water of baptism to have resigned our old life, and, in the act of ascending, to emerge into a second or new life."—Religious Herald

Feet-washing Condemned as a Church Ordinance.

BY WILFRED RICE.

"If she have washed the saints' feet."—Tha. 5: 10

So lightly of our Savior's commands we can hear men speaking daily; but we need not wonder, for they "love the praise of men more than the praise of God." Paul never said "an ordinance" in all his writings, but "keep the ordinances" as I delivered them to you." Who is for Paul? Let us go to the teacher. In a common school if a pupil wishes to know how to solve a problem of any kind, where does he go for information? To the teacher. Suppose, then, that the teacher solves the problem on the board or slate, and says: "Well, John, do you understand it?" "Yes." If that pupil knows how to solve it, he will go about it in the same way. What kind of teaching would that be? Example. So our Savior says, "I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." John 13: 15. Brethren let us do likewise, and not say with others that "it is a kind act, and we ought to do it, but not in the church." Where else? It has a spiritual meaning, the same as baptism. Let us not be ashamed of Christ before men.

Love not the World.

BY JAMES WIRT.

This language was spoken by the Apostle John to believers, and our object is to notice the meaning attached to the words. We know that the idea it conveys is quite different from this. "God so loved the world." The Bible shall be its own interpreter. We are commanded to set our affections on things in heaven and not on things on the earth; and we are to love all mankind, our neighbor as ourself; therefore we are led to conclude that we are not to love the ways of the world, their customs, their manners, their fashions, and their general deportment.

What is the general deportment of the world? is a question easy enough to answer, if we will only observe what most interests the masses. They are bent upon obtaining wealth, fame, and worldly honor; they mind high things, and do not condescend to men of low estate; they fare sumptuously, like Dives, in the very presence of suffering humanity. But we are not to love the world, neither should we act like the world; for the poor we always have with us, and whosoever we will we can do them good by bestowing upon them the bounties of God. We cannot serve God and mammon at the same time; one will have the uppermost seat in our affections, and the object we most love we are apt to serve. Our affections should not be placed supremely on riches, nor should any other worldly interest or consideration hinder our spiritual warfare in obtaining the highest interest of the soul—the true riches—eternal life at God's right hand, where there are pleasures forevermore, where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest.

The term world defined in this connection is the earth and its affairs as distinguished from heaven; concerns of this life as distinguished from those of the life to come; the present existence and its interests, secular affairs, engrossment or absorption in the affairs of this life, worldly corruption, the ungodly or wicked part of mankind.

"God so loved the world." This includes the human family—his fallen creatures, who had rebelled against their Creator and were plunged into the depths of misery and woe, compelled to leave their blissful situation in Eden's garden, whose entrance was guarded by a flaming sword in the hands of angels which turned every way to keep the way of the tree of life. Christ has opened up "a new and living way." He is "the way, and the truth, and the life."

Our affection should be placed in heaven, our hopes are centered there, our treasures are there, and we fondly anticipate a meeting with loved ones who have gone before. We will soon pass our allotted time on earth; then we will exchange this world for a future state of existence beyond the grave. We will then put a different estimate upon sub-lunary things; for at present many value them too highly. They that will be rich, suddenly fall into temptation and a snare. When we see individuals using their energies and talents for the accumulation of this world's goods to the exclusion of those spiritual treasures, we know they give evidence that they love the world. This is like a person working in a mine raking the trash and coarser metal together too intent to look above him where lies within his reach the pure gold.

The Way of Holiness.

BY B. B. BRAT.

"Jesus my all to heaven is gone."

While musing on past events, my thoughts were carried to this beautiful and familiar hymn. Think, brethren and sisters, upon this, how much is contained in these few words. When we sing these lines, do we sing them with the spirit and understanding, feeling assured that our "All" has gone to heaven? I recollect being at a baptism a few years ago, when these lines were sung. When they came to the words,

"This is the way I long have sought,
And mourned because I found it not,"

the people assembled at the water-side were moved to tears, which carried my thoughts back to the great baptism in the river Jordan. It made me feel as though there was a heaven below. And then the sweet words echoed along the stream,

"Then I can tell to sinners round,
What a dear Savior I have found."

Dear brethren and sisters in the Lord, do we, when assembled in divine worship, understand all we hear sung or preached? Do you ever think of these lines while congregated together, where we mingle our voices in singing songs of praise to the Redeemer? Well might these lines be headed "The way to holiness." It seems to me that this hymn is more suitable to the occasion than any other.

Wonderful.

BY EMANUEL SLIFER.

The following shows how one pedobaptist minister prevented another from being baptized by immersion. It is not necessary that names should be given; yet the parties concerned will recognize themselves as actors in the wonderful affair, if they ever read this. The writer happens to know one of the parties well. It is fair that I should say that I have not the facts from him myself; yet I have it from a source that leads me to think that he is not misrepresented.

This terrible affair was prevented in the following manner: After using the ordinary means to prevent it, and failing, extraordinary means had to be employed, and here they are. This wayward brother's name was Joseph (at least, I will so call him.) He was addressed by his brother, who for the time being assumed to be his director, and therefore was the happy instrument in the hands of somebody to avert so terrible a catastrophe—the baptism of this wayward brother by immersion.

Do not be impatient, reader, here are the means employed. He addressed him by his familiar name, as follows: "Joseph, Joseph, Joseph, Joseph, Joseph. Yea; yea, you get baptized by immersion. See that the water is deep enough. Be sure of that. Water has a very purifying effect. See that it is well done," &c. It would appear that this advice was heeded just as a spoiled child regards the orders of its parents, he would not do it, and the thing was wholly averted. Wonderful! Wonderful!!

Whether irony of speech is justifiably employed to ridicule things pertaining to religion is no question at all. All will say, "No." But to use irony to expose a person who has thus used it, I claim justification. The Savior himself once said, "The whole need no physician." I think he used the word "whole" ironically at that place. But, seriously, what are we to think of matters of this kind? It has always been so, and I suppose it will remain so until the end of time. There always have been imposters and those susceptible of impositions.

Now with regard to the parties referred to in this communication, had they never read that "John baptized in Enon near to Salem, because there was much water there?" (The much water seemed to be a matter of ridicule by one of the parties.) But they say, "John's ministrations do not belong to the Christian dispensation." But what says Christ? "The law and the prophets were until John; since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it."

But suppose they had read those passages, and perhaps purposely forgotten them, they not suiting their purpose, may we not suppose that what Mosheim, the great church historian, says upon the same subject comforts them sometimes, whilst they are consulting him upon other subjects? He says, "In those earlier ages, baptism was always performed without the assemblies by immersion of the whole body."

I will only say, by way of conclusion, that all we can do is to "Preach the word," and leave consequences with God.

Burkittsville, Md.

Jesus is not always to be found in the place where we seek him, but is often in the place where we least expect him. Let no one presume that Christ belongs solely to him. Let no man despise his neighbor, for he cannot tell how far he may be secretly acceptable to God, although apparently unknown and contemptible in the sight of men. Jesus himself was once unknown to the multitude, and few perceived who and how great he was.—Thomas a Kempis.

Many an honest man practices on himself an amount of deceit sufficient, if practiced upon another, and in a little different way, to send him to the State prison.—Bovee.

I OFTEN WONDER WHY 'TIS SO.

Some find work where some find rest,
And so the weary world goes on ;
I sometimes wonder which is best ?
The answer comes when life is gone.

Some eyes sleep when some eyes wake,
And so the dreary night-hours go ;
Some hearts beat, where some hearts break,
I often wonder why 'tis so

Some wills faint where some wills fight—
Some love the tent—and some the field,
I often wonder who are right—
The ones who strive—or those who yield ?

Some hands fold, where other hands
Are lifted bravely in the strife ;
And so thro' ages and thro' lands
Move on the two extrem's of life.

Some feet halt where some feet tread,
In tireless march a thorny way ;
Some struggle on where some have fled—
Some seek, when others shut the fray.

Some swords rust where others clash—
Some fall back where some move on—
Some flags furl where others flash
Until the battle has been won.

Some sleep on while others keep
The vigils of the true and brave ;
They will not rest till roses creep
Around their name, above a grave.

The Closing Scene.

BY GEO. K. SAPPINGTON.

"Strong drink is raging."

Dr. Johnson once said that he never glanced over a newspaper but what he saw something that was new and interesting, from which he derived instruction ; and I find it to be my experience. In reading one of the papers of our city this morning, I was forcibly struck with the natural pathos and the simple but true picture of human life depicted in the following little article :

"Johnson, the officer says you were drunk, and that you haven't drawn a sober breath for a week. How is that Johnson ?"

"Yer Honor," said Johnson, as he dropped one arm over the rail and leaned back heavily on the policeman, who supported him by the shoulder, "yer Honor, it's true, I've been drunk for a week, as you say, an' havn't got a word to say to defend myself. I've beer in this 'ere court, I guess a hundred times before, an' every time I've asked yer Honor to let me off light. But this time I don't have no fear.—You can send me up for ten days or ten years ; it's all one now."

As he spoke he brushed away a tear with his hat, and when he paused he coughed a dry, racking cough, and drew his tattered coat closer about his throat.

"When I went up before," he continued, "I always counted the days and the hours till I'd come off. This time I'll count the blocks to the Potter's Field. I'm most gone, Judge."

He paused again, and looked down upon his almost shoeless feet.

"When I was a little country boy, my mother used to say to me : 'Charlie, if you want to be a man, never touch liquor ;' an' I'd answer ; 'no mother, I never will.' If I'd kept that promise, you an' me wouldn't have been so well acquainted, Judge. If I could only be a boy again for half a day ; if I could go into the schoolhouse just once more and see the boys and girls as I used to see them in the old days, I could lie right down here and die happy. But it's too late now. Send me up, Judge—Make it ten days, or make it for life.—It don't make no difference. One way would be as short as the other. All I ask now is to die alone. I've been in crowded tenements for years. If I can be alone for a little while before I go I'll die contented."—Frederick Times.

This is but one of "the short and simple annals of the poor," but how forcibly it strikes our imagination as being a true description of a drunkard's life—a drunkard's end ! The object of all writing or speaking should be to set people thinking. No matter how short a composition is, if there is something in it to make persons think for themselves, it has attained its principal object ; but, though it be a long and elegantly worded one and lacks this one essential, it has lost its purpose and is of but little value, for the reason that people act more on their own thoughts and suggestions than upon those of others. We often read sketches in newspapers, see little incidents on the street or by the roadside, that preach more religion and do us more good than some of the most elaborate sermons delivered from the pulpit. Why ? Because they set us thinking in proper channels, and we act on those thoughts.

We are apt to blame drunkards, and look upon them as objects unworthy our sympathy or help ; but when we consider that none but kind, good-hearted, generous men become totally depraved by drink, we should pity rather than censure them. That none but noble hearted men become drunkards may seem, to many, to be a strong assertion ; but I am ready to prove it.

First, I will ask any wife whose husband is a confirmed inebriate, if, before he "took to drinking," or now, when in his sober hours, he is kind-hearted, good-natured, loving and true—all she could desire in a faithful husband. I will put the same question to the parents concerning their drunken son, to the sister concerning her drunken brother, and to the children of their drunken father, and they will all answer, "yes." Why, it is common to say, "He is a splendid fellow, if he only wouldn't drink."

Secondly. Women are of a finer, more delicate organization than men. They live, as it were, in a higher, purer atmosphere. They are the refiners of men ; and we expect something good in their nature that man has not, or, in plain words, they are really better than we men are ; yet when women become addicted to drink, there is no hope of reforming them. Men are sometimes reformed, but women never. When she is lost, she is lost forever. Hence I say again that men of a fine-grained organization, especially those of a fine mental temperament—the greatest minds, those who, it seems, were born to rule the rest of mankind—are strangely fascinated by alcohol, and subject to its influence. I might mention the greatest orator our country has produced, and a long list of other noble names, who, in their lives, gave abundant evidence of the truth of this assertion.

Do not understand me as declaring that there are no men great in heart and mind but what become drunkards. Far from it. But I do say that every drunkard has a warm heart and a good head. Why, then, do we blame them ? It is true they should not have taken the first drink, but when we reflect that it was this goodness of disposition that led them into it and took the power of resisting temptation away, we should at least give them our sympathy when it does as much good as, and more than our contempt.

There is nothing so affecting as the closing scenes in a drunkard's life. Those innocent women and children, who are now perishing under the sword of the cruel Turk on the plains of Servia, and our gallant young soldiers, shot and scalped among the defiles of the Yellowstone, all have relatives or friends who are, no doubt, now weeping bitter tears for their departed, loved ones, and will, in the future, pour out their grief over those lonely graves ; but who is there to shed a tear of regret or sympathy—who is there to mourn over the grave of the drunken tramp ?

We will never drive intemperance from our land by letting out our spleen upon drunkards and casting them out with no pity or mercy, or by making war upon rumsellers and giving them a demand for their whiskey, or by condemning legislation when popular opinion does not sustain it. If the demand for liquor was taken away, there would be no rum-sellers; and if public opinion were against it—if we were properly educated against liquor—there would be no need of legislation. This popular opinion must be formed by each individual resolving to do,—not to think alone,—all in his power to shield our young men from the influence of this great evil. Then, and not till then, may we hope to see our country free from this curse.

How We are Led Astray.

BY J. W. BUTTERBAUGH.

I will try and write a few lines for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN against sin and wickedness which seem to be on the increase. There are many ways in which people are led to sin. The apostle Paul in speaking of the idolatry of the people of olden times, says, "They sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play." This is idolatry. But we see many professing Christians nowadays engaged in many things that are hurtful to their souls we fear. Such amusements as croquet, card playing, base ball, and such like, are practiced in the moral world, and by professors of the gospel, and by some that want to stand high in the church, and as lights are leading poor souls away from Christ instead of to him. It is lamentable to think of. They sit down to eat, and, perhaps, not to return thanks to the all-wise Giver for the food received from his inexhaustible hand, and then rise up to play. These things may lead to greater evils. The apostle terms it idolatry.

Oh, let us beware of temptation. To sit and look on, we believe, may tempt us to engage. This time we may resist, next time may engage, and so may be led off, not being on our guard. It is easy to be led away from the narrow path, the virtuous path, upon which we should travel. We are to deny ourselves of all the sinful pleasures of this life. It is the young the rising generation that is in the great danger of being taken captive by temptation by the will of the enemy of souls. Paul, the great apostle, says, "Abstain from all appearance of evil." 1 Thess. 5: 22; James (4: 7) says, "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you." It is the little foxes that spoil the vines, the tender grapes. It takes watching on every side, at every corner.

When it is said that there is no harm in those amusements, they advise contrary to the teaching of Holy Writ. It is to be feared that they do not examine the word of the Lord to know if any harm be in it. When inspiration says, "The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play," Paul calls it idolatry. These amusements are growing evils, and are becoming worse every day. We protest against them on the ground that they are the next step to gambling, and some are already. When betting is done and money is staked, it becomes a still greater evil, a sin.

Brethren and sisters, watch over your children that they be not led away. Bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Train them in the way they should go. Yes, train them for a better world where temptations or sorrows are not, or ever will be.

The apostle speaks very comfortingly and encouragingly to those that come to Christ. "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you: and be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." 2 Cor. 6: 17, 18. And "what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols?" We are to be the temple of the living God. He hath said that he will dwell in us, and walk in us; "and I will be their God, and they shall be my people."

In conclusion I will say with the apostle, "Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth." May the grace of God be with us all.

Antichrist Described.

SELECTED BY M. A. WORKMAN.

Antichrist is the adversary of Christ; an adversary really, not pretendedly. So then Antichrist is one that is against Christ—one that is for Christ by pretense, against him in deed; for him in word, contrary to him in practice. He can prescribe how others must do, but does not set the example himself. Antichrist is the man that says that he stands between God and man; he is the son of perdition, a beast that hath two horns like a lamb, but speaks as a dragon. Christ is the Son of God; Antichrist is the son of Satan. Christ is holy, full of love, and mercy, and forbearance; Antichrist is wicked, outrageous, and exacting, to the making of all of his followers come under his rule. Christ seeks the good of the soul, and says, "Come to me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Antichrist seeks his own avarice and revenge, and says, "Come to the church, if you can obey me and my rules, if not, I do not want you." Christ is content to rule by his word, antichrist saith, "The word is not sufficient, we must have a change"—just enough to use his tyranny. Christ preferreth his Father's will above heaven and earth; antichrist preferreth himself and his traditions above and over all that is written, or that is called God. Christ has given us such laws and rules as are helpful and healthful to the soul; antichrist seeks to abuse those rules to our hurt and destruction.

Now some will wonder where this antichrist keeps himself. I can tell you, right in the church of God: not that the church did willingly admit him there to sit as such, for he had covered his cloven foot with flattery, promising to do for Christ and his church, that which he never meant to perform; for he did not live up to God's rule, but set up his one rule before the church was aware of it. So mischief must needs follow this ugly deed of the man of sin; for as a cause produces an effect, so, oftentimes, an effect sets on foot another cause. Witness the jars, the oppositions, the contentions, the emulations, strifes, whisperings, tumults, and condemnations, that, like cannon-shot, have so frequently on all sides been let fly against one another. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Now the fruits of the Spirit of Christ are "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. Against such there is no law."

Christ then is the head of his church; Satan is the head of antichrist. The elect are the body of Christ; the reprobate professors are the body of antichrist. The Holy Ghost is the spirit of life that actuateth Christ's body; that wicked spirit of iniquity is that which actuateth the body of antichrist. God help us, lovers of religious liberty, to check the growth of the man of sin. He has tried to blot out freedom of conscience and of speech. It is no wonder that he makes his subjects believe that the religion of Christ is false. He does this by making them give up their judgment and reason to him. They dare not believe, only so far as he prescribes. But the power of God will bring the head of this great antichrist down. God has set his bounds, and he cannot go beyond the time appointed; therefore are set forth before us who are the great heads of those two bodies.

The Word of God is Steadfast.

BY JOEL SENGER.

Can persons legally claim to be followers of Christ without fully complying with all the commandments and teachings of Christ and the apostles? Christ said, "Go and teach all nations," and so forth. But what must the people be taught so as to become fit subjects for baptism? We know that the apostles taught the people on the day of Pentecost, and convinced them that they had crucified their long expected Messiah, which caused them to cry out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Then Peter said, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." Acts 2: 38. We may judge that not all those who found themselves guilty had laid hands on Christ's person, but had in their hearts, condemned him to die. Man should now be taught that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and the only Lawgiver by which we are to be governed; who has sealed his law with his blood, so that it can be depended upon, and we will not be led astray if we do comply with it.

Christ said, "Which of you, intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first, and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it?" Luke 14: 28. If we want to build anything, we must know what materials we must have, and what they cost, before we can make a true calculation of its cost. If we are wise enough to manage things pertaining to our interest in perishable things, how much more ought we to reflect solemnly upon that which we intend to undertake, which is intended to be to the honor and glory of God and our everlasting welfare. I fear there are many who started out and covenanted with God in baptism, who were ignorant, and not fully taught what to forsake, and what to do, to be counted worthy to be numbered with those who have washed their robes and have made them white in the blood of the Lamb, as was shown to John the Revelator. Rev. 7: 14. Man should be taught fully what is demanded of him, before baptism is administered, otherwise, he cannot count the cost; and if in this way he commences his spiritual building, he is likely to fail, fall away, and the little which he has done will decay and come to naught, which is often the case, as we see. But if the applicant is legally taught, so as to know what is demanded of him, and has found himself willing to comply with that which is demanded of him, and has covenanted in baptism with his Master, then all is right so far, and he is a new-born babe in Christ; and now is the time, according to the instruction of Christ,—"teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you,"—to teach him to observe all things which he was taught before baptism. This is a labor which will require a life-time of watching and prayer, with thanksgiving. If the evil one is expelled, he will try his utmost to get possession again. We are living in a time when we are surrounded by temptation.

Christ said that men must give an account of every idle word they speak. Matth. 12: 36. This may seem to be a small thing; but we may depend upon it that it is unalterable truth. All jesting comes from the evil one, as well as cursing, swearing, stealing, lying, cheating, quarreling and fighting, and many other gross evils.

I have above stated explicitly when the new, spiritual birth should take place. I look at it as of great importance, as a premature spiritual birth is as if in a natural birth, the child were born before the proper time. There must be something wanting in the teaching and house-keeping, which is the cause that the church is so corrupted. Satan is always busy in trying to make disturbance and bad feelings between the children of God; but we should take heed and comply with the directions which Christ has given, when he said, "If thy brother trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone; if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother." (He did not say "thou hast gained thyself," as you, perhaps, would wish to have it, but, "thy brother.") We should go in love to meet our brother, in order to convince him that he had done injury to himself, and, if we can get him to see his fault and he asks pardon, we should gladly forgive him. But in case he had taken advantage of us in dealing, selling or buying, he could not expect pardon unless he would make the wrong right. "But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more." Perhaps you had not sufficient judgment yourself; but if the two or three find him in the fault, and he will not yield or hear them (appoint no committee of six, seven or eight, to try any further, let the case be as difficult as it may), "tell it unto the church." If the case is so difficult that even the greatest number of the church are unable to decide, it should be left to those who claim to have judgment enough to decide it; but if the decision should by some of the members be considered illegal, which can be the case if those who decide are not clear of prejudice, or one-sided, the privilege should be granted to call upon an adjoining church. The church should try her utmost to convince him of his error; but if he will not hear the church, then disown him as a brother, and if all is done legally the action is ratified in heaven, as Christ said, "Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven." Matthew 18: 15—18.

The above rule which Christ has given is much abused by church-members in common, and also by the house-keepers. The condition of the church depends much on the house-keeping. I am quite certain if the house-keepers were impartial and would not on the least degree digress from the teaching and direction which Christ has given, all would be well, and the church would be in a healthy condition, and prosper. I have often wished that the Lord would solemnize the hearts of the house-holders, and cause them to feel the responsibility which rests upon them. Come, brethren, form a resolution to come fully to God's truth, feed Christ's sheep and lambs with unadulterated and wholesome food, and clear yourselves before an all-knowing God. In writing of keeping all the commandments, I have not only reference to baptism, the Lord's Supper, feet-washing, and so forth; these are no hard things to keep, or comply with; but to become holy and live a holy life is what is demanded of us, otherwise we have no promise in the word of God of being saved. We have all the commandments recorded in the New Testament, so that I need not name them in this article, which we must observe to become such beings as God wants us to be; and we all have, or can have, it in our houses, and can, by examination, discover what we owe to Christ. He said, "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." John 5: 39. So I say, let us search the New Testament Scriptures; there we can find what will be to our everlasting benefit, if we comply therewith.

I suppose the most difficult task we will meet with will be to love our enemies from the heart, if we have any; for if we want to do anything to the honor of God, it must come from the heart, otherwise it is not accepted. But glorious it is that we have the promise of help from above, if we stand in need of it and ask for it. We can pray or ask whether in the field, in the mountain, or anywhere else on this side of the grave, whenever we stand in need of help; so that we cannot excuse ourselves and say, "We had too hard a task; we could not overcome." We can have no harder task to undergo than Christ had on the cross. Come, brethren and sisters, let us reflect and see whether we have got rid of all things which are hinderances in getting along in the narrow path. Let us press forward. I would like to meet you all on the happy shore of immortality, where parting will be no more.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Explanation.

BY LEWIS O. HUMMER.

Why do we baptize forward? Because it is the easiest and best way, and the way that historians describe as the primitive way. As there is no command, the example of the primitive Christians should be considered a safe ground of action.

In reference to Romans 6: 3, 4, Paul had been talking in the preceding chapter about death being brought into the world by Adam's transgression. I understand Paul to mean a spiritual death. This commenced with Adam, and all his posterity followed his example: they all transgressed God's law. Paul says sin is the transgression of the law, and the fruits of sin is death (spiritual death.) "If therefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood, (for under it the people received the law,) what further need was there that another priest should arise after the order of Melchisedec, and not be called after the order of Aaron?" Heb. 7: 11. "For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second." "And for this cause he is the mediator of the new testament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance." Death being produced by the law instead of life, rendered the law useless, and thus room is found for a new covenant; and as there is always an act in our disobedience, so there must be an act in our obedience; and as the act of our disobedience has produced this spiritual death, so the act of our obedience will produce spiritual life; this act of obedience being the conditions of the new covenant with him to a new life; hence the language, "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." If we have been baptized into his death, then we rise from the watery grave like Christ rose from his earthly grave, to a new and glorious life. It is in the act of our obedience that we get the benefit of Christ's death.

Some may think I am too strong on baptism, as I leave out faith and repentance. Faith and repentance are prerequisites, but are not the induction into the family of God. Faith and repentance are the wedding garments, but baptism is the sealing ceremony, or marriage ceremony. The marriage contract would be illegal without the marriage garments, for the law requires them as a proper condition for the ceremony; hence baptism without faith and repentance amounts to nothing (being illegal.) Neither do faith and repentance amount to anything without baptism. Faith and repentance are the legal qualifications of the bride, but without being legally united with the bridegroom there can be no legal right to his inheritance.

"But," says one, "It is not water baptism that unites us to Christ; it is the baptism of the Spirit." To this I reply that it is the Spirit that unites us to Christ in the act of water baptism, and without water baptism no legal union with Christ can be effected. The Spirit cannot seal a contract that has not been fulfilled.

Sinner, beware; trifle not your time away! The Spirit calls to-day. Hasten to his power. Prepare the wedding garments, enter into the marriage contract, and be sealed by that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession. Accept the proffered mercy; comply with Heaven's requirements; follow your Lord and Master into the watery grave; arise with him to a new life, and be a legal heir of the inheritance that is incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, where neither drouth, hot winds, grasshoppers or chinch bugs, can rob us of the rewards of our labor, and where the charities of the church and friends will no longer be necessary to keep us clothed and fed.

Sink Your Well.

The easiest time to dig a well is in wet weather, but the best time to dig one is in a time of drouth. Many wells sunk in times of spring freshets or autumn rains, in a little while are dry, and then the well has to be taken up and sunk deeper.

The best time to sink a well, and the only time when a perpetual supply of water can be obtained is in a time of drouth; then, as the well goes deeper and deeper, it passes beyond the region of surface water and strikes those hidden currents which feed it from unfailing fountains.

There are many souls whose only knowledge of the water of life is gained in times of freshets, in revivals, when everything seems afloat; when the windows of heaven seem opened, and the earth beneath is saturated with the abundant showers. Then they know the blessedness of living water; but in the time of drouth, when comforts wither and joys depart, when all tokens of reviving have vanished, and when everything seems like barrenness and desolation, they, too, feel the blight of prevailing influences, and become like fountains that fail. Then is the time to sink such wells. Go deeper, learn something of the depths of the love of God. Go down through all this surface water until you strike the divine reservoir which cannot fail. Then, as from an Artesian fountain, there gushes up a stream which cannot fail, so in your heart the word that Christ has given shall be unto you a well of water springing up unto everlasting life. Sink your well. Do not wait for a freshet, do not wait for a revival; now, in your time of drouth and desolation, go to your Bible, go to your closet, go to your Savior, go to your God. Do not forsake the living waters; do not hew out broken cisterns that hold no water. Dig deep. Taste the divine fullness. Dwell in God, and God shall dwell in you.—The Christian.

WHEN the summer day of youth is slowly wasting away into the nightfall of age, as life wears to its close, it is pleasant to look back through the vista of time, upon the sorrows and felicities of our earlier years. If we have a home to shelter and hearts to rejoice with us, and friends have been gathered together around our firesides, then the rough places of our wayfaring will have been worn and smoothed away in the twilight of life, while the sunny spots we have passed through will grow brighter and more beautiful. Happy indeed are they whose intercourse with the world has not changed the tone of their holier feelings or broken the musical chords of the heart, whose vibrations are so melodious, so tender and touching in the evening of life.

It is the greatest possible praise to be praised by a man who is himself worthy of praise.

For The Young.

The Little Poisson.

FROM THE FRENCH OF FLORENCE DE MARTIGNE.

From the principal school in Fontainebleau, in the year 1795, about fifty boys, from fifteen to seventeen years of age, might have been seen rushing out of doors at the sound of the noon bell, and scattering in every direction. The older pupils were walking together under the few trees, talking busily; the younger ones were commencing to play their different games, when the outside door opened for a new scholar, whom none of the boys had ever seen before. He was about fourteen years old, and so small that the first glance placed him at eleven or twelve years; yet, when more closely noticed, he seemed more like a little old man, in his coarse, awkward-cut woolen clothes, and his almost grotesque hat—a little too large for his head. He appeared to be an intelligent little fellow; his look was penetrating and profound; and his face, though so young, wore a singularly thoughtful expression.

Entering timidly, he stood still at a short distance from the door. In an instant all the scholars surrounded him.

"See, see! A new scholar! a new scholar!" cried one.

"Oh, what a funny little fellow—what a queer one!" said another.

"Yes! and just look at that hat!" exclaimed a third.

"He must learn manners here," said a big boy, giving the unfortunate hat a knock with his fist that sent it flying in the middle of the court.

"Good for you!" cried another "Tell me, young one, what's your name?"

"Simeon."

"Ha, ha, Simeon!—named after one of the patriarchs, eh? Tell us what you've done with your eleven brothers? But that isn't your whole name; what's your other? Who is your father?"

"M. Poisson."

"Ha, ha, ha; so you're the little Poisson, then?" said the big boy, laughing immoderately. [Poisson, is the French word for fish.] "You're the little fish, then! Well named,—my eye!—you're no larger than a little fish-hook!"

"Yes; and just see; boys, doesn't he look like a fish out of water?" At this all the boys burst out louder than ever with their rude laughter.

Poor Simeon reddened and paled in turn, and knew not what to do, nor how to escape, when, to his great relief the principal of the school sent for him.

M. Billy had been attracted to the window by the unusually loud clamor-ings of the boys, and, seeing the new scholar's embarrassment, had sent for him, as much to deliver him from the pleasantries of his malicious comrades as to examine him in his studies.

M. Billy was an intellectual, quick-sighted, gentle and patient man, who loved the boys and knew how to prize their affections; and he was, in return, loved and revered by all, except by a few of those scapegoats who interpret according to their own peculiar fashion that line of La Fontaine's—

"Our enemy, he is our master!"

It was before this good and intelligent man that the young boy stood to be examined. His father having previously told M. Billy that he was well advanced in mathematics, the Principal gave him a most difficult question. The child spoke timidly at first, but gaining confidence little by little, he gave an answer so complete, and expressed with such elegant conciseness, that M. Billy himself could have done no better.

Thinking that chance had perhaps favored the boy by lighting upon a question that he had studied particularly, he asked him the "why" and the "wherefore," but the child was not puzzled, and answered equally well on all points.

When he finished, the master, moved and surprised, embraced him crying:

"My friend, I shall be proud some day to have been your professor; come let me introduce you to your companions."

They went down into the court; a bush fell over the boys at the sight of M. Billy; but one or two whispered:

"See there—little Poisson! What in the world can, the little fish have done that the master should come out with him?"

"Boys," said M. Billy, "here is the finest mathematician that I have ever had in my school! I heard you a few minutes ago call him the little poisson (fish); bear in mind, I beg, the words of La Fontaine:

Petit poisson deviendra grand

Pourvu que Dieu lui prete vie."

'The little fish will become great,

If God will lend him life.'

You will see, in a few years, if he studies enough to gain what he now promises, that, some day, he will be one of the glories of France."

The child amply justified the prediction, and, twenty years after, when the illustrious geometrician demonstrated to the academy the sciences of some discovery, his old master might have been seen among the assistants, listening attentively to his words, and enjoying the praises and honors that were heaped upon the works of his scholar.

"I'm Too busy."

A merchant sat at his office desk. Various letters were spread before him. His whole being was absorbed in the intricacies of his business.

A zealous friend of religion entered the office.

"I want to interest you a little in a new effort for the cause of Christ," said the good man.

"Sir, you must excuse me," replied the merchant, "I'm too busy to attend to that subject now."

"But, sir, iniquity is on the increase among us," said his friend.

"Is it? I'm sorry; but I'm too busy at present to do anything."

"When shall I call again sir?"

"I cannot tell. I'm very busy. I'm busy every day. Excuse me, sir; I wish you a good morning."

Then, bowing the intruder out of the office, he resumed the study of his papers.

The merchant had frequently repulsed the friends of humanity in this manner. No matter what the object, he was always too busy to listen to their claims. He had even told his minister that he was too busy for anything but to make money.

But one morning, a disagreeable stranger stepped very softly to his side, laying a cold, moist hand upon his brow, and saying: "Go home with me!"

The merchant laid down his pen; his head grew dizzy; his stomach felt faint and sick; he left the counting-room, went home, and retired to his bed-chamber.

His unwelcome visitor had followed him, and now took his place by the bedside, whispering, ever and anon: "You must go with me."

A cold chill settled on the merchant's heart; spectres of ships, notes, houses, and lands, flitted before his excited mind. Still his pulse beat slower, his heart heaved heavily, thick films gathered over his eyes, his tongue refused to speak. Then the merchant knew that the name of his visitor was Death!

Humanity, mercy, and religion, had alike begged his influence, means, and attention, in vain; but when death came, the excuse was powerless; he was compelled to have leisure to die.

Let us beware how we make ourselves too busy to secure life's great end. When the excuse rises to our lips, and we are about to say we are too busy to do good, let us remember we cannot be too busy to die.—Christian at Work.

A Christian mother, when praying beside her little boy, had mentioned his name in her prayer. Upon rising from his knees he said, "I am glad that you told Jesus my name, for when he sees me coming he will say, 'Here comes little Willie Johnson.'"

A mouse can drink no more than its fill from the mightiest river.

RULES FOR AGENTS.

1. At the head of every letter give the name of your own post-office, county and State; and the date on which it is written.
2. Write the name and give the full address of every subscriber you send, as legibly as you can.
3. Write "New" before the names of all new subscribers.
4. In ordering a change of address, give the post-office, county, and State, to which the paper is sent, as well as the post-office, county, and State to which it is to be sent.
5. Do not mix up different items of business; but take up and finish one item before you take up another.
6. Write items intended for publication on a separate slip.
7. Make every lawful effort to obtain subscribers, and to do good in whatever way you can.
8. Send money by drafts, post-office money orders, or registered letters.
9. Observe the above rules, and you will expedite business, save us from much trouble, and yourselves and our subscribers from disappointments and vexation.

THE LORD A GREAT CONVENIENCE TO HIS PEOPLE.

"He is at my right hand."—PSA xvi. 8.

The Scriptures represent God to us in various relations and in various characters adapting him to our various wants. This is the admirable provision that is made for us in divine revelation. We have a system of religion adapted to us as fallen creatures, with a Savior to save us from guilt, a Holy Spirit to sanctify us, and a God able and willing to help us. And that this help may always be available, he is represented as being at our right hand. The right hand suggests two prominent thoughts. It is a place of honor and a place of convenience. The hands are important members of the body.—With these the body performs much of its service. And of the two hands we possess, the right hand is the principal one, and the one most used, and the one with which most of the work we do with our hands is done. And when the Lord is represented as doing marvelous things, it is said, "His right hand, and his holy arm hath gotten him the victory." Right hand seems in this passage to combine in it activity and power. The pious Jew is represented as saying, when in captivity in Babylon, and as expressing his attachment to Jerusalem and to the religious services there performed, "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning." Psa. cxxxvii.

5. Reference here is to the skill of the right hand, and perhaps more particularly to the skill in handling the harp, which seems to have been the subject of discourse.

Then as the right hand is noted for its skill and strength, and much used in manual labor, when God is represented as being at the right hand of his people, it implies that he is near to deliver, to protect, to strengthen, and to help. As the workman has his tools with which he works, and the materials used by him in making what is to be made, as near as possible, and near his right hand, so that he can avail himself of them at any time they are wanting, so the Christian endeavors to have God always before him, and with him and on his right hand, that he may have his help whenever it is needed. And as we always need his help, we should endeavor to have him always near, even at our right hand, that we may have his help as we may need it to answer our various purposes in forming a Christian character, and in living a holy life.—And every believer can say with the prophet, "He is near that justifieth me; who will contend with me? let us stand together; who is mine adversary? let him come near to me. Behold, the Lord God will help me; who is he that shall condemn me? lo, they all shall wax old as a garment; the moth shall eat them up." Isa. l. 8, 9. Such is the boldness and safety of those who have God on their right hand.

And while God should, and while he does occupy this position of convenience and nearness on the right hand of the good and faithful, Satan also seeks to occupy the same position. The prophet Zechariah had a vision in which Joshua the high priest seems to represent the people of God. In regard to that vision it is said, "And he showed me Joshua the high priest standing before the angel of the Lord, and Satan standing at his right hand to resist." Zech. iii. 1. Here Satan is represented as standing at the right hand of the servant of God. He wanted to be near his right hand to be ready to afford him his help to do evil.—But the Lord was also at the right hand of Joshua. And had not the Lord been near to help him, Satan would have intruded his temptations, and caused the fall of the servant of God. But God being on the right hand of Joshua, a victorious defense is made of him, and Satan is repulsed.

The two great powers of good and evil are seeking to have the mastery over us. And as God is the stronger of the two, if we have him on our right hand, he will gain the victory over us and for us. "The Lord at thy right hand shall strike through kings in the day of his wrath." Though our enemies be kings, who usually have their way and carry their point, if the Lord is at our right hand to help us, even such enemies shall be subdued. There will be with all who try to serve God and try to live soberly, righteously, and godly, some inconveniences, some troubles, some opposition, some crosses to endure, but with the Lord—who is the "fountain of living waters;" "the Lord of lords, and King of kings;" "the Father of mercies and the God of all comfort;" "the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth;" the source of all that is pure, and excellent, and holy, and desirable, and needful,—on our right hand, affording us resources in every way ample to meet all our necessities in our Christian race from the time we take up our cross until we lay it down to take up our crown; and to have such resources always near us, by day and by night, at home and abroad, waking and sleeping, living and dying; is a convenience far outweighing all inconveniences that can possibly occur with any who are endeavoring to live a Christian life. Who then will be discouraged, or who will hesitate to enter upon a Christian life with such advantage in favor of the good?

Christianity is real, not imaginary; substance, not shadow; practice, not theory. It is designed by heaven to afford us comfort and help. Our Christianity should be to us a source of comfort and help. It should be available to us at all times. Our dangers, our duties, and our weakness are such, that we need the Lord as our helper, and we need him at all times, and we therefore should have him at our right hand—have him convenient to us, that we may have his help when needed. Paul realized the convenience of having the Lord near him. When he was a prisoner at Rome, and in trouble, and forsaken of men, he says, "notwithstanding the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me; that by me the preaching may be fully known, and that all the Gentiles might hear: and I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion. And the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom: to whom be glory for ever and ever, Amen." 2 Tim. 4: 17.

This is honorable to the Lord, and encouraging to all who would serve the Lord.

THE COMMUNION MEETING AT CHERRY GROVE.

A branch of the Elk Lick congregation, that in which we are here living, lies in Garrett county, Md., about twenty miles from this place. The name of Cherry Grove has been given to it. We held a communion meeting there on the 19th and the 20th ults. We had a very pleasant meeting. The congregation was large for that country, as it is mountainous and not very thickly settled; at least not as much so as in older and more improved districts of country. The number of members in that district is about fifty, a considerable part of which has been received the present season, and they all seemed to be zealous in the cause of the Lord. The prospects of the church look encouraging, and we doubt not that it will further increase if the brethren and sisters are faithful. And we do hope that they will be faithful, and let their light shine, and be witnesses to the power and excellency of Christianity. They need some ministerial help, as our brother, Eli Weitzel, the ministering brother who lives among them, is not enjoying very good health. They thought something of having an election for a minister, but it was thought best to defer this awhile yet. They, however, thought it advisable to call a brother to the office of deacon, and an election was held, and Bro. David Merrill was chosen. The ministering brethren of our congregation should not fail to visit the brethren at Cherry Grove, as we think their visits would be acceptable and profitable.

THE REPORT OF A. M.

We regret very much that we have not been able before this to fill our orders for the Report of the Proceedings of A. M. The brethren of the Pilgrim and ourself made arrangements to have the Report published. Bro. Brumbaugh contracted with a publisher in Huntingdon to publish it. The work will be much larger than was expected. Instead of its making a pamphlet of about sixty pages there are over eighty. There has also been a delay in the printing, the cause of which we have not learned. In a letter received from Bro. Brumbaugh a few days ago he informed us that the printing was done, and that they were making arrangements for binding them. So we hope to be able to send them out in a few days. We beg the indulgence of those who have sent in their orders. We have done the best we could under the circumstances. But there has been a failure in getting out the work at the time it should have been got out. Should we ever have occasion to get out the Report of another A. M., we hope to do better. We shall know more about it, and be better prepared to make arrangements for the execution of the work.

THE ALMANAC--ADVERTISEMENTS.

Some of our brethren are manifesting an interest in the Almanac for 1877. A few contributions and a number of corrections in the list of ministers have been sent in. For these we are thankful and still solicit farther aid in the same direction.

We shall also want a number of advertisements—enough to fill the inside pages of the cover. We want no objectionable advertisements to be offered. Others will be entered with the date on which the application was written, until the space is filled, after which no more can be admitted. Be particular to state how much space you want.

Cleanings and Jottings.

"WEAK REASONING."—Under this heading, in a late number of the Church Advocate, we find the following:

"How even doctors of divinity will expose their prejudices when arguing for a favorite dogma. Not only their prejudices, but the fact that prejudice will overmaster reason. Dr. Howard Malcom is a learned man, a man of ripe age and experience, and we doubt not a pious man. Thus he writes in favor of close communion:

"How dare mortals be liberal with what is not theirs? The Lord's supper is not ours. If I invite you to dine with me, and you say to a friend or two, Come I am going to dine with Brother Malcom, would not that be impertinence and imposition?"

"Now it is this very fact, that the Lord's Supper is not ours," that prohibits us from refusing any of God's children the privilege to sit down and partake of it. The Lord has provided the Supper, and he asks all his disciples to eat and drink in remembrance of him.—No one has a right to prohibit any one from doing this."

If Dr. Malcom's reasoning is weak, the editor of the Advocate surely has failed to show it. The Doctor asks: "How dare mortals be liberal with what is not theirs?" The Advocate does not answer. Men dare be liberal with what is not theirs, but only so far as he whose it is gives them license. Did the Lord authorize his disciples to say, "Here is the Lord's Supper; and as it is his,—not ours,—we invite all who consider themselves God's children to sit down and partake of it?" If the Lord gave such license, we should like to know when and where and how he did so. It will not be sufficient to say that the Lord did not forbid the extending of such an invitation. Dr. Malcom's friend (and we will suppose the editor of the Advocate to be that friend) might apologize for his "impertinence and imposition" by saying, "It is true, Dr., that you did not give me a grant to invite these friends to your dinner, but as you did not forbid it, and as the dinner is prepared for your friends, and as these profess to be your friends, I have taken the liberty to invite them to your table." Would not this be heaping insult on imposition"? Certainly so; and if Dr. Malcom should deal as justly as his friend's apology is unreasonable and offensive, he would turn both him and those he invited out of doors to find their dinner elsewhere. If the Master should find some who had on no wedding garments, and should say to them, "How came ye in?" might they not appropriately answer, "Easily enough, for thy steward (minister) invited us and opened the door." Naturally so. If the Lord should call on such a steward to give account of his stewardship, what would he answer? We imagine that we can hear him reply: "True, Lord, you did not command us to invite these to your supper, but as you did not forbid it, and as this supper is yours and is designed for God's children, and as these brethren claimed to be such, therefore I took the liberty to invite and receive them." Is it not most probable that such a steward would be led to the door with those who were not in proper dress? Dr. Malcom's question, "How dare mortals be liberal with what is not theirs?" is, after all, not so easily shoved off by saying that the fact that it belongs to some one else is evidence enough that they should not be restrictive. The fact is, the position assumed by those who oppose restricted communion, if followed to its logical end, would subvert all discipline in the church of God, and would leave the Lord's pleasant vineyard in the midst of a howling wilderness, without wall or watchman. We must not open the gate and lead a wolf into the fold merely because he pretends to be a sheep. B.

In a private letter received from Prof. Howard Miller, he states that the ornithology of our Natural History lessons proved too much for our young readers. P. rufus is the brown thrush, and P. minor, the woodcock. Not a single guesser got them right. He will get back to quadrupeds and expects prompt answers.

Bro. Dennis Clark, of Grant Co., W. Va., Aug. 14th, 1876, says: "Health, in general, is good in this county. The wheat crop was very good. Corn looks promising; and there will be an abundance of fruit."

IN No. 33, page 525, E. J. Harrison should be S. J. Harrison.

How many thoughts pass through our minds without leaving an impress to witness that they were ever there. If but half of them—the better half—could be entertained so as to make some mark, we would be wiser and better.—Most of our thoughts are not worthy of the name; they are mere shadows flitting across the mental arena and leaving no trace behind. Thoughtless thinkers—we are.

BRO. P. S. Garman, Modesto, Cal., June 30th, says: "Weather extremely warm; mercury occasionally rises as high as 110°. Some men and horses have died from the heat. Crops, middling good; though the yield will fall far below the estimate made earlier in the season.—Health, in general, good. Fruit of all kinds, abundant. Plenty of apricots, pears, and apples in market. General price, about three cents per lb.; though earlier in the season they were as high as 10 cents per lb. Grain is being harvested and threshed very rapidly. Price of wheat, $1 35 to $1 50 per cental; barley, about $1 per cental; good grain hay, about $8 per ton."

By the last word from Bro. S. H. Bashor he was at Clover Creek, Blair Co., Pa. He expressed a hope that the Lord would accomplish a good work there.—On the 13th inst., he expects to go to the city of Philadelphia. His address then will be No. 1006 Marshall street, until farther notice be given.

BRO. A. B. Woodward of Gowrie, Webster county, Iowa, says: I wish to inform the readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN that there are good chances here for brethren—especially for those of little means—to get homes. Land is selling at from $5 to $10 per acre. Coal and timber are plenty and cheap. Our number is small; but have hopes of its soon being larger. Any one desiring more information will address me as above."

BRO. B. L. Gordon, of Middle Fork, Ind., in relation to Sunday-schools, says: "The young folks will go to some place; I think that we (the Brethren) should have a good Sunday-school in every congregation, where we can read the word and teach the doctrine in its purity; selecting such teachers as will be earnest workers. * * * As a general thing there is not preaching every Sunday; then the young folks go to other schools of different denominations and may be led astray."

From the Baptist Battle Flag we clip the following:

Walter L. Penn, Esq., has now growing in the yard of his house a number of stalks of Egyptian wheat of a beautiful shape and fine grain, with remarkably well filled heads. What is most remarkable about it is, that the seeds from which it sprung were found in a mummy case at the Smithsonian Institution, and had preserved their vitality for 3,000 years. Mr. Penn will test the capacity of the grain for flour when it matures."

BRO. J. M. Calvert, of Allison, Lawrence county, Ill., Aug. 6th writes:

"Health is not very good, there being considerable fever and ague, with an occasional death, which reminds us that we are fast hastening to an unknown world. The weather for the last five or six weeks has been very dry, so much so that farmers in some places have stopped plowing. Our wheat crop was about one half of the usual average. Corn on the high prairie looks promising, but needs rain."

BRO. P. R. Wrightsman, of South Bend, Ind., August 9th, says: "Our district of church, Portage Prairie congregation, is moving along quietly, with some additions. The 15th of last month was the time of our regular church meeting, at which time Bro. John B. Wrightsman was elected to the ministry. He had formerly been a minister in the Baptist church, but is now in communion with us. Please say to your readers that our communion at Portage Prairie will be held at the church on the 4th of October, commencing at 5 o'clock. Ministering brethren are invited to be present with us."

COLORADO potato bugs have been washed ashore at Milestone and other places in Connecticut in such numbers of late as to poison the air. The captain of a New London vessel says that they came on board in such swarms while at sea that they had to close the hatches.

THE Pope, addressing the students at the foreign colleges at Rome recently, warned them against listening to the insidious suggestions recently made for selecting his successor by a popular vote.

THE Scandinavians in Dakotah, it is said, number between 15,000 and 16,000. Among them the Baptists have four small churches. Why is it that we cannot record so much, or much more, of the Brethren? How many ministers or missionaries have we in Dakota? B.

BRO. Samuel C. Bashor of Whitesville, Mo., says: "A few items from this part of the West may not be amiss. So far as the desires that are, or should be, uppermost in our affections are concerned, they are not as we would love to have them; but still the little band of believers are contending for justice and right. We need reform in the vital part of Christianity to be fully Christianized to the great work of wholly being spent for the Lord. We are not alone; the different orders seem tending to coldness, with not sufficient activity or zeal to prompt a kindling of the old flame. * * * But God is not dead. He still lives, and ere long he will make bare his arm, and again renew the oath of vengeance against all ungodliness. Our nature's sustenance is bountifully supplied. Health is also a boon which all seem to enjoy at present, with a few exceptions. The political sky assumes a different aspect to-day from what it did in the past since the war. A manifestation of the evil one, in the form of party strife, has begun to loom up in our midst. The bloody chasm is unveiled, and parties begin to see the bloody bones of friends, caused by an evil war. May God send a messenger, ghost like, to frighten all such from the bloody chasm."

It is said that within three years the churches of Great Britain have lost 30,000 members through the vice of intemperance. This is a sad record. Is it anything to our credit to be able to say that not one of them was a brother-German Baptist? This truth affords us but little comfort, although in body and soul we stand opposed to intemperance. B.

Grasshoppers are ravaging cotton and corn in Georgia. They are of two species, one brown and the other green, with a black streak down the back.

MADRID, August 12.—The heat is fearful, exceeding any recollection since 1800. The city is deserted. Forty field laborers are dead near Seville. The vines in Andalusia are failing.

Miscellaneous.

Napoleon on the Divinity of Christ.

Canon Liddon, in his Bampton Lectures for 1866, gives, with the authority for it, the following account of Bonaparte's sentiments on this subject, expressed in St. Helena: "When conversing, as was his habit, about the great men of the ancient world, and comparing himself with them, he turned, it is said, to Count de Montholon with the inquiry, 'Can you tell me who Jesus Christ was?' The question was declined, and Napoleon proceeded. 'Well, then, I will tell you. Alexander, Caesar, Charlemagne and myself have founded great empires, but upon what did these creations of our genius depend? Upon force. Jesus alone founded his empire upon love, and to this very day millions would die for him. . . . I think I understand something of human nature, and I tell you all these were men, and I am a man; none else is like him; Jesus Christ was more than a man. I have inspired multitudes with such an enthusiastic devotion that they would have died for me, but to do this it was necessary that I should be visibly present, with the electric influence of my looks, of my words, of my voice. When I saw men and spoke to them, I lighted up the flame of self devotion in their hearts. . . . Christ alone has succeeded in so raising the mind of man toward the Unseen, that he becomes insensible to the barriers of time and space.—Across a chasm of eighteen hundred years Jesus Christ makes a demand, which beyond all others it is difficult to satisfy. He asks for that which a philosopher may often seek in vain at the hands of his friends, or a father of his children, or a bride of her spouse, or a man of his brother—he asks for the human heart; he asks to have it entirely to himself; he demands it unconditionally, and forthwith his demand is granted. Wonderful! In defiance of time and space, the soul of man, with all its power and faculties, becomes an annexation of the empire of Christ. All who believe on him experience that remarkable, supernatural love toward him. This phenomenon is unaccountable; it is altogether beyond the scope of man's creative powers. Time, the great destroyer, is powerless to extinguish the sacred flame; time can neither exhaust nor limit its range. This it is which strikes me most; I have often thought of it. This it is which proves to me convincingly the Divinity of Jesus Christ.

Harmony of Science and Religion.

Now, at eighty-two and a half years of age, still, by God's forbearance and blessing, possessing my mental powers unimpaired, and looking over the barrier beyond which I must soon pass, I can truly declare that in the study and exhibition of science to my pupils and fellow-men, I have never forgotten to give all honor and glory to the infinite Creator—happy if I might be the honored interpreter of a portion of his works and of the beautiful structure and beneficent laws discovered therein by the labors of many illustrious predecessors. For this I claim no merit. It is the result to which right reason and sound philosophy, as well as religion, would naturally lead.

While I have never concealed my convictions on these subjects, nor hesitated to declare them on all proper occasions, I have also declared my belief that, while natural religion stands on the basis of Revelation, consisting, as it does of the facts and laws which form the domain of science, science has never revealed a system of mercy commensurate with the moral wants of man. In nature, in God's creation, we discover only laws—laws of unrelenting strictness, and sore penalties attached to their violation. There is associated with natural laws no system of mercy. That dispensation is not revealed in nature, and is contained in the Scriptures alone.

With the double view just presented I feel that science and religion may walk hand in hand. They form two distinct volumes of revelation, and both being records of the will of the Creator, both may be received as constituting a unity declaring the mind of God, and the study of both becomes a duty, and is perfectly consistent with our highest moral obligations.

I feel that, as this subject respects my fellow men, I have done no more than my duty, and as I reflect upon my course with subdued satisfaction, being persuaded that nothing that I have said or omitted to say in my public lectures, or before the college classes, or before popular audiences, can have favored the erroneous impression that science is hostile to religion.

My own conviction is so decidedly in the opposite direction, that I could wish that students of theology should be also students of natural science—certainly of astronomy, geology, natural philosophy, and chemistry, and the outlines of natural history.—Prof. Silliman.

Pre-historic Art.

It is surprising to see upon what slender and sandy foundations learned men will proceed to base the most astonishing conclusions. Readers are familiar with the notable story of the investigations of those learned savants who studied, theorized, and philosophized concerning the relics of an animal of some long extinct species, found among the most ancient strata, and at last they resolved themselves into the skeleton of the dead donkey which was tumbled into the shaft of a mine to save the trouble of burying him; and in a similar spirit of wonderful research certain old relics and remains are referred to as affording indubitable proof of the existence of extinct races, whose customs and manners pertained exclusively to far off ages; when in fact it may be found that these very primitive forms and relics have their place to-day among the actual scenes of common life. Dr. Arthur Mitchell, a British antiquary, in a course of lectures in Edinburgh, describes a number of ancient customs which still exist in the remotest districts of Scotland. In the island of Fetlar, he discovered that the primitive method of spinning by a spindle with a stone weight or "whorl" appended, was still the only method in use there; while in certain parts of the main land, as in Shetland, very near Fetlar, there remained no knowledge among the people even of the existence of the spindle or whorl; while at Davie, in Invernesshire, he found the women spinning with the spindle weighted with a potato instead of the whorl. This most primitive form of the earliest industrial art, was thus at this day holding its ground among the people who had been spinning for generations by means of the most complex machinery. The art in its rudest state existed side by side with the same art in the greatest perfection.—While on the other hand there were districts where the use of the whorl had become extinct for a generation or two, and where, though only this short period had elapsed since it was the commonest of all common implements in their households, the people had now not the remotest idea of the true character of these stone whorls, but regarded them with superstitious and curious veneration.

Dr. Mitchell found at one time a stone-breaker sitting on the roadside eating his dinner out of what seemed to be a sepulchral urn. Closer inspection proved the vessel to be a specimen of hand-made pottery which was in general use in that region. It was made by a woman, from clay without especial preparation, shaped by the hand and burned in an open peat fire, and its porosity corrected by a bowlful of milk being poured over it while still hot. No pottery of "the stone age" or modern savage life was ruder than this, yet the house in which the woman lived who manufactured this vessel, contained cotton from Manchester, cutlery from Sheffield, pottery from Staffordshire, tea from China, and sugar from the West Indies. She was shrewd, intelligent, and well informed: yet it is possible that some wisecracker digging on the site of her hut when it had gone to ruin, would find nothing except the pottery of her own rude manufacture, and would conclude that she belonged to a race which lived ages and ages ago, before any modern discoveries had been made, and would offer her old earthen pot in proof of the theory. These and many other palpable and well authenticated facts should cause men to besitate a little before they undertake to overturn all faith and hope for this world and the one to come, by the alleged discovery of some old bone, or some tomahawk in which they claim to read a history which would doubtless astonish the persons who were familiar with the actual origin of relics upon which their theories are based.—The Amory.

Warning Against Wine.

BY DWIGHT L. MOODY.

To the many young people who will be studying the advice given by the wise king, and to all the readers of The Sunday School Times, I would like to give my most earnest pleadings that they abstain altogether from intoxicating drinks.

Solomon never said a truer word than what he says about those who tarry long at the wine. The questions asked by him, "Who hath woe? who hath sorrow? who hath contentions? who hath babbling? who hath wounds without cause? who hath redness of eyes?" are not only answered by Solomon himself, but we find his answers verified every day we look into the news of the daily papers; while around us on every side, in the street, we may see living witnesses to the truth of what Solomon says.

Many whom I meet with, who have become slaves to strong drink, say, "Oh that I had never commenced to drink; but now I have no power; and drink is stronger than my own will; stronger than my love for my wife and children; stronger even than my wish for heaven."

May the dear children be kept from ever touching wine, or any drink that will intoxicate, so that they will be in no danger of the terrible consequences that follow those that "tarry long at the wine."

Remember, that these who are drunkards did not intend to become so; they only thought of drinking just a little; but the little kept increasing, and the love for drink kept growing stronger, until the eyes grew red, and the face grew bloated, and the step grew unsteady, until the one who might have been a blessing to the world and a help to those around him, has become a loathsome object and a terror to his friends. It is not safe to take even a little strong drink; because the love for it so soon becomes a strong and a cruel master.

War is terrible, and many of our best men have gone to their graves through war; but strong drink has carried more victims to the grave, in America, than has war.

Again, I beg of the young to touch, not, and taste not any strong drink.—The Sunday School Times.

BETWEEN May 10th and August 5th, according to the Philadelphia Times, there were sold at Lauber's restaurant inside the Centennial grounds, 44,175 gallons of lager beer, 6,000 gallons of wine and a large quantity of weiss beer in addition. At the Trois Freres Provencaux restaurant, 33,750 bottles of wine were disposed of. The Grand American Restaurant put off 60,000 gallons of lager beer, 2,600 gallons of ale, and 15,500 bottles of table claret and champagne. From the Southern Restaurant there went out 35,200 gallons of lager beer, and 7,050 gallons of other liquors. Much other liquor selling was carried on in different portions of the Exhibition. The receipts for admission have hardly come up to the original expectations; but the liquor sales have not fallen below the fair anticipations of those who tried to make the Exhibition a great moral educating agency. What a pity it couldn't be open on Sundays, so as to draw men away—as Commissioner Donaldson suggested—from the grog shops outside, which have no high moral aim like those carrying on the business inside the gates.—Sunday School Times.

AS THOU WILT.—Should any man say, "I asked for a blessing that was plainly promised, and did not obtain it," I should then say, Are you equally clear that the obtaining of it would be for your good? "Yes," say you, "it would make me comfortable." Just so; but would it be for your good to be comfortable? "And it would get me out of difficulty." But may it not be for your lasting good to be in the difficulty, and may there not be something in the world a great deal higher for you and for me than merely to be comfortable and to get out of difficulty? "Not as I will, but as thou wilt," was the prayer of the man who had more power in prayer than all of us put together. "Not as I will, but as thou wilt."—We must always put that in.—Spurgeon.

He that despairs, degrades the Deity, and seems to intimate that he is insufficient, or not just to his word, and in vain hath read the Scriptures, the world and man.—Feltham.

"Dead yet Speaketh."

So we thought, when, a few days ago, the following letter was received, which was sent us for publication. The writer, our brother in the flesh, has long since gone to his rest. He had been chosen to the ministry, and having a strong desire to fill his calling well, he applied himself diligently to study; so closely did he confine himself to study and duty that his health failed. In January, 1861, while engaged in teaching school, he contracted a severe cold, which settled on his lungs and terminated in consumption. He was obliged to give up his school, and after lingering for about ten months, and being reduced to a living skeleton, he went home. His prayer had ever been that he might die with a sound mind; and his desires were fully realized. As his body wasted away and his physical strength declined, he seemed to be renewed, day by day, in the inner man; and as the end approached, his mind seemed to expand and grow stronger, so that it was not only a pleasure but edifying to converse with him. Religion was his constant theme, and the spreading of the gospel of Christ by systematized missionary work his great concern. "We shall remember his teachings and his consistent, upright, exemplary life. May we meet him in the better land. B.

A Letter to Sister Mary Shaffer, Worthington, Pa.

RURAL VALLEY, Pa., Dec. 16, 1860.

Dear Sister in the Lord:

For the first time, I now write to you, which freedom you will pardon, when you come to understand the cause of and my motive in writing. I read your interesting letter to my sister, in which you so plainly (if not intentionally) give evidence that you have experienced a change of heart, and now take delight in the service of the Savior, with his humble followers, which has led me to write these lines, thinking that perhaps they might afford a little encouragement to you. I always rejoice in God my Creator, and in Jesus Christ my Savior, when sinners turn to God. We all having been taken captive by the snares of the evil one, and having had our conversation with the wicked in times past, it now becomes us to awake to righteousness, and to live holy lives, so that in the day of judgment we may be able to stand.

Dear sister, you have now exercised faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, repentence toward God, and have been baptized into his name, where we come into conjunction with his blood, and at which time we have the promise of the pardon of our sins. You have now only been initiated into the church of God. You have enlisted under the blood-stained banner of King Immanuel, and now, no doubt, you have fully resolved, as Joshua of old, that you will serve the Lord, let others do as they may. Yet you will find that you will meet with some temptations. No doubt, your former associates will think it strange if you "run not with them to the same excess of riot," and they may even laugh at you, but at the same time know they are doing wrong, and that they themselves ought to do the very things which they make light of.—Now, for your encouragement I would exhort you, in the name of the Master, do not give way to any of these things.—Tell your associates, if they would have you to engage in vanity and wickedness, that you cannot, that your Master has given you a charge, and in his charge he forbids the indulgence in worldly pleasures, for they are only transitory and will pass away. Tell them what your Savior has done for you, that he died to save sinners, that he wants all to come to him, and that you cannot disobey one that has loved you so much as even to die for you. Read, and meditate much upon his word. Often pray in secret, for he has promised to reward us openly. Forsake all evil; be humble; exercise love to God and your fellow creatures, and our God will not fail to administer unto you an abundant entrance into his heavenly kingdom.

Give my love to all in your family. I have a desire to visit the church with you, at some time. I would be glad to hear from some one, when there is preaching down at Brother Jacob Swigar's or in that neighborhood.

S. W. BEER.

A Voice from Spring Run.

On Friday evening, July 28th, a series of meetings began in Spring Run meeting-house, near McVeytown, Mifflin county, Pa., and continued until Sabbath, August 6th, upon which day about one thousand people were present, and listened to a sermon on baptism, after which twenty-two were immersed, ranging from eleven to about sixty years of age. The ministers proved, 1. By the English Scriptures; 2. By the Greek language; 3. By the doings of the Greek church; 4. By church history; and 5. By the Fathers in Protestant churches, that baptism is immersion.

Brother Stephen H. Bashor, of Whitesville, Mo., did the preaching during the meeting. He has a peculiar gift of working on the feelings of his hearers. On the second Friday evening he spoke on feet-washing; on Saturday evening, on the design of baptism; and on Sabbath forenoon, on the mode of baptism, as above noticed, notifying the audience, beforehand, when the sermon was to be on doctrinal points.

To day, Sabbath, August 13th, two more were baptized, and the penitential tear still flows. At the Spring Council five, and at the lovefeast one, joined, making thirty since Jan. 1st.

There is a very good Sabbath school here in the meeting-house.

Yours truly,

S. W. BOLLINGER.

Centennial Improvement.

It is noteworthy that the Brethren have improved in this centennial year in different ways, especially in discountenancing unceremonious controversy. Controversy, or an exchange of views, should not be rejected by any means, if words are seasoned with grace; but when brethren kick, knock, and throw clubs at each other, such articles should be rejected. Now and then there is one who wants controversy entirely done away with. I do not know why this is, unless because it is abused by some. This is no reason why there should be no controversy. I am a lover of exchange of thought. We may gain much knowledge by it. The articles published on secret orders enable us to give more correct answers when asked why we are opposed to these secret orders. I wish some one would write an article about the Grangers, and give reasons why we should belong to them, as it is said there is no wrong in them. This the Grangers argue, and we should be able to answer them correctly. I like the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, and hope it may be widely circulated. Brethren, keep improving your talents; use words seasoned with grace.

SAMUEL WEIMER.

BEAVER RIDGE, Knox Co., Tenn., }
August 21st, 1876. }

Dear Brother Quinter:

Each weekly visit of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN brings us church news, items, and calls from the many scattered churches, which we read with much interest.—We are especially interested in isolated nooks because their circumstances are so much like ours. It is encouraging to read of the accessions here and there among the little handfuls of Christ's people. Their gradual spread and increase seems to fulfill the prophecy of Isaiah: "For the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." The most glorious piece of news I ever read in our valuable paper was that headed "Historical." There is a little analogy between our circumstances and those of the few members of Fayette county, Pa., long ago, when occasionally visited by Brother Hinebaugh. Here, too, we are in an isolated condition and only visited occasionally by a ministering brother. What unknown trials and victories there were then in store for them, they did not know; but when the chosen time was here of him that orderech all things right, they were able to realize the full measure of the prophecy of old: "The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose." Though it is likely according to the common lot of Christian communities that it has not been all sunshine in such a large church, even in the more favorable periods of its history; but we hope it may be in a lively and healthy state, full of love and abounding in good works, which are the only marks or signs of good faith.

There are some wholesome instructions in a piece of correspondence by Elias Troxel, in No. 30, p. 477. While it is the duty of God's ministers to preach the whole gospel of Christ to every creature, it is especially their duty to "tell Israel her sin." The heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked, and nothing is more detrimental to our spiritual welfare than to fancy ourselves to be saved while the heart is bound to some perishable idol of this earth. Satan ensnares more souls to-day by patting on the head, than he destroys by open persuasion.

Thousands of men to-day are fancying themselves to be traveling on the narrow way while the chief concern of their busy life is about riches that take to themselves wings. The greatest and most indescribable of all disappointments at the day of retribution, will be of those who think they are walking in all the ordinances and appointments of the gospel, but are not quite unchained from the things that must pass away. How blessed is that believer who can always reconcile his heart to his present circumstances, and be resigned to the daily appointments of Providence, without the feeling of a murmur or complaint! How wretched is he whose chief concern is confined to the things of this world. How doubly depraved is the heart of him who can, with the possession of an abundance of the things of this life, hold an attitude of indifference to the needs and wants of others. Blessed is he that has faith enough in Christ to give unto him that asketh and lend unto him that is in want. A daily disposition to bring our minds concerning the things of this life down to existing circumstances is a much better and a safer attitude than a continual aim to bring the circumstances up to the mind. But this is not local news.

Our church as far as I know is in a healthy condition, and we propose to have a feast of charity soon. Bro. Crosswhite was here in Knox Co., some months ago, and preached several sermons for us.—We hope he will come this fall again.—To such ministers in older congregations who would desire to increase their usefulness, this locality would afford a capital opportunity. The natives here are sociable, and as good a community as can be found almost anywhere. There are more than a score of families within no great distance from here who moved in from the North in the last five or six years (mostly Amish and Mennonites), and there are still more coming in. The climate is delightful, and those who move here are generally well satisfied. If the thermometer ever went as high as 100° in the shade during the four years of our sojourn here, I am not aware of it. It may have been. The highest this summer, to the best of my knowledge, was 96 on my uncle's porch, by a genuine Fahrenheit thermometer. The thousands of acres of land from forty to fifty years old, never having a handful of grass seed or fertilizer applied to it, tells a tale of reckless farming, bred and fostered in the days of slavery, and presents an appearance to the casual observer not altogether lovely; but in this respect the country has been by some woefully misrepresented.—The soil is of great variety both in quality and composition. Timber of a great variety and plenty. To give all the information that would recommend the country and to which it is entitled, would require too much space in this little message. The prospects of building up a church here as they present themselves to our limited means of observing, are good. The work in the Lord's vineyard is plenty, and faithful laborers few. We would rejoice beyond measure if some ministers and members from well supplied churches would "come over into Macedonia and help us.

C. F. DEWEILER.

Harvest Meeting.

We held our harvest meeting on the 5th of August. We had a pretty good attendance of members, but few others.

Why is this so? I usually invite others to be with us.

For some years we have taken occasion at such meetings to take up a collection for the benefit of the poor members, to be used as occasion may require, in cases of sickness or otherwise. I wonder why it has not always been the practice of our church. Did religious bodies do more in these matters than they do, there would not be so many secret societies in the land. And I find that the mass of our members are willing to contribute to all benevolent causes; they only lacked the opportunity heretofore.

We are again having hot weather.—The health in our section of country is good. Oats was good, but little sown.

LIFE, GROWTH, BEAUTY.

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER. LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

Not a Dye; makes harsh hair soft and silky; cleanses the scalp from all impurities, causing the hair to grow where it has fallen off or become thin.

Can be applied by the hand as it does not stain the hand or soil the finest linen. As a Hair Dressing it is the most perfect the world has ever produced. The hair is renovated and strengthened, and natural color restored without the application of mineral substances.

Since the introduction of this truly valuable preparation into this country, it has been the wonder and admiration of all classes, as it has proved to be the only article that will absolutely without deception, restore gray hair to its original color, health, softness, lustre and beauty, and produce hair on bald heads of its original growth and color.

This beautiful and fragrantly perfumed article is complete within itself, no washing or preparation before or after its use, or accompaniment of any kind being required to obtain these desirable results.

HERE IS THE PROOF OF ITS

SUPERIOR EXCELLENCE.

Read this Home Certificate, testified to by Edward B. Garrigue, one of the most competent Druggists and Chemists of Philadelphia, a man whose veracity none can doubt.

I am happy to add my testimony to the great value of the "London Hair Color Restorer," which restored my hair to its original color, and the hue appears to be permanent. I am satisfied that this preparation is nothing like a dye, but operates upon the secretions. It is also a beautiful hair dressing and promotes the growth. I purchased the first bottle from Edward B. Garrigue, druggist, Tenth and Coates streets, who can also testify my hair was quite gray when I commenced its use.

MRS. MILLER,

No. 730 North Ninth St., Phila.

Dr. Swayne & Son—Respected friends: I have the pleasure to inform you that a lady of my acquaintance, Mrs. Miller, is delighted with the success of your "London Hair Color Restorer." Her hair was falling rapidly and quite gray. The color has been restored, the falling off entirely stopped, and a new growth of hair is the result.

E. B. GARRIGUES,

Druggist, cor. Tenth and Coates, Phila.

BOSTON TESTIMONY.

July 22d, 1871.—Dr. Swayne & Son: Last winter, while in Trenton, N. J., I procured six bottles of London Hair Color Restorer, which I like very much, in fact better than anything I have used in the last nine years. If you please, send me one dozen bottles C. O. D., care of W. S. Fogler & Son, druggists, No. 723 Tremont street, Boston.

Respectfully yours,

ADA BAKER, No. 59 Rutland Square.

"London Hair Color Restorer and Dressing" has completely restored my hair to its original color and youthful beauty, and caused a rapid and luxuriant growth.

MRS. ANNIE MORRIS, No. 616 North Seventh street, Phila.

Dr. Dalton of Philadelphia, says of it: The London Hair Color Restorer is used very extensively among my patients and friends, as well as by myself. I therefore speak from experience.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

THE QUICKSANDS OF EXISTENCE—EPILEPSY &c.

Among the many shoals and perils of life on which our frail barks would founder, were it not for the beacons that indicate and warn us of our danger, are epileptic fits, rush of blood to the head, apoplexy, etc., for which Holloway's Pills are the safest remedies in existence. These disorders arise from some one or more derangements of the system.—From whatever source, however, they may proceed, Holloway's Pills are the most salutary in effect, as they cool the blood, brace the relaxed nerves, give tone to the digestive organs and energy and vigor to the enfeebled constitution. [35-1] 187

* * * Sold at the Manufactory of Professor HOLLOWAY & Co., New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the civilized world, in boxes at 25 cents, 62 cents, and $1 each.

CAUTION!—None are genuine unless the signature of J. HADDOCK, as agent for the United States, surrounds each box of Pills and Ointment. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicine or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

LIFE'S MEASURE.

BY H. H. BROWNE.

"He liveth long who liveth well,"
So ran the legend terse and bold;
To keep this truth in mind were well,
For truth is better kept than gold.

The one will perish in an hour:
One never dies, but, bright and pure
As heaven itself, when earthly power
Has passed, forever shall endure.

Not by the years of life is told
The length of life, but by the zeal
And kindly works, as, growing old,
Men for each other do and feel.

His life is long whose work is well,
And, be his station low or high,
He who the most good works can tell
Lives longest, though he soonest die.

Then, as the swift-winged moments speed,
Freight them with wealth of truth and love,
With garnered sheaves of thought and deed
For the glad harvest-home above.

Within the raveling breast of Hate,
In desert ways where no flowers bloom,
In scenes where folly sits in state,
In wan-faced Sorrow's house of gloom,

Sow love and taste its fruitage sweet,
Sow smiles and see the desert spring,
Sow wisdom for its harvest meet,
Sow sunlight for the joy 'twill bring.

Cui Bono?

To Jacob Mishler.

BELOVED IN THE LORD:—Cui Bono? This is your conclusion of the discussion of the origin of the River Brethren. It is also mine. I was led to my first contribution by the fact that they originated only a few miles from here, and both movement and participators were well known to my grandfather, who was for many years bishop of this church, and died in 1851, at the ripe age of 97. Daniel Engle, the present octogenarian bishop of the River Brethren, is the son of the originator.

Your "Anachronism" is not reconciled in your "Anacoenosis." Neither does it matter, nor is it possible. And even if it were, cui bono? The same may be said of the exodus of the Mennonites, and our historic relation to the Waldenses. The organic unity of the Mystical Body lies deeper. We are in the true Apostolic succession by being in the Holy Ghost, no matter how many and great the historical gaps between us and the fishermen of Galilee. We are related to Christ the Prophet and Priest, on the same principle that relates us to Christ the King. We have to do with Christ on the Throne through present instrumentalities, whatever be our outwardly-historical connection with the Carpenter, the Preacher, the Victim of Nazareth. Our pedigree is from above, and sums up all the past in "the fulfillment of all righteousness." No matter whether it be a genesis or an exodus, or whether in the ninth or nineteenth century; if it be the inception of the Holy Spirit, coming at all points into the mold of God manifest in the flesh, it is the Church of God. So it was with the origin of the Brethren. Whether it was so with others must be determined by their conformity to the expression of holiness God has given in His Only Begotten Son. There is no schism in the body of Christ. God does not beget by halves. When He travels, it is as a God; and if we would enter more into the birth-pangs of Jehovah-Jesus, Satan would speedily come to an inglorious Waterloo.

With a suffering body, and a sorrowful spirit, and ardent prayer for a fresh inspiration of the Church with Pentecostal Fire,

I am your unworthy brother,
C. H. BALSBAUGH.

Sometimes when God comes to persons by the convicting influence of his Spirit, they virtually say, in their hearts, "Go away; when I want you, I will call for you." Did it never strike you, sinner, that such conduct is despicable in the extreme, and not only mean but extremely dangerous? Suppose a person of the highest earthly dignity, the Emperor of Germany for instance, was to come to you and request an interview, telling you that it should be for your advantage, and you should say, "I cannot see you now; when it is convenient, I will let you know," do you suppose he would come when you called? Jesus does come, again and again, after just such treatment. How wonderful his love! God is very merciful; but is it prudent to presume upon his mercy?

—Would it not be appropriate at our harvest or thanksgiving meetings to bring a thank offering? We are to show our faith by our works. That would be one way of doing it, and it would also show our gratitude. If we are grateful for a bountiful harvest, ought we not show it otherwise than by simple thanks? After the Israelites had gathered their harvest they gave a portion to the priests and Levites—not the leavings but the very best they had. They carried it up to Jerusalem themselves. Why could not we when we go to "harvest meeting" take a portion of our substance along for the support of our home and foreign missions, or for the poor? "Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of all thine increase: so shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine."

—We have noticed that our ministers, in speaking and writing of one another, never use the term "reverend," and we think right; but we have wondered why they apply the title to ministers of other denominations. Is it right to call any man reverend? The word is found but once in the Scriptures, and then it is applied to God. If it is wrong to be called master, is it not wrong to be called reverend?

—If faith as a grain of mustard-seed is sufficient to remove mountains, how much have we who cannot remove a mole-hill by word of mouth? Have we any? Little or none of that kind. Faith is the gift of God, and it was his will that his servants should now work miracles. He would give them the requisite faith to do so. But have we saving faith—faith in the efficacy of the blood of Christ to cleanse us from all sin—faith to believe that his righteousness is sufficient to cover all our "filthy rags"? "Lord increase our faith."

—I have felt mortified that the printer, several times, neglected to place quotation marks to some verses I sent with my seeds. But perhaps it was my fault. To other persons belongs the credit of composing all verses that are found in my seed-basket. There is no poetry in me.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN
Christian Steadfastness.

BY S. T. BOSSERMAN.

'But none of these things move me.'
Acts 20: 24.

The child of God, while in this life, has a great many things to contend with; and unless he has his mind stayed upon God, he will become disqualified for the duties that are devolving upon him. The apostle who is our authority for the above text, was an earnest worker in and out of the Christian church. Prior to his conversion, it was his delight to persecute the child of God, and he pursued his wicked designs with a great degree of earnestness, and endeavored, if possible, to annihilate the Christian religion. So ardently did he engage in the work of destroying the Christian element, that it seemed that nothing would deter him from the course which his mind directed Providence interposing, he became a Christian; and now the same earnestness which characterized him in his sinful career manifests itself in the pursuit of his Christian journey. He was wont to blaspheme this worthy name and to do despite to the Spirit of grace, now he illuminates the Christian life by breaking forth so exultantly, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ!" He now says, "Blessed be the Christian religion," and considers it a holy thing. No more Christians need fear him; no hiding from him any more; but he is ready to embrace them, and suffer with them, and die with them in the hope of a blessed immortality.

While he was defending the cause of Christ he had to suffer persecution, and he expected in every city wherein he preached that "bonds and afflictions" awaited him. "The Holy Ghost witnesseth," that is, he had revelation, either direct or indirect, that those afflictions awaited him; that he should be in bonds and trials; yet not withstanding all this, he was ready to say, "But none of these things move me." Doubtless he should do all the will of Christ whether he should suffer or no. Wherever he defended Christ he met with opposition, was subjected to severe trials, was persecuted, stoned and scourged; yet amidst all this suffering he exclaims, "Neither count I my life dear unto myself." His mind was stayed on Christ, and he had built upon the rock; hence he could not be moved; nothing could alarm him or deter him in his course, that he could finish his course with joy and receive the crown of righteousness that was laid up for him and all that love the Lord.

The Christian, then, has this great aim in view, that though he must suffer with Christ, he will build upon the rock, that when the storms of persecutions do come, he can say, "In the Lord do I trust," and "none of these things move me."

Kind reader, are you in Christ? have you built upon that rock that will enable you to stand amid all the storms incidental to the Christian life? Can you say, "The Lord is my preserver, in him do I trust?" Do you count your life dear to you? Duty to God should be held more sacred and important than life; and if God requires anything at our hands, let us perform it, though we suffer; for "the word of his grace is able to build us up, and to give us an inheritance among all them which are sanctified." Let us, my kind readers, so live that we can, with the apostle, "finish our course with joy." Oh, what a pleasure it will be to us to close life with joy! Having built upon the rock, lived a life of purity, of holiness before God, we are ready to close our eyes in death, and that with joy inexpressible, "having done all to stand." "None of these things move me," I have fought the good fight of faith, and am now ready to receive the crown that awaits all the children of God."

In order to avail ourselves of this steadfastness in God, we must observe all the requirements of the gospel. Then can we finish our course with joy—nothing to mar our feelings or disturb us when we die; but if we fail to finish our life with joy, we will have many things to regret on the bed of death. Oh, let not our last hours be made bitter by the reflection that our lives have been wasted; but sweet with the remembrance that we have performed all the commands of God, and, with Paul, encountered all the trials that we have met with cheerful confidence in God. Then can we expect the crown; then, a happy home beyond this vale of tears.

Trinity not a Contradiction.

The definition of the Trinity is: The Father, Son and Holy Ghost are one God; each has a peculiarity incommunicable to the other; neither is God without the others; and each with the others is God. Here is a mystery, but not a contradiction. In God there are not three wills, not three consciences, nor three sets of affections. To show that there is no contradiction here, let us take another mystery where it is granted that there is no contradiction. Sunlight, rainbow (seven colors), and heat are one solar radiance; each has a peculiarity incommunicable to the others; neither is solar radiance without the others; and each with the others is solar radiance. Sunlight, rainbow and heat are one solar radiance; Father, Son and Holy Ghost are one God.

1. As the rainbow shows what light is when unfolded, so Christ reveals the nature of God.

2. As all of the rainbow is sunlight, so all of Christ's soul is God.

3. As the rainbow was when the sunlight was, or from eternity, so Christ was when the Father was, or from eternity.

4. As the bow may be on the earth and the sun in the sky, and yet the solar radiance undivided, so God may remain in heaven and appear on earth as Christ, and his oneness not be divided.

5. As the perishable raindrop is seen in the revelation of the rainbow, so was Christ's body in the revelation to man of God in Christ.

6. As at the same instant the sunlight is itself, and also the rainbow and heat, so at the same moment Christ is both himself and the Father, and both the Father and the Holy Spirit.

7. As solar heat has a property incommunicable to solar color, and solar color a property incommunicable to solar light, and solar light a property incommunicable to either solar color or solar heat, so each of the three, Father, Son and Holy Ghost, has a property incommunicable to either of the others.

8. But as solar light, heat and color are one solar radiance, so the Father, Son and Holy Ghost are one God.

9. As neither solar light, heat nor color is solar radiance without the aid of the others, so neither Father, Son nor Holy Ghost is God without the others.

10. As solar light, heat and color are each solar radiance; so Father, Son and Holy Ghost are each God.

11. As the solar rainbow fades from sight and its light continues to exist, so Christ ceases to manifest and yet is present.

12. As the rainbow issues from the sunlight and returns to the bosom of the radiance, so Christ came from the Father, appeared for a while, then returned, and yet is not absent from the earth.

13. As the influence of the heat is that of the light of the sun, so are the operations of the Holy Spirit the continued life of Christ.

14. As is the relation of all vegeable growth to solar light and heat, or is the relation of all religions to growth to the Holy Spirit and a potent Christ.

A Candle in the Powder.

A merchant was celebrating the marriage of his daughter. While they were enjoying themselves above, he chanced to go to the basement hall below, where he met a servant carrying a lighted candle without a candlestick. She passed on to the cellar for wood, and returned quickly without the candle. The merchant suddenly remembered that during the day several barrels of gunpowder had been placed in the cellar, one of which had been opened. Inquiring what she had done with the candle, to his awful amazement her reply was that, being unable to carry it with the fuel, she had set it in a barrel of "black sand" in the cellar.

He flew to the spot. A long red snuff was just ready to fall from the wick into the mass of powder, when, with great presence of mind, placing a hand on each side of the candle, and making his hands meet the top, over the wick, he safely removed it from the barrel. At first he smiled at his previous fear, but the reaction was so great that it was weeks ere he recovered from the shock which his nerves sustained in the terrible trial.

There are candles in a barrel of gunpowder to day. Many homes have been blown to ruins by them. There is a candle in the cellar of a wine-bibber. It burns brighter with the added fuel of every cup he drains, and, ere he is aware, all his hopes for this world and the next will be blown up with a ruin more terrible than any destruction that gunpowder may bring.

There is a candle in the cellar of the liquor-dealer, burning slowly but surely. He who is dealing death to others will be startled by a sudden blasting of his own peace, when the wrath of God, restrained no longer, shall fall upon him in a moment. "Every way of man is right in his own eyes, but the Lord pondereth the heart." He that by usury and unjust gains increaseth his substance, shall gather it for him that will pity the poor." The man that is willfully destroying himself may be deluded, and see no danger; the man who is destroying others may say, "I do not see it;" but the eyes which ponder both their ways see not only the evil, but the sudden "destruction" which is before them if they do not speedily repent and reform. See to it that no righteous anger burn against you. See to it that no burning candle is endangering you in your cellar.—Selected.

Self-Reliance.

No alliance with others can diminish the necessity for personal endeavor. Friends may counsel, but the ultimate decision in every case is individual. As each tree, though growing in the same soil, watered by the same rains and warmed by the same sun as others, obeys its own laws of growth, preserves its own physical structure, and produces its own peculiar fruit, so each person, though in the closest communication and intercourse with others, and surrounded by similar influences, must do his own duties, contest his own struggles, resist his own temptations, and suffer his own penalties. There is too much dependence placed upon all kinds of co-operation for security from evil, and too little reliance upon personal watchfulness and exertion. Too many friends are sometimes worse than none at all. There are some who seem to feel in a great measure released from obligations if they do not receive such aid, and some will plead the shortcomings of others as an excuse for their own.

We would by no means disparage the effect of influence, or discourage in the slightest the generous assistance which we all owe to one another, or undervalue the important effect of a worthy example. There are vital elements of growth, and their results can never be fully estimated. But they should not usurp the place of a proper self-reliance, or diminish the exercise of individual powers. Moral force must be a personal possession. It can never be transferred. Material benefits may be conferred by a single gift, but mental and moral activities can only be sustained by their own exercise. Thoughts may be exchanged, but not through power; moral help and encouragement may be given, but virtue cannot be transferred; responsibility cannot be shifted.

The most permanent good we can do to others is to nourish this individual strength. To aid the physically destitute most effectively, food, fuel, and clothing, are not nearly so valuable as steady, remunerative employment. To educate a child it is not half so important to instill large amounts of information, as to set his mind at work, to bring on his mental powers, to stimulate his thoughts, and quicken his faculties. And in moral life, especially in cities, where masses are crowded together, and men incline to lean upon each other, the best lesson to enforce is that virtue, to exist at all, must be strictly individual.

That which cannot stand alone, but depends upon props and supports, which needs the constant spur of fear and the bribe of reward to insure its activity, is but the semblance of virtue, and will crumble before temptation.

A well-developed body ever excites admiration. But a well-developed and self-reliant spirit is a nobler thing. It is calm, modest, and unassuming, yet firm in conscious integrity of purpose, and steadiness of aim. Inflated by no vanity, it is at once humble, yet courageous; helpful to the tempted, yet resolute in assailing evil.

And the truest self-reliance is found in those who have learned to renounce self and rely upon the everlasting God. Trusting in him, they fear not the wrath or rage of man. Anchored to the Eternal Rock, no storms can start them from their moorings, no waves nor tides can bear them from their place of rest.

The world wonders at their course. Calm, firm, steady as the stars above, and steadfast as the rock beneath, worldlings have yet to learn that those who have made the Most High their refuge, need and want no other trust.—Methodist Free Press.

Does not your heart leap at the thought of meeting the Lord? Mine does. We shall see those dearer to us than life on earth, but, best of all, we shall see the Lord. Our thoughts shall not be centered on one another, but they shall cluster around him who died and rose again. And so we shall be ten thousand times more divinely knit together, because all our love, all our heart's affections, are twined around the blessed one, the God-man, who hath redeemed us from our sins by his own blood.

We need in these days of publicity and vanity to be especially on our guard against self-advertisement. There is no place for it in the kingdom of God. Perfection, if it is obtained, tells its own story and has no need of placarding. Sensational methods, in the pulpit and in the church, are out of place. There are ministers, and there are churches, that believe in self-glorification; that seek for the throne and the scepter. But in reality, religious self-advertisement is the last refuge of a feeble cause.—Dr. Bridgeman.

Mr. Moody, in his last sermon in the Hippodrome, said: "Christians should live in the world, but not be filled with it. A ship lives in the water, but, if the water gets into the ship, she goes to the bottom. So Christians may live in the world; but, if the world gets into them, they sink."

"ENOUGH"

I am so weak, dear Lord! I cannot stand
 One moment without thee;
 But oh, the tenderness of thine enfolding!
 And oh! the faithfulness of thine upholding!
 And oh! the strength of thy right hand!
 That strength is enough for me.

I am so needy, Lord! and yet I know
 All fullness dwells in thee;
 And hour by hour that never-failing treasure,
 Supplies and fills in overflowing measure,
 My least, my greatest need. And so
 Thy grace is enough for me.

It is so sweet to trust thy word alone.
 I do not ask to see
 The unavailing of thy purpose or the shining
 Of future light on mysteries untwining;
 Thy promise-roll is all my own—
 Thy word is enough for me.

The human heart asks love. But now I know
 That my heart hath from thee
 All real, and full, and marvelous affection;
 So near, so human! Yet Divine perfection
 Thrills gloriously the mighty glow;
 Thy love is enough for me.

There were strange soul-depths, restless, vast and broad,
 Unfathomed as the sea,
 An infinite craving for some infinite filling;
 But now thy perfect love is perfect stilling;
 Lord Jesus Christ, my Lord, my God,
 Thou, THOU art enough for me!

The Last Strand of the Rope.

Dear Brother James:

In looking over some of my waste papers, I found one titled "The Last Strand of the Rope," and thinking that it might be of some benefit to your many readers, I send you a copy of it "In the year 1846, on St. Kilda, one of the Islands of Western Scotland, there lived a poor widow and her son. She trained him in the fear of the Lord, and well did he repay her care. He was her stay and support, though only sixteen years of age. They were very poor, and to help their scanty meals Ronald, her son, used to collect sea birds' eggs upon the neighboring cliffs. This feat was accompanied with considerable danger, for the birds used often to attack him.

"One day, having received his mother's blessing, Ronald set off to the cliffs, having supplied himself with a strong rope by which to get down, and a knife to strike the birds, should he be attacked. How magnificent was that scene! The cliff rose several hundred feet above the sea, whose wild waves lashed madly against it, dashing the glittering spray far and near. Ronald fastened one end of the rope firmly upon the top of the cliff and the other round his waist, and wad then lowered until he got opposite one of the fissures in which the birds build, when he gave the signal to his companions not to let him down any farther. He planted his foot on a slight projection of the rock, grasped with one hand his knife, and with the other tried to get the eggs. Just then a bird flew at him and attacked him. He made a blow with the knife; but, oh! horrible to narrate, in place of striking the bird he struck the rope, and, having severed some of the strands, he hung suspended over that wild abyss of raging waves by only a few threads of hemp. He uttered a piercing exclamation, which was heard by his companions above, who saw his danger, and gently tried to draw him up. A awful moment! As they draw in each coil Ronald felt thread after thread giving way.

"O Lord! save me," was his first agonizing cry, and then 'O Lord! comfort my dear mother.' He closed his eyes on the awful scene as he felt the rope gradually breaking. He hears the top; but, oh! the rope is breaking. Another and another pull; then a snap, and now he sees but one strand supporting him. He hears the top; his friends reach over to grasp him; he is not yet within their reach. One more haul of the rope. It strains; it unravels under his weight. He looks below at the dark fathomless, boiling water, and then above to the glorious heavens. He feels he is going. He hears the wild cry of his companions, the frantic shriek of his fond mother, as they hold her back from rushing to try to rescue her child from destruction. He knows no more; reason yields; he becomes insensible; but just as the rope is giving way, a friend stretches forward, at the risk of being dragged over the cliff. A strong hand grasps him and Ronald is saved."

Dear reader, if you are unsaved, I want you, in this true and simple narrative, to see your own condition. If living for this world, you are frittering away your precious moments in pursuing perishing trifles. By the cord of life you are suspended over the awful abyss of eternal perdition. By a slender thread you are hanging over the dark, raging billows of damnation, and may, at any moment, be engulfed forever. As year after year passes away, the rope of life becomes smaller and smaller. Strand after strand snaps as the knell of each departing year tolls its mournful notes. How many threads are now left, can you tell? Perhaps by some slender thread you are now suspended, and ere this year expires, that thread may snap and send you unprepared, unsaved, into the burning waves of eternal hell.

Dear sinner, do you realize your awful position? It cannot be worse. How vividly Ronald realized his position in that fearful moment when the last strand was giving way, thread by thread. When overcome by the sense of his danger, and when that danger was most imminent, a strong hand was stretched out to save him, which brought him safely beyond the reach of further danger, and placed him in the loving arms of his parent. May the Lord reveal to you, dear, unsaved one, your danger, that you may flee at once to the Savior of sinners. His hand is outstretched to "plunge you as a brand out of the fire," to save you from hell, and place you forever beyond the reach of danger, safe in the arms of a loving and almighty Father.

Dear sinner, you are lost by sin—lost to holiness, to God, to heaven—but Jesus came to seek and save the lost. Ere it be too late, will you trust yourself to Jesus? On the cross he "was made sin." He perfectly met and satisfied all the righteous claims of God against sin, so that you are as welcome to come to Christ as if you had never committed a sin. Every barrier is removed on God's part,—every obstacle put away, so that the moment you take God at his word, and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ as the one who loved you and gave himself for you—a lost sinner—you are saved. God says it: "All that believe are justified from all things." Acts 13:39. Believe, and thou shalt be saved from everlasting destruction—saved to be holy and happy—saved for heaven, for glory, for God. Now may the Lord add his blessing, and help you, dear sinner, to choose the good part, with a Mary of old, that shall never be taken away from you; and may we eventually meet in heaven, is the prayer of a weak brother in Christ.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
 The Resurrection.

BY GEORGE W. ANNON.

The doctrine of the resurrection is taught by divine revelation; not only in the New Testament Scriptures, but we find many places where the resurrection is spoken of by the prophets. The Christian's only hope is in the resurrection. Christ was crucified and buried, and arose again, and, the apostle Paul says, was "the first that should rise from the dead." Hence Christ has become "the first fruits of them that slept."

But we find, by reading the Sacred Scriptures, that there are yet two resurrections in the future. Paul says: "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that their sorrow not even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first." 1 Thess. 4: 13-16 Here we see that the saints are to be raised first. It therefore behooves every Christian to strive to enter in at the strait gate, that they may have part in the first resurrection, for on such a second death hath no power.

"And I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years, and cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more till the thousand years should be filled; and after that he must be loosed a little season." Rev. 20: 1-3. At this time Christ's peaceable reign begins on earth, or the Millennium will be ushered in, when there will be no one to tempt or seduce the people; for Satan is bound and a seal set upon him. Now is come that pass that which the prophet Isaiah says, "The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock; and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord." Isa. 65: 25. This will be a glorious time in which we live upon earth; for there will be no curse upon it, but Jerusalem to be safely inhabited. "There shall be no more thence an infant of days;" "for as the days of a tree are the days of my people." At this time the people will increase very fast, and the number is to become as the sand of the sea. We think that there will be but few deaths during the Millennium dispensation, Christ's peaceable reign on earth.

But this dispensation is between the first and second resurrections, on the fact that at the first resurrection the Devil is chained for a thousand years, and after that time he is to be loosed a little season, to "go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle; the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city; and fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them. And the Devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night forever and ever." And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them. And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened; and another book, was opened which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of the things which were written in the books, according to their works." This, now, is the last resurrection and judgment. "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire." The wicked were judged out of the books; but the saints, whose name was written in the book of life, were not judged.

"But," says one, "Will this body be resurrected?" I answer, if this body is not resurrected, where is the victory over the grave? "But Paul says, 'Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God.'" Very well, this body whilst mouldering back to its mother dust will be refined, and come forth in the morning of the resurrection fashioned like Christ's glorious body; "for this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" 1 Cor. 15: 53-55.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Now.

SELECTED BY SAMUEL STROM.

Moments neglected can never be reclaimed. The golden opportunity departs never to return. The die is cast, and though years of regret may succeed each other in their slow and tedious course, yet, in all their changeable scenes, they never bring back again the squandered privilege, the committed sin, or the misimproved opportunity. This is true in the affairs of time, and doubly true in the concerns of eternity.

To-day we stand where we can grasp all purchased and promised blessings: we stand upon a pedestal, and they are within our reach. Anon we step off, we are crowded away, and we never can regain our footing. That pedestal is Now. Now we may seek God; Now we may pray; Now we may find peace in believing; Now we may give all diligence to make our calling and election sure; Now we may flee for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before us. All these privileges are within our grasp; but they all depend upon this point—upon Now. "Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation." The day of decision and determination is upon us; the individual need not wait for the final adjudication to decide his destiny.

Eternity, with all its joyous light or with all its blackness, depends upon Now. Now we may lay hold on eternal life. Toward this point the past all converges; from this point the future all expands. Now is the seedtime of eternity to come; Now the time of penitence for sins that are past; Now we may recall the past so much that its faults and errors may be forgiven, and its iniquities be remembered no more. But when we pass this point the future is all uncertain.

We stand Now in the speeding current of events; our foot rests upon a rock; if we misuse that footing, we may be swept down the gulf-stream of despair. Now we may cast our anchor within the veil; to-morrow we may be drifting round the melstrom of ruin or wrecked upon the lee-shore of eternity.

Man of God, remember the importance of this hour. Your fair purposes and cherished plans of future labor may all be blighted; your opportunities may slide like quicksands beneath your feet. Now is yours; Now you can pray; Now you can labor; Now you can seek the lost; Now you can rescue the perishing; Now you can feed the hungry; Now you can clothe the naked; Now you can minister to the distressed; Now you can comfort the outcast; Now you can visit the fatherless and the widow in their affliction; Now you can prepare yourself to hear that voice, "I was hungry, and ye fed me; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink. All the joys of the present, and all the glories of the future, depend upon Now. Now is the golden grain from which all the garnered harvests of eternity are to spring. Now is the tiny seed from which all the gorgeous flowers of Paradise shall bloom. Treasure up this hour; grasp its fleeting moments, stamp them with the holy impress of obedience and of love. Oh! work now for Christ who died to redeem you and save you.

Man of the world, you know something of the importance of Now. You attend to it in seedtime and in harvest. You regard it in business and in pleasure. You watch your opportunities and take care of the affairs of time. You improve the present hour. You take care of opportunities afforded by this hour. I bring to your mind issues of greater importance than any earthly affairs—issues that reach in their vast results throughout the mighty roll of endless ages—issues that outweigh the world in ponderous importance. Will you give attention to these things? Will you be wise for time and a fool for eternity? Will you be prudent for this world and reckless for the next? Will you be wealthy here and homeless there? Will you vainly seek to gain the whole world, and lose yourself and become cast away? Now is your time to secure eternal treasures, to lay hold on everlasting joys. Yesterday has gone; to-morrow is beyond our reach. How often we may say like him who had passed a day without a good act, "I have lost a day." How many days have you lost? Oh, what a host! Will you lose this day? Begin your great work in earnest. Begin now. Pray to God through Christ for pardon and for help. Go, then, to the work of God; do good to men; save the perishing; lift up the downcast; bless mankind; brighten the world, and prepare for a better one to come. Will you do this? will you do it NOW? Time glides away. Yesterday is buried, to-morrow is unborn. Now is the only moment in all the eternal ages which is our own. Now is the gem more precious than all the treasures of the orient. Will you cast it away?

"Now, now is the accepted time;
To Christ for mercy fly.
Oh! turn, repent, and trust in him,
And you shall never die."

A few more days and we must go
To realms of joy or wretched woe.

Another Dip.

Poor Dick, a slave, had long prayed for his ungodly master, who had sold his wife away. He did want to see her again, but he could see no hope for it unless God laid his hand upon the master, and shook the devil out of him, and made him a "new creature" in Christ; then he would see different and act different. Of course Dick's heart was made glad to hear that in a revival meeting that was being held in the vicinity, his master was converted. He sought his master early and found from his own lips the report was true.

"An' now; master," he exclaimed, "Dick is a free boy, 'aint he? an' can go and see his wife?"

"No, no!—Dick," he replied, "you must be a good boy, and stay on the plantation same as ever."

"Ah! master," Dick cried out, "you want another dip."

Next evening the master was at the revival meeting, taking part and rejoicing among the converts. Dick upon hearing of this went to him, asking if Dick was a free boy now? The man replied as before, to which Dick again cried,

"Ah! master, you want another dip!"

As the people were wending their way home after the next meeting, a familiar voice was heard by Dick, shouting "Glory!" He recognized it as the voice of his master. Quickly over the field he ran, and as he came to the road, his master caught sight of him, and exclaimed, as he took his hand,

"Yes, brother Dick, you can go and see your wife when you want to,—you're a free boy now."

"Glory be to God!" cried the sable saint. "Master, you did get that other dip, didn't you?"

People may call it sanctification, or by whatever name they choose, but what the church of God needs is "another dip."—Sel.

Special Election and Predestination.

BY E. L. YODER.

Although the Brethren, as a church, do not advocate the above doctrine, yet we have reason to believe that there are many who are firmly wedded to it. For instance, we have some brethren who seem to think when a minister, being poor, is compelled to devote his whole time in laboring to support his family during the week, preaches a rambling, spiritless sermon on Sunday, that the Lord is to blame entirely for the sermon and its want of practical results.

The same class of brethren, when they have pointed out to them the vast number of people in the world who are as yet destitute of "pure and undefiled religion," and the necessity of making greater and more systematic effort to have them bear the unadulterated word, only draw their purse strings tighter, and remark that "God alone can bring about the conversion of souls; and if God wills it, it will be done, and if he does not will it, it will not be done."

When they have pointed out to them, the necessity of establishing Sunday-schools, as a means of teaching our children a love and knowledge of God and of the Scriptures, they answer you in a manner that betrays them as entertaining the horrid doctrine that we may safely neglect the spiritual welfare of our children, and leave it to the Lord to convert them after they have become hardened sinners.

When the necessity of a Brethren's school is pointed out to them—what is lost by not having it, and what would be gained by having it,—they will meet you with the same old argument—"If God wants those that are led away through the influence of sectarian schools, he can bring them back again; and if he wants educated men among the Brethren he can convert them from other denominations, and bring them into the Brethren fold." Special election must do everything and we have nothing to do.

They seem to think that they have been elected to glory, and that there is nothing required on their part to advocate and promote the cause of Christ any further.

Strangely inconsistent with their faith and practice in spiritual matters, is their faith and practice in temporal matters. They do not neglect to plow, and sow, and plant, and cultivate, and, folding their hands in idleness blame it all on the Lord when they fail to reap. Oh, no! but they do that part which the Lord has given them to do; and after having done all, they still look unto him for the needed blessing. They also manifest a commendable wisdom in availing themselves of the latest improved machines for preparing their soil and harvesting and threshing their crops, and do not insist on clinging to the old wooden mould-board plow; the sickle, and the flail, and trust to providence to enable them to compete with their neighbors. In short, they are as "wise as serpents" in worldly matters, but in spiritual affairs they are not so wise: they want the Lord to do all, and they do nothing. In the important matter of the salvation of souls they close their eyes, tighten their purse-strings, and, sitting down on the stool of do-nothing, content themselves with misapplying the promises of God in that they depend upon his working without means. In short, they carry the doctrine of Calvin to an extreme that would make even its author blush, and still would hardly be willing to admit that they believed in special election or predestination at all.

Benevolence.

—BY CHARLOTTE T. BOND.

"Freely ye have received, freely give." Matth. 10: 8.

Benevolence is a trait of character that should adorn every Christian. No person can be a true follower of Jesus without it; and the more freely we bestow upon others, the more liberally will be given us. How can we expect the blessings of God to be showered upon us, if we, through sordid avarice, hold on to all we get, never heeding the many calls for aid among our brethren? We should not wait to be called upon for alms. If we have enough and to spare, we should look about us to see where we can distribute our surplus to the most advantage. There is a great work for all to do; and those that have plenty of this world's goods should remember that where much is given, much will be required, and bear in mind the word, "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!" Had we not better live poor all of the days of our lives than run the risk? The young man who drew these words from the Savior, it seems, had complied with all of the requirements of the law; yet he lacked one thing, and that one thing sent him away sorrowing. How many have lived and bartered away their souls for riches! Oh! let us try to escape this dreadful pitfall; and by bestowing upon the poor and needy, and by aiding in spreading the gospel, relieve ourselves of this dangerous position. Satan tries to ease the conscience of some by whispering, "Lay up something for old age." But what did the blessed Savior say? "Sell that thou hast and follow me." And we are told again that if we seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness the rest shall be added unto us. We should do the duty before us, taking no thought for the morrow; for the great and wise Being who sent the blessings of to-day is just as able to send the same to-morrow. How often we toil to accomplish some coveted end, and something happens that destroys all of our hopes. May this not have been done by our kind and heavenly Parent to teach us to trust him and depend upon his mercies rather than our own exertions?

It is very true we are to work and make ourselves useful. That we are commanded to do, but not to hoard it up, lest we find ourselves in the case of the man that rebuilt his barns and thought within himself, "Rest, my soul, thou hast that laid up for many years," not knowing that his soul would be required of him that very night.

You who have plenty and to spare cannot imagine the struggles some poor men (and we have no doubt, plenty of the brethren) have to live and keep up a large family. They want to live honestly and keep out of debt; for if they were to get behind with their affairs, the cause would suffer, for they would at once be accused of being dishonest. God has bestowed upon us a bountiful supply of this world's goods for his creatures, if we could get the right kind of division; and those that have more than they need, and are holding it back from the needy, will certainly have a heavy account to give of their stewardship.

We are to give freely, not grudgingly, for God loveth a cheerful giver. There should also be some judgment exercised in our donations, as there are many imposters in the world; though some make this an excuse for not giving at all. We should seek the real objects of charity and bestow liberally and cheerfully.

We profess to be the followers of Jesus and his apostles; and to prove what we profess, we should imitate their examples. We are told that they labored so as not to be chargeable to the brethren; but in no place are we told of their laying up for old age or any other purpose; but we are told not to lay up treasures on earth, where moth and rust corrupt.

And again it is said, where our treasure is there will our heart be; and the Lord requires the whole heart; therefore we see there is no dividing hearts. God requires the whole heart; and if we are true and pure in our profession, we have no heart to place upon earthly treasures, and should not have them.

Again, gifts should not be given publicly to be seen of men, otherwise we will have no reward. We are not to sound the trumpet as the hypocrites do. We are not to let the left hand know what the right hand does. The object must be simply to benefit those that we are bestowing our favors upon, in obedience to God's commands. If our charities are bestowed in this way, we have a perfect right to expect to be rewarded for it; for we have God's promise; otherwise none will be given. Farther, no matter what good deed we do, if it is not performed according to God's word, we have no right to expect that he will bless us in the deed. It seems that giving is one of the most essential of the Christian virtues, as we are told that in the judgment of the last day, those on the left were banished from the presence of God because they had failed to feed the hungry and clothe the naked; while, on the other hand, those that had faithfully performed these good deeds, were invited to enter into the joys of their Lord, and receive the blessings prepared for them from the foundation of the world.

Brethren and sisters, let us look to these things. As we have received freely, let us give freely; give wherever it is needed. Let us be like the apostle, if we have not silver and gold to give, let us give such as we have. We can give friendly aid and kind and loving words of encouragement; for what would it profit us to gain the whole world and lose our souls?

Great Crossings, Ky.

Influence of Christian Life,

The Christian is the world's Bible, and the only one which it reads. If we take care that in this book are shown the loving spirit, the grandeur, and the winning friendliness of Christ, then shall we see many hearts open to receive this actual testimony of Christian life and suffering; for many of our opponents envy us in secret our Christian comfort in disappointment, and under heavy losses. Their hearts are often stirred by a deep yearning after the support which bears us up; and this superiority of Christian life can often drive the hardest heart to seek the help of our Lord. In fine, only life can beget life. . . . Before such argument ancient Rome herself, the mightiest empire in the world, and the most hostile to Christianity, could not stand. Let us live in like manner, and then, though hell should have a short-lived triumph, eventually must be fulfilled what St. Augustine says: "Love is the fulfilling of the law!" —Christlieb Revelation sheds light upon the mystery of human life by her great doctrine of probation. That doctrine is a fundamental principle of the religion of Christ. It teaches that this life is man's time of discipline and trial. One great purpose of our living here is to develop our trust in the wisdom and goodness of our great Father, and test our devotion to him in the midst of difficulty, temptation and trial.

For The Young.

A Message on Temperance.

TO THE SUNDAY-SCHOOLS OF AMERICA.
BY JOHN B. GOUGH.

MY DEAR YOUNG FRIENDS; I have been requested to send a message to the Sabbath-schools in behalf of the total abstinence cause. I wish I could write to you all that is in my heart on this great question, but my time and ability are limited and my message must be short.

We are sometimes told that total abstinence is not temperance. What is temperance? Let me give you a short reply. Temperance is the lawful gratification of a natural appetite. Is the appetite for intoxicating liquors a natural appetite? No. Therefore temperance is total abstinence from intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

This principle is a sensible principle. When you are as old as I am, you will regret many things you have learned in the past; but you will never regret that you did not learn to use intoxicating liquor. I have never met a person, nor do I believe that you can find the person in the world, who would say, "I am fifty years of age, and I never drank a glass of liquor in my life, and I regret that I did not learn to drink it when I was young." No. When you meet one who has never drank, he tells you, "I am glad of it," or, "I am proud of it." A man once called on me, and said, "Mr. Gough, I want to tell you something. I am not a reformer. I care little for reforms, or missions, or Sunday-schools. They are all very well in their way, but they are not in my line. I have been an actor since I was eighteen, and now I am forty-three, and I never drank a glass of ale, wine, or spirits in my life. What do you think of that? I am proud of it." He had little care for reform, but he never drank liquor in his life, and was proud of it.

Dear children, you would be shocked if you could read some of the letters that lie in my desk, that have been written to me by persons of all grades in society—young men, old men, lawyers, physicians, ministers of the gospel, teachers, mechanics, clerks, and some ladies—who have acquired the appetite for strong drink. One says, "Dives in hell never longed for a drop of water, as with all the power there is in me I long for drink." Another says, "Is there any hope for me this side of the grave?" Another says "God knows how near I have been to self-destruction through drink," and so on.

One poor man, actually holding my feet, cried out "O Mr. Gough! help me out of this hell. Drink is my curse." Yes, dear children, the cry comes from the inmates of lunatic asylums, "Drink is my curse;" from the state prisons, "Drink is my curse;" from innocent victims—wives, mothers, children, "Drink is my curse;" from the burning lips of the dying drunkard comes the despairing cry, "Drink is my curse." There are broken hearts, blighted hopes, blackened characters, crushed intellects and lost souls as the results of strong drink, and not a single individual but rejoices in his escape from it.

Is not the total abstinence principle sensible? "But all who drink do not become drunkards." I know that; but if fifty young men begin to drink, some will assuredly be ruined by it. Then, there is a risk. Now we all desire safety and security. Suppose you desired to travel from New York to Chicago, and there were two lines of road—one on which there were accidents constantly occurring; on every train some disaster, passengers killed and wounded; in short a very risky road;—and on the other, never since its opening had there been the slightest accident. Which road would you take? If you are sensible, and regard your own welfare, you would take the safe one. Suppose some one should tempt you to take the risky road, by telling you how much more beautiful the cars were, and what a jolly company you would find on board the train. You would say, "I care not so much for gaudy cars and jolly company as for my safety. I want to be safe." Now, it is your safety we seek, when we urge you to abstain entirely from strong drink. There is no certainty that you will become victims if you begin to indulge, but there is a risk.

Some say, "I can govern myself, I have a mind of my own." What would you think of a captain of a steam vessel who would put on a full head of steam, and then knock down the man at the wheel? Or, of the conductor on a railroad, who would let on the steam and then disable the engineer? You would say he was a reckless man. The steamer or the engine might get through without accident, but it might go crashing to destruction. So when a person, using that which weakens the power of his will, depends on his weakened will to serve him,—using that which warps his judgment, and then depends on his warped judgment to guide him,—using that which affects his self-control, and then trusts his deranged self-control to keep him from danger—he is reckless. Simply because some men drink and do not become drunkards, can you? I once saw a man stand on a small platform outside the spire of a church, and look down on the pavement 150 feet below. Because he did it, can you? Think of these things before you run the risk, and remember what the risk is.

Our principle is lawful. We have been told it is contrary to the Scriptures. One gentleman said to me, "If you can find a command in the Bible, Thou shalt abstain from intoxicating liquors as a beverage, I will abstain; but not fill them." Dear children, we want you to love the Bible, to obey the precepts of the Bible; but in view of the evils of intemperance, and in view of its cause, we ask of the Bible only a permission to let liquor alone. We lay our hand on this blessed book and ask, May we abstain? You do not search the Bible for a command, Thou shalt abstain from gambling; from dog fighting; from horse racing. Just in proportion to your love for the Bible will you abstain from these things, because they are detrimental to the best interests of society according to Bible principles. Therefore, since intemperance is caused by the use of strong drink; since in proportion to the use of such drink drunkenness increases or diminishes; and since the most that can be said for this drink is that it is a need less luxury, and that the world would be the better and purer without it—therefore, you say, I will abstain, and give the weight of my influence, as long as I live, on the side of abstinence, sobriety, and purity. This is in accordance with the teachings of the Bible.

How many of us, who are growing old, wish we could be boys again! Why? Because we see so many things to regret, so many wrong turns we have taken. To be a boy, with life before you, with the clean page on which to write your record, with opportunities coming that you can improve—what a position, what a privilege! To be an old man, with a record all stained and blotted, knowing that no mortal hand can clean the page; with opportunities unimproved, and lost never to return—this is dreadful!

A wicked man, who had been a stage-driver, was, during the last few days of his life, very uneasy, and on his death-bed he constantly moved his feet, and looked distressed. When asked by his wife, "Harry, what is the matter?" he said, "Oh! I am on an awful down grade, and I can't find the brake." Dear young friends, your feet are on the brake. Keep them there. You have, under God, the future in your power; your destiny in your own control. Remember there is no one evil in the world before which so many fall, as the evil of intemperance.

I most earnestly desire that the youth of our country, especially our Sabbath-school scholars, shall give all their influence against this great evil. May God help you to avoid the perils in life's journey, and the traps that are set for your feet, so that from your place of safety you may reach out your hand to help the tempted who are struggling in their chains, and may by self-denial be enabled to "fulfill the law of Christ," by helping some poor, burdened souls into the higher life of purity and freedom!

Hold true friendship with both hands.

5. Do not mix up different items of business; but take up and finish one item before you take up another.
6. Write items intended for publication on a separate slip.
7. Make every lawful effort to obtain subscribers, and to do good in whatever way you can.
8. Send money by drafts, post-office money orders, or registered letters.
9. Observe the above rules, and you will expedite business, save us from much trouble, and yourselves and our subscribers from disappointments and vexation.

THE INCONVENIENCE OF SIN.

When reading the text in the writings of the Psalmist in which he represents God as being at his right hand, a pleasant train of thought was started upon the idea that God is convenient to his people to protect, assist, and to render them whatever help they may need. And in pursuing that train of thought, the contrast between the convenience of the divine presence with all its accompanying blessings, and the inconvenience of sin, impressed our mind very forcibly, and started a train of thought upon the inconvenience of sin.

Inconvenient means, unsuitable, disadvantageous, giving trouble or uneasiness. Such is the character and tendency of sin. The Apostle Paul in describing the effects of sin upon the human character, and upon the morals of men, says, "As they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do those things which are not convenient; being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whisperers, backbiters, haters of God, despiteful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents, without understanding, covenant-breakers, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful." Rom. i. 28-31. He elsewhere describes the works of sin, or as he calls them, the works of the flesh, meaning of the sinful flesh, as follows: "Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like." Gal. v. 19-21. Persons who have given themselves up to such vices and habits must surely find them very inconvenient. When persons become addicted to such vices, the gratification of them will often be attended with no little inconvenience. And to be unable to gratify the sinful appetites or desires which exist, will be a very painful inconvenience to endure.

We may instance the sin of drunkenness. When a person becomes addicted to this sin, he often finds the habit to be an exceedingly inconvenient one. If he drinks to excess and becomes intoxicated, he is often ashamed to meet his friends in that state, and endeavors to hide his sin. If he has gone so far in the vice as to lose all shame, and exposes himself, when drunk, in the light of day, with no apparent remorse or reluctance, still his drunkenness may be very inconvenient to bear. It may render it inconvenient for him to walk, or talk, or to do what it may be very important for him to do. It may entirely disqualify him for business, and make him the dupe of some wicked or unscrupulous party. Or he may at times, as is not unfrequently the case with men of intemperate habits, find it impossible to gratify his appetite for the stimulating and intoxicating drink, and then he must endure the pain of a morbid and craving appetite unsatisfied. And this will be a great—a painful inconvenience.

2. Pride is on the list. This has often been found to be very inconvenient. People who are given to this vice, and who indulge in extravagance in dressing, in furnishing their houses, and in entertaining company, &c., to rival their neighbors and those with whom they associate, must often, to keep up a fashionable appearance, live beyond their means, and expose themselves to dishonorable acts to procure money to satisfy wants which their pride has produced. Their pride gives them much trouble, and puts them to much inconvenience to obtain means to satisfy its demands. And though it may be attended with ample wealth to gratify all the artificial wants which it has given rise to, it will, nevertheless, be found to be a great inconvenience, sooner or later, to those who have contracted the vice and indulged in it. It will surely be a great inconvenience to the proud soul to endure the deep humiliation it will be compelled to endure in the common prison with its inferiors, and when there will be nothing for the proud spirit to gratify itself upon.

3. Envy is one of the things to which God gives up the heart that submits not to his authority, to do, and which is not convenient. "Envy is pain, uneasiness, mortification, or discontent excited by the sight of another's superiority or success, accompanied with some degree of hatred or malignity, and often or usually with a desire or an effort to depreciate the person and with pleasure in seeing him depressed." To carry envy in the heart is to carry a viper there that is closely related to the worm that never dies and which will constitute a part of the torment of the lost. It is a great inconvenience to those who would be good and happy. It being an evil, is a promoter of evil. It prompted Cain to murder his brother Abel. It constituted the revengeful spirit of Saul, by which he sought with such diligence and perseverance for years the life of David. It was the sin of envy which obtained possession of the heart of Ahab, the king of Israel, who set his heart on the vineyard of Naboth, and through his wicked queen schemed the destruction of its lawful owner, and appropriated it to his own use. That this sin of envy proved a great inconvenience to the king in whose heart it reigned, is evident from his history after his dishonorable treatment of Naboth. As a punishment for his wicked conduct prompted by his envious heart, judgment was pronounced upon him and his posterity, and the judgment was executed in due time.

4. The sin of murder is on the Apostle's list of crimes attributed to the sinful heart of man. And the troublesome and inconvenient, as well as criminal character of this sin, is abundantly manifest. The inconvenience of this sin was seen in the life of Cain, the first murderer. "The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground," said the Lord. But that blood did not only cry from the ground to be heard by the Lord, but no doubt the murderer himself heard it, and would startle from his nightly slumbers at the strange cry. And when he would awake his imagination would have before it the pool of his brother's blood, and no doubt he would start back appalled at the dreadful sight. The Lord's judgment upon Cain, and his bitter feelings, show how inconvenient he found his sin of murder to be.—“And now art thou cursed from the earth, which hath opened her mouth to receive thy brother's blood from thy hand. When thou tillest the ground, it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength; a fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be in the earth. And Cain said unto the Lord, My punishment is greater than I can bear. Behold thou hast driven me out this day from the face of the earth; and from thy face shall I be hid; and I shall be a fugitive and a vagabond from the face of the earth; and it shall come to pass, that every one that findeth me shall slay me.” Gen. iv. 11—14. Cain's bitter experience has not only much of the experience of every murderer in it, but it has also much of the experience of every sinner in it. And how true it is that sin is something that is not convenient.—“O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?” (Rom. vii. 24.) exclaims the Apostle Paul, in view of the inconvenience, the trouble, and the burden of sin. Some commentators think the apostle had an allusion to a kind of cruelty practiced by tyrants upon their miserable captives.—They tied a dead carcass to a living captive, and this carcass he was compelled to carry with him wherever he went. Who can imagine the suffering of the captive under such circumstances? If this carcass is a representation of sin, what an inconvenience must sin be!

Sin is an inconvenience to its possessor in life, but much more so in death. Oh, what a source of trouble it is to the dying sinner! But its inconvenience and disadvantages will only be fully realized when it is found by its possessors that it has kept them out of heaven, and doomed them to share with the rich man in torment the inconvenience of a burning thirst, for which there is no relief.—Such being the disadvantages and inconvenience of sin, all should seek deliverance from its guilt and power, and freedom from its bondage. Christ died to save, and now lives again to apply the remedy his own death produced.

Querists' Department.

BRO. QUINTER: I have a question to ask, and you will please let it have a place in your paper. In the gospel as written by Mark, xiv. 12, we read as follows: “And the first day of unleavened bread, when they killed the passover, the disciples said unto him, When wilt thou that we go and prepare that thou mayest eat the passover?” Now that the passover had life, there is no dispute. What was it? was it a beef, was it a sheep, or was it a lamb? What was it they killed and prepared for the Savior and themselves to eat that evening in a large upper room? Some may say, I cannot say exactly what they killed. You no doubt have some thoughts on the subject; then say what you suppose or think they killed, and in answering, let conscience be free to utter its convictions. I for one must believe and say, it was a lamb they killed and eat for their supper. Now if I am right, give me right, and if I am wrong, put me right. Please answer me.

Yours in Christ,

C. LONGANECKER.

Huntertown, Pa.,
July 18, 1876.

ANSWER.—There seem to be some grounds to doubt whether there was anything killed for the supper our Lord and his disciples partook of when the communion was instituted. In Deut. xvi. 5—7, we read, “Thou mayest not sacrifice the passover within any of thy gates, which the Lord thy God giveth thee: but at the place which the Lord thy God shall choose to place his name in, there thou shalt sacrifice the passover at even, at the going down of the sun, at the season that thou camest forth out of Egypt. And thou shalt roast and eat it in the place which the Lord thy God shall choose: and thou shalt turn in the morning, and go unto thy tents.” And in 2 Chron. xxxv. 1—11, we have an account of the passover which was kept in the reign of the good king Josiah. It is said, “And they killed the passover and the priests sprinkled the blood from their hands, and the Levites flayed them.” ver. 6. And in Lev. xvii. 3—6, we have further directions in regard to the place and manner of offering sacrifices. In ver. 6 it is said, “And the priest shall sprinkle the blood upon the altar of the Lord at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and burn the fat for a sweet savor unto the Lord.” It appears from the above Scriptures that the paschal lamb could only be killed by the priests in the court of the temple. And it is said by Jewish writers that the owner of the lamb then received it from the priests and took it to his house in Jerusalem, and there roasted it and ate it in the evening. Now as there is nothing whatever said about the priest's having anything to do with the services of the Savior's supper, in killing the lamb or in sprinkling the blood, this silence could not well be accounted for, had the priests had anything to do with the services of our Lord's last supper.

While our correspondent properly quotes the evangelist Mark as saying, “When they killed the passover,” Luke says, “Then came the day of unleavened bread, when the passover must be killed.” Luke xxii. 7. Perhaps we need understand no more from the language of the evangelists than that the time or season of the year had come when the preparations for the passover are made by the Jews. In the phrase in Mark's account of the preparation made by the disciples,

“when they killed the passover,” the pronoun they does not refer to the disciples but to the Jews.

Dr. Waterland, of the church of England; in a learned dissertation on the Lord's Supper, quotes the following passage from Dr. Wall's Critical Notes on the New Testament: “Upon the whole, John speaks not of eating the passover at all: nor indeed do the three speak of eating any lamb. Among all the expressions which they use, of making ready the passover; prepare for thee to eat the passover; with desire have I desired to eat this passover with you, &c., there is no mention of any lamb carried to the temple to be slain by the Levites, and then brought to the house and roasted: there is no mention of any food at the supper besides bread and wine: perhaps there might be bitter herbs. So that this seems to have been a commemorative supper used by our Savior instead of the proper paschal supper, the eating of a lamb; which should have been the next night, but that he himself was to be sacrificed before that time would come. And the difference between St. John and the other is only a difference in words, and in the names of things; they call that the Passover which Christ used instead of it.”—Waterland's Works, vol. iv., p. 493.

If there was anything killed in the preparation made by the disciples for the supper, they and our Lord partook of together, we think it was likely it was a lamb. But does it then follow that we should have a lamb in the Christian supper we eat in connection with the communion of the body and blood of Christ? We think it does not necessarily follow that we must have a lamb to complete the Christian character of the Lord's Supper. The lamb in the paschal supper was a type of Christ, who was to be sacrificed for us. And we are to commemorate the offering made for us. And the commemorative emblems that we are to use are specifically described; they are not a lamb, but bread and wine. “For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do shew forth the Lord's death till he come.” 1 Cor. xi. 26. We commemorate our Lord's death, not in the Lord's Supper, but in the communion emblems.

The Lord's Supper, or Lovefeast which we eat in the church, is a Christian family meal, which we eat in love, as the adopted children of our heavenly Father, having fellowship with one another. In the communion service we show our communion with Christ, our Head and Life. In the supper, we show our fellowship and attachment to one another as brethren and sisters in Christ, “For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit." 1 Cor. xii. 13. And we do not consider a lamb necessary to complete our lovefeast or supper, or that it could be made more expressive or effectual by using a lamb. It is not the material of which the supper or meal is constituted that gives it its Christian character, or makes it promotive of spiritual edification, but it is the meal itself, bearing the endearing name of lovefeast, and handed down to us with the weight of apostolic sanction and authority, and partaken of in Christian faith and love, which makes it edifying and profitable. If we even give it a typical character, and make it a type of the marriage supper of the Lamb, as is sometimes done, still it is not necessary that a lamb should be used to make it a type of the marriage supper of the Lamb.—Whatever would constitute a feast would be all that is necessary, since it would be the feast itself that would be the type and not the material of which it is composed.

From the passages of Scripture that we have referred to showing the connection of the priests with the paschal sacrifice, and from various and numerous other considerations, it seems that the supper that our Lord ate with his disciples was not the Jewish passover. And if the supper our Lord and his disciples ate together was not the Jewish passover, it was not necessary that our Lord's supper should be composed of the same materials that the passover was composed of, though that supper might have had some things in it of the same kind that the passover had, not from necessity, but from convenience. Our Lord's supper not being the passover, then, and neither he nor his apostles having given any directions in regard to what should constitute that supper, the church in the exercise of its discretionary power must use the materials that are convenient, and that will constitute a supper or feast.

Again, if it is thought that our Lord had a lamb at his supper and that we should have one likewise, and that too from the simple reason that he had one, then it would also follow that we should have unleavened, instead of leavened bread, since we have as much reason to believe our Lord had unleavened bread at his supper as we have for believing that he had a lamb. At the time of the passover the Jews were to put away leaven from their houses. In regard to it, the Lord said to Moses, "Unleavened bread shall be eaten for seven days: and there shall no leavened bread be seen with thee, neither shall there be leaven seen with thee in all thy quarters." Exodus 13: 7. But it is not considered necessary to have unleavened bread at our lovefeast or supper, except for the communion of the body of Christ; neither is it necessary to have a lamb. We are to have a supper, meal, or feast of charity, if we would follow the example of the apostolic church, but what that supper is to be composed of we are not informed. It must therefore be left to the discretion of the church, and the circumstances by which we are surrounded.

For the satisfaction of our correspondent who sent us the foregoing query, and others of similar views, we have answered the query at some length, and hope that a careful consideration of our suggestions may help to form a correct view of what is necessary to constitute the Lord's Supper or Lovefeast.

Gleanings and Gittings.

THAT FULL REPORT.—Many of our patrons are wondering why the Reports do not come. We wonder just as much as they can. There is no justifiable excuse for this long delay. Printers who are not prepared to put work through faster, ought not to undertake contracts of this kind. It is an imposition on all who are interested, and certainly no recommendation to themselves. We have been making promises on the strength of promises made to us until we are now both ashamed and afraid to make any more; but we will try to hope that a few days more will find many of our readers eagerly perusing the Full Report.

We are informed that the meetings conducted by brother S. H. Bashor, at Clover Creek, Pa., are now over. He began there Aug. 21st and ended on the 31st. Thirteen sermons were preached, and there was an accession to the church of forty-two. One more made application, but could not be immersed on account of sickness. These meetings are said to have been attended by the largest congregations ever known there at meetings of this kind. Our informant says: "The house was partitioned off into a preaching room 40x40; but the partition was taken down, and all the house used, which, by Sunday, was filled to overflowing. At the close of the meetings 23 were immersed at once; and judging from the tears shed, many more were near the kingdom. Mingled with the rippling waters was heard the solemn voice of the man of God, as he repeated the formula of Jesus. Solemn silence prevailed, except the sobs of the unconverted as they witnessed the performance of the rite that returned the souls of their former associates in peace to God. Oh! may they still weep until they, too, are brought to God. So many so near Jesus, and yet so far away! May God's blessing rest upon those who have come out on his side, is the prayer of a rejoicing church, and of glad-hearted fathers and mothers, whose children have come to go with them to the city of God."

Bro. J. G. Winey, of Campbell, Ionia county, Mich., says:

"The brethren will hold their communion meeting on Saturday and Sunday, the 30th of September and the 1st of October, at their meeting house. Meeting to commence at 10 o'clock."

Brother Winey does not say where the meeting house is; but we suppose it is near Campbell.

Bro. P. S. Garman of the Stanislaus church, California, says:

"Please publish the appointment for our lovefeast on last Saturday in September instead of first Saturday in October."

As the announcement was made in our last issue, we take this method as the best way to correct it. Those who are interested should note the change.

We have now entered upon the season of fall lovefeasts. Almost daily our brethren are enjoying these refreshing seasons somewhere. It is indeed pleasant to meet with our brethren and sisters and to sit down with them to the Lord's table. This is one of the heavenly places in which God's children are permitted to sit.—There is no other service in the church that brings us so near heaven as this. It is an imposing scene to see hundreds of brethren and sisters sitting around the Lord's festal board. Such scenes speak to the heart more forcibly than could the tongues of orators and angels; and participation in such occasions gives a blissful foretaste of heaven's joy to those who partake worthily. Next to this enjoyment is that which arises from the law of sympathy, or fellow-feeling. We are so constituted that we can enter into each other's joys and sorrows when they are brought to our knowledge. To the heart that is filled with love and compassion, as the heart of every child of God ought to be, this is natural. By this law the tidings of others' joys cheer our hearts—we "rejoice with those who do rejoice." This is why our readers love to read news from churches. Will you not, then, remember that as you enter into the joys of others, so they rejoice with you? As you love to hear from them, so they are pleased to hear from you. That your enjoyment may be mutual and as great as possible, we invite you all to send us reports of your lovefeasts as soon as they are over. The fresher the news the stronger are the appeals to sympathy, and the greater the pleasure afforded. Write, then, whether you have much to write or little.

Little drops of water,
Little grains of sand,
Make the mighty ocean
And the beautiful land.

Correspondence.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood.

Concerning the Philological Error.
To Lewis O. Hammer:

To your article in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, page 524, vol. 1, I have two serious objections and one philological dissent.

First. Your harsh words in regard to those who differ with you, like this: "The admission is a solecism that no one accustomed to thinking ought to be guilty of," is too categorical. Softer words and harder arguments have more weight with thinking men, and a better tone in Christian correspondence.

Second. You use a similar expression in regard to a redundant phrase your article would attribute to me, saying, "If 'you' (I) admitted that twice two made seven, your admission would be just as reasonable as a metaphorical secondary meaning." Your assertion in this case is swelled to a size which makes it more prominent than the argument, seeming to demolish, and attribute to me the almost unmeaning and mystical phrase, "Metaphorical secondary meaning." You should have written to me before making an attack in a public journal upon my views or phrase or conduct, so you could get from my own pen the views and phrases you attribute to me in the public journal. I object to this in several phrases you have given to represent our views. They seem to be better calculated to mystify than to give our views.

The feeling that our position is not set forth fairly in your criticism is the only reason why I reply to it. For I doubt the propriety of engaging in a philological discussion through the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. In fact, I prefer not. Still, under the circumstances, necessity requires that I should set before the readers of the paper our views and the reasons for them, and explain, so far as I am able, some of the phrases used to refute them.

We admit a secondary meaning of the words bapto and baptizo, because we believe these and almost all other words are sometimes used in a secondary sense.—There are several kinds of figures in rhetoric, which are different modes of using or appropriating words outside of their literal and primary meaning. Among these, probably, the most common are the metaphorical and metonymical. That the ordinary reader may understand this subject, it is necessary that we explain these figures in rhetoric. A metaphor is the application or appropriation of the name of one thing to another, on account of some likeness or quality common to both, as, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." The word lamb is applied to Christ, because of some resemblance. Or, he shall "set the seep on the right hand, and the goats upon the left." Here on account of some similarity the righteous are called sheep, and the wicked are called goats. Herod is called a "fox" by the same figure.—This mode of changing words or names from one thing to another is called metaphor.

The metonymical use of words is a little different: it changes a name from one thing to another, not on account of the similarity, but on account of some relation; as, "Cornelius feared God with all his house," that is, all his family. "Noah prepared an ark to the saving of his house"—family. Here house is changed from the building to the family living in it. There is no likeness between the two, but there is a relation which justifies such a change. There are other modes of changing words from one thing to another, but it is not necessary to name them, as we only wish to give the idea of how words are changed.

We now wish to present our views so plainly and clearly that all may understand; then, and before we are done, we will prove them by your own article, if we are not mistaken.

In the metaphorical use of words, when we say, "Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world," the word lamb is applied to Christ. Its primary meaning is a sheep under a year old, or the young of the sheep kind. That meaning is first or primary, because the word lamb was applied to the animal before it was applied to Christ. It is literal, because it is not given by the use of any figure in rhetoric, or derived from any other application or meaning of the word. When the word lamb is applied to Christ, it is a change of appropriation and a change of meaning. This last meaning we call secondary, because it is second as to time and the second application of the word. It may be called figurative, because it is made by a figure of rhetoric taught in all the Grammars and Dictionaries I have examined. It may be called metaphor, because that mode of applying the name of one thing to the other on account of some resemblance is a metaphor; as Webster says, a metaphorical use of words; a metaphorical expression; a metaphorical sense.—According to Webster the use, the expression, and the sense are all metaphorical. What we have said of that use of the word "lamb" applies to sheep, goats, foxes, and all similar expressions.

Bapto, which literally means to dip, is subject to the same figures of rhetoric.—It is applied to dyeing, because dyeing is the object and dyo, or dipping, is the mode of dyeing; hence the action expresses the object accomplished by it. Oc bapto may mean to wet, because it is an effect of dipping; or it may be made to mean wash or cleanse, because these are the results of the action; as the word dip is so applied as to mean "sauce or gravy." It means to wet, as "the cold, shuddering dews dip me all over." Or to moisten, as a blister plaster, effects or objects indicated by dip or bapto, because they denote the mode by which the thing is done. These kinds of changes are called metonymical, because the near relation of the two justifies the change, not because of the similarity, for there is none between them.

But more changes grow out of metaphorical use, as dip is applied to being plunged into difficulty: "He was dipped in the rebellion of the commons." This change is on account of some similarity between being plunged in water and in rebellion. Or, "To incline downward; to point to something below the horizon," as, "strata of rocks dip;" or, "dip of the magnetic needle; the pointing below the horizon." Because of similarity, the word dip is applied to these things as "fox" is applied to Herod. In each case the change of appropriation changes the sense, and in each case the meaning is secondary, because there was a meaning and use of the word before it from which it was derived. Bapto and baptizo are subject to these same kinds of changes by metaphor.—Hence by this figure of rhetoric bapto may signify to dye, by sprinkling the coloring fluid upon the object, because there is some similarity in the thing done, though not in the action or mode of doing it. And in Homer's "battle of frogs and mice," bapto (ebapeto) would apply to tinging the lake with blood. Here there is some resemblance to dyeing, though the mode is neither by dipping or sprinkling. In the same way they apply bapto for dyeing the hair and beard. All these meanings cannot be the first, the primary meaning of bapto; hence we call all of them secondary except the original.

Baptizo is used in this metaphorical sense by the classics. Hypocrates directs concerning a blister plaster if it be too painful, to baptize or moisten it with breast milk." Baptizo is here used without any mode being expressed. Then it must be used in a secondary sense, because its primary sense indicates more. Again: Dr. Gale gives a case from Aristotle; he says, "They came to a land uninhabited, whose coast was full of sea weed and is not overflowed (baptizesthai) at ebb, but when the tide comes in it is wholly covered." Here baptizo is applied to land being overflowed by the tide. This is a different action and a different result from the blister plaster, yet the word baptizo is applied to both. They cannot both be its primary meaning. The land being covered by the tide is not dipping the land, as the primary meaning would indicate, yet by metaphorical change baptizo is applied on account of similarity. The action of overflowing the land and the action of dipping cannot both be the first, the original meaning of baptizo. To dip is first; to overflow is second by metaphor. Like the fox is first, and appropriation to Herod is second.

In Isa. xxi. 4, "fearfulness affrighted me" (ebaptizei). Here baptizo is used in a secondary or figurative sense, not in its primary or literal signification.

We will now notice some things you have said, because we feel that our views have been misrepresented, and suppose it is because you do not understand them correctly. You say, "Metaphors are not meanings of words, but similitudes of the meaning." Here you represent us as holding that metaphors are meanings of words. This is your mistake. We do not believe the metaphor is the meaning of a word. It is the mode or manner of changing the name of one thing to another on account of some resemblance between them. It is not the metaphor but the object the word is applied to, which gives the meaning to the word. Take your illustration again: Christ calls Herod a fox. The first meaning of fox is derived from the small animal to which it is applied—its size, form, habits, nature, and all in the meaning of fox. Now, when the word is applied to Herod, what is its meaning? You make us to hold that the metaphor is the meaning. Then again you represent us as holding that the resemblance is the meaning, neither of which is correct. Fox, when applied to Herod, means the man with his sly, cunning disposition, just as it before means the animal with sly, cunning disposition. It is not confined in meaning to the likeness, the sly, cunning disposition when applied to Herod, more than when applied to the animal. Let us illustrate the point further. Jesus is called "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." Lamb first means the young of the sheep kind." Christ is called called a lamb on account of some resemblance in the neck, submissive disposition of both; but when the word lamb is applied to Christ, it means the whole being, not just his meek disposition, for it is the Lamb of God that takes away our sin. It takes more than the resemblance to do that.— This proves the word lamb to mean the whole of either when applied to them. Again: "Then shall he set the sheep on the right hand and the goats on the left." The sheep means the righteous; they shall be set on the right hand—not just the resemblance of a sheep set on the right hand. So the wicked, who are called goats, are set on the left hand. It is not the resemblance but the man is the object to which the term is applied here. The secondary or figurative meaning of goat is the wicked man, the primary meaning is the offensive animal. This explains and corrects you, where you say, "According to my philology the primary meaning of fox refers to fox, the secondary meaning to the resemblance of a fox." You seem to not understand secondary. The secondary meaning of fox is not the resemblance, but refers to Herod, just as fully as the primary meaning refers to the animal.

Your language still further seems designed to weaken my views by misrepresenting them when you say, "How can the resemblance of immersion be a metaphorical secondary meaning of immersion?" It is not the resemblance but the whole thing to which the word is applied that constitutes the secondary meaning. The children of Israel, being under the cloud and passing through the Red Sea, is called a baptism. The cloud, the sea, the being under and the passing through all combine in giving the secondary meaning here expressed. The baptism of suffering is another figure of rhetoric, and the secondary meaning embraces all there is in the suffering of Christ, overwhelming instead of dipping, suffering overabundant of water. The thorns, the spittle, the blood, the cross, all combine to give the meaning when baptism is applied to the suffering of Christ.

I once knew a doctor who was fond of hard biscuit. In the family was a boy like him in that respect, and for that reason the boy was called doctor. This was a change of the word to the boy, not the biscuit. There the secondary meaning was the boy. This shows that a resemblance may be the cause of a metaphorical change, while it is no part of the primary meaning of the word it changes. So it is with other words. Bapto first and primarily means to dip; but by chance there is some thing colored by dipping it in a coloring fluid. The dyeing is no part of the primary meaning of dip; it is a part of the coloring fluid adhering to the object. This coloring fluid may be applied by sprinkling, pouring, daubing, and smearing on the paint of the dyeing.— There is a resemblance, though it is no part of the primary meaning of either action. They are only modes by which the coloring fluid is applied; they are modes of applying any other fluid just as well. Either of them would apply a fluid to wet, or scald, or grease, as well as dye. To dye, or wet, or moisten, is no more the primary meaning of dipping or sprinkling than hard biscuit is the meaning of doctor or boy, because they both happen to prefer it. Bapto is applied to sprinkle because there is some likeness in the dyeing, not in the action by which it is done, not in their primary meaning, but in a remote object which happens to be a result of either or both actions. The first and primary meaning we build on in our faith and practice; all others we call secondary, because there is one before them; we call them metaphorical, because they come by metaphorical use of words; we call them figurative, because they are made by the use of some of the figures of rhetoric; we call them tropical, because they are a deviation from the original meaning.

Another of your expressions seems to me only calculated to lead to mistake and mystery. You ask: "Is the word converted into a figure because figuratively used?" Words are not converted or changed, but their meanings. The figures of rhetoric apply words to different things; that changes the meaning, not the word. As you say, "Switch the cow," and "switch the car," changes the meaning, but not the word. Hence, when you say, "The reality is converted into its likeness," you miss the rules of rhetoric which change the appropriation of words, as well as the views we entertain.

We agree with you when you say, "A word can have no meaning without appropriation. And that word can never be changed; neither can the word assume a secondary meaning without a change of appropriation." This is virtually admitting all we contend for. You say, "neither can the word assume a secondary meaning without a change of appropriation;" hence ly a change of appropriation it assumes a secondary meaning. That is what I admit. But then you say, "Apply this rule to the word bapto in the ordinance of baptism and the absurdity of a secondary meaning will at once appear." I agree with you that "bapto" when applied to the ordinance of baptism is always used in its primary sense—no secondary meaning when it is applied to the ordinance; but I cannot see with you how that proves the absurdity of a secondary meaning, for it has most certainly a secondary meaning in the classics and the Scriptures when applied to other things that are not dipped.

We agree with you in the expressions, "switch the cow" and "switch the car," having two different meanings; but it only proves my position, because "switch the cow" is first and primary, and "switch the car," secondary, for it is of modern application. But when you say, "Both meanings, or as many as use may confer on a word, may have figurative applications." I confess I am not sure I understand you. I hope if you write again you will be more careful to explain, "Both meanings have figurative applications." I cannot conceive how to apply a meaning without using a word or action. Apply means add to, or join to, as, "Apply a blister plaster to a man." You say, "The meaning" (not the word) "has figurative application." If I should apply the meaning of dip to anything, I should dip it in water and contend I had applied the primary meaning of the word to it; but how to apply that meaning to it figuratively I cannot tell. By using words figuratively I can get a figurative meaning, but it must be different from the primary meaning and will not apply to it. Probably your idea is that meanings may be figuratively compared, using the simile instead of the metaphor.

I have now given you my views pretty fully, I believe. I differ with Mr. Carson in the general position he takes. I do not know the position you take, and unless there is some important difference that is not yet manifest (for it seems to me you admit a secondary application and a secondary meaning of words) I think it not necessary that we discuss this philological question very much, because it will not be interesting to many of the readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. But if I am in error I would like to know it. Still, you cannot convince me by just saying, "It is as unreasonable as to say: Twice two makes seven."

Editors Primitive Christian:

Since you published my communication of June 12th many inquiries have been received concerning the advantages offered here for those seeking homes in the West.

Being on the 40th parallel of latitude, a great variety of crops can be successfully grown, and the productiveness of the soil and ease of tillage enable the farmer to grow large crops at moderate expense.

Stock raising pays well. Stock cattle are run on the prairies in summer at $1 25 per head for the season, and are wintered in the stalk fields at straw stacks and on prairie hay, which hay is put in stack at a cost of $1 25 to $2 00 per ton. Sheep do finely here and have proved profitable to those who have them.

Our winters being dry, stock of all kinds require less expensive shedding than in localities subject to frequent rains.

We have a few orchards old enough to bear fruit; and they are well filled with fine fruit, giving evidence that orchard trees grow finely and fruit well.

Unimproved lands can be had near the Brethren now here at $6 to $10 per acre. Improved farms at from $10 to $20 per acre. Cheaper lands can be had in other localities. Some fine lands and farms can be had adjoining, or convenient to each other at low prices. Some farms can be rented on reasonable terms.

Those intending to come West should, if possible, come in the fall, as they then have time to arrange for spring work, and thus get their crops in earlier than if they came in the spring.

Settlements of the Brethren in the county east, and the county west of this, with those now in this county, together with prospective additions indicated by numerous inquiries received, warrant us in saying that the Brethren wishing to come West will not find stronger church inducements west of the Missouri River than in South-eastern Nebraska. Our railroad station is Table Rock, on the Atchison and Nebraska railroad, Household furniture and most other articles can be had here nearly or quite as cheap as they can be bought East, and it will not pay transportation unless several families come together and charter a car for their goods. Beds, bedding, and light articles can be boxed and shipped at from two to three cents per lb., and will pay to ship. For further information address,

JOHN L. MARSHALL,

Sabbath-school Convention.

Since the above subject has been agitated from Indiana, other localities should take the matter into consideration.

What does North-eastern Ohio say to such a convention? Certainly we have enough Sunday-school workers in the district to make it interesting and profitable. The thoughtful mind needs no argument to be convinced of the necessity and utility of such a convention. Much would undoubtedly be gained by way of increasing the interest and efficiency of our Sabbath schools and a basis laid for extensive future usefulness. Smithville station would be a good place for it.—Brethren of North-eastern Ohio, what have you to say? E. L. YODER.

Information Wanted.

I want to find out where the nearest organized church is to Arkansas City, Cowley county, Kansas. I started last fall like a lost sheep to find the Brethren. Now, brethren, do not delay; for I have two boys I want to send to school, and I want to hear from you soon. I want the brethren to come where I have been stopping this summer. I want to find a home with Brethren again, and wish them to come for me. I can pay the team. Drop me a line and I will be ready in Arkansas City. Yours in love.

Editors Primitive Christian:

As I have not seen anything in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN from this part of the country, I thought I would write a few lines to let your readers know that the Brethren of Gage county, Nebraska, are still trying to hold forth the gospel in its primitive purity to the people. They seem to take much interest in coming to hear the Brethren preach the gospel.—On the second Sunday in July there was one received into the church by baptism, being probably the first person ever baptized in Gage county by the Brethren, but from the interest manifested by the people I think more will soon be persuaded to come out on the Lord's side.

Health is generally good, and we are abundantly blessed with the necessities of this life. There is an abundance of wheat and potatoes, and other truck is plenty, while corn is extraordinarily good.

We are expecting quite a number of Brethren to this country the coming fall and winter. Now is a good time to move in here as catables and feed are cheap and plenty. Brethren and others wishing to locate or buy land here, may by calling on me, or writing, receive all information that I am able to give. Will also show them land, &c. Now, brethren, you that are coming West, stop and see our country. It is one of the finest sections of country in the West.

CARROLL CITY, Carroll Co., }
Iowa, Aug. 24, 1876. }

I will inform the readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN that this is a fine country here. We had a good prospect for corn, but on the 18th of this month the grasshoppers came and they are taking everything, and depositing their eggs in great numbers. The country is new, and there will be hard times here. There is no German Baptist congregation here.—There are a few members, however, and preaching is very much desired. Minis- ters traveling through Iowa, we ask you to stop with us and preach for us. Carroll City is the stopping-place. I live 21-2 miles west of Carroll City. I came here in March, 1876. T. J. YEOMAN.

Announcements.

We intend, the Lord willing, to have our lovefeast at Cedar Grove, Shenandoah county Va., on the 3rd of October, commencing at half past one o'clock; and on the 5th in the same district at Pleasant View, commencing at the same hour of the day. Both meetings are in the Flat-rock district. JACOB WINE.

The brethren in the Crooked Creek church, Washington and Johnson counties, Iowa, expect to hold their communion meeting on the 23rd and 24th of September, ten miles south of Iowa City, at the residence of Bro. John Fesler. Those coming by railroad to Iowa City, by writing to Bro. Michael R. Cline, Riverside, Washington county, when they will be at the city, or at Riverside, will find conveyance. JOHN THOMAS.

The brethren of Glade Run district, Armstrong county, Pa., contemplate holding their lovefeast on Tuesday evening, October 3rd. Preaching to commence on Saturday evening previous. J. B. WAMPLER.

There will be a communion meeting at the Four Mile church, ten miles southeast of Richmond, Union county, Ind., on the 22nd of September, commencing at 10 o'clock, a. m. MARTIN WITTEB.

Our communion meeting in the Cook's Creek district, will be held October 3rd, commencing at 2 o'clock p. m. S. F. SANGER.

There will be a lovefeast in the Green Spring district, at the Sugar Grove meeting house, on the 30th of September, commencing at 10 o'clock. Also meeting on Sunday, Oct. 1st. S. M. LOOS.

There will be a communion meeting, the Lord willing, in Lick Creek, 1 1-2 miles south east of Bryan, Williams county, Ohio, on the 21st and 22nd of October next. Also, one in the Mawnee congregation, on the 24th of October. Also, one in the Poplar Ridge congregation, on the 26th of October. Two of the above are in Defiance county. C. NEWCOMER.

Aug. 27th, 1876, by the undersigned, at his residence in Columbiana county, Ohio, Mr. THOS G. SYAE and Miss MARTHA J. HENRY, both of West township. J. A. CLEMENT.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to see all alike, and we could not insert versea with all.

In Columbiana county, Ohio, Aug. 19th, 1876, LULA ESTELLA, daughter of E. D. Kely, and granddaughter of Bro. Lewis Glass, aged 8 months and 13 days.

Also, August 22nd, 1876, CHARLES, son of D. W. Firestone, our County Treasurer, aged 1 year 10 months and 30 days. Mrs. Firestone was visiting relatives near N. Georgetown when the child was taken sick with typhoid dysentery. Funeral services upon the first of these occasions from Math. xxv. 6, and upon the latter from Math. xii. 14. J. A. CLEMENT.

In the Elkhart church, Elkhart county, Sister CAROLINA M. LEHMAN, wife of Bro. Jacob M. Lehman, departed this life August 19th, 1876, aged 37 years, less 6 days. Sister Lehman's smiling countenance and her regular attendance at the house of prayer gave us much encouragement and consolation.—Funeral sermon by D. Shiveley and others. Text, Math. xxiv. 44.

Also, in the same church, Aug 27th, 1876, IRA A. SHUIDLER, son of Brother Benjamin and Sister E. Shuideer, aged 8 months and 19 days. Funeral services by D. Shiveley. M. FRAME.

Near Bridgewater, Va., Aug 25th, 1876, sister SARAH BYERLY, consort of Bro. Joseph Byerly, deceased, aged 70 years 10 months and 21 days. The funeral sermon was delivered at the Pleasant Run meeting-house by Bro. John Flory, from 2 Cor. v. 1.

S. F. SANGER.

In the Covington church district, Miami county, Ohio, August 14th, 1876, sister MARY ALBARTH, aged 85 years 6 months and 15 days. The subject of this notice was born near Frederick, Maryland. Her maiden name was Mary Eller. In 1811 she was united in wedlock to Jacob AlbARTH, in Pennsylvania; then moved to Montgomery county, Ohio, in 1815. Her husband preceded her in death 18 years. She was a consistent member of the church about fifty years, and was the mother of eleven children, six of whom are yet living; also, 31 grandchildren, 45 great-grandchildren, and one great-great-grandchild. She lived an exemplary Christian life. Peace to her ashes. Funeral services by the Brethren.

Also, in the same church district, and at the time living in Covington, Bro. WILLIAM SMITH, formerly a resident of Preble county, Ohio, August 18th, 1876, age not rightly known to the writer, but supposed to be about 52 years. His remains were taken to Preble county and there interred. Funeral services by the Brethren.

Also, near Newton, Miami county, Ohio, friend PETER KEISTER, on the 24th of Aug. 1876, after a short but severe illness, aged 59 9 months and 7 days. The subject of this notice was born in Union county, Pa., Nov. 17, 1816, and lived there until 1840; then moved to Miami county, Ohio, where he lived until his death. He was a kind husband and father, and commanded the respect of all those that knew him.

HOME TESTIMONY.

I was sorely afflicted with one of the most distressing of all diseases, Pruritus or Prurigo, or more commonly known as Itching Piles. The itching at times was almost intolerable, increased by scratching and not unfrequently becoming quite sore. I bought a box of Swayne's Ointment; its use gave quick relief, and in a short time made a perfect cure. I can now sleep undisturbed, and I would advise all who are suffering with this distressing complaint to procure Swayne's Ointment at once. I had tried prescription almost innumerable, without finding any permanent relief.

Agents Wanted

To sell the New Patent Improved EYE CUPS. Guaranteed to be the best paying business offered to Agents by any House. An easy and pleasant employment.

The value of the celebrated new Patent Improved Eye Cups for the restoration of sight breaks out and blazes in the evidences of over 6,000 genuine testimonials of cures, and recommended by more than one thousand of our best physicians in their practice.

The Patent Eye Cups are a scientific and philosophical discovery, and as ALEX. R. WYETH, M. D., and WM. BEATLEY, M. D. writes, they are certainly the greatest invention of the age.

Read the following certificates:

FERRISBURG STATION, LOGAN CO., KY., June 6th, 1872

DR. J. BALL & CO., Oculists—

GENTLEMEN: Your Patent Eye Cups are, in my judgment, the most splendid triumph which optical science has ever achieved, but, like all great and important truths, they are being everywhere accepted and philosophy have much to contend with from the ignorance and prejudice of a too sceptical public; but truth is mighty and will prevail, and it is only a question of time before the general acceptance and endorsement will follow. I have in my hands certificates of persons testifying in unequivocal terms to their merits. The most prominent physicians of my country recommend the Eye Cups.

I am, respectfully, Yrs. A. L. BOYER.

WILLIAM BEATLEY, M. D., SALVIA, K., writes:

"Thanks to you for the greatest of all inventions. My sight is fully restored by the use of your Patent Eye Cups, after being almost entirely blind for twenty-six years."

ALEX. R. WYETH, M. D. ATCHISON, PA., writes:

"After total blindness of my left eye, caused by the paralysis of the optic nerve, to my utter astonishment your Patent Eye Cups restored my eyesight permanently in three minutes."

Rev. S. B. FALKENBERG, of the M. E. Church, writes:

"Your Patent Eye Cups have restored my sight, for which I am most thankful to the Father of Mercies. By your advertisement I saw at a glance that you were the inventor of the Eye Cups, formed their work perfectly in accordance with physiological law; that they literally fed the eyes that were starving for nutrition. My God greatly bless you, and may your name be enrolled in the affectionate memories of multiplied thousands as one of the benefactors of your kind."

HORACE B. DURANT, M. D., says: "I sold, and effected future sales liberally, the Patent Eye Cups, they will make money, and make it fast, too; no small catch-penny affair, but a superb, number one, tip-top business, promise, as far as I can see, to be life-long."

Mayor E. C. ELIOT writes you, November 16th, 1869:

"I have tested the Patent Ivory Eye Cups, and am satisfied they are good. I am pleased with them. They are certainly the greatest invention of the age."

Hon. HORACE GAZLEY, late Editor of the New York Tribune, writes:

"Dr. J. BALL, of our city, is a conscientious and responsible man, who is incapable of intentional deception or imposition."
Prof. W. MERRICK writes: "Truly I am grateful to your noble invention. My sight is restored by your Patent Eye Cups. May heaven bless and preserve you. I have been using spectacles for 25 years. I am seventy-one years old. I do all my writing without glasses, and I bless the inventor of the Patent Eye Cups every time I take up my old steel pen."

ADOLPH BIERNBERG, M. D., physician to Emperor Napoleon, wrote, after having his sight restored by our Patent Eye Cups: "With gratitude to God, and thankfulness to the inventors, Dr. J. BALL & Co., I hereby recommend the trial of the Eye Cups (in full faith) to all and every one that has any impaired eyesight, believing, as I do, that since the experiment with this wonderful discovery has proved successful on me, at my advanced period of life—90 years of age—I believe they will restore the vision to any individual if they are properly applied."

Attest: ALEX. R. WYETH, M. D.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts, Essex, ss., June 5th, '73, personally appeared Adolph Biernberg, made oath to the following certificate, and by him subscribed and sworn before me.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

THE QUICKSANDS OF EXISTENCE—EPILEPSY, &c.

Among the many shoals and perils of life on which our frail barks would founder, were it not for the beams that indicate and warn us of our danger, are epileptic fits, rush of blood to the head, apoplexy, etc., for which Holloway's Pills are the safest remedies in existence. These disorders arise from some one or more derangements of the system.—From whatever source, however, they may proceed, Holloway's Pills are the most salutary in effect, as they cool the blood, brace the relaxed nerves, give tone to the digestive organs and energy and vigor to the enfeebled constitution. 35 4 187

TO EVERY MAN HIS WORK.

MARK. XIII: 34.

Our Master has taken his journey,
To a country far away—
And has left us a task to finish,
Against his reckoning day.
There's a work for me, and a work for you,
Something for each of his servants to do.
Your task may be great and glorious,
And mine but a simple one;
It differs little. The question is,
Will his coming find it done?
Or perhaps in his deeper knowledge
He has thought it wise and best,
That while others toil in his service,
Our part be to wait and rest.
It may be our hands are forbidden
To work for him, day by day,
Our feet cannot run on his errands,
But still we can watch and pray.
It matters not, in this little while
Whether we work, or watch, or wait;
So we fill the place he assigns us,
Be it service small or great.
There is one thing only concerns us—
To find the task that is ours—
And tæu having found it, to do it,
With all our God-given powers.
Our Master is coming most surely,
To reckon with every one;
Shall we then count our toil or sorrow,
If his sentence be "well done?"

—Faith and Works.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

A Fatal Heresy.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

REPLY TO A LETTER.

"I believe in Christ as our Redeemer, but cannot comprehend the doctrine of redemption through His blood. How can the blood of Christ cleanse us from sin? I believe that the entire benefit we receive through Him is by His example, conforming ourselves to His image as a pure and holy Being."

So writes an unknown correspondent. Bold words, these. An old, old heresy, which has been met and routed scores of times. It is the hobby which the unitarians have ridden to the naked ribs. You have been dabbling in speculative theology, and have been badly poisoned by the inhalation of a noxious atmosphere. No one can "believe in Christ as our Redeemer," and reject the fundamental fact in which redemption inheres. Of such redeemers the world is full. The most powerful writers in support of the Example theory, boldly announce that they are as truly redeemers as Christ, only on a lower plane. If there is nothing in redemption but a pre-mortem ideal, you need no Christ. Scripture and sacred history abound in examples which present a standard of holiness far above any attainments you will ever be likely to make. In the matter of redemption, the best and ripest saint under the sun is as deeply in want as the vilest sinner, so that there can be a common footing only on the side of receptivity, and an isolated individual act in the matter of communication.

You say "you cannot comprehend the doctrine of redemption through His blood." Why do you want to comprehend what you do not believe? This is not your difficulty. You have been "playing on the hole of the asp" and have been stung. You have been raising "cockatrice eggs" which have hatched heresy. You are commanded to believe, not to break into the secret of God and be on an equality with Him in the knowledge of His counsel and modes of operation. You do not even know how a mouthful of bread is converted into muscle and action, into brain and thought. Will you therefore not eat, because you cannot comprehend the philosophy of vitality? Faith is so natural that you take your food without once thinking that it is an act of faith, or of the secret processes which connect the act with sustenance and health and all the possibilities of life. One thousand millions of human beings would starve within a month if their eating were conditioned by the comprehension of the principles of nutrition. Physically and spiritually we must relate ourselves practically to the means of subsistence, and then we will live, even in utter ignorance of the underlying laws of faith and conduct. Can you comprehend the unoriginated, self-existent God? Will you turn atheist because of your intellectual limitations? The child believes the Divine Being as easily as Bacon or Agassiz; and the profoundest philosopher that ever lived cannot base his faith in the Divine Existence in a comprehension of His mode of being. If you think you do not believe in the doctrine of the Cross because you cannot comprehend the principles involved, you evince that you have effectually cheated yourself as to the reasons of your infidelity. The honest application of your rule will sink you below an idiot. The most doltish person has the privilege to believe some things, but your disposition of the blood of Christ will not allow you to believe any thing.

There is a palpable inconsistency in your readiness to receive the most unfathomable of all mysteries, while you pretend to stumble at a doctrine which is supported by manifold analogies with which all are familiar. Why not believe the fact in this case, as revealed, the same as you do the declaration that God is "from everlasting?" Your logic requires you to reject redemption altogether; for you cannot comprehend the philosophy of moral reformation, or recovery to God, through the influence of a historic model, any more than you can the settlement of our judicial relations to God through the death of a Substitute. The first intention and effect of the atonement is Godward. He respects Himself and His law, and whatever measures are adopted for reconciliation must first have reference to His dignity and authority. The necessity for an atonement is grounded in the perfection of the Divine Nature, and exhibits the Divine Mind in relation to sin. There must, in the nature of things, be a contribution Godward, before any exhibition manward can be efficacious. In the order of time, the manifestation world-ward was first; but derived all its value from the atonement to be. Even the example of God in human mold, is no more than an exasperation of our misery, if the rupture made by sin with the Divine Government is allowed to remain. The least reflection should convince any one that redemption by a Divine Person must have Divine relations, and involve the Divine law and honor as the foundation of all human benefit. That which is most fundamental in the atonement is not touched by that phase which you regard as the whole of it.

Sin has no business here; being here, death is the most beneficent arrangement possible. It is a breach of Divine law, and law is just nothing.

111. J. D. T. O. p. 10 k ing at all apart from the Lawgiver. Sin has consequences Godward and manward, in dealing with which, the Source of Law must be propitiated before its subjects can be reclaimed. To refer Christ's main work to His example, is to make more of the restitution of man than of the honor of God; is, in fact, to redeem man at the expense of the Divine character. Nothing so fearfully belittles God and jeopardizes the soul, as a transfer of the Atonement proper from the death to the life of Christ. To make the blood of the Lamb unshed of more significance than shed, is to reverse the order of Deity, "reject the counsel of God," and draw upon us His eternal malediction. "Without shedding of blood is no remission." Christ had to bring human blood to the Cross, which was sanctified by obedience to and fulfillment of all righteousness in the manward sphere, else He could not "offer Himself without spot to God," which was the condition of an acceptable sacrifice. On the tree, in His own body, "He bore our sins." Not as an example, but as a substitute—"the just for the unjust." "These are the true sayings of God." "He that believeth not shall be damned." To sever His death from His life, in relation to the atonement, is like severing the left hand figure in 1,000,000. Nothing remains but empty cyphers. Retain the one, and the cyphers become powers. Without the death of Christ, His life is a farce; with it, a glorious, God-assimilating power. His death cleanses from all sin; his life inspires with all the beauty and mercy of the Divine holiness and righteousness. Without the Cross all the rest is delusion and defect.

In the School of Christ.

BY JANE BROWN.

Who is in the school of Christ? I feel, dear brethren and sisters, that all of us who love him are in that school. Oh, how are we being educated? Is it by true fathers in Israel? Or are we being led by false teachers? as we read in our heavenly Master's word that there are "ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers." If there were false teachers in the apostles' time, how must they have increased in number and false doctrine in all these years! How plainly do we see the word of God proved true in their teaching! They take for their doctrine the commandments of men, not of God. I find that a great many of our brothers and sisters have never been enrolled in the popular school, to learn the way to God and his righteousness. If you have not, you know not how to sympathize with poor mortals that are earnestly seeking to know the true way, but never find it. Last winter when the popular church to which I once belonged, were holding a revival meeting, I talked with sixteen different ones that had become confirmed infidels (so they told me) by being brought out in that church, then looking for that teaching that would enable them to travel on in the straight and narrow path that leads to life beyond this vale of tears. They were so blinded by their teaching that they did not know as much about the Bible when they had been with them two years as they did when they were what they called "world's people;" and so they were left to stand still or go back, and they chose the latter. But I find that it is written, "As ye have therefore received Christ, Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him." It does not say stand still. I do thank God that in this school we have under teachers and our heavenly Master is the principal.

One man, in particular, said that he had plowed many a day with his Bible tied to his plow handles to study it. There he found much that he had ~~not~~ been taught, and he believed it meant for us to do as it was written, but when he asked the teacher, who should be the shepherd, what it meant, he was told that that never was meant for people in this enlightened age of the world. The consequence is that he will not go to hear a sermon or read his Bible any more.

Your poor, unworthy sister, who is conversing with you through the aid of her pen, was in this dark and beclouded state of mind about a year and a half ago, when I was drawn by some impulse of the mind, which I can hardly account for now, to hear the Brethren preach; and there, behold, I found they believed that we were to obey every command even to the least. There I learned to read my Bible understandingly, which I knew not before how to do: I never knew which was for me and which was for the old apostles. There I learned that God was a God of love, and that we might serve him through love, not merely through fear; and to-day I do say that it is my meat and drink to serve him in and through the fullness of the heart's great love. Here I learned that if we love God, we should love our brethren and sisters, which I always felt in my heart should be, but was never taught it in the old school.

I have learned so many good things in this school that I am now in that I think my pen would never cease to move if I should tell them all. May God bless our preachers that his word may be preached in its purity to the world. Pen can never portray the gratitude, the love, and sincere thanks that I feel toward this people that I am now united with, that they have taught me the word in its purity, that I now see that we have a merciful God that is not willing that any should perish but that all should partake of the water of life that flows so bountifully from that great fountain of life. He is our life, and the light of this world; but oh, what will be the magnificence, the glory of that true light, if we graduate in this school with honor, that we may not be found wanting when we are called up before the great Judge to give an account of the use we have made of the talents he gave us to improve while he was absent. O brethren, shall one of us have to say, "We have buried our one talent?" and shall it be taken from us and given unto them that have ten? God forbid that any of us should feel so at ease in this great school, where we see so many carnally minded and at enmity with God, that we will not improve every talent he has given us, that we may be able to give them over into his keeping with compound interest.

Shall any of us sit down at ease and say, "I have given my heart to God, that is all that is required of me?" I say, not so. If all were to do so, where would be our laborers in this great vineyard of the Lord? When I ask some this question, they say our preachers are enough for that work. I ask the question, May we not all preach, as much so as did the woman at the well? As soon as she found Jesus and believed on him, she did not sit down at ease because she had found him precious to her soul, but she went straightway into the city and preached. In one sense we may all preach in one way or another. Do not let us leave this glorious work all to our teachers. As the blessing is so great when we are engaged in this good work, let us share the labor with them that we may share in the blessing.

I feel that our every day life is preaching. Oh, may we each morning of our lives take for our instruction the word of God, for our guide, the Spirit of Christ that will guide us into all meekness and patience. "In your patience possess ye your souls." In this way I feel that his words will abide in us and we in him. This is the way we must live to be ready when he shall see fit to call for us. I do feel that I could say, "This is our God; I have waited for him." I owe all that I now enjoy to the blessed teaching I have received from our brother, who, through the grace of God, labors in the word and doctrine of Jesus Christ. We are fed with the sincere milk of the word; and if we do not grow in grace, it is a lack on our part.

May God add his blessings to all his children, and watch over and care for them, is my prayer. So let us, as a band of brethren joined together through the grace of God, banded together in and through his Holy Spirit, unite our prayers together in particular for our brethren that are laboring in the gospel of Jesus Christ, that they may take away the blindness that has been placed upon the minds of the children of men by false teachers. I do mourn and lament over the sad condition that this world is in more through that than an unwillingness on the part of sinners to serve God.

Christians Watchfulness. No. 1.

BY S. T. BOSSERMAN.

"Let us not sleep as do others, but let us watch and be sober." 1 Thess. 5: 6.

Men and women move along in the grand panorama of life, and being wrapped up in the busy cares that force themselves upon them, seem to forget the obligations that rest upon them to care for their eternal interests. There appears to be one grand rush from the cradle to the grave; and the thought that so forcibly rests upon our mind, is, that all this craving aspiration is for enlarging the purse, financially. By the eager pursuits in life man neglects to get gain for the storehouse in that unseen land—to provide for himself when he shall be disrobed of all that he possesses in this life. The thought that the hour of our final dissolution will shortly come, or, in other words, that we must die, is banished from the mind: it is cast away, and man follows his pursuits in this life as if he were to stay here forever. But that this life is all that man has to live is unwarranted in the sacred volume. Man must die and be no more in this life; hence the necessity of receiving the admonition, "Let us not sleep, as do others," but be awake to our spiritual interests.

The apostles had no allusion to a natural sleep of the body, but to a want of attention to provision for the soul. He well knew that the soul must live forever, and the idea of non-existence was by no means, entertained by him; and realizing the worth of salvation from sin,—realizing the worth of a saved state—of holiness to the Lord, and by his experimental knowledge of the christian religion, he could say, "I know on whom I have believed." He well knew the worth of safe ground, and in view of this, well could he exhort those around him to "not sleep," but embrace the christian religion. Like the woman at the well of Samaria, who, after hearing the tidings of salvation, invited her kindred to come and see, so the apostle, knowing the freeness of God's grace, invites the poor, slumbering sinner to awake and watch unto righteousness that he may live.

Sleep implies a state of ignorance. When asleep, as regards the body, man is ignorant of all passing around him. There may be armed robbers approaching him, at the silent hour of midnight, to do him violence, but he knows it not. The house in which he is so quietly reposing may be on fire, and he may be in danger of being burned, but the quiet slumberer is ignorant of the fact. Storms may pass over him and cause the frail structure of his to quake, but the sleeper lies there calmly reposing. So is the man that is asleep spiritually. His success in life may be a means by which he is lulled to sleep, and therefore he is ignorant of his neglect of the salvation of the soul and ignorant that time hastens him along. Stealthily his later end is approaching; but he heeds it not being asleep.

2. Sleep implies a state of unconsciousness. While in a state of slumber, man is unconscious of all passing around him. He may be in danger from the raging storm or his life may be imperiled by robbers, but he sleeps unaware of any impending danger. Thus the spiritual sleeper is unconscious of the danger to which he is exposed. He is lying near the brink of a fearful precipice into which he may unconsciously fall. Oh, how timely doth the apostle call unto us, and warn us not to sleep as do others; for there is danger that we might be insensible to the danger of eternal ruin into which we shall inevitably fall if we awake not to christian watchfulness and christian sobriety. "Let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober." We are then called upon to watch, that we may be ready; "for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh."

My friendly readers, let us watch and be sober, that we may be ready when the "bridegroom cometh;" that we may enter into the marriage; that we be at no time "overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and that day overtake us unawares," but that we may all be awake to our spiritual interests, that, when life with us shall cease, our demise will be but the entering upon a new life.

Costly Economies.

They are most frequently effected by people who flatter themselves they save money whenever they do for themselves work for which they would otherwise have had to pay money. The gentleman who gave his guests strawberries which cost him a dollar each, explaining his extravagance by saying that the time he had spent upon his strawberry bed was worth so much money, is a specimen of this sort of economist. The class embraces overtaken woman who do their own house-work, and whose husbands in the end pay the physician or the undertaker, or both, considerably more money than the cost of a servant would have amounted to; those thrifty men who furnish their houses with bungling home-made furniture, which costs them a far greater outlay of toil than would have provided the money to purchase furniture more cheap and sightly; the people who cling to an old tool or household utensil, paying for repairs in the aggregate several times the price of a new one; those well-to-do mothers who steal from their own sleeping time opportunities to mend wornout clothes; the people who buy the cheaper qualities or scant quantities of provisions, week after week, although the difference is unconsciously taken out of other contents of the table by the purchasers themselves in common with the other hungry souls thereat; people who take long walks to avoid paying a stage fare or car fare, and exhaust more vitality, and, perhaps, shoe-leather, than the money saved can ever replace; the professional men and others who waste valuable time in doing the drudgeries incident to their callings; these are but a few instances showing their meaning; the reader can doubtless add indefinitely to the number, after reviewing the habits of his neighbors.

The principal effect of such management is an enormous waste of well-meant endeavor, and of physical and mental energy. The subject is full of complications, and is too great for thorough treatment, but a mere hasty mention of it should do good, by causing people to look more carefully to the relations of outlays and results.—Christian Union

"There are some preachers who can manage to deliver a sermon and leave out Christ's name altogether. Surely the true believer will stand, like Mary Magdalene, over the sermon, and say: 'They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him.'"—Spurgeon.

A CHOICE POEM.

I was sitting alone toward the twilight,
With spirit troubled and vexed,
With thoughts that were morbid and gloomy,
And faith that was sadly perplexed.

Some homely work I was doing,
For the child of my love and care,
Scam stitches half wearily setting
In the endless need of repair.

But my thoughts were about the building,
The work some day to be tried;
And that only the gold and the silver,
And the precious stones should abide.

And remembering my own poor efforts,
The wretched work I had done,
And even when trying most truly,
The meager success I had won.

"It is nothing but wood, hay and stubble,"
I said, "it will all be unneeded—
This useless fruit of the talents
One day to be returned.

"And I have so longed to serve Him,
And sometimes I know I have tried;
But I'm sure when he sees such building,
He will never let it abide."

Just then as I turned the garment,
That no rent should be left behind,
My eyes caught an odd little bundle
Of mending and patchwork combined.

My heart grew suddenly tender,
And something blinded my eyes.
With one of those sweet intuitors
That sometimes makes us so wise.

Dear child, she wanted to help me;
I knew 'twas the best she could do;
But oh! what a botch she had made it—
The gray mismatching the blue.

And yet—can you understand it?—
With a tender smile and a tear,
And a half compassionate yearning,
I felt her grow more dear.

"Then a sweet voice broke the silence,
And the dear Lord said to me,
"Art thou tender for the little child
Then I am tender for thee?"

Then straightway I knew His meaning,
So full of compassion and love,
And my faith came back to its Refuge,
Like the glad returning dove.

For I thought when the Master Builder—
Comes down His temple to view,
To see what rents must be mended,
And what must be builded anew—

Perhaps, as he looks o'er the building,
He will bring my work to the light,
And seeing the marring and bungling,
And how far it all is from right—

He will feel as I felt for my darling,
And will say as I said to her,
"Dear child, she wanted to help me,
And love for me was the spur.

"And for the real love that is in it,
The work shall be perfect as mine;
And because it was willing service,
I will crown it with plaudit divine."

And there in the deepening twilight,
I seemed to be clasping a hand,
And to feel a great love constrain me
Stronger than any command.

Then I knew by the thrill of sweetness
'Twas the hand of the Blessed One,
Which would tenderly guide and hold me,
Till all the labor is done.

So my thoughts are never more gloomy,
My faith no longer is dim;
But my heart is strong and restful,
And my eyes are unto Him.

Brethren, Write for the Press.

BY JACOB BAHR.

"Bear ye one another's burdens." Gal 6: 2.
"Every man shall bear his own burden."
Gal. 6: 5.

While looking over the heading of the articles of this week's paper, which I received to day, the above texts occurred to my mind, which I at once selected for a basis of a few thoughts. These texts are suggestive of two prominent questions: first, What is implied by the term "One another's burdens?" second, What by one's "Own burden?"

There are various pursuits and cases comprehended by the term "One another's burdens," but I will present only a few for examples to direct the mind of the reader into the current of this subject.

1. In case of misfortune—should a member through or by unavoidable accidents, or sickness, or affliction, be reduced to want, it becomes not "one's" but "one another's burden," to alleviate his or her sufferings, and those who may be dependent upon them. 1 Cor. 10: 24, Phil. 2: 4

2. In case when a member is imposed upon by the world, or by any of his fellow members, and for the sake of peace has been obliged to suffer or part with his goods, it becomes "One another's burden"—the burden or duty of that church of which he is a member to come to his relief Matthew 18: 23—35, Luke 6: 27—30.

3. In case of any enterprise where the success or prosperity of the cause of Christ is affected—I will mention, for an example, the Danish Mission, which calls loudly for the sympathetic energy of every lover of the Lord Jesus. Much might and should be said upon this point, as to how to shoulder this burden, so that it may be born most successfully; but my main object was, in writing this essay, to encourage all who are able to write, to contribute to the columns of our periodicals, so as to make them as interesting as possible.

I am fully convinced that it is according to the will of God that the Brethren should publish a paper; and if my idea is correct upon this point, this work is also comprehended in the term "One another's burden." Then I would say; Let every brother and sister feel deeply interested in this matter; let every one that is able to write improve his talent. Meditate upon some subject which may appear to you the most important and the easiest to set forth, and if you can contribute but a few sentences, send them up to the office of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, and thereby show a willingness of bearing a part in this noble enterprise. And should your article sometimes fail to be published, do not be discouraged, but write again. Let him that is taught in the word communicate to him that teaches in all good things. Gal 6: 6. Brethren, let us try and keep the manuscript box full of live contributions, so that the editor need not be at any unnecessary trouble. His task certainly is not an easy one, even if we would furnish all the necessary reading matter. Let us then also in this case heed the injunction, "By love serve one another." Gal. 5: 13. This would be much to our interest in this life, and to our glory in that which is eternal; for the more we write, so much the more interesting will our papers be, and who knows what our weak efforts may accomplish, being "Seasoned with salt" (meekness and love?) Col. 4: 6. "If which converteth the sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death and hide a multitude of sins."—James.

"Every man shall bear his own burden," implies that a member who is justly accused of murder, or such like crime, of being a thief, or an evil doer, or as a busybody in other men's matters, should receive no sympathy from the brethren, but be made to suffer the penalties which the laws of the land impose upon him or her; and one of the most important questions is to ascertain how the church should treat them or deal with them. The apostle John (5: 17) recommends that the brother who commits the sin which is unto death (murder) should even be deprived of the prayers of the church. Those who walk disorderly, disregarding the traditions which were taught by the apostles, are to be set aside, or, in other words, be put in avoidance, the brother who spends his time in idleness, loafing about from house to house, not excepted. "Now them that are such, we command and exhort, by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work and eat their own bread. But ye, brethren, be not weary in well-doing. And if any man obey not our word by this epistle, note that man and have no company with him, THAT HE MAY BE ASHAMED." This is an important rule. Deal thus with unruly members, that they may be "ashamed"; yet count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother, (Read 2 Thess. 3rd chapter.) Such must not be expelled from the church at once, but should be bound, according to Matth. 18: 18.

How They Did It.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER.

When we read that in the days of the Apostles "the word of God grew mightily and prevailed," we are constrained to look further and see how they did it. We inquire for the secret of their success. It may be said that if the Holy Spirit were poured out as wonderfully upon our churches, as upon the churches of Jerusalem, we should see the phenomena of Pentecost and the scenes of Samaria and Antioch repeated again. Suppose we reverse this, and say that if we live and pray and labor as Peter and his fellow-Christians did, we should have as plentiful outpourings of the Holy Ghost. Of the divine side of these early successes, we will say nothing. On the human side what do we discover?

1. We see a prodigious amount of personal labor. The book of the Acts is not a chronicle of conventions, or conferences, or councils, or even of churches as such. It is the story of individual life and labor. What Philip did to enlighten the Ethiopian treasurer, and what Paul did for a heathen jailor, and how Peter visited and guided Cornelius, and how Aquila and his wife set Apollos aright—these are the main features of the apostolic history. We do not read that a "benevolent society" was organized at Joppa, with plentiful by-laws. But there was one woman's needle very busy there under the "by-law" of love. Throughout the book runs this golden thread of personal consecration to Christ's cause. In our time there is no small amount of eloquent nonsense uttered about "reaching the masses." It is glittering generality, which finds no warrant in God's wise book. Human beings sin as individuals, suffer as individuals, and must be saved as individuals. Christ did not die "for masses;" he died for men. Each person must be reached—one at a time. Brother Moody preaches Jesus to ten thousand and hears in Dublin or Manchester, and then he asks each individual to stop and be conversed with in an inquiry meeting. When he leaves a town, he solemnly enjoins upon Christians to keep personal oversight of each new convert. If brother Moody has any "hobby" it is the sensible one that personal labor is the mainspring of spiritual success. He has no patience with this magniloquent rubbish about saving sinners by wholesale.

If the devil can only succeed in enticing God's people into a big convention, and into the passage of a series of flaming resolutions and the appointment of a tremendous committee and then going home to sleep over it, he is perfectly delighted. But when he sees a man like Dr. Spenser wrestling with an obstinate sinner, or a Harlan Page hard at it in personal effort with some impenitent soul, he is full of rage. Satan knows what hurts him, and there is nothing that he chuckles over more than the pious vapid about "saving the masses." His policy is to tempt people and ruin them one by one. When churches are revived, it is by individual hearts getting aroused and at work.

2. Another secret of apostolic success, was that they knew how to pray. They had no stereotyped liturgy such as we hear in too many Presbyterian meetings. Too many Christians pray "like a book." Those early Christians asked God for just what they wanted. If Peter was in the dungeon, they met at Mark's house, and prayed him out of the dungeon. If they needed courage to face the enemy, they prayed that they "might speak thy word with all boldness." Every prayer had a point, and a purpose. They were united in their requests. They continued in supplication till the blessing came. Such prayer would bring a revival in the most cast-iron church in all our borders. Nay, such prayer meetings would be a revival.

3. Those early Christians knew how to give. They sold a part of their possessions in order to help Christ's poor. They gave also systematically, every week, as God had prospered them. When the time comes that American church-members begin to sell their carriages and rosewood pianos, and Brussels carpets, in order to fill up the treasury of Christ, we may conclude that the millennium is nearer by several degrees. Whenever they begin to give as "God has prospered them," we shall hear no more about "deserted neighborhoods" and starved out mission enterprises. The art of giving to the Lord is well-nigh a "lost art." Let us go back and find it in the New Testament.

4. Those early Christians knew how to preach. The narrative is—"They preached Christ unto them." A personal Savior was brought right up to each needy, guilty sinner. They wasted no time on bootless controversies. Taking it for granted that each man was a perishing sinner, and taking it for granted that the Gospel of Calvary was true, they pressed the Savior upon every conscience. Conversions came quick and strong.

5. But the grandest thing about those early followers of Jesus was their lives. For them to live was Christ. No epistle that noble old

Paul ever penned, affects me more than his pure, sweet, cheerful, honest, heroic life. The man himself represented Jesus to a wandering, wicked world. The crying need of our day is more Christ-like men and women. Then we shall have a fresh and beautiful "Book of the Acts."—Evangelist.

Degeneracy Caused by Tobacco Using.

Peculiarities of taste are often seen to be transmitted by parents to their children, such as preferences for particular articles of food or aversion to others. If preferences for various articles of food, for which the appetite is easily governable, are transmitted to offspring, how much more likely it is that such almost ungovernable appetites as those for tobacco and rum should be imparted to them. Hence the children of tobacco-using parents will possess a latent appetite for the noxious weed, and a very limited use of it will be sufficient to awaken the appetite to an uncontrolled activity. Such children, if they use tobacco, will impart to their children a still stronger predisposition, and every generation of tobacco users will be succeeded by a generation of those more strongly disposed to use it, till the passion will become irresistible and all will use it, boys and girls too. If tobacco-using is to continue to increase, and generation after generation continue to use it, the time is not far distant when young children and even infants will clearly manifest an inborn appetite and relish for it. There are youths now born of tobacco using parents, who say they liked tobacco the first time they tried it, and were never made sick by it. In each coming generation there will be more of such, until nearly all are thus tainted.

But there are other effects of tobacco using that are handed down to the children from the parents. It impairs the nervous functions, rendering the person more excitable, more irritable, and subject to a long train of nervous affections. It impairs the nervous constitution and transmits these impaired constitutions to children. Such children are feeble, excitable, and liable to be cut off by any serious disease. Often they do not thrive well, are stunted in growth, and do not attain to the stature of their parents before them. If they take up the habit of tobacco using early in life, as very likely they will, their growth will be still more interfered with, and they will present a curious spectacle of the lineaments of old age mingled with the features of youth. Already a noticeable diminution of the stature of our people is observable. The general average of height is less each generation. Men of full six feet in stature are far less common in proportion to the number of inhabitants than they were thirty or fifty years ago. A like falling off in height is observable among females. Among other causes, tobacco using by the parents, often continued from early youth, is a prominent cause. It is a cause that is powerfully working the degeneracy of the vital powers and arresting development.

This habit also exerts an influence over the brain as well as over the nerves. It obscures the perception and deadens the sensibility. Tobacco-using students make less advancement than others in their studies. The permanent impairment of the intellectual powers will be proportionate of the degree of indulgence and its duration. If continued through several generations, these can but result mental degeneracy. Its excessive use impairs all the bodily organs, arresting development and enfeebling the natural powers; and its direct tendency is to produce degeneracy of the race. Already its work has begun; and if not desisted from, it will complete its work and ultimately leave a race of driveling idiots. He who loves his fellow man, let him raise his voice against this foul practice.—Science of Health.

[The following article agrees so well with my views, and the teachings of the Bible, relative to matrimony and divorces, that I give it Verbatim as written by an old gentleman of East Portland, and printed in the Albany Register of last week.—A. H. Baltimore.]

On Marriage.

A few thoughts on Romans, 7: 2, 3. "For the woman which hath a husband is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband." So then if, while her husband liveth, she be married to another man she shall be called an adulteress; but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man."

From this apostolic exposition of the law of God upon the subject of matrimony, we are fully sustained in asserting that nothing short of the death of the husband can so exonerate the wife from her marriage obligations as to leave her at liberty to marry another man.

That cases may and do sometimes occur in which a wife may lawfully separate from her husband, or a husband may put away his wife, we believe the scriptures are sufficiently clear; and to the point. (See Matthew 5: 32; also 19: 9.) But in no case do we find authority for such persons to marry again. Cases may occur in which a separation may take place against the will of one of the parties, and not for the cause mentioned in Matthew 19: 9; but in such cases the parties are forbidden to marry again.—"And unto the married I command, yet not I, but the Lord, let not the wife depart from her husband: but if she depart, let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband." 1 Cor. 7: 10, 11. "The wife is bound by the law as long as her husband liveth;" 1 Cor. 7: 39.

From the plain testimony of the scriptures, as referred to above, we give it as our decided conviction that no married wife can, under any circumstances whatever, marry another man while her husband is living, without involving herself in the crime of adultery; nor can a man marry again, while his wife lives, without involving himself in the same sin. A bill of divorcement, legally obtained, may in the eye of our civil code disannul a former marriage contract, so that, as far as the civil law is concerned, the parties may contract to live in adultery, and their issue be legally their heirs; but the Bible gives them no such liberty; nor has the God of heaven given any authority to any earthly legislature to divide asunder what God has joined together. How can a man professing to be a minister of Jesus Christ, join such parties in a marriage contract that have been divorced from their former companions? Can he have the fear of God before his eyes?

A Sketch of the Life of William Cowper.

William Cowper was the author of the hymn: "There is a fountain filled with blood." This celebrated man, whose hymns of praise, are loved wherever known, was born at Berkhamstead, England, November 26th, 1731. His physical constitution was very delicate, and his nervous system quite tender, which, with the unkind treatment received at the hands of his schoolmates, inspired him with a disgust toward public places of learning, which was quite unfavorable for his education, and gave him a lasting hatred to all such establishments. He was afterward put to the study of law with an attorney, and also in the Temple, but seems not to have had any remarkable talent for that profession. He seems to have been one, at least, who was without ambition, and who sought no elevated position in life. So great was this mark in his character, that when called to attend the bar of the House of Lords, as Clerk of the Journals, he gave up his position as clerk, and the agitation of his mind in the event terminated in a dreadful fit of insanity. Bad as his condition now was, it was made worse by conviction of sin, from which he saw no means of escape, and repeatedly made the attempt to destroy his own life. Happily for him, however, he was put under the care of Dr. Cotton, whose kind treatment, and steady application of the Word of life, led the poet to a knowledge of the Savior. Here the light flowed into his soul, and peace returned to his troubled brain. A correct understanding of Rom. 3: 25, 26, accompanied by the Holy Spirit, and the spirit of faith, opened to Cowper the fountains of eternal truth, and filled his soul with a flood of peace, hope and joy. He now began to improve, and so far recovered as to take up his residence with Mr. Unwin, of Huntingdon, in 1765, who died in 1767. Cowper continued to reside with the widow, until her death in 1796. At Olney he formed the acquaintance of John Newton, whose friendship, with that of Mrs. Unwin, was the source of much happiness and comfort to him under his most distressing malady which seemed to follow his spirit to the last. From 1773 to 1778, and again from 1794 till his death at Norfolk, April 25th, 1800, he suffered, with little intermission, under the awful scourge of insanity. During the years of mental suffering which he endured, he labored under the deranged idea that he was an exception to God's general plan of salvation—that there was no salvation for him; but it was sometime when reason had returned that he wrote thus of Jesus' blood:

"And there may I, though vile as he [the thief], Wash all my sins away."

His last words were those of the most perfect and touching submission to the will of God, with whom we fondly hope his distressed spirit is now at rest. What a moment was that which ushered him into eternity's light, and forever dispelled his spirit's gloom!—Facts obtained from Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge.

The Sunday School.

BY GEO. K. SAPPINGTON.

When little children were brought to our Savior, he took them up in his arms and blessed them, and said unto those of his disciples who had rebuked them, "Suffer little children and forbid them not to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." What a sublime scene that must have been, to see the Son of God tenderly caressing those little ones who were the very type of his own innocence and purity! On another occasion he said: "Except ye become as one of these little ones, ye can in no wise enter the kingdom of heaven." In both instances he speaks of them as fit subjects of the heavenly kingdom. How nice it would be if we could only remain in that innocent state; not know anything about "good and evil." Death would be unknown; hell and the judgment never thought of. But the forbidden fruit has been eaten and we must abide the consequences. That after a certain age children do know right from wrong is evident; and that, this is the time to lead them in the right path is just and true. The best guide for the young is our Savior, and the one that can best teach how to follow that guide is a true, loving mother. But many have no mother, and very few have true ones. It has often puzzled me to know why it is that, in the country, it is no sin for our boys to be with the neighbors' playing hide-and-seek around the barn, fighting bumble bees' nests, or idling their time away in foolish conversation and thus contracting bad habits. Licentious habits among our country boys are not generally contracted during the week days, for then they are busy at school or on the farm, and only have enough time for that play which they need, and of which some are deprived, though it is just as much needed to make men of them as the bread they eat.

Youth is enthusiastic in everything it does. There seems no end to their flow of animal spirits; and why not direct some of this into the right path. Early impressions are most lasting, and why not let these impressions be of the life of our Savior and Bible History. The twig is much more easily bent than the giant oak. The habits of drinking, swearing, gambling and all others, are much more easily resisted before the first step has been taken than after they have a firm hold on the victim.

The question may now arise, where and how can youth be rightly trained? The first place is home, and their teachers are their parents. I pity that boy or girl whose early training for good is not affected by the influences of home. The place next in importance, is the Sunday-school. It makes the Bible teachings plain, so they can understand them; it keeps them from spending their Sundays in a bad way; it implants in their young hearts good impressions, which will last forever; it is a strong barrier against contracting pernicious habits, and against the many temptations, the youth of the present day have to resist. The importance of a Sunday-school in every arm of the church is obvious. The best conducted Sabbath school I ever attended was in the South Waterloo church, Black Hawk county, Iowa. It was during the hot, dry months of last summer, that I chanced to stop at this place. To a weary traveler everything outside seemed sultry and cheerless; everybody was a stranger, but when he entered the church and seated himself among the Sunday-school scholars, everything seemed cheerful, and the sight of those happy, innocent children, and the sound of their joyful voices repeating the blessed words of our Savior, made impressions on his heart that will never be forgotten.

Hypocrites.

One counterfeit note does not spoil a hundred good ones, it only makes us more careful to get the good ones and reject the bad. No man rejects a handful of gold coins because he has heard there are counterfeits in circulation. He simply tests them one by one, receives the genuine and refuses the spurious. The skeptic and the sinner are the only persons who reject genuine Christianity because of the worthlessness of its counterfeit; and who blame Christians that serve God for the deviltries of hypocrites who serve the devil. Says Dr. Payson:—"Will you say that there are no real stars, because you sometimes see meteors fall which for a time appeared to be stars? Will you say that blossoms never produce fruit, because many of them fall off, and some fruit which appeared sound is rotten at the core? Equally absurd is it to say that there is no such thing as religion, because many who profess it fall away, or prove to be hypocrites in heart. Or will you say that medicine is no good, because, though it removes the fever, it does not restore the patient to perfect strength in an instant? Equally groundless and absurd is it to say that religion is not good because it does not make men at once as perfect as the angels of God."

The processes of divine life are sometimes slow, and the changes wrought by grace may not always be completed in a day. It doth not yet appear what we shall be. But when the saving work is wrought, eternity will show that none but God could have accomplished it.—The Christian.

"Show Me Thy Ways."

Most people have ways of their own, and whenever they employ persons to assist them in their work, they are particular to have it done in their way. It may not be the only way, it may not be the easiest way, it may not even be the best way, but it is their way, and those who do their work must do it in their way, or fail to satisfy their employers.

God has a way in which he desires things to be done, and his way we may know is the right way, the safe way, the sure way, the best way that possibly can be conceived; hence those who come to this service untutored and untrained, need at the very outset to pray, "Teach me thy ways" For unless they learn the ways of God and conform themselves to his wishes, their service will be vain, and will have no reward.

God has many methods of showing us his ways. He teaches by his Word, which is as a lamp to our feet and a light to our path, and by which the man of God may be so taught as to be "perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." In that Word we find the fullest and most careful instruction. It meets us at every point in our existence, and by general and comprehensive direction shows us the way in which we should go. He shows us also by his Holy Spirit, which guides us into all truth, which shows us things to come, which instructs us in the very wisdom of the Lord, which takes the things of God, and shows them to us.

He shows us by his providence, hedging the wrong path, opening the right way before us, warning us off from dangerous places, and opening before us ways that are pleasantness, and paths that are peace. He shows us sometimes by affliction. If we refuse to hear instruction, he makes us to "hear the rod," to know what he would have us do, and do it from the heart.

Let us, beset as we are with snares and dangers, and liable to go astray like lost sheep, continually realize our dependence upon the Lord, and cry to him, "Show me thy ways, O Lord; teach me thy paths." Psa. xxv: 4.—The Christian.

Sermons in Shoes.

The revival which we need is a revival of the religion which keeps God's commandments; which tells the truth and sticks to its promises; which cares more for a good character than a fine coat; which lives in the same direction that it prays; which denies ungodly lusts, and which can be trusted in every stress of temptation. A revival which will sweeten our homes and chasten our press and commerce from roguery and rottenness would be a boon from heaven. A revival which will bring not only a Bible-knowledge, but a Bible conscience to all, is what the land is dying for. The world's sorest want, to day, is more Christ-like men and women. The preaching it needs is—more sermons in shoes.—Cuyler.

THE good man's resources of power, like his mental stores, are cultivated faculties, right instincts, that naturally seek the good, holy affections abiding ever in his heart; and which, by their positive attractions, do away at least the necessity of any vigorous, visible, or conscious conflict with sin.—T. Starr King.

Finding a New World.

Many years ago, a man stood on the shore of the sea, looking out over the waves, and waiting for three small vessels to be made ready for a voyage on which he was to enter. At last all was ready—the sails were unfurled, the anchors weighed: and those who had gone down to the harbor to see their friends and acquaintances depart were left standing in parties, talking or gossiping about the men who had sailed away into unknown seas, under command of one whom the world called crazed.

He had been talking and writing for years about a way across the sea, which no one had ever yet tried to navigate; he had been from court to court, and from country to country, trying to get some king or noble or great man to give him the means to try himself; but no one had helped him. He had now at last found a gentle but powerful hand, which had royally given, and the voyage actually commenced.

The sailors, seeing his confidence, started in good spirits; the wind was fair; their course a straight one. For days all went well. They landed at an island, lovely and fruitful, where they had heard were many beautiful things. Others had been there before them; some of their countrymen were living there; and it was like bidding good-bye to home again to set out on the wide-spread ocean, to go—they knew not where! The sailors would have turned back, but their leader was firm; and they sailed, as it seemed to them, out into space.

The weather changed; a storm arose. The small ships were tossed like toys on the surface of the troubled waters! The men were fearful, and the superstition in their hearts whispered that it was tempting God to try to find out more than their forefathers had known. Alone, on the deck of his vessel, the leader watched, hoped, and gave encouragement to the wretched men. He, only, saw the slightest ray of light in the darkness; he, only, hoped when all others despaired; he, only, had words of cheer when they gave up all; and fervently did he pray them to go on but a short time longer on their course—to try the unknown waters but three days longer, and then, if land did not appear, they would turn and seek their distant home again, in disappointment and disgrace to him. The storm was over at last; the sea became smoother; but the line of the sea and the sky was still unbroken by the faintest sign of land. Hour after hour the leader stood gazing vainly, bearing such longing and hoping in his brave heart as few other human souls have felt; but all was unchanged.

The sullen and menacing looks of the sailors betrayed their determination to keep their resolution of turning back at the moment they had sworn to do so. The last day was almost ended, when, floating on the waters, shone something more precious than cargoes of gold and silver, more valuable than diamonds—a little spray of green leaves. How feebly we realize the feelings which rushed into their hearts!—how this little spray was the forerunner of the seaweed sea which surrounds the land so long sought; how, by their slackened motion, they knew of it before morning dawned; and how, by the earliest ray of light, they saw the blessed land blue in the distance, right ahead of them. In this way Columbus discovered a new world.

Children, you are like these vessels, sailing out on an unexplored sea. The ocean of your lives you must cross to reach heaven. You know of another world, and you have a guide-book which will never deceive or mislead you. You will meet with pleasant islands where you may stop and rest; with storms which will almost overwhelm you; with unkindness, and, I fear, with unbelief. You may even meet with those who, like Columbus' sailors, will tell you there is no "other world;" but do not believe them. There was another continent, though foolish men said there was not; and there is a blessed heaven for us. We know it, though the world should deny it.

But think how happy you are in your sailing, and what hope and encouragement you have. How pleasantly your companions sail with you, instead of distressing you with entreaties to turn back and reproaches for misleading them. Your "New World," though not yet in sight, is "very near to Faith's illumined eye," and you can read descriptions of it in your great Guide-book that will make you long to see it more and more. Study the blessed Book, shape your course by it, and you will reach "the land that is very far off."—N. Y. Observer.

Love's Device.

The following is an old story which went the rounds of the papers long before our young readers were born. As it will be news to them we give it as we find it pleasantly written in an exchange.

Jessie McDonald was hard at work at the washtub one day, when her little son Fergus came rushing into the room, crying as if his heart would break.

"Daddy'll die up there," he sobbed; "they can't get him down."

"Die! up where?" exclaimed Jessie, wringing the soap off her hands and wiping them on her apron.

"On top of the factory chimney; the rope has slipped down, and they can't get up another, and the ladders are all too short."

Jessie flew out of the house and ran to the foot of the new factory chimney. She covered her eyes with her hands. "Lord help me!" she prayed from the depths of her anxious heart. A sudden thought came as an answer to her prayer.

"Angus," she called, "unravel your stocking, man and tie a bit of mortar to the yarn, and let it down to me.

Off came one of Angus' blue socks, knitted of the best yarn spun by Jessie herself. He unravelled it out, tied on the mortar, and let it down to the ground.

Meanwhile Jessie had sent for a ball of stout twine. The end of the twine she tied to the end of the yarn.

"Now, draw the yarn up slowly," she said. Angus followed her directions; as the yarn went higher and higher she let out more twine from the ball in her hands. What steady hands they were; no tangling of the twine or dropping of the ball. If she had been unrolling a clothes-line, she could not have done it more quietly. At last Angus called out, "all right; I've got the twine; now, what are you going to do?"

"Tie on the rope," exclaimed Jessie.

There was not a sound among the crowd; you could have heard a pin drop, as, with breathless interest, they watched Jessie at her work.

She tied the rope and the twine together as firmly as a sailor could have done. Eager eyes watched it ascend higher, higher, until Angus called out "All right I've got the rope; stand from under!"

He secured the rope, came down hand over hand—ah! one can't tell about such a thing! The workmen cried like children, and pressed around Angus and Jessie with words of praise and affection. Then some one wiser than the rest said, "Let them go home alone." And in the little kitchen, the husband, wife and child knelt, and thanked God that their hearth was not made desolate!—Watchman.

If you want to be sanctified, if you want power, go to Christ for sanctification and power. Carry all your propensities to Christ! Open your heart to him! he is just as able to sanctify as to pardon. I do not limit him. I carry my temper and my appetite to Christ, and trust him for the result. He will not disappoint me. Will he ever leave one who trusts him under the power of sin? Never! Then put your whole trust in him.

Every saint in heaven is as a flower in that garden of God, and holy love is the fragrance and sweet odor they all send forth, and with which they fill the bowers of that paradise above.—Jonathan Edwards.

FREEMASONRY AND THE NEW BIRTH.

Some years ago, the circumstances under which we were placed, required us to discuss publicly the subject of Freemasonry with a member of that order. We gave the subject at the time a tolerably thorough investigation. In looking over our papers recently, we found the notes we used in the discussion, and from these we have selected the Masonic view of the new birth. Masons claim and teach that persons passing through the ceremonies which initiate them into the order, undergo a great change, and this change is called, in the language of masonry, a new birth. Freemasonry very justly assumes that the moral condition of men is such that they need a moral cultivation to prepare them for the highest state of happiness in this world, and for securing eternal life in the world to come. It is well for us to know and acknowledge our wants. Then we may hope to have them redressed, if the means are available.— And there are supplies available to supply all our wants, even those of our depraved moral natures to restoration to holiness. But those supplies are only found in Christ. But Masonry teaches the new birth without Christ.

In the theory of Masonry, great pretensions are made of advantages bestowed by the order upon the initiated. As already remarked, it assumes that men are in darkness and in sin, and it professes to deliver them from these, and this deliverance is called in the lectures and literature of Masonry, the new birth, regeneration, and a resurrection from the dead. Dr. Mackey in his Lexicon of Freemasonry, in explaining the word darkness as used in its emblematical sense by Freemasons, says, "Freemasonry has restored Darkness to its proper place, as a state of preparation; the symbol of that ante-mundane chaos from whence light issued at the divine command; of the state of nonentity before birth, and of ignorance before knowledge. Hence, in the ancient mysteries, the release of the aspirant from solitude and darkness was called the act of regeneration, and he was said to be born again, or to be raised from the dead. And in masonry, the darkness which employs the mind of the uninitiated, being removed by the bright effulgence of masonic light, Masons are appropriately called 'the sons of light.'" In the same work under the word Light, we have the following: "Freemasons, too, travel in search of spiritual light, which can be found only in the East, from whence it springs, and having attained its possession, they are thenceforth called the 'sons of light.' But the light of masonry is pure, as emanating from the source of all purity and perfection; and Masons, remembering that they are brought out of darkness into light, are admonished to let the light which is in them so shine before all men, that their good works may be seen, and the great fountain of that light be glorified."

The same author in his Manual of the Lodge, pp. 20, 21, when treating upon the Entered Apprentice's Degree, has the following: "The Lodge is then, at the time of the reception of an Entered Apprentice, a symbol of the world, and the initiation is a type of the new life upon which the candidate is about to enter. There he stands without our portals, on the threshold of this new Masonic life, in darkness, helplessness, and ignorance. Having been wandering amid the errors and covered over with the pollutions of the outer and profane world, he comes inquiringly to our doors, seeking the new birth, and asking a withdrawal of the veil which conceals divine truth from his uninitiated sight. And here, as with Moses at the burning bush, the solemn admonition is given, 'Put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground;' and ceremonial preparations surround him, all of a significant character, to indicate to him that some great change is about to take place in his moral and intellectual condition. He is already beginning to discover that the design of Masonry is to introduce him to new views of life and its duties. He is, indeed, to commence with new lessons in a new school. There is to be, not simply a change for the future, but also an extinction of the past; for initiation is, at it were, a death to the world and a resurrection to a new life. And hence it was that among the old Greeks the same word signified both to die and to be initiated. But death, to him who believes in immortality, is but a new birth. Now this new birth should be accompanied with some ceremony to indicate symbolically, and to impress upon the mind, this disruption of old ties and formation of new ones. Hence the impression of the idea is made by the symbolism of the shock at the entrance. The world is left behind—the chains of error and ignorance which had previously restrained the candidate in moral and intellectual captivity are to be broken—the portal of the temple has been thrown wide open, and Masonry stands before the neophyte in all the glory of its form and beauty, to be fully revealed to him, however, only when the new birth has been completely accomplished. . . . The shock of Entrance is, then, the symbol of the disruption of the candidate from the ties of the world, and his introduction into the life of Masonry. It is the symbol of the agonies of the first death and the throes of the new birth."

We see from the foregoing, what masonry claims to do for those who are initiated into its mysteries, and who share in its benefits. And it will be perceived that these claims are similar to what the gospel claims to do for men. The candidate for admission into the masonic order or lodge, is represented as being in a most wretched condition: in darkness, helplessness, and ignorance. Having been wandering amid the errors and covered over with the pollutions of the outer and profane world, he comes inquiringly to the doors of the lodge, seeking light. And when he has gone through the peculiar ceremonies characteristic of the first or Entered Apprentice's degree of the Masonic order, he is represented as having obtained the divine light of Masonry. And Dr. Mackey quotes the following Scriptures as being fulfilled in the reception of the Entered Apprentice into the lodge: "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." Matth. vii. 7.—This change that the initiated into the lodge undergo is described in the language and figures which make it equivalent, as will be perceived, to the change which Christianity produces in the character and lives of those who are brought thoroughly under its influence.

The new birth or spiritual purification taught in the theory of Freemasonry has further symbolical representations. "In the Ancient Mysteries, the first step taken by the candidate was a lustration or purification. The candidate was not permitted to enter the sacred vestibule, or to take any part in the secret formula of initiation, until by water or fire he was emblematically purified from the corruptions of the world which he was about to leave behind. A similar principle exists in Freemasonry where the first symbols presented to the Entered Apprentice are those which inculcate a purification of the heart, of which the purification of the body in the Ancient Mysteries was symbolical. We no longer make use of the bath or the fountain, because in our philosophical system the symbolism is more abstract; but we present the candidate with the apron, the gauge, and the gavel, as symbols of a spiritual purification. The design is the same, but the mode in which it is accomplished is different.—Dr. Mackey's Manual of the Lodge, pp. 35, 36. In his Lexicon of Freemasonry, under the word Lustration, and in explaining this word, he says: "A purification by water. This was an indispensable prerequisite to initiation into all the ancient mysteries. The lustration in Freemasonry is mental. No aspirant can be admitted to participate in our sacred rites until he is thoroughly cleansed from all pollution of guilt. In some of the higher degrees of the Ancient and Accepted rite a lustration or abluion is practiced."

Freemasonry also claims to possess a divine and spiritual light in connection with the new birth, which is enjoyed by the initiated. Dr. Oliver, a popular writer among Freemasons, has the following in regard to this divine light: "We are informed by Moses that at the uncertain period when the earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep, the Spirit of God brooded on the face of the waters, and God said, 'Let there be LIGHT—and there was LIGHT.' What could this light be? It was not the material light of the sun, for that luminary was not yet created. The solar system was not in being, and yet there was light. It could then be no other than an affusion of the Divinity, that lucid splendor, in which the celestial hierarchy love to bathe their intellectual natures, at whose creation the sons of God shouted for joy. It was a manifestation of the divine intellect, by the efficacy of which this earth, and all that it contains, sprang out of nothing. That glorious, undescribable Shekinah, or Logos, which our ancient brethren, with all humility and reverence, have ventured to introduce into the system of spiritual Freemasonry: that emanation of the Deity was the irresistible agent in the creation of the World."—Historical Landmarks, vol. i., p. 342.

Dr. Mackey, in his Manual of the Lodge, p. 29, alludes to the same light in the following manner: "This mental illumination—this spiritual light, which, after the new birth, is the first demand of the candidate, is but another name for Divine Truth—the truth of God and the soul—the nature and essence of both—which constitute the chief design of all Masonic teaching."

The reader will notice from the foregoing extracts from the popular writers and expounders of Freemasonry, that its pretensions to a power for the elevation and renovation of the moral nature of men rival those of the gospel, and yet if it is done by Freemasonry, it is done without Christ. The following occur in the extracts above given: "There is to be not simply a change for the future, but also an extinction of the past; for initiation is, as it were, a death to the world and a resurrection to a new life;" "The shock of entrance is, then, the symbol of the disruption of the candidate from the ties of the world, and his introduction into the life of Masonry. It is the symbol of the agonies of the first death and the throes of the new birth;" "new birth;" "regeneration;" "purification of the heart;" "spiritual purification;" "no aspirant can be admitted to participate in the sacred rites until he is thoroughly cleansed from all pollution of guilt;" "spiritual Freemasonry." This language is taken from the standard authors of Freemasonry, and not from the writings of seceding Masons. And does not this language imply and promise much more than Freemasonry can do for those who enter into the order? It surely does. And holding out such inducements, and in offering such great advantages, it presents a delusive hope to those who are initiated with the expectation of realizing the blessings which it promises to impart.—And many that have been initiated into the first degree of Freemasonry have been disappointed in not experiencing what they had hoped to do, and have thought of quitting the order, but were induced to continue in it, upon the promise that they would find the promised and looked for benefits in the higher degrees of the order. Such has been the experience of many of the initiated. And by continuing in the lodge and partaking of the spirit characteristic of Freemasonry, they in time imagine they have found the "light," which is said to be "the design of all Masonic teaching." We say they imagine they have found the light; for it does appear that the divine or Masonic light of which the symbols and theory of Freemasonry has much to do is only imaginary. This appears evident from the circumstances under which the initiated are brought into the Masonic light.—The candidate for the benefits of the Masonic order is taken charge of by the proper officers of the lodge, who prepare him for admission. In the preparation he is hoodwinked, or in other words, he has a bandage applied to his eyes. He is now in the dark. In this condition he applies to the lodge for light. A number of the ceremonies of the order is now gone through by the candidate. Some of these ceremonies are of an exciting character, as is evident from the fact that a part of them is called the "SHOCK OF ENTRANCE." Then amid the excitement produced by the ceremonies of the occasion, and at the proper stage of the service, the bandage is removed from the eyes of the initiated, and he is now brought out of darkness into light. But what is the character of this light which the neophyte or the new convert to Masonry now enjoys? Is it not the same light that he enjoyed before the hoodwink was applied to his eyes? We must believe that candor and intelligence will prompt an answer in the affirmative.—Where, then, shall we find the doctrines of the divine light, the new birth, the purification of heart, and spiritual purification, taught in the symbols and literature of Freemasonry practically exemplified? We look in vain for that exemplification as the legitimate effects of Masonry in the lives and characters of the Masonic fraternity. Those doctrines are Christian doctrines, and their legitimate tendency and holy fruits are only to be found in those who have been planted in Christ.—A practical realization of those doctrines is absolutely necessary to fit us for heaven, and this cannot be experienced by the symbols and ceremonies of the Masonic order, but by a practical faith in Christ. It is useless to profess our belief in those great doctrines, if we do not experience their transforming power.

Although we have extended our remarks beyond what we designed, we cannot close this article without calling the reader's attention to another idea. We have quoted in the first part of our article Dr. Mackey's language in relation to the Entered Apprentice. He says, "There he stands without our portals, on the threshold of this new Masonic life, in darkness, helplessness, and ignorance,"

&c. The reader will do well to read the whole quotation. And let it be noticed that the first degree in Masonry, the degree of Entered Apprentice, is the beginning of a Masonic life. Consequently all who enter the Masonic order must take this degree. Then the language of Dr. Mackey will apply to Christians, and even to Christian ministers, as well as to sinners. And how can Christians, and especially Christian ministers, submit to an order of things which is calculated to bring reproach upon Christ and his holy cause. Imagine a minister blindfolded, representing himself, in the language of Masonry, "wandering amid the errors and covered over with the pollutions of the outer and profane world," inquiring at the door of a Masonic lodge, seeking the new birth of Masonry, "and asking a withdrawal of the veil which conceals divine truth from his uninitiated sight." Has not God called us, if we are his people, "out of darkness into his marvelous light"? And have we not as Christians been "born again"—born from above—"born of the incorruptible seed"? And have we not "purified our souls in obeying the truth"? Do not Christians, then, dishonor the church of Christ and exalt the Masonic order above it, when they go through the ceremonies of the order, and sanction its doctrines and claims? We believe they do.

A COUNTY MAP OF SOMERSET COUNTY.

We last spring inserted in our paper an advertisement of a new map of Somerset county. Our readers will find an advertisement of the same work in the present number of our paper. The work was commenced in the spring, and it has been progressing since that time, and will now soon be completed.—Mr. G. H. Walker of New York, a Topographical Engineer, who is engaged on the work, called with us and explained to us the character and and completeness of the work. As a map of the county, it will be very complete.

The Atlas containing the County map will also contain several other maps. The work is an important one, especially to those living in the county. It will cost the publishers a considerable amount of money to get it out, and it is hoped it will meet with a ready sale throughout the county, that they may be paid for their labor.

Cleanings and Jottings.

THAT REPORT.—Yes; that Report of the Proceedings of our last A. M. A few days ago we received a box of five hundred, which have been sent out; but several more such boxes will be required to fill the orders. We feel a little ashamed, somewhat confused, and much annoyed. We would like to make a suitable apology, and to offer some encouragement to our patrons; but what can we say? what can we do? We must still ask for patience,

No. 36--No. 36.

We ask all our subscribers to notice that last week's issue, dated September 12th, is No. 37 instead of No. 36. This error was not noticed until it was too late to correct it. We now call attention to it, and would advise all who expect to keep their papers for future reference or to have them bound, to change the number from 36 to 37. This can be done by each subscriber with but little trouble, and may be of some advantage hereafter.

SWEDEN is east and north of Denmark. Ten years ago there was not a Methodist Church in that country. Now, it is claimed, there are seventy societies, fifty-six preachers, forty-six local preachers, five thousand members, and thirty-one churches, which have a seating capacity of twelve thousand. We have one missionary in Denmark. What may we be able to say of the success of the gospel there in the next ten years? Much will depend upon the effort we shall put forth, for God will be certain to do his part in blessing and prospering every effort put forth in harmony with his will. Let us pray and labor, and let us liberally support our brethren in Denmark, and we may expect glorious results.

It is said that in the Syrian Church, the oldest in the world, fermented wine is not used for the communion. When the fresh juice of the grape cannot be obtained, raisens are soaked and the juice expressed for that purpose.

A sister in Eagle Creek church, Hancock county, Ohio, after a cordial greeting to us and all the readers of this paper, says:

"Here is a mite from a few of us who have laid by of our savings, for the missionary cause:

- A sister, $4--$3 for the Danish and $1 for the Stein fund.
- A brother, 50cts. for the Poor Fund.
- A young brother, 65c. for Danish Fund.
- A sister,.....75c. " " "
- A sister,.....50c. " " "
- A brother,.....50c. " Stein "

"I noticed in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN a few months ago, of six six sisters giving of their earnings of one week's sewing. This was a good example, if only more would follow it. But as we are not all occupied the same, I thought a good plan would be to take one week of our savings of butter and eggs, or whatever gain we have during the week. One of these sisters put away of her savings a little at a time, sometimes 10 cents, and again 20cts., or 25cts., until she had laid by $4; and she says she did not miss it. No, we will not miss it, if we lay it by to spend it in the service of the Lord. Now can we not all try some way that we will lay by each week a few pennies, a few dimes, or a few dollars, as the Lord doth prosper us, and send it to the great and good cause. Dear sisters, and brethren, too, let us be up and doing and help the good work along; for we are but lending to the Lord, and we are gaining not only an interest of money, but an interest in heaven, "where moth and rust doth not corrupt, and thieves do not break through and steal."

BRO. David Bowman, St. Martins, Mo., September 7th, 1876, writes: "Our little church is in working order. We have started a small library, and are distributing the books to outsiders to be returned when read; and we are distributing our periodicals, too, and they are doing much good. We have been laboring in a new field this summer, where the doctrine of the Brethren has never been known. We held a five days' meeting, preaching ten times, and such a stir I have never witnessed among a people. We have learned that quite a number have made up their minds to join in with us. I ask the prayers of the church in our behalf, that God may keep us humble."

BRO. M. T. Baer of Flowerfield, Mich., under date of Sept. 4th (inst.), says:

"I learned yesterday at our communion meeting that brother F. P. Loehr is quite sick; that it is doubtful whether he will recover. He wishes to be remembered in our prayers. Our communion went off very pleasantly, with the exception that an old sister accidentally fell down the cellar way and was badly hurt, so as not to be able to be at the Lord's table. Our feast was held in a place where we are very little known as a religious people; but I learned, before leaving the place, that some very favorable impressions were made on the minds of the few who were in attendance. This leaves us in our usual, good health."

ONE of our scribes writes to us from Huntingdon Co., Pa., as follows:

"It so happens, during the course of years, that God remembers his church, and, at times, showers his blessings upon it. This seems to have been the case with our little body here at Bethel in the last few days. According to arrangement brother S. H. Bashor came on the 31st of August, and preached in all 7 discourses (also one by brother G. W. Brumbaugh), and amid them the still small voice from above, "Come to me," was heard and heeded by 10 of our young people, who now stand in the fold of Christ, ready to wield the armor of heaven against all the powers of Satan, and the consolidated force of an under world. May they, as they stand now with their names on the church roll on earth, shout as they reach the silent shores, "Washed in the blood of the Lamb!" and find them written by the tender hand of Jesus, on some fair page of the book of eternal life. Bro. Bashor goes from here to day to Hill Valley, where he labored some time ago, to meet a number of young people who are to be immersed. From there he goes to Philadelphia, to remain with the brethren some time."

AN Exchange says: "The first Christian newspaper ever published in Japan, has just been issued at Kobe. It is in Kana characters, which all the people can read."

A Letter to Stephen H. Bashor.

*My dear and much-loved Brother: Peace to you and love be multiplied. Amen:—*The enticing influences of sin are lurking in every corner. In every change of your life there is temptation ready to allure you to its deceitful embraces. Upon every hand swarms an element that infuses into the mind a greedy thirst for worldly sports and pleasures. In the position that you occupy there are more inducements held out to partake of the "accursed thing" than otherwise. How well do I know these things! Permit me, then, as your elder brother, to impress upon your mind the great necessity of watching very closely the influences that may be around you. "What I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch." This is the voice of the Son of God eighteen hundred years ago, and should it not echo back into our ears to-day? Oh, the deceitfulness of sin! How eagerly does our fallen nature want to be lulled to sleep in its fascinating arms. Permit me again to write to you dear brother, in love, Watch, watch, watch! For temptation is on every hand; discouragement looms up before you; probably enemies are lurking in every path. Every day brings new trials, new experiences and new hopes blasted. With all these elements to contend with, do you not feel sometimes like Paul, "I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and be with Christ which is far better"? But God knows the weaknesses of the contrite in heart; he by his almighty arm will bear you up and succeed you amid all your conflicts of life. Amid all these temptations he has made a way possible for your escape.—

In and through his divine word there is ample provision to sustain your spiritual wants. But outside of this there is only a valley of dry bones. Your calling is a high and noble one. God in his great wisdom has called you, and for a noble purpose you are sent. To our brethren's children you have gone with a message from heaven; and to-day numbers stand to testify that God intended you should go. Many hearts have been turned back again to God. In early life many have been made to lip the name of Jesus, and in heaven will be in that starry crown of yours—they each will make one star.

Now, dear brother Stephen, take new courage. Go on in the pursuit of souls. Never grow weary in well doing; but press on and on, and ere long we will meet again. Father, mother, brothers, and sisters, all meet in the far off mansions. Our family ties have been broken; we are scattered one from another—some in one place and some in another. Through the mercy of God some of us are permitted to gather together in Missouri, around the same sanctuary, and mingle our voices in hymning praises to our God. But you, my dear brother, and a beloved sister in Kansas, are not permitted to meet with us here. But we have a hope to meet in heaven, with those of us that have passed over on the other side.

In conclusion I will say, you give me much consolation. In every remembrance of you I fully realize my heart's desire.—Oh, how often have I sighed, wept, and prayed for you. It seems but a few months since you were a beardless boy running over the land, without a home, seemingly without friends; but now as a bright star to the church, the pride of the family, and a son beloved by a father.—He dotes upon you; and well he may. He soon must pass over on the other side and there join our dear mother, who has been long singing the sweet song of redeeming love. Father has been blessed above that which is common to parents. Out of five sons four have dedicated themselves to the ministry of the word. But one of them is not; he has passed away; his work is ended; and as a sheaf fully ripe he was gathered to his people. So farewell, dear Stephen, for a while. We may never be permitted to meet as we have in days that are gone; but if we discharge our duties that are assigned to us, we will meet again in our Father's house, where we will meet many of those we loved here. Again farewell.

Respectfully your brother.

A Few Lines to Sister Devilbiss.

*Dear Sister:—*I suppose you have been looking for a letter from me before this time, and indeed when I promised to write to you when we parted at your district meeting, I did not think that so long a time would pass by before I would fulfill my promise. But I did not go directly home after I left your place, but went on to Gettysburg to visit a daughter who lives there, and was there met by another daughter from Philadelphia, which kept me there for more than a week, and when I did get home I found a good many things to attend to, having made up my mind to attend our own District Meeting, which came off three weeks after yours. Then came the time of our love-feast. Oh, I wish you had been there with us! We had such a good meeting—such a large assemblage of members.—Bro. Jesse Roop and his youngest daughter were with us. Had very good preaching. Very often when I am sitting at the supper table at our lovefeasts the thoughts occur to me: How would we all feel if the Savior would come at this time? How many of us could in reality rejoice at his presence? How many would be ready to meet him with joy? These are serious thoughts, and ought to be cherished by every one of us, for the time certainly will come when we must stand before him, and hear our sentence at judgment. But the apostle says, if we would judge ourselves we should not be judged. So, dear sister, let us judge or examine ourselves daily, and if we find any defects, which we most certainly will, let us go to work at once and supply what is necessary to complete a Christian character, and then we can have a hope to stand before our dear Redeemer without fear. Oh, sister! wot that be a happy lovefeast, when all those who have followed the Savior in his own appointed way shall be permitted to surround the supper table in the evening of this world! Oh, what a contrast to that supper in the upper room at Jerusalem, when all the sirs of the world were resting on Jesus, and he knew that in a few hours he would be out in the garden of Gethsemane, there pleading with his Father that if it was possible to let the cup pass by without drinking it. But it was not the Father's will. He had sent him to redeem us poor fallen creatures, and that could not be accomplished without drinking the bitter cup. And when he had accomplished all for which the Father had sent him, he bowed his head and died. So they took him down from the cross and laid him in a rich man's tomb, setting a watch for fear of deception. Oh, how blind and ignorant! But death could not hold him.—He rose triumphant over all sin, death, hell, and the grave, and is now sitting at the right hand of God, there interceding for us until the time when that lovefeast he was eating in that upper room will reach its fulfillment in the evening of the world. Oh, that every one that has ever made a covenant with his God to walk in all his ways and do his commandments, would see the necessity of leading a corresponding life! What amount of good might be done by our walk and conduct, though not a word be spoken, for actions speak louder than words; yet a word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver (Prov. xxv. 11), and a word spoken in due season, oh, how good it is,—(Prov. xv. 23.)

So, dear sister, let us do all we can in helping to promote the cause of our dear Redeemer, who has done so much for us and is still extending his mercy toward us in many ways.

Now, dear sister, I have written this letter, but being a stranger to you, I cannot know whether it will be acceptable to you. But the name sister has something in it that has induced me to write as I have, and if you will be so kind as to answer it, I can assure you it will be acceptable. I will now close with much love to you, sister. I have forgotten your first name, and do not know how to direct my letter, so I think I will send it to the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. Most likely you will get it, that is, if the editor thinks it fit for a place in the paper.

Sunday Schools.

*Bro. Editor:—*As your columns are always opened to any suggestion that might have a tendency to further the progress of religion, and build up our church in a manner that would have a more grounded foothold upon the feelings and sympathies of our children, I could not refrain from speaking just as I feel upon a subject that has caused me a great deal of thought and reflection during the past few months, notwithstanding the probability of my views conflicting with the opinions of many of my brethren.

For some time I have been engaged as a teacher in the Sunday-school connected with our church in this place, and have never entered upon a more pleasant task than that I find when in the presence of my dear little scholars. They all seem to appreciate the instruction they receive at my hands, and I know from what I can plainly observe, that the knowledge which has been imparted to them within the past few months is a matter that never came from the perseverance of their own parents in trying to enlighten their young minds, but can be attributed to the fact of their regular attendance at Sunday-school, as is plainly evident from the very fact that when I first took them in charge and tried to explain the Scriptures to them, they seemed as indifferent to the understanding of what I said, as children who never knew there was a Christ to love and cherish in their little hearts; and I must acknowledge that the task, at first, proved rather irksome and tedious. You could not explain to them a thing they knew nothing about, for they were utterly ignorant upon almost everything I approached; they had never been told, apparently, the least thing concerning the Testament. Not one of them ever heard of the story of Lazarus, the prodigal son, nor anything of the kind. In order to attract their attention, and keep their young thoughts centered, I told them anecdotes, fables, and the like; by that I amused and won their affection and esteem, and it was not a great while until we formed such a fondness for one another, that to please me there was not one of my little ones that would not willingly perform any task I requested of them.—Accordingly, I gave them choice selections from the Testament and Psalms to commit to memory, and they all came to me in a short time repeating it with one accord. They seem to delight in their lessons, listen attentively, and conduct themselves so admirably, that the change in them, as regards behavior and obedience, has become the subject of much thought and reflection on the part of their parents, who have come to me and individually expressed their thanks for the interest I have taken in their precious little souls. And it is indeed a surprising thing how enthusiastic they are becoming in the work of bringing others into the school.

Ah! brother, that is just where the point exists that causes so much trouble among the parents in bringing their children into the church. They are too much given to procrastination, and are dilatory, forgetting their duty and how obligatory the teaching of the young in the Scriptures is to the progress of our church.

The Sunday-school arrangement of "feeding God's lambs" with Scriptural bread does not seem to share a very prominent or leading part in the order of our church worship. There seems to be a great drawback as to its necessity, existing in the minds of many of our brethren. I cannot see why it is that this is a matter upon which they so seldom meditate.

But tell me, dear editor, if it is not the case that the majority of those who treat this subject so lightly have not a tendency to engage their minds to the best advantage in gaining wealth, and have no feeling other than an avaricious passion for property and filthy lucre, and imagine that such an arrangement as Sunday-schools to support would be an extravagant drain on their purse of a few dollars extra a year, and of course Sunday schools would be useless. It makes no difference if their children are enlightened or not in the blessed word. They take the plan of first seeking worldly and temporal goods, then they "add" those things which are spiritual to it. Happy combination, that! and yet is it not so? It is characteristic of the true, sympathetic, and kind heart, toward the little ones, that Christ possessed? It is not "suffering them to come to Jesus," but suffering them to keep away, until they get old and hard as grindstones.

Why is it that our ministers do not have more to say upon this subject? Why is it that they must wait until they are almost forced from mere conscience, into this branch of bringing to God his little ones. Oh, that a deeper interest might be felt on the part of all upon this subject! See how the young of the present day are growing up so ignorantly as regards the knowledge of the Scriptures, especially through the eastern districts of our church. It is discouraging to see how little interest parents take in the matter of instructing their young offspring. They think when their children can once read they can obtain their own knowledge and information; but it is too often the case that when they arrive at that period some other book takes the place, and when they are obliged to leave their homes they do not take with them that feeling that ought to be grounded in them from the first, for the progress and welfare of our church.

My prayer is that God will create a new spirit in the church, and set its light upon a hill that cannot be hid, bringing the young and tender lambs into his fold while they are yet innocent, and impressions can be made upon them with the simple "story of the cross." May God bless any word that may be spoken in favor of the subject.

Yours in Christ,

C. A. ULRICH.

Yes, Why This Contention?

Simply, I conclude, that we may come nearer the truth. I take for granted that "Fairplay" cannot see the point, for the simple reason that none of the "Brethren" are in his locality. In our parts, where we are all mixed up, and still not one (John's Gospel, xvii. 11), the whys and wherefores are more frequently inquired after. I have been an inquirer after this contentious division for twenty odd years. I have "Brethren" and "River Brethren" for neighbors, and near relatives in both. All that I was ever able to gather up is about as follows:

About the year 1800, perhaps a little earlier, a considerable religious excitement or revival took its rise in Lancaster Co., Pa., and as the converts were from different denominations, they united themselves into a new denomination, and called themselves "United Brethren in Christ," firstly—because they had united themselves from different denominations; secondly—to distinguish themselves from the already formed society, "United Brethren" (Moravians). Things went on happily and their numbers multiplied rapidly; but among other foes in their ranks was one "Pride," to which the "class" occupying the border of the Susquehanna River showed fight; and not being able to subdue or outdo Mr. Pride, they—the "River Class"—agreed to disagree with the united company so lately formed, and to search for something more humble.—The conclusion of their deliberations was, to go to the "Brethren" to receive baptism by rite immersion, and then form a new denomination, which the Brethren applied to refused. They went away and started up among themselves. Some think that the name originated on the account that they first baptized in the river; but I am told in my searches that they received the name because they were from the "Class" at the river. I also learned that they called themselves, and were so called by others in years gone by, "New Brethren," to distinguish them from the "Brethren." And I was always, and am still, under the impression that was the reason the Brethren received the title "Old Brethren." The "Brethren" that ever associated with them in our parts are few and far between; and to my knowledge I know of none that ever left the "Brethren" and associated with them for the sake or purpose of living the doctrine of Jesus Christ more fully or closely out; there being always some other things at stake. In the outstart there were no members of the "Brethren" at all with them. In organizing their church they came as close to the Brethren as they dared, so as not to make it one. To my knowledge there are but two points in which they differ: 1st. About the understanding of Acts ii. 38. They understand "for the remission of sins" to mean, to have our sins remitted as a certainty, and then thereto baptized. This view could never have been taken from the English version; out of the German it may be strained by violence. I am happy to say that I was lately informed by one of their number that this view was considerably worn off. 2nd. In regard to the Lord's Supper. They eat a supper with a mixed multitude before night, just as we eat our ordinary suppers.

This is the way it is in the place where the River, or New Brethren society was organized, and if it is different in the Northern States and Canadas, then they are, as a matter of course, an exception.

I have written the foregoing out of a good motive, and know that there are some hoary headed members of the "Brethren" in Lancaster county, Pa., still living who can bear testimony to what I have written. Would also say to Fairplay, that I am not the Bro. Bucher on whom he went with shell, shot, and canister; neither do I desire, or think it necessary to take his place; but one who wants the truth to prevail, and the light to shine out in its true light, "For if the first fruit be holy, the lump is also holy." ### Church News.

We, the brethren and sisters comprising the Vermillion congregation, Livingston county, Ills., have according to arrangements, held our lovefeast on Sept. 1st, 1876. We would say that we truly had a communion of love, for which, and for all the great blessings the good Lord bestows upon his children, we feel to thank him. The brethren that came to our assistance were brethren J. R. Gish, G. W. Gish, and K. Heckman, who labored well in word and doctrine, by which three precious souls were induced to express a willingness to take up the cross and follow the Lord. They were received by baptism on the 1st of September. Oh, brethren! what a delightful sight it was to see the congregation move toward the water side when we announced that we would now go to the water to administer the holy ordinance of baptism. There were a few more that stood on the bank and looked down on those that were hurried beneath the yielding waters, who were made to feel as though they would like to go with the people of God, May God help them to make up their minds at once, and not put off the Lord too long. And may he grant these young members grace that they may hold out faithful until death, putting on the whole armor of God. Brethren, let us all pray for them, that we may all meet around one mercy-seat. The word of the Lord teaches us that we that are strong should bear the infirmities of the weak. Oh, brethren, let us remember this when we bend the knee and heart in humble prayer, that we may all meet in the haven of glory.

After our lovefeast (on the 2nd) we, according to previous arrangement, met in church council. Settled up all our communion affairs in good order, and again, as our District did at their District Meeting in 1875, made or appointed a committee of three brethren to devise a plan for the purpose of raising money for the missionary cause, and also for building meeting-houses. This little arm of the church has adopted this plan.

May the blessing of God rest upon us all, and finally all meet in heaven, is the prayer of your unworthy brother in Christ,

Report from Southern Indiana.

I took the train at Muncie, on the Bee Line railroad, at 4 o'clock, a. m., Aug. 24th, arriving at Indianapolis at 6; from Indianapolis to Seymour, on the Louisville railroad; from Seymour to Washington, on the Mississippi and Ohio railroad—in all about two hundred miles. From Washington, Davies county, we traveled by stage to Petersburg, Pike county. On the morning of the 25th I was taken by private conveyance a distance of eighteen miles to Philip Allburn's, who had heard us preach in Harrison county in 1868, when on our way to the Southern States. Soon after that he came to Pike county, where he has been contending for the faith, and had created a great desire among the people to hear the Brethren preach. We commenced a series of meetings on Friday night, August 25th. Here we met a house full of people, and only one in the congregation who had ever heard a Brother preach.

On Monday morning we met at Paducah River, where prayer was wont to be made. Here was a large number of spectators to see baptism administered for the first time in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, as the Savior commanded. Some said, after hearing our arguments that we were right; others said, "We never were taught right before this." Here we closed the meeting on Thursday night, August 31st, with a good prospect of getting up a church, if the brethren will just put their shoulders to the wheel and help. But some of the dear brethren may say, "What do you mean, Bro. George?" I mean, let the brethren that can, go and preach; and those that can't, pay their traveling expenses, and if in limited circumstances, help them to support their families. I don't mean that they should support indolence. Some people think that a man that works is not fit to preach, but I am on the other side of the question. I think whenever a man is too lazy and too proud to work, he is not fit to preach.

On Friday, Sept. 1st, we were taken by private conveyance to Martin Co., a distance of thirty miles. Here I received a letter from home informing me that my son was taken sick. Oh, how well I would have liked to go home! But duty bound me to stay over Sunday. I left Shoals on Monday, Sept. 4th, at 3 o'clock, p. m. Arrived at Muncie at 10 p. m., walked home four miles, and found all well except a darling son, and he was able to be up. Thank the Lord for his mercies.

Echo Answers to "What are We Doing?"

I agree with Bro. B., "Where are our churches?" They are not in Oregon.—Not one church house of the Brethren has ever been built in honor of God in this plentiful land. (Psalms lv. 8—13). The majority of the brethren here are blessed with plenty. Some are worth their ten thousand dollars; others, five thousand, etc. Now what excuse can the brethren have for not having a church house? I fear the great whale of filthy lucre (the bank) is getting more than his share. Now the time has come to hold a council meeting to know where the lovefeast can be held. Now comes the test. One says, "I have had it at my place twice." Another says, "I don't want it at my house." Another, "You can have it at my house, but I have no conveniences." Now do not these things speak for a house for the Lord's service? What are we doing? Are we giving up to the Lord? (Psa. xxix. 12). Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name; worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness, in a house dedicated to his service, and not go where there is no convenience for either man or beast, for that would be a dishonor to the cause of religion. But let us do all that we do to the honor and glory of God; then we may be sure that his blessings will attend us. Faith and works must agree. We must do more for the missionary cause, and build more churches where they are needed. Give unto the Lord. Lay up your treasures in heaven. Don't be afraid to trust the Lord. You will receive double, treble, and compound interest for all that you do for the Lord. I will say of the Lord, He is my fortress; my God, in him will I trust.

AUGUST 27, 1876.

Dear Brother Editor:—We will give you some church news from this part of God's moral vineyard. Since the 3rd of March we have gained 9 by baptism and reclaimed one. One of the last ones baptized was a Free Mason and a Granger and a licensed preacher in the New Light church. He seems to be very zealous in the cause of Christ, for he is making his clothes in the order of the church. We have a fair prospect of having a minister move in here from Hardin county, Ohio. Jacob Wintmore is his name. We pray God that he may move in here, and also many other brethren, as we are strong enough to have a church organized, and it is quite likely we will have one organized this fall. The brethren that have been through our country from a distance all speak well of our land and timber.—Land is cheap and the crops are pretty good here this summer, as they usually are, and health is pretty good. Brethren, please come and see our country for yourselves, and not just take hearsay for it.

WILLOW SPRINGS, KAN., }
Sept. 2, 1876.

Dear Brother:—I Will in haste write you a few lines. We have fine and pleasant weather. Crops are good generally.—Wheat was good, but barley was a failure, on account of rust. The people are making extensive preparations for seeding wheat; but many are holding up on account of the rumors of the grasshoppers. There are many flying rumors, but the most definite news I have is that they are no nearer than one hundred miles of us. How soon they may be here I know not. Yours,
E. W. FLORY.

LIFE, GROWTH, BEAUTY.

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

Not a Dye; makes harsh hair soft and silky; cleanses the scalp from all impurities, causing the hair to grow where it has fallen off or become thin.

Can be applied by the hand as it does not stain the hand or soil the finest linen. As a Hair Dressing it is the most perfect the world has ever produced. The hair is renovated and strengthened, and natural color restored without the application of mineral substances.

Since the introduction of this truly valuable preparation into this country, it has been the wonder and admiration of all classes, as it has proved to be the only article that will absolutely without deception, restore gray hair to its original color, health, softness, lustre and beauty, and produce hair on bald heads of its original growth and color.

This beautiful and fragrant perfumed article is complete within itself, no washing or preparation before or after its use, or accompaniment of any kind being required to obtain these desirable results.

HERE IS THE PROOF OF ITS

SUPERIOR EXCELLENCE.

Read this Home Certificate, testified to by Edward B. Garrigue, one of the most competent Druggists and Chemists of Philadelphia, a man whose veracity none can doubt.

I am happy to add my testimony to the great value of the London Hair Color Restorer, which restored my hair to its original color, and the hue appears to be permanent. I am satisfied that this preparation is nothing like a dye, but operates upon the secretions. It is also a beautiful hair dressing and promotes the growth. I purchased the first bottle from Edward B. Garrigue, druggist, Tenth and Coates streets, who can also testify my hair was quite gray when I commenced its use.

MRS. MILLER.

No. 730 North Ninth St., Phila.

Dr. Swayne & Son—Respected friends: I have the pleasure to inform you that a lady of my acquaintance, Mrs. Miller, is delighted with the success of your London Hair Color Restorer. Her hair was falling rapidly and quite gray. The color has been restored, the falling off entirely stopped, and a new growth of hair is the result. E. B. GARRIGUE, Druggist, cor. Tenth and Coates, Phila.

BOSTON TESTIMONY.

July 23d, 1871.—Dr. Swayne & Son: Last winter, while in Trenton, N. J. I procured six bottles of London Hair Color Restorer, which I like very much, in fact better than anything I have used in the last nine years. If you please, send me one dozen bottles C. O. D., care of W. S. Fogler & Son, druggists, No. 723 Tremont street, Boston.

Respectfully yours,

ADA BAKER,

No. 59 Rutland Square.

"London Hair Color Restorer and Dressing" has completely restored my hair to its original color and youthful beauty, and caused a rapid and luxuriant growth.

MRS. ANNIE MORRIS,

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. THE COURSE OF WORLDLY PLEASURE.

BY B. C. MOOMAW.

Through flowery fields, a shining pathway led;

On either side the fragrant beauties spread,
And o'er the ground in lavish bounty, lay
Gems radiating with serene ray.

The sun's refulgent glories over all,
Shone with superior brightness—and the pall
Of gloomy darkness, never overspread
The verdant bowers, through which its windings led.

And mortals ravished with the bold delights,
Which lavish wealth, and dazzling glory
cites,

No more in virtues walks content to stay,
Mid gilded scenes of pleasure madly stray.

Though for awhile before the wondering eyes,

In long perspective, joys in seeming, rise;
Yet as the mirage in a desert land,
They no substantial benefits command.

Far into gloomy wastes they quickly lead;
Ner does the traveler his toiling heed.
Fixed is his maddened purpose, fixed his gaze,
On the infernal phantom's flitting maze.

Soon the dark rolling tempest gathers o'er,
And soon the dread Sinaic thunders roar;
The lightnings flash their fiery wrath on high;

Impeding horrors burden all the sky.

Where now the beauties of that flowery field,

The glowing glories, the bliss they feigned to yield;

Etendant glories of that pathway rare,
Refulgent sunshine, ever fragrant air.

Naught but the mem'ry of their sweets remain.

Their ghostly shadows haunt the maddening brain,

And sleeping conscience, slumbering now no more,

Pours on the guilty all its fiery store.

Behind them tempests rage, before them swell

The flaming terrors of an endless hell.
They turn and turn, but find no friendly ray,
Eternal night o'erwhelms the dying day.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. Giving and Receiving Honor.

BY JACOB BAHR.

"How can ye believe which receive honor one of another?" John 5: 44.

We infer from this text that to receive honor one of another is not at all consistent with the Christian religion, nor well-pleasing to the Lord; and yet we are exhorted by the apostles to prefer one another in honor. Rom. 12: 10. Paul exhorted, saying, "Let each esteem others better than himself" Phil. 2: 3. He says, "I beseech you, brethren, to know [honor] them which labor among you and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you; and to esteem [honor] them very highly in love for their work's sake." 1 Thess. 5: 12, 13. He would advise the laity to bestow double honor upon elders: "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially they who labor in the word and doctrine." 1 Tim. 5: 11. We are exhorted to "Honor widows," (1 Tim. 5: 2); to "honor the king;" yea, even to "honor all men." 1 Peter 2: 17.

When we compare the Scriptures just referred to with the text, we are constrained to believe that there must be somewhat of a mystery contained, or a special honor referred to in the text. By a careful examination of the texts above referred to, we ascertain that there are many ways of bestowing honor and likewise many different honors which may be bestowed; and the divine injunction is to render honor to whom honor is due. (Rom. 13: 7) Therefore it is a very important matter to know upon whom we should bestow honor, or, to whom honor is due; what that honor should be; of whom it is required, or by whom it should be bestowed. To understand all this properly it is necessary to examine closely each text by itself, as well as comparatively. I shall not attempt, in this article, to explain any other than the one at issue.

Reader, did you ever reflect upon this text? did you ever inquire into its signification? did you ever hear an exposition given upon it? It is a question which demands our serious and prayerful investigation. Let us, then, friendly reader, go to the fountain and draw. I will state here that I have no Commentary to guide me. The Bible is its own expositor with me. I further state that I have never heard nor seen an exposition of this text, neither in private conversation, from the pulpit or stand, nor from the press, until on last Lord's day after the reading of the 5th chapter of the gospel according to St. John. After a certain brother had delivered a short address, it became the duty of this "unworthy servant" to follow in the "word and doctrine." My mind was fastened upon the subject now under consideration. And now I will present to you the sentiments which I tried to express, and then I will leave the subject for you to decide whether or not my views are based upon the word of God.)

1. When a minister who contemplates delivering a doctrinal discourse,—say, on the subject of baptism, or on the ordinances,—or to preach a sermon on any other leading subject, endeavors first to ascertain the mind of the congregation, or of the leading men of his congregation, and then endeavors to avoid stating anything which might cross their view; when he garbles the word of God in order to gain the good will and favor of the people; and the congregation in return commend him and express gratification and satisfaction (which is not unfeignedly done), this is giving undue honor to, and receiving "honor one of another."

2. When a minister has delivered a very interesting discourse, and another brother who speaks after him eulogies him by rehearsing many things which the first brother had said, telling them that he has ably treated the subject—much better than he could have done—that it was well spoken, &c., and then one, or two, or a half dozen deacon brethren all express themselves in the same way, saying, "I am well with the remarks," &c.; and then on some other occasion this same brother who received the praise praises the brother who praised him previously, this likewise is giving and receiving "honor one of another."

3. When a speaker who is somewhat timid undertakes to preach, and tells the congregation that he did not feel able to address them to any satisfaction; that he would rather have kept his seat and heard from his brethren, knowing that the brethren present could entertain a congregation much better than he could, and he would speak only a few words and then give way to "better talent," &c.; and then these same brethren, on some other occasion, make use of the same phraseology, when, perhaps, there are no other ministers present but such as had expressed themselves in the same manner at a meeting previous, this, too, is giving and receiving honor one of another. All such compliments are useless, harmful, and injurious—are inclined rather to excite self-esteem than humility, and should be abandoned by every minister of the gospel.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

The Christian and the Sinner.

BY JAMES WIRT

There are many different titles in the Scriptures that distinguish the righteous from the unrighteous, and are often exhibited in contrast with each other, denoting their true character, as in the following passage: "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." Here the unrighteous are called "the children of this world." The phrase "in their generation" implies that the wicked in their proceedings, to attain the end and accomplish the aims they have in view, act with more wisdom and discretion than Christians do to forward the Master's cause, which is to their own best spiritual interest, and is a prominent item in the Christian warfare.

"The children of this world" are those whose minds are yet carnal, and are not illuminated with the sun of righteousness. They do not appreciate nor relish the enjoyments of the children of light; because the things of the Spirit are spiritually discerned; and as their minds are imbued with carnality, they are at enmity with their best interest. "The carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." "To be spiritually minded is life and peace." God has chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise, and He has "hid these things from the wise and prudent and revealed them unto babes."

"The children of light" are those who have tasted of the powers of the world to come, and are obedient to the requisitions of their blessed Redeemer. They are making the necessary preparation for a welcome reception in heaven among the sanctified spirits of just men made perfect. They have received this suggestive title, an ascription appropriately applied, as they are illuminated, their understanding enlightened. They "have tasted of the heavenly gift," and "the good word of God." They are "a peculiar people, zealous of good works;" and are striving to attain unto greater degrees of perfection in their high calling, losing no time and wasting no talent in the prosecution of the many duties enjoined upon them. There is a work for Christians to engage in, in order to be free from sin and its effects upon the soul, that they may "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." They are a separate people from "the children of this world," and they cannot engage in the sinful practices of the world; neither do they enjoy their pleasures and vain amusements.

How many incentives there are held forth in Holy Writ to all to live a Christian life! But all do not appreciate the advantages derived from a strict adherence to the rigid principles of truth. Instead of this, it is painful to see so many living in direct violation of Bible rules, and in open rebellion to the law of God and to Him who has loved them and has done so much for them. The sinner knows that it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God unconverted and unreformed in life and character. Christians through patience possess their souls, and are heirs of heaven with their Elder Brother, who has made them meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light, and in this life are permitted to have a foretaste of the joys and happiness in reservation in the rest that is promised to the people of God.

Acknowledgment and Forgiveness.

BY SAMUEL WEIMER

"Confess your faults one to another and pray one for another that ye may be healed. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."—JAMES v. 16.

"Take heed to yourselves; if thy brother trespass against thee rebuke him, and if he repent forgive him, and if he trespass against thee seven times a day, and seven times in a day turn again to thee, saying I repent, thou shalt forgive him."—LUKE xvii. 3, 4.

In No 46, page 722, appears an article headed "Forgiveness." I heartily agree with the writer, wishing for brethren to turn the scale and say something to the offender. In the above Scripture we learn that we are to confess or acknowledge our faults, errors or wrongs one to another. It is a positive command for us to do so. What if we do not comply with it? "For whosoever shall keep the whole law and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all."—James ii. 10. Who would dare to say that God will forgive our sins if we do not acknowledge them to him and ask pardon of him for the same. Oh, how willing God is to forgive our sins, if we come humbly before him, acknowledge, ask pardon for and refrain from our sins! Just in like manner for our brethren to forgive us if we come humbly to them and confess our faults to them. And the command is, That thou shalt forgive him if he repent. Where is the Scripture that we shall forgive them before they repent? Are we commanded to forgive them before they repent? I answer, No; but we are commanded to have forbearance, and this we should do. David says, "For I acknowledge my transgressions."—Isaiah li 3 In another place, "I acknowledge my sin unto thee"—Psalms xxxii. 5. "We acknowledge, O Lord, our wickedness."—Jeremiah xiv. 20. How easy it is for brethren to forgive when they see that the offender is sorry for what he has done, and repents and desires peace.

"Confess your faults one to another and pray one for the other, that ye may be healed." It often occurs that brethren, when they have difficulties, or one has trespassed against the other, that both are in fault; and when one goes to the other he will set up his account against the other, and neither of them is willing to confess to the other. The second party may be called on and may say, "You had better drop it and commence anew." And while the one deepest in fault may be very ready to drop it, the other wishes to have the case tried. Now because he is not as willing to drop it as the other he is called disobedient, and they should both be rebuked according to their faults, that they may repent and confess their faults one to another and pray one for another, that they may be healed. For is there any possibility of them becoming healed if they do not repent? If we say, "Drop it," each one may say or think within himself, "I was not found in fault, therefore how can I be healed?" To acknowledge our wrongs is only saying that we are wiser to-day than we were yesterday. Now, if our brother trespass against us seven times in a day and seven times in a day turn again and say, "I repent," we must forgive him; and when one trespass or transgression that he has committed against us is settled, we must never rake it up again. If we do, we are transgressing ourselves. We should have long-suffering, forbearing one another, and freely forgiving one another. "If any one have a complaint against any, even as Christ freely forgave you, so do ye."—Col. iii. 13. Now, when our brethren repent, confess their faults, we must freely forgive them. It is wrong if we show any coldness or even lukewarmness, or any unkind feeling. We must have the same respect for them, or more so, than we had before. It seems it is so hard for some to say that word, "I have done wrong." We should be willing to say it and confess your faults, and then it is not hard to forgive. Now let us comply with those gospel rules. If one trespass against us, tell him his fault; if he repent, forgive him. "Confess your faults one to another that ye may be healed."

A Pauper's Vindication.

An old fellow, who gave his name as Charles S. Slossman, was called up in a court of justice in Virginia City, on a charge of drunkenness. He was a remarkable saddy specimen, arrayed in a dirty check shirt and a pair of loose, baggy trowsers, which were prevented from falling off by a leather strap knotted about his waist. He was shivering and trembling from the effects of a well sustained debauch, and hardly had the physical strength to stand upright. When the judge asked him if he had anything to say, he rose up in a sort of disjointed way, and demanded a jury, which was granted; and when his turn came, he advanced with a shuffling tread, and, bending his eyes on his peers, began:

"Gentleman of the jury, I stand here to-day, less a defender of my own personal debasement than an example of human depravity, which, like a beacon light, should warn you from the ragged rocks of intemperance and debauchery. A man in my condition is like a rude sign-post I once saw in Tennessee, which pointed to a road over which the green was beginning to wave. On the sign was the inscription, 'Small pox,' and the index finger of a hand pointing westward. If any of you in travelling along a highway saw such a sign, you would pause upon the brink of a deadly danger and turn backward. [Sensation]

Gentleman of the jury, as you peruse the pages of the old poets, you will see how they have refined the wine cup. They have wreathed it with the flowers of fancy, surrounded it with the halo of song, and peopled its bloody depths with the creatures of their own imaginations, until one might almost believe it to be the wellspring of human happiness, when bitter experience tells us in very different language that it is the fountain head of misery, degradation and woe, the abode of the demon that destroys our very lives [Here deep sympathy pervade the jury and tears commence to be wiped away.] There is something which comes up in the fumes of the cup that fools call inspiration, but it is a cunning reptile, which crawling up from the dregs of the grape, enters the window of the brain, and steals away 'like a thief in the night,' with our reason fast in his embrace. [Here the speaker paused and took a drink of water.] There is a hand in the wine-cup, which, at any moment, may lay its iron grip upon your throat, and strangle you, as a strong man might a babe. [Here several of the jurors bowed their heads.

"Gentleman of the jury, I have not long to stay. Two mighty miners are delving on their lode, Time and Death. They are daily at their posts, working together side by side, as one eternal spirit, clearing away the rubbish of gneiss rock and pushing along the ledge. Before long I shall be gathered into the fast embrace of death, a piece of useless porphyry to be cast into the waste dumps of perdition and eternal despair." Here the old fellow pulled from his pocket a red handkerchief and began to sob. The effect was immediate and striking. The old miners and the jury moved by his appeals broke forth into a simultaneous sob, in which the court, spectators and prosecuting attorney joined. The Press reporter was so moved that he was obliged to go out. The Jury found him guilty, but recommended him to the mercy of the court. He was accordingly fined five dollars, which the Jury paid on the spot, and the old man slid out of the door with the remark, "I knew I would ketch 'em."

A subsequent investigation led to the discovery that the bum was an actor from Frisco who was just giving the Jury a touch of his profession. Here we learn a lesson from intellect in rags.—Selected from the Press by P. C. H. Puneyville, Pa.

Man's True Greatness.

"What is noble? To inherit Wealth, estate and proud degree?
There must be some other merit
Higher yet than these for me!
Something greater far must enter
Into life's majestic span.
Fitted to create and centre
True nobility in man!

What is noble? 'Tis the finer
Portion of the mind and heart,
Linked to something still diviner
Than mere language can impart,
Ever prompting,—ever seeing
Some improvement yet to plan,
To uplift our fellow-being,
And like man, to feel for man!"

True greatness consists in being noble-minded; doing unto others as we would have them do unto us, ever keeping in mind that we may help others on through this world as well as ourselves. The man who is truly great is not always famous. He may not have a great education; he may never have studied Latin, Greek or any other language besides his own; and he may not be very far advanced in mathematics, but he may be well acquainted with the nature of his fellow men and so understand them as to be able to aid them in many ways. He may thus bring them nearer to the true greatness of Christ. Such a man is not noticed so much as his friend A., who has been through college and has reached some high office. He may have obtained it by mean, selfish or unmanly acts. The man who seeks to do his fellow creatures good, who nobly sacrifices his own pleasures and feelings for those of others to raise them to a nobler and better life, is the one who possesses true greatness. What is nobler than to be always ready to help others; always greeting them with kind words and kind acts; ever striving to comfort those who mourn; to cheer the downcast, to clothe the poor, to help those in trouble, and constantly to be sowing seeds of kindness by which others may be comforted? Now most folks think that doing this is very hard; but this is not the case. Those who are engaged in such work tell us that they find more real comfort, real pleasure and satisfaction in it than words can express. They say "It is better to give than to receive." They also tell us that they love to do such work, because it is what God has commanded his people to do. It is so precious to us to know that God approves of all we do. He gives us a spirit of love for those around us so that it is a delight to work for them. We will all admit that Christ our Savior was the greatest of men; that he has set an example for all men to follow. How did he prove his greatness? Was it by any selfish motive or unmanly act? No. It was by seeking to help others, by studying the necessities of man's nature, and providing for them. We know of many who possess this true greatness; many who are sacrificing their lives to lift others. Is not that noble? Christ says, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Every one may in some way or other assist or instruct some of our fellow creatures, for the best of the human race are poor and needy. We all depend on each other. Every one can do some good. Each one has a work to do that no one else can do.

"Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime,
And, departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time."

—T. E. Good, in the Golden Censer.

Good Suggestions.

1. Have some work for Christ always before you.
2. Have a definite plan for accomplishing it.
3. Pray earnestly and constantly for success in your work.
4. Expect God's blessing on your efforts.
5. Do everything for the sake of Christ.
6. Ask everything in the name of Christ.
7. Do what you can to encourage others to work for Christ.
8. So live before those you would lead to the Savior, that your life will emphasize your words.
9. Be helpfully present at the meetings for prayer.
10. Bring with you when possible, those whom you are trying to interest in the great salvation.
11. Ask others to help you in your work by their prayers and influence.
12. Pray for and expect God's blessing upon every service.
13. Counsel with your pastor, and with other Christian helpers, as to the work before you, and how it can best be accomplished.
14. Preserve these "hints," consider them frequently, add to them such as your own observation and experience will suggest.—Rev S E. Wishard.

WHEN WE WERE GIRLS AT HOME.

Selected by Isadore Rodabaugh.

Oh! Mary, well I love to sit,
And let my memory roam
O'er many a year, long past and gone,
When we were girls at home.

Life then was a sunny way,
No care or grief e'er come
To cloud our path or chill our hearts,
When we were girls at home.

Ah! no; we lived in sweet content,
Nor thought of years to come,
When we no more should gather 'neath
The old roof tree at home.

But time hath fled, the band is broke—
Afar we all now roam,
And strangers own that dear old place—
Our happy girlhood home.

Ah sister mine, we little thought
That we should e'er become
As staid and matronly as now,
When we were girls at home.

That time should thread our hair with grey,
Should rob our cheeks of bloom,
And fill our hearts with many a care,
Ne'er known when girls at home.

But life hath many a changing way,
And all 'neath heaven's blue dome,
We knew and loved in days gone by,
When we were girls at home.

Have felt with us time's changing hand,
And when we think of some
That shared with us full many a glee,
When we were girls at home.

We can but weep to think they died
In all their girlhood bloom;
But, ah! we've lost those dearer far,
Since we were girls at home.

But, sister, life hath nothing sure—
Joy, toil or grief may come;
I've learnt to meet with patience all,
Since we were girls at home.

And ever as the spring time comes,
Our summer's flower's bloom,
My memory wanders sweetly back
To our loved girlhood home.

In thought, I see it all again,
And o'er each loved spot roam—
As we were wont to do years gone,
When we were girls at home.

A Fruitful Branch.

BY CHARLOTTE T. BOND.

Often, in our journey through life, do we meet with persons with a meek, single-hearted and unpretending appearance. In cultivating an acquaintance, we find them gifted and intelligent, far beyond our anticipation; and find them governed entirely by a holy and spiritual nature, having so little of the animal about them that they scarcely seem to feel that they belong to earth. Their thoughts seem to soar above all carnal desires. Are not these the fruitful branches? How lovely are such characters! What delightful companions to cheer us through this lowly vale of tears! After spending a few hours in such society, I have often thought that we need not wonder that "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard," nor have entered into the heart of man the joys prepared for us in that glorious home to which we are all hastening. If the company of kindred spirits gives such pleasure on earth, what will it be when we get there surrounded with thousands of those that have been purified, and whose robes have been washed in the blood of the lamb? Go into the hovels of the poor, and there you will find the fruitful branches administering to their wants. Go into the sick room; there, again, we find the fruitful branches sympathizing with suffering.

These are to be found, not in the gilded palaces of the great nor halls of the rich; for there you will find the sensual and animal predominating in its greatest extent, and will wonder if these were intended to wear the image of their great and glorious Maker. How the heart will sicken and be filled with disgust when contemplating this scene! Those upon whom God has showered the greatest earthly blessings, are thus revelling and wasting their Lord's substance, when they might do so much in the vineyard—might bring forth fruit in abundance. The fruitful branches always can find plenty of work to do. They are active and industrious. They are contented, being well aware that they are serving a true Master, and one that will never forsake them—one that knows all of their needs, and has promised to supply them; and as his word is truth itself, he cannot fail them. They have the promise, if they hold out faithfully to the end, that they will receive a crown of life. Why, then, should they not be contented and happy? Why should they not rejoice with their spiritual companions? Their greatest sorrows are occasioned by sympathy for those whom they see traveling on the broad road to destruction—who are seeking happiness where it can never be found.

If any of those poor, deluded souls should happen to see this article, let me, as a true friend and a lover of your souls, beg of you to stop and consider. Look into God's holy word; peruse it, and there learn where to find true pleasures that will last through this life and then will go with you beyond the tomb—happiness that the changes of earthly circumstances cannot affect. You will learn from the Scriptures that you must be engrafted into the true Vine, and from unfruitful branches you must become fruitful, living a Christ-like life, making it your chief aim to be a living epistle of his holy word. Thus you will gain an incorruptible crown that fadeth not away.

The fruitful branch is ever ready to aid and assist in every possible way in the spreading of the truth. They would like to be the means and instruments, in the hands of the divine Master, of arousing many to a true sense of their dangerous condition. He who is a true branch loves the souls of all his fellow-travelers to the bar of justice.

Our blessed Redeemer tells us that he came not to do his will but the will of him that sent him; and he further says that he is the true vine, his followers, the branches. If he came not to do his own will, how can his followers be fruitful branches and do their own will? The word of the true Vine must abide in the branch, or it is cast forth and withered, and, of course, is unfruitful. The idea I wish to convey is, that unless we live in strict obedience to the commands of the Savior, we are not fruitful branches; no matter what excuse we have for our disobedience, as soon as we cease to obey, we become unfruitful branches, and are severed from the true Vine. And though we may be members of the church, unless we follow the steps of Jesus, we have no part with him.

It is certainly our duty to be zealous in the cause of Christ. If we are idle, slothful members, we are sure to become unfruitful. We should act upon the principle that what we find ourselves able to do, we will do with our might. One of the main things that brought me to the Brethren is that they encourage zeal among their members, which so much coincides with my views of Christian character. I always disliked the idea of making a pretense of doing anything, and more especially where our eternal interest is concerned. We cannot deceive our Maker; and I am of the opinion that we had better not aim to become branches of the vine, if we cannot produce the fruits, for it is certain that, if we love the pleasures and good things of this world better than our divine Savior, he will not accept us, for he tells us that we must hold to no earthly tie, and love no earthly thing better than him. The love of father, mother, sister, brother, is far inferior to the love we should bear to our Lord and Master. We must forsake all for him, and love the Lord our God with all our soul, mind and strength. This kind of love will produce the fruits that each branch should bear. Our Savior says that he came not to do his own will but the will of his Father. Such are the wishes of the fruitful branch; all carnal desires are lost in the wish to do the will of the Master. The service of God is, and must be, a one-sided matter; for we are told that those that are not for the Lord are against him, and that we are either serving God truly and surely or working against the cause. The manner in which we conduct ourselves as branches of the true vine will either have a tendency to build up or injure the cause; therefore, brethren and sisters, let us be very careful that we be not a stumbling block in the way of some, and thus have ourselves cast away as unprofitable branches.

Honey.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To my Brother Valentine and family.

"In the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity." Here we have the history of the race in a single line. God is a honey God, pure and sweet, and he created man in His own image. So long as Beelzebub's shadow fell not within the gate of Eden, man was mellifluous. The great river of God, with its four heads, rolled nectar. Wherever Pison, Gihon, Hiddekel, and Euphrates flow, there everything is flooded with "the river of God's pleasure." But Satan turned the sluice of hell into the crystal stream, and made man drink his own iniquity. Ex. 32: 20. The lava-swollen tide dashed against the Throne of God, surged the Second Person of the Holy Trinity into the abyss of horror, and poured itself into the Eternal Fountain-Head, — Honey. In the first Amazon Christ was baptized, to clarify it of the ingredients of the pit, and make it a laver in the court of the true tabernacle, and finally the never-ebbing ocean of Deific blessedness in the Upper Realm.

As for Christ, so for the Christian. The honey becomes gall, and the gall honey. "In the mouth sweet, in the belly bitter." This is the "law of sin," and, because of sin, the law of God. It is the only way in which the great Physician can cure his obstinate, disease-loving, death-courting patients. The redemptive pill must be sugar coated. The medicine must be sweetened for the mouth, and embittered for the soul. But after its bitterness is spent, it turns to honey again. "No chattering for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby." Here is the little honey-book again. All the bitterness there is in it, is put there by our sin. It is the dead fly that gives us the gripes and makes us so unsavory. Eccl 10: 1. It becomes sweet just in proportion as the poison of sin is neutralized. The best food that was ever eaten is turned into poison by the natural chemistry of the body if the digestive function is deranged. So God's honey is turned into gall by our moral biliousness. To the "just made perfect" it is sweet in the mouth and sweet in the belly. "Was then that which is good made death unto me? God forbid. But sin, that it might appear sin, working death in me by that which is good, that sin by the commandment might become exceeding sinful." Rom. 7: 13. Here is God's honey-primer again. This little book serves for all generations, including the generation which began and continues in the world above the world. Acts 8: 33. Once eaten, it will bear rumination through endless ages. Neither angel nor saint can chew the cud out of God's morsel. The oftener it is remasticated, the more honey it yields. To eat that book is to eat the very God-head. John 6: 53. It is printed with the blood of Emmanuel, and both page and cover were taken out of the very marrow of Deity. God made the world out of nothing. "The things that are seen were not made of things which do appear." Heb. 11: 3. Into that nothing God put Himself. Out of the ground He made man, imparting Himself in larger measure. Out of man He made woman, infusing Himself more fully still. Out of woman He made his only-begotten Son, and "it pleased the Father that in Him should dwell all the fullness of the Godhead bodily." Col. 1: 19 and 2: 9. God has reached His limit, He has done His best, and all His fullness is concentrated in a little book which we can eat and digest, and be filled and sweetened forever with the honey of God. The tongue is to swim in honey, and the lips to drop as the honey comb. Sol. Song 4: 11. The feet must be bathed in honey, and the eyes enlightened and the strength revived by it. 1 Samuel 14: 25, 27. It becomes our merchandise, and flavors our balm, and spices, and myrrh, and almonds. Gen. 43: 11. It is the substance of our being, and the savor and essence of our intercourse with "peoples, and nations; and tongues, and kings." Rev. 10: 11. If it be all this, then will death itself be full of honey. Judges 14: 8, 9. The Christian life is a honey-stream, not without its bitter, and yet the bitter is not really of it, though in it. "Ye are complete in Him, which is the Head of all principality and power," is only another version of the same truth. Col. 2: 10. Christ's advent was a sword on earth, and yet He was the Prince of peace. He was the undiluted honey of the Divine nature, and yet He deluged Palestine with gall, in which Himself was drowned. The honey of holiness and the gall of bitterness make a tremendous ferment. Heaven is all honey, and hell all gall. No wormwood will ever be mixed in the cup of salvation, and no sweet in the chalice of damnation. At the great Leavetaste of the Eternal Brotherhood, every cup will run over with the honey of joy unspeakable and full of glory.<sup>14</sup> At the great lamentation of devils and out-cast souls, every cup will be foaming to the brim with the wrath of God. One side of the Cross drips with crystal sweetness: The other weeps in drops of burning blood and gall. O the joy immeasurable of being sweetened forever out of an exhaustless, overflowing Fountain of honey. Let us be daily chewing the little book, and crystallize<sup>15</sup> and saturate our nature with the beatitudes of the kingdom of Love.

Resurrection.

BY C. B. SPIGLER.

"If a man die, shall he live again?"

We have a few who deny such a thing as a resurrection of the dead; and hold that when man is dead that is the last of him. We find that, in general, from the earliest times, Christians maintained a resurrection of the dead. The first reference, perhaps, is this, "And he came with ten thousand saints." Deut. 33: 2, Daniel 7: 10, &c. Christ said: "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then he shall reward every man according to his work." Matth. 16: 27. Well might Job say, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth, and though, after my skin, worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." Job often glanced with an eye of faith into the future, and also often wished for death at the end of all his troubles. This plainly shows to us that he had no expectations of any temporal deliverance in this life. "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting ing life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." Daniel 12: 2. What a happy thought—to think of being finally resurrected! As a Christian I cherish that thought, and expect this happy day. May we be so fortunate as to be of that number who are going through tribulations in this world, that we may make the necessary preparation to have a part in the first resurrection.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
CRITICISM.

BY JAS. Y. HECKLER.

Some person, by mistake I presume, sent me a baby-sprinkler's paper called the "Church Messenger," published monthly in Bethlehem, Pa., from which I extract the following article verbatim, withholding the author's name.

"Since baptism is the ordinary means of regeneration (John iii. 5), and the Holy Sacrament of reception (into the church), therefore in our churches the praiseworthy custom is observed that parents bring their little ones to Baptism at once, on the first, second or third day after their birth, or even immediately after they are born, when on account of weakness fears are entertained for their life. Those, however, who have been negligent in this matter, and delay Baptism for the purpose of making splendid preparations for the same, fall into the greatest anxiety if their children die without Baptism."

In the days of the prophet Elisha, a certain man prepared a mess of pottage for the sons of the prophets to eat, but when it was prepared they could not eat thereof because there was death in the pot. As soon as they tasted the mess they found there was poison mixed with the edibles. So in the above mess of hash; there is death in it. It has been poisoned, terribly poisoned, with noxious weeds, "and abominations of the earth." When will the enemies of the cross of Christ cease to pervert the right ways of the living God?

The author of the above says, "Baptism is the ordinary means of regeneration. John 3:5." His reference for proof to his assertion reads, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." If the Savior had said to Nicodemus, "Except a child be born again when it is two, three or four days old," he can not enter into the kingdom of God, the latter would not have asked surprisingly, "How can these things be?" And if the Savior had said so, and in the same connection explained as he did, that a man or child must "be born of water and of the Spirit." then the above assertions might have some scriptural ground, if sprinkling were baptism. But the author of the above says, "Baptism is the ordinary means of regeneration." I will admit baptism to be the washing of regeneration, but I will not admit the administration of a few drops of water to be baptism at all. It is only a substitute for baptism, borrowed from the "Mother of harlots and abominations of the earth." The Savior did not say, "Sprinkle your babies when they are one, two, three or four days old," nor, "Except an infant be born again he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." But he did say, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit:"—not by dipping the end of the fingers in a little water and putting it on the sinner's head, but let him be renewed in life and practice, loathing his sins and hating his transgressions, resolved to be subject to the kingdom and government of Jesus Christ, by mortifying the works of the flesh and crucifying his carnal nature, that God can live and dwell in him and he in God. A person willing to bring all selfishness to the cross, and to live and walk in the commandments of God, will not hesitate to go into any "profucent stream" to be baptized.

But the author of the above says, "Therefore in our churches the praiseworthy custom is observed, that parents bring their little ones to baptism at once on the first, second or third day after their birth." The fables of heathen Mythology are no more absurd nor delusive than the fables and "the praiseworthy customs" of modern creed-mongers, baby-sprinklers and truth perverters: and how will the heathen rise up in judgment against this generation of hireling-preachers and church-gamblers, and condemn it, because they have the testimony of One who arose from the dead, and really is a god, in their houses, but disbelieve it and refuse to obey it.

But some delay having their infants sprinkled, "For the purpose of making splendid preparations," "for the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life," which is abomination in the sight of God, and the day that is coming will consume the stubble and leave them neither root nor branch.

The whole generation of baby-sprinklers say baptism is instituted in the place of circumcision which was administered on the eighth day according to the Mosaic ritual, and to males only, but they disregard the time and the sex, and "on the first, second or third day" sprinkle males and females, contradicting themselves, and making the merits of Christ void and of no effect, by substituting sprinkling instead of baptism for the purpose of taking away sins where none have been committed yet by the innocent children.

Reason in Religion.

The office of reason is important, though subordinate. Recognizing the infallible authority of the Divine Word and conscious of her own finite power she admits the incomprehensible in matters of experience as well as (in all others matters) of faith.

The only demand she makes is, "What saith the Lord?" To what is revealed she readily assents. Do the Scriptures teach the influence of the Holy Spirit, convincing men "of sin, of righteousness and of judgment?" She doubts not the experience. Do they declare the fact and necessity of the new birth, saying, "Ye must be born again?" She asks not, "How can these things be?" Do they speak of Satanic agency and the influence of temptation? She accepts the mystery. Looking into the world of nature, she contemplates facts of whose existence she is perfectly conscious, but their mystery baffles the highest exercise of her power. "The wind bloweth where it listeth, she hears the sound thereof, but cannot tell whence it cometh or whither it goeth." She knows, but she understands not. Of the fact she enjoys a conscious experience, but she fathoms not the depth of its mystery. Possessing equal consciousness of the mysteries of the spiritual kingdom, she confesses their existence with equal candor and propriety. Thus reason acknowledges, without the least dishonor to her noble character, the wonderful facts of spiritual experience.

Another use of reason in religious experience and one of a very practical character is to preserve us from the wild fancies of fanaticism. Acknowledging, as we have seen, the authority of the Scripture standard, reason brings all religious professions to this test. The character of these experiences and the evidences by which they are justified, she critically examines according to the testimony of the divine oracles. "She proves all things" by this standard, "and holds fast that which is good." A sober judgment restrains a heated imagination, and truth is seen in her proper character. Such is the excellent use of reason in religious experience, but who does not deplore the fact that her kind office is frequently despised, and she is denied any "lot or part in the matter." Multitudes, rejecting her aid, become the victims of superstitious fancies and dangerous deceptions. They are the subjects of extraordinary experiences. They hear strange sounds and see wonderful visions, and tell with real conviction of their truthfulness the marvellous experiences of their religious life.

But reason in religious duty is further needful in deciding its performance. To impel us to the performance of duty, Divine influence affects both the mind and heart, the judgment and the emotions. Hence every duty appeals to our reason as well as our affections. If the judgment be convinced, duty is obvious and should be promptly discharged.

And how true is it that practical religion loses at once its strength and uniformity, when the convictions of judgment are disregarded. It becomes feeble and spasmodic, uncertain and irregular. We need not recur to the past for illustrations of this fact. The living present abundantly confirms it. Observing the Church life of to-day, what do we find? We see thousands of church members refusing to perform the most imperative duties of religion—duties of which they have the clearest and fullest convictions merely because they are not impelled by strong feeling. They neglect attendance upon public worship, the social means of grace, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, the reading of the Scriptures, and prayer, both family and private. Why? They simply don't feel like doing them. A Sabbath school is organized. They ought to go, but they do not, because they have not the feeling. Teachers are wanted in the school. They have talent and ability, and their service is desired and sought. Every consideration—the salvation of the youth, the prosperity of the Church, the good of the community and their own growth in grace, urges the claim of this service. Reason is convinced. They know it is their duty, but they will wait until they feel like it. The ministry is to be supported and the benevolent agencies of the Church ask their aid. Duty is apparent. Reason says, "Do it." But they lack emotional impulse, and the duty is not performed. Under the influence of impassioned eloquence arousing their feelings to a high pitch of enthusiasm, they might act, but the emotions receive no such inspiration and reason pleads in vain. May God help us to trample under foot that enthusiastic doctrine that commits the important duties of religious life to the exclusive control of our feelings, and may we and the whole Church both by precept and example illustrate the true office of reason in religious duty.

One point only now remains to be considered. The province of reason in religious worship. And here, as in every other department of religion, reason accepts the light of divine revelation. This revelation teaches us whom to worship and how to worship. It makes known to men the living and true God, the Maker and Preserver of all things, the Redeemer and Judge of men, and the bountiful giver of all good. "He is God alone," eternal, all-wise and Almighty, "of purer eyes than to behold iniquity." "Just and true in all his ways." His goodness is infinite and his "mercy ever lasting." And He only is the object of religious worship. We are further taught in this revelation that we have access to Him through Jesus Christ, the only Mediator and, in his name, may offer up "in spirit and in truth" our prayer and praise. Reason acknowledges with gratitude such a revelation, for without it, she "ignorantly worships the unknown God." But what is her office in this worship? What province does she hold in the performance of so high and sacred responsibility? That she has a place in religious worship, the revelation she admits, determines. In the duties of prayer and praise, the use of reason is required and enjoined. Men are instructed to pray and sing with the understanding. In these acts of worship the mind as well as the spirit is to be employed. And how noble the employment of the mind in contemplating the divine character! How needful to a right apprehension of his glorious attributes! And, as regards the matter and manner of our offerings, how important the aid of reason in these holy exercises! Without it the grossest improprieties occur. The spirit may be sincere, but the understanding is unfruitful and the worship neither appropriate nor intelligent.—Atlanta Advocate.

Idolatry.

BY SOLOMON GILBERT.

"And I said unto them, Whosoever hath any gold, let them break it off. So they gave it me: then I cast it into the fire, and there came out this calf." Exodus 32 : 24.

Surely Aaron, the priest of God, was in a great strait in the wilderness. Their leader, Moses, had gone up into the mount for forty days and nights, and thirst and starvation were facing them. No wonder they thought they were in a deplorable situation, if they had lost sight of Moses and God. Then they began to urge Aaron, the priest, to make a god, and he tried it, and it came out a calf. Let us look at a calf—right in its face—and what is it? When we are not satisfied in the way God made us and the way Christ set the example for us; if we lose sight of our leader, Jesus Christ; and lose faith in God and begin to urge the priest to make a god to go before us; and if he tries to make any god, or rule, or order that is not contained in the gospel, look right into its face and see whether it does not look like a calf or some other idol. Christ rose with the same body that was laid in the tomb; but when he rose he had a spiritual body—he could come in when "the door was shut."

Our Foolhardiness.

David prayed, "O God thou knowest my foolhardiness." We all have need to pray to be kept from foolish acts; for foolishness as the Scripture teaches, being bound in the heart of a child, is by no means always driven far from him by the rod of correction. That rod, indeed, is often unwisely applied, and scarcely less unwisely unapplied. And so, the child grows up still foolish. And rod or no rod, we are all more or less foolish through life.

We foolishly repine at our lot; we object to the Lord's weather, to his superintendance of our affairs. We indulge foolish dispositions toward our fellow men, envying their success, and rejoicing at their failures. We foolishly, like willful children, insist upon having our way, and pout and fume, like Jonah, when we cannot. We foolishly wish to take the government into our own hands, and practically say that God does not know how to make laws, nor how to save sinners, nor how to dispose of mankind hereafter. We seem humbly and submissively to say, "thy will be done," when we do not half mean it; and perhaps, object, the very first time after that prayer, when God crosses our path. We are liable to say foolish things, or to say wise things in a foolish manner, when we assay to do good. We may not in our eagerness, time things well; we may press a point too feebly, or too forcibly; we may be so deferential as to induce doubts of our own full sincerity; we may be so harsh as to add to men's natural dislike of religion. We may be foolishly reticent, and lose precious opportunities; or so forward to speak, as to repel the sinners we meant to win. We may cherish foolish regrets, unfitting for present duty, * * * or not less foolishly reject the useful lessons the past would read to us. Oh who can reckon up the occasions when we need to pray for a wise and understanding heart? Golden Censer.

For The Young.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Kindness to the Aged.

BY C. A. ULRICH.

There is no trait or virtue in which the character and temper of one's disposition is so apparent as that exercised in contributing to the happiness and comfort of those who are in the autumn of life, and who have grown feeble and inactive; for you know not what sufferings they may have endured, what trials and difficulties they have met in their experience, nor what is yet to be their portion.

Congeniality and true kindness never lose their effect though they may be ever so little, upon the hearts and minds of those with whom we come in contact. If they are only exercised in that cheerfulness, benignity of nature that characterizes the soul possessed with sympathy, affection, and a compassionate desire to alleviate the distress and sufferings of those who are destitute of strength sufficient to enable them to help themselves. If they require aid, give it with cheerfulness. Forget not that the time may come when you also may desire the same assistance from others that you render to them. Do all that is needful for the old, and do it with alacrity; and think not hard if much is required at your hands, lest when age sets its seal on your brow, and fills your limbs with trembling, others may wait upon you unwillingly, and feel relieved when the coffin has covered you forever.

During the past few months the residence of an aged and afflicted sister, who might very appropriately, be styled a mother in the church, for the long years of constancy and devotion to the upbuilding of the faith of the Brethren in Christ, has been a home to us, and we have sat by her bedside, almost daily, trying to cheer up and diminish the chill of her ebbing life by words of sympathy, feeling, and in contributing what little services we could in the way of assisting her feeble frame to move from one point to the other in her room, which seems to be a great relief to her. Her affliction was caused by a severe fall, almost a year ago, instrumental in breaking her hip, and the long confinement that has been hers to endure, has become so irksome and tedious, at times, that a message from the Blessed Master she lives in, "Go up higher," and be relieved from your sufferings, and this vale of tears and sorrow that the world is subjected to, would apparently be a welcome crown to the happiness in store for her. We have often heard her feeble voice lifted to God in prayer, when she probably thought no one was near, and could commune with Him in secret, without any interruption—that earnest prayer that comes from the heart of a soul trusting in God, looking to Jesus, as her comforter and her all; and with that fortitude and firmness of mind and soul that makes up the life of a true Christian, submitting all her afflictions and trials to the mercies of her Lord and Savior.

Dear reader, let me entreat you, especially those who are yet in the spring-time of life, never to murmur when your aged grand-parents would advise you. Never refuse to listen to them, even though you think your book-knowledge has enlightened you so much as to make them your inferiors, and their advice of little consequence. Their experience may teach you more and better things than some of the books you might have read.

When you confer upon them any little kindness do not contribute it with a view of its returning to you in the way of compensation, or recompense, after their spirit has left this wicked world and fled home to a land of eternal happiness, and their bodies are laid in the cold and silent tomb, to be forgotten perhaps before its features have lost their once loved sweetness of expression and sympathy for those who were once dear to them upon earth before death claimed them as its own.

Be true to them in your actions, and to everybody that you meet. Do not assume a hypocritical trait toward your friends and fellow-men, as a means of gain; for it is only a wretch and vagabond that would take advantage of kindness shown him.

If hospitality and generosity be conferred upon you by any, no difference who they be, never, when you go away from their homes, speak ill of them, and find fault when some little disappointment has crossed your path that you probably brought on yourself by a disregard for a true appreciation of what has been extended to you by their kind hands in the past.

Deception with imposition is one of the most ungrateful and treacherous traits that a person can possess. Let us, then, my dear young readers, endeavor in the future to live that pureness and honesty of heart toward everybody, and especially to those who are tottering on the verge of the grave, that we will not only gain favor with God, but our fellow-men. May God bless us all to this end, and incline our hearts to a more strict observance of the noble trait and virtue of kindness.

Health Better than Wealth.

Little Martin was a poor boy who had no father or mother. He earned his bread by going on errands. One day on his way home, he sat down to rest, and to eat his piece of dry bread, near the door of an inn. As he sat there a fine carriage drove up, and the master of the inn came out to serve two gentlemen who were in it. One of them was very young—not much older than Martin—and Martin thought to himself that he should like to be in his place. When he looked at his own crust of bread and his worn clothes, and then at their fine things, he could not help saying aloud:

"Oh dear, I wish I had that young gentleman's grand coach. I wish I could change places with him."

The other gentleman, who was the boy's tutor, heard this and told it to his pupil, who made signs to Martin to come to him.

"So, little boy," said he, "you would like to change places with me, would you?"

"I beg pardon, sir," said Martin "I did not mean any harm by what I said."

"I am not angry," said the young gentleman, "I only wish to know if you are willing to change places with me."

"Oh, now you are joking," said Martin; "no one would wish to change places with me, and walk so many miles each day, and have nothing to eat but a dry crust."

"Well," said the young man, "I will give you all I have, if you will give me all that you have, and that I have not."

Martin did not know what to say; but the tutor told him to speak freely.

"Oh, yes," said Martin then; "I will change places with you."

But when the young gentleman stepped out, Martin saw that he was very lame. His legs were bent so that he had to walk upon crutches. His face was pale and thin too, like that of one that was often ill. Martin then began to think that health was better than a fine carriage.

"Will you change places with me now?" asked the youth. "I will give you all that I have to be strong like you."

But Martin said, "Oh, no; not for the world."

"I would gladly be poor," said the young man, "if I could run like you; but as it is God's will I should be lame, I try to be happy and thankful I am."

WE hold to earth and earthly things by so many more links of thought, if not affection, that it is far harder to keep our view of heaven clear and strong; when this life is so busy, and, therefore, so full of reality to us, another life seems by comparison unreal. This is our condition, and its peculiar temptations, but we must endure it and strive to overcome them, for I think we may not try to flee from it.—Dr. Arnold.

PRIVATE devotions and secret offices of religion are like the refreshing of a garden with the distilling and petty drops of a water-pot; but addressed from the temple, are like rain from heaven.—Jeremy Taylor.

RULES FOR AGENTS.

1. At the head of every letter give the name of your own post-office, county and State; and the date on which it is written.
2. Write the name and give the full address of every subscriber you send, as legibly as you can.
3. Write "New" before the names of all new subscribers.
4. In ordering a change of address, give the post-office, county, and State, to which the paper is sent, as well as the post-office, county, and State to which it is to be sent.
5. Do not mix up different items of business; but take up and finish one item before you take up another.
6. Write items intended for publication on a separate slip.
7. Make every lawful effort to obtain subscribers, and to do good in whatever way you can.
8. Send money by drafts, post-office money orders, or registered letters.
9. Observe the above rules, and you will expedite business, save us from much trouble, and yourselves and our subscribers from disappointments and vexation.

"SHE DID NOT MISS IT."

We have a commendable example of self denial and missionary zeal in a few brethren and sisters in Hancock county, Ohio, whose contributions to the Danish and the Stein fund are reported in our paper of last week. "Here is a mite," said the sister who sent the contributions, "from a few of us who have laid by our savings, for the missionary cause." Of one of the contributors it is said, she "put away her savings a little at a time, sometimes ten cents, and again twenty cents, or twenty-five, until she had laid by four dollars; and she did not miss it." This is an excellent way to contribute for the purpose of raising funds for any worthy cause. A little put by each day or each week, for some length of time, will amount to a considerable sum. There is much propriety in this course. The principle is a gospel one: "Upon the first day of the week," says the Apostle Paul, 1 Cor. ii. 3, "let every one of you lay by him in store, as God has prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come. And when I come, whosoever ye shall approve by your letters, them will I send to bring your liberality unto Jerusalem."

But we designed in writing this article to give expression to some thoughts suggested by the sentence, "She did not miss it." The thoughts, however, which we offer, are not intended by any means for those connected with the occasion and language which suggested them. When our contributions to promote worthy and useful enterprises can be given in a way that we do not miss them, it is all right. So those whom our gifts are designed to benefit, are really benefited, our main object is answered. But what if we do miss the things or money contributed to promote the welfare of others? Should that circumstance prevent us from giving, or make us contribute less? By no means. May not the act be much more Christianlike, and be much more approved of by heaven, if it is something that we miss, and that was valuable to us, but for the sake of relieving the needy or suffering, we deny ourselves of something that was a pleasure or a comfort to us, or of something that we consider valuable? It certainly may. The two mites which the poor widow cast into the treasury, she missed very much, no doubt, because they were all she had. The rich who cast in their mites, did it "of their abundance"—and they did not miss it. Who was most deserving of a blessing in return, and who received the greatest blessing, the widow or the rich men? Evidently the widow. And what did our Redeemer give as a ransom for us? It was not something that he did not miss, but it was his own precious life—all that he had to give, and in giving it, what agony he endured!

We should then understand heaven's rule for rewarding those that give. The greater the sacrifice and self denial which a gift costs, the greater will be its value in the estimation of heaven, provided it is given for a heavenly purpose and from a heavenly motive. And the greater will be the enjoyment and satisfaction of such self-denying givers. Then, when circumstances require it, and we can give, either out of our abundance, or by laying aside a little now and then, and not miss it, if we do it to the glory of God and to promote the well-being of his creatures, we shall not lose our reward. And even if we shall greatly miss what the occasion greatly requires, and like our blessed Savior, be called upon to lay down our lives to subserve the purposes of God, our reward will be exceeding great.

The following circumstance illustrates the idea which we design to present in our remarks: "A young man, who had lately suffered the amputation of one of his legs, asked alms at the door of a poor but pious widow. She invited him into her house to warm himself; and, after some conversation, presented him with a farthing, the last, and indeed only money she possessed in the world. Shortly afterwards, a gentleman called to inquire after her. At his departure he put half a crown into her hand; and being almost overpowered by this unexpected present, the tears flowing plentifully from her eyes, the gentleman asked the cause of her excessive joy, when she simply related what had passed, and he rejoiced with her, that Providence had sent him to pay the interest for her loan, and relieve her in "the time of need." And we may yet add, that contributions given to the Lord, to promote his benevolent purposes in any of the branches of Christian labor, when they are much missed, or are sweetened by the incense of self-denying love, will receive from the Lord the largest interest.

"FROM THE POOR HOUSE TO HEAVEN."

A minister once visited one of the members of his flock, who was in the poor-house. She had passed the ordinary age, and was noted for her piety, and was approaching the time of her departure.—While he was conversing with her on her hope, and on the comforts of religion, of which she enjoyed many, he noticed an unusual lustre glowing on her countenance, and expression of joy and triumph sparkling in her eyes. Calling her by name, he said, "Will you tell me what thought it was that passed through your mind, which was the cause of your appearing so joyful?" She replied, "Oh, I was just thinking what a change it will be from the poor-house to heaven!"

The change "from the poor-house to heaven!" how suggestive the thought! It will be a great change, a desirable change, a glorious change! And how many of God's poor have experienced this change, if we allow, as we justly may, the poor-house to represent, not only those public establishments for the support of the poor, but those also in which the poor, subject to the inconveniences, deprivation, and afflictions of poverty, ordinarily dwell? When we contemplate some of those scenes of poverty, where parents have large families to support, and as it frequently happens and especially in times and places in which there is a depression of business, there is a scarcity of employment, and consequently no means for procuring the necessities of life. Then comes want with its various and painful deprivations, accompanied, perhaps, as is not unfrequently the case, with sickness. And then follow wakeful nights and wearisome days. It is true the angel of peace with his comforting presence may be there, and he does much to counteract the effects of the sorrows and troubles of poverty, which are felt if not feared in that humble dwelling. How cheering and consoling, then, is the thought to the Christian father and mother, who are "troubled on every side, yet not distressed; perplexed, but not in despair; cast down, but not destroyed," to think that they shall go from such a scene where painful hunger, chilling cold, and the bitter fruits of poverty and want are experienced, to their Father's house where "there is enough and to spare," and "where they shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne, shall feed them, and shall lead them into living fountains of waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." Is it any wonder that the countenance of the saint glows with heavenly lustre, at the thoughts of changing the ills of poverty, earth and sin, for the riches and glories of heaven?

But Christians have not only gone "from the poor-house to heaven," but they have gone from the dungeon to heaven. And as no doubt the countenances of Paul and Silas were aglow with the rapture of soul they felt when in the prison at Philippi, and when they prayed and sang praises to God, had they been asked what thoughts were occupying their minds, they, too, might have replied, "Oh, we were just thinking what a change it will be from the prison to heaven!" And it was the great and sublime thought of exchanging the painful surroundings by which he was surrounded, when he met death as a martyr for an "inheritance of the saints of light," that helped to make the face of Stephen glow with heavenly radiance, in the immediate prospect of death in its most terrible form. And had he been asked for a reason for his angelic countenance, he might have replied, "Oh, I was just thinking what a change it will be from my present condition of persecution and suffering to heaven!"

And this thought, with its joy-inspiring influence, of changing our present condition of suffering, from whatever cause it may arise, for heaven, is a thought common to every Christian, in whatever condition of life he may be, if he is in a state of readiness, waiting the Master's call to a higher and more honorable position in his kingdom, and if as a wise scribe he "is instructed unto the kingdom heaven," and has learned the art of making a judicious and practical application of "the exceeding great and precious promises of the gospel. And what a precious thought it is, to think of changing the sorrows of earth for the joys of heaven! And how desirable that each one of us can say in regard to our condition of suffering, temptation, labor, and sorrow, "I was just thinking, what a change it will be," from this bed of affliction—from this field of arduous labor, from my fiery trials, or from my annoyances in life which so much disturb my peace of mind, or from whatever the cause of our trouble may be—to heaven! And this great thought that fills every soul that possesses it with joy, and that frequently brightens the countenances with a heavenly radiance, may be yours, kind reader, if you are Christ's and if he is yours.

PLUMCREEK NORMAL SCHOOL.

The brethren and friends who have started this school are laboring to give it permanency. We have just received a letter from Bro. Kimmell informing us that the school will open on the 30th of October, for a term of twenty weeks. An advertisement of the school will appear in our next. He also informs us that Prof. Miller, one of the professors of the school, is traveling at this time for the promotion of its interests. We hope he will meet with a cordial reception from all those upon whom he calls. Professor Miller is not a member of our fraternity, but he is in warm sympathy with us in the doctrine we maintain, and we hope to have his help in promoting the cause of Christianity as well as of education.

THE BRETHERN AT WORK.

We have received the first number of this new periodical, published by a number of our brethren at Lanark, Ills., a notice of which has already appeared in our paper. It makes a very respectable appearance, and is filled with readable matter. It has quite a number of brethren, and also one sister, on the editorial staff, and with such a force, and a worthy object in view, it will be likely to be a success. We hope it may do good.

We wish to be more explicit in a remark we made in our former notice of of this new paper of our brethren.—When we said, "Some of the brethren in the West urged a consolidation of some of our papers," we did not mean any of the brethren who have started this enterprise.

Querists' Department.

BRO. QUINTER:—Will you please explain Heb. xii. 1, and more particularly "the sin which doth so easily beset us"?

ANSWER.—The verse referred to reads thus: "Wherefore, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us."

1. Compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses. It is probable the Apostle has reference to the Grecian games. These games consisted in such exercises as leaping, wrestling, foot races, chariot-races, &c. The exercises were performed in a large amphitheatre, around which large crowds of persons assembled to witness the performances. And it is said that those who were successful in the morning in winning the prizes, did not receive them until the evening, but remained on the ground, looking at those who engaged in the combats which followed those in the morning. The apostle in a beautiful and expressive figure, represents the ancient patriarchs, prophets, judges, kings, and faithful men and women, mentioned in the preceding chapter, who had been successful combatants in the great struggle life, in the preceding ages of the world, and were now resting from their holy labors, and watching anxiously to see how the Christian combatants in the Christian race acquitted themselves in their races for the crown of life. These spectators are represented as a cloud because of the greatness of their number. Cloud seems to be used in this sense in Ezekiel xxxviii. 9, where it is said, "Thou shalt ascend and come like a storm, thou shalt be like a cloud to cover the land, thou, and all thy bands, and many people with thee."

They are called witnesses, 1st. Because they, by their example and testimony, bore witness to the power, virtue and excellency of faith, showing how it sustained them in their trials and afflictions, and made them more than conquerors through the power of God. They were God's witnesses to prove his love and care to his people. 2nd. They are also spectators, watching us, and that with intense interest, to see us running our race, and anxious to see us reach the goal as successful combatants for the crown of life. And the thought that we are watched by such clouds of spectators, should increase our zeal and stimulate us to put forth every effort to win the prize.

2. Let us lay aside every weight. Here is allusion again to the combatants, and probably to those who run foot-races in the exercises. In order to have all in their favor that they possibly could, the contestants laid aside everything that might be a hindrance to them. The word in the original means an encumbrance, and is used to show that Christians in running the heavenly race should put away from them everything that would in any way, and in any degree, be an obstacle in their way of holiness; such as "the lusts of the flesh, the lusts of the eye, and the pride of life." And even things that are lawful and right in themselves, may be carried to excess and abused, and thus become a weight to retard our progress in the divine life. Worldly business, to a certain extent, is necessary for all Christians to pursue, living under the state of things we are living under in the world. But there is great danger of its becoming a weight or hindrance to our progress in the divine life. Wealth may be a blessing to its possessor, and increase his facilities for doing good. But to many Christians, no doubt, it is a weight, a snare, and an evil. The spirit of the Apostle's admonition should teach us to guard against an excess in everything, and an entire abstinence from whatever is evil, neither touching nor tasting it.

3. The sin which doth so easily beset us. Dr. Maconight translates the passage, The sin easily committed, or which stands conveniently around us. This besetting sin may be the sin of our constitution, of our education or habit, or of our profession or calling in life. It seems to be that sin which from some circumstance or other gives us the most annoyance, and which we are the most likely to commit. What we mean by its being constitutional, is a constitutional tendency toward some evil—a natural infirmity. The different passions in some people are very strong. How easily are some vexed or made angry. The slightest provocation awakes this passion. Anger, then, may be the besetting sin of such. There are other passions that may become equally annoying, troublesome, and dangerous. The sin of education or habit is that which the circumstances and associations with which we have been connected or surrounded, have planted, developed, or confirmed. A man habituates himself to the use of intoxicating drink, and forms a morbid appetite for the beverage, and becomes an occasional if not an habitual drunkard. And drunkenness may be his besetting sin, to overcome and lay aside which may require his constant watchfulness. The home education or the associations of some young lady may have made her proud and vain. She is brought to see and feel the necessity of a holy life, and she endeavors to live such a life; but her pride gives her much trouble, for awhile, at least, and is her besetting sin. The professional besetting sin, is that which may be connected with our profession or calling in life. The profession of the ministry has its besetting sins. The profession of a minister is one of honor and dignity. Hence the Apostle's admonition, "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor." And because the office is one of honor, and he who fills it is worthy of honor, there is danger of the minister becoming proud and exalted. And when the apostle is giving direction for the selection of elders, among the cautions he gives is this: "Not a novice, lest being lifted up with pride he fall into the condemnation of the devil." 1 Tim. iii. 6. Pride, then, may be the besetting sin to some connected with the ministerial profession. Among the ministers of our own fraternity jealousy may be the besetting sin of some. It is not an uncommon circumstance for one of our congregations to have several ministers. And when this is the case, great care is necessary or jealousy will arise among the ministers. Those may become affected by it who were free from it before they entered the ministry. And because the profession which they are following exposes them to this sin, we call it a professional sin. Men of other professions and callings are exposed to the same sin of jealousy. There being considerable competition in all branches of business, those engaged in the same business and in the same locality, are likely to become jealous of one another unless they are on their guard.

We regard, then, as our besetting sin that sin to which we are most exposed, or which seems to be the nearest to us, or which we are most likely to commit.—Some regard the sin of unbelief as the besetting sin of all men. It is true it was the national besetting sin of the Jews, and the same of many of the individual Jews, and it is no doubt the besetting sin of Gentile Christian, too, but that unbelief is the one besetting sin of all men, we have not so understood the Apostle.

We make two practical observations upon the besetting sin. 1. Whatever may be its character, or cause, whether it be constitutional, educational, or professional, it must be laid aside, if we would succeed in the Christian race and win the prize. The indulgence in any sin is a stain upon the Christian character, a hindrance to his progress and improvement in the divine life, and endangering to his salvation. Consequently it should be laid aside, whatever labor and sacrifice it may cost to do it. 2. As we are admonished to lay aside "the sin that doth so easily beset us," it is very manifest that it can be laid aside. Then we have encouragement to make the effort to lay it aside, to put it away, or to overcome it, by the proper use of the blood of Christ, and of the grace of God, to both of which we have access. Even "the sin that doth so easily beset us" may be laid aside.

Let us run with patience the race that is set before us. The word patience here means endurance and perseverance. And the object of the apostle seems to be to encourage his brethren to persevere in their Christian course. The patience and endurance to which they are exhorted, imply difficulties. But these should not discourage them, since there is a great cloud or multitude who have gone before and bear witness to the interesting fact that fallen men and women may, by the redemptive power of Christ, overcome all the obstacles that sin has thrown into the path of duty, and "run in the ways of God's commandments," "come off more than conquerors, and "sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the kingdom of God." "This honor have all the saints."

Centennial Christian Homes.

This arrangement to provide for Centennial visitors good accommodations at low rates in private families, is proving quite a success. By letter or in person, from five hundred to one thousand persons are daily seeking for assignment to a home. As accommodations are thus offered for twenty thousand people, churches, Sunday-schools, and other large parties are being provided for in houses adjacent to each other. Near one thousand of these homes are along the steam car routes by which the Exposition is reached in from ten to twenty minutes for about eight cents.

As prices for boarding range from $5 to $14 a week, and from $1 to $2.50 a day, all classes are suited, and the comforts and conveniences of a home enjoyed.—Edwin M. Long, a Presbyterian clergyman, superintends the movement. Apply by letter or in person at his Office, S. E. corner of Twelfth and Berks streets, Philadelphia, Penna. The Office is directly east of the Exhibition—is open day and night, and can be easily reached by street cars from any Depot.

Knowing that many of our readers, if they do not expect to visit the Centennial Exposition themselves, have friends who will, and who would be pleased to have the help that is offered in the foregoing arrangement, we give it room.

B.

In a private letter dated at Hill Valley, Pa., Sept. 11th, Brother S. H. Bashor says: "Agreeably to arrangement, we met the brethren here on Friday evening, 8th inst., and commenced meetings which continued over Sunday. The meetings were well attended, and the interest seemed to be growing deeper at each succeeding appointment. On Sunday it rained all day without intermission; yet the congregations were more than ordinarily large. In the afternoon we gathered at the water's side, where ten of the most exemplary and intelligent young men and women of this vicinity were immersed in the name of Jesus, and three of more advanced age, making in all thirteen. God give them grace to hold out faithful till his voice calls them to rest. To-day I leave for Philadelphia, where it is ordained for me to preach the word for some days. We pray God to grant his presence in our meetings. The grace of God rest upon you all."

Protestant Churches in Chicago.

From the report of the Chicago Bible Society, are gleaned the following interesting facts in relation to Protestant churches in that city :

The Methodists seem to have been first on the ground, and organized a class here as early as 1831. Rev. Jesse Walker and Rev. S. R. Biggs, the latter of whom is still living, were the first preachers.

In 1833 Rev. Jeremiah Porter (who is still performing efficient service) came here from Sault St. Marie, with the troops that went to garrison old Fort Dearborn and organized the First Presbyterian Church, composed of a few officers and soldiers belonging to the fort, and a few citizens who had originally settled here.

In October of the same year, the First Baptist church was organized; in 1835 St. James Episcopal, and in 1836 the Church of the Messiah, (Unitarian).—These were all that existed four years later, when the population had increased to 5,000.

The total number of Protestant churches organized in Chicago until the present time, is 226, of which 197 continue to exist and twenty-nine have disbanded.

Below is a statement of the number of churches formed by each denomination, the number now existing, and the number of pastors who have served them for longer or shorter periods :

Power of the Whale.

If the whale knew its own power, he could easily destroy all the machinery which the art of man could devise for catching him, and it would only be necessary for him to swim in a straight line on the surface in order to break the thickest rope, but instead, on being struck with a harpoon, he obeys a natural instinct, which, in this instance, betrays him to his death. Sir Humphrey Davy, in his "Salmonia," observes that a whale, not having an air bladder can sink to the lowest depths of the ocean, and mistaking the harpoon for the sword of a swordfish or the teeth of the shark, he instantly descends, this being his manner of freeing himself from these enemies, who cannot bear the pressure of a deep ocean; and from ascending and descending in a small space, he thus puts himself in the power of the whaler. If we include the pressure of the atmosphere, a body at the depth of 100 feet would sustain sixty pounds on the square inch, while one at 4,000 feet, a depth by no means considerable, would be exposed to a pressure of 1,830 pounds. We need not therefore be surprised that on the foundering of a ship at sea, though its timbers part, not a spar floats to the surface; for if the hull has sunk to a great depth, all that is porous is penetrated with water, or is greatly compressed Scoresby states that when, by entangling the line of the harpoon, a boat was carried down by the whale, it required, after the boat was recovered, two boats to keep it at the surface. As soon as the whale dives after having been wounded, it draws out the line or chord of the harpoon, which is coiled up in the boat, with very considerable velocity. In order, therefore, to prevent any accident from the violence of this motion, which might set the side of the boat on fire, one man is stationed with an ax to cut the rope asunder, if it should become entangled, while another, furnished with a mop, is constantly cooling with water the channel through which it passes.

Burning a God in China.

You know the people in China have a great many gods. Some of them are images made of clay, or wood, or stone, or some metal, and are kept in large, beautiful temples. But there is one—a paper god—which we find in every home; and about this one I want to tell you.

It is called the "kitchen god," and is only a rude, bright-colored picture, on coarse, thin paper, pasted up on the wall, inside a little shrine. There is always a shelf before it, with a pot of ashes standing upon it. The people do not pray to this god; but they worship it by lighting little sticks of incense, and setting them up in the pots of ashes, and getting down on their hands and knees before the god, and knocking their heads on the ground two or three times. This they do morning and evening generally; but in some families they are very careless about it, and sometimes, for weeks together, do not worship at all. But if any one in the family is taken sick, or if any trouble comes, they are very apt to think it is because they have neglected the "kitchen God," and so they begin to worship it again.

They think that this god watches over the family, and that he sees and hears what they do and say. The strangest thing about it I have not yet told you.—Just before New Year there comes a day when, in every home, the "kitchen god" is taken down and burned up. The people say that they send their god up to heaven to report what they have done during the year. With him they burn little pieces of brown paper, cut to represent ladders on which he is to go up.—They know, of course, that they have done a great many wrong things which they do not want reported; so, the morning before the god is to be sent up, they bring an offering of molasses candy, in balls, on a plate, and set it before him, leaving it there all day. The god cannot eat it, of course; but they say it is to stick his lips together so that he cannot tell the wrong things they have done.—In the evening after they have burned him up, they eat the candy themselves. Then, after a few days, they buy a new god, and put it up in place of the old one.

And these poor people do not know any better way to get rid of their sins than this, because no one has ever told them of Jesus, who died to save us from our sins, and who is so willing to forgive us when we ask him. Would you not like to go and tell them about this dear Savior, so that they, too, may be forgiven and saved?—Missionary Echoes.

We find in the American Missionary, items showing the relative cost of peace and war with the Indians. Under a peace policy our government is paying 5,000,000 per year to and for the Indians. War in Florida cost 1,500 lives and $50,000,000, or the life of one white man and 33,000 for each warrior engaged. The Sioux war of 1856-'57, cost several hundred lives and $40,000,000. The Oregon Indian war of 1851-'55 cost $10,000,000.—In the Cheyenne war, of 1864-'65, some fifteen or twenty Indians were killed at a cost of $1,500,000 per man, aggregating in this war $35,000,000, besides the loss of life and property on the frontier settlements. The war of 1866 with the Sioux cost $10,000,000. The war of 1867 with the Cheyennes cost $40,000,000. The cost of caring for the Indians of New Mexico, by the army, according to Sherman, was from 1846 to 1866, $100,000,000. For the past forty years the military operations against Indians have averaged $12,000,000 per annum. The 60,000 civilized Cherokees, Creeks, etc., in the Indian territory, do not cost a cent, while to restrain 10,000 Apaches, the government pays the army yearly $2,000,000.

CHARLES Lamb, in his "Confessions of a Drunkard," says: "Is there no middle course betwixt total abstinence and excess which kills you? For your sake, gentle reader, and that you may never attain to my experience, with pain I must utter the dreadful truth, there is none—none that I can find." Slowly but surely men are coming to a saving knowledge of this "dreadful" and clearly demonstrated truth. The world is growing wiser and better, and the number of total abstainers from all intoxicating drinks is steadily increasing.

The "Century of Gospel Work" gives the following as the increase of ministers in the leading Protestant denominations of the country since 1776: Methodist, from 20 to 20,453; Baptist, from 370 to 19,517; Presbyterian, from 140 to 7,954; Congregational, from 575 to 3,233; Lutheran, from 25 to 2,662; Reformed German, from 35 to 623; Reformed Dutch, from 25 to 476; Episcopalian, from 250 to 3,140; Moravian, from 12 to 75.—There are altogether about 60,000 clergymen in the United States.

LETTER FROM BROTHER HANSEN.

M. M. ESHELMAN—Beloved Brother:—Grace, mercy, and peace from God our Father and our Savior, by whom we are united as members in one body by faith, be multiplied unto you.

I am here to-day with our dear Bro. Hope, and by reading your last letter to him I learn that our beloved brethren in America are very useful in the Lord's hands by his Spirit, that we all may go forward in the truth as it is in Jesus.—O that we may ever go on, never become tired, never give up to doubts; and so much more press on, seeing the time is short, and our redemption nearer.

We have come so far on our journey of life, but we may have one more day's work before we are done and our breath departed and we be in eternity. Is that loss? or to be sorrowed after or wept for. No, no. "For me to live is Christ and to die is gain." But if to live in the flesh gives me fruit of my work, then I hardly know what to choose: still to go to the Lord is far better (says Paul). I do often feel the same. But when I look over the great field and see the great mass of people running to eternal destruction, if not prevented, I feel to labor on. Be not discouraged, dear Brother; your Savior had the same great concern for humanity. You are in good company when you thus labor.—M. M. E. For poor man Christ died and shed his blood, and to him are we all indebted; we who were enemies of the cross, but yet so loved that he reconciled us by his death, saved us who were lost, and filled our hearts with holy desires and prayers that many more souls may be saved before it is forever too late.

Oh, I think of myself, how patiently the Lord has been working with me the last seven years! In 1867 I was made to believe that my sins were blotted out in the blood of Christ, (and in that faith was immersed by the Baptists in Jestmark, July 11, 1869,) and since that time the Lord has worked with me, to show me his gospel in its fullness and perfect way. He led me from light to light in his word. I was then 21 years old, and the question of taking the sword had then to be met. The Lord showed me the great wickedness of killing my fellow men; hence I told the church. But I got no help from them, as this belief was against their creed; and the result was, that I was shut out of their church in 1871.

I thought I had found the true church of God, but to my sorrow I saw it was not so. I was alone with the Lord, far in the place of comfort I found resistance; and instead of prayers to be faithful through my trials on the road of eternal truth, I received nothing but blackmailing and the accusation that I was resisting the government. But the Lord's tender care did not cease or grow less even if I felt like Elijah, to be the only one left. My written defense, founded on the gospel, that a Christian could not fight, was sent to the magistrates, but without effect.

I was arrested Jan. 10th, 1872, and on the 11th

CAST INTO PRISON.

Between two and three o'clock the same day, I got my hearing and was sentenced to twenty days' imprisonment. On the 31st, in the evening, I was released and brought out to tell how much property I had that could be sold to pay up my prison expenses. But when they found I had not sufficient to pay the expenses of selling it, they said there was nothing for them. They then drove me away with the threat that if I did not leave the country within six months, I should be taken and made to do military duty, or be put into the State prison for three years. I replied that God is my Father and Jesus Christ my Savior, and he tells me not to kill but love my enemies, not returning evil for evil. And if it is right to obey men instead of God when they command me to do what is sinful, judge ye. I got no answer on that except "Go! go!" I thought if there only was a people who obey the Lord in all things, I would go to them.

I left Denmark May 6th, 1872, and landed in America June 5th. I found plenty of churches there, but none that obeyed the Lord as he commanded. I felt for my countrymen, and determined to go to them again, bearing the testimony of Jesus, even if I had to be imprisoned again as soon as I set foot on the shores of my native country. But all this time I was wishing for a church as the Bible sets forth it should be. Were my prayers in vain? Were my groaning and tears unnoticed of the Lord?

I left America May 29th, 1874, and went to Christiana, Norway, stopped there two months, and then came to Denmark, expecting to be imprisoned. But not so.

But who found me, and what did I hear? Why, that a people had been found who obey the Lord in all things whatsoever he has commanded. But, thought I, Is that possible? Where are they? "In America," was the answer. But I have just come from America, and do not know such people? Have I been so near to them, and now for the first time find it out? And was it not to me the Lord's care? the Lord's way? Was it not the Lord's answer to my prayers and tears for many years? These came through our dear Bro. Hope, who could tell the same story of searching and prayers to find a people who love to follow Jesus. Still I was in doubt. But this doubt the Lord soon cleared away, and I began to reap the fruits of what little English I knew, as I had sent to me some pamphlets which I very carefully and seriously studied. I soon saw, that I had never fully understood the Savior's commission (Matth. xxviii. 19). And even though I had been immersed, I now found that it had been done in a wrong and awkward manner. When I had learned that the Brethren were practicing the whole truth, and the true, saving faith, I longed to obey the whole truth also. And while Bro. Hope continued to write, I became more and more convinced and strengthened in the doctrines of Jesus; and when I read Bro. Eshelman's letter setting forth the order of the Brethren in observing the ordinances of God's house, I was free of all doubts as to the doctrine of this humble people. I then prayed the Lord that he would send his servants to teach me all his requirements in a practical manner. Did the Lord again hear me? Was it not asking too much? No, not too much; for he tells us to ask, that our joy might be full, as well as he told the church to go and teach all nations. The church was faithful even in this, and my prayer granted.

JOYFUL NEWS

So good was this news to me that I could not keep it. I went forth to draw others to this blessed peace even before I had secured it for myself. I could not refrain from telling others the full force of the whole gospel, and that as many as wanted salvation should not hesitate to meet its claims on which the promises of salvation are made sure. My weak labor was not in vain, for already two more have been made glad by complying with God's plan.

On the arrival of our dear brother Christian Hope, I went to his house on the 3rd of May, 1876, and there face to face he told me the faith and practice of the Brethren on all points as set forth in the gospel. Our united praise and prayers went up to God for his manifold favors; and tears of joy flowed from our eyes, when we thought of the joy in heaven over one repentant sinner. We felt what no pen or tongue can express.

We sought a place for baptism, and on the second day found a beautiful stream. Here in a quiet place I was baptized. Oh, God be thanked for the peace he has given me!

We received letters from a young girl, desiring to be received into the church. We left Bro. Hope's home May 25th, traveled all day and night by railroad, and on the 26th found our sister, strong in faith, waiting to obey Jesus in all his appointed ways. She was baptized in a pleasant stream. Here we had much blessing from the Lord. On the 28th we had meetings, hearing our beloved brother preach to us, and some others. This was over 160 miles from where Bro. Hope lives. His wife being sick, he had to return, while I remained to spread tracts and talk to the people. Some are very anxious, and ask much about the church in America. Some stand near the truth.

Already I have known want, and often traveled many miles a day without anything to eat, or a bed for the night, although it is cold to sleep on the ground.

But

GOD IS LOVE

and will ever provide for his children if they are but faithful. Oh, beloved brethren, pray that we may be kept very humble, and that Jesus may be with us evermore!

ROANOKE, WOODFORD CO., ILL., }
Sept. 7th, 1876. }

Brother Quinter:—I just returned home from Livingston Co., where the Brethren held their communion meeting. All seemed to go off pleasantly and in love and union. Some time back there seemed to be quite a trouble existing there, but, thank the good Lord, all seems to be peace now; and there is quite an interest taken in their meetings in that part of God's moral vineyard. Their speakers are Brethren Geplart and Mast. After the forenoon meeting, we went out by the riverside where prayer was made; then followed the baptism of three precious souls, who were truly willing to join in with the people of God. We think there were more almost persuaded to be Christians. There was one brother elected to the office of Deacon. The choice fell on brother George Dale. May the Lord be with him in the good work, is my prayer.

Yours in love,
GEO. W. GISH.

To "Fairplay"—Conciliatory.

Brother Quinter:—I am sorry that I have offended my friend, who hides under the name of "Fairplay." I first thought, "O consistency, thou art a jewel!" and had no inclination to answer, simply, because I do not like to be, as Paul says, "as one that beareth the air." Had he subscribed his name to his article, I would have answered him privately; but as it is, I have to answer through the medium through which he made his attack. I do not like controversies; but as I am misrepresented, I claim the right to answer.

I did not condemn the River Brethren "on account of one man." There are hundreds living among us, and by their explanations of certain parts of the scriptures, differing from the Brethren, we have every advantage to know them as a body not as an individual.

"Fairplay," I am sorry to say, was not very careful in reading my article. When I say they claim the "bread for the Lord's supper," he has "bread and wine." If he doubts, and sends me his name and address, I will send him the names of some of their ministers who will bear witness to what I say.

Also when I say, "They pretend to have the forgiveness of sin," I might have added before baptism; but, think a careful reader should have noticed that I said in the beginning of my article, that one of their claims is that they have forgiveness of sins before baptism. And as the word says, "Be baptized every one of you * * * for the remission of sins," am I not right if I say it is a pretense? We admit that God may have the power to forgive sins before baptism; but since he does not so command and promise we must take him at his word.

The River Brethren of New York must be different from those of Pennsylvania. If so, I cannot do better than do as he says,—"turn his own guns against him self,"—and say, "Some who claim to be his children are divided against themselves, and against their God." If, as he says, the church of the North disapproves of the practices of the River Brethren of our locality, they are farther apart than we and they are, and I would not doubt, as Bro. Mishler says, that if some would come among them, they would not recognize them as brethren—less so than the ministers of our church.—I wish to be brief, but would add that "facts are stubborn things," and that my motive was not to judge, but to explain, and let the word of God judge. If that will bear them out in their practice we are satisfied; but search the Scriptures, for therein is everlasting life; and although men and angels proclaim another gospel, we say, Give us Christ and him crucified. "If ye love me, keep my commandments." Let us "bury the hatchet;" let us seek the perfect law; let us strive for the cause of Christ, not with words alone, but with a living reality—a light that is not hid under a bushel.

A Macedonian Call.

Will some of the brethren of West Va., heed it? Whist Brother Joseph A. Miller and I were on a mission of love to West Va., we met with a friend from Gilmore county, who was strong in the faith, and well recommended, wishing to unite with us. We baptized him in the beautiful Greenbrier River, gave him a letter, and he, like the Eunuch, went on his way rejoicing. I will give his name and address: Samuel E. Barnhouse, Troy, Gilmore county, West Va. It is almost two years since any of the Brethren preached in that county; and there are some souls there wishing to join in with the people of God, if they had an opportunity. Will not some brethren who live nearer than we in the Valley of Virginia, heed the call, and feed the starving souls with the bread of life?—May the Lord reward your labors, is my prayer.

A Few Items of Travel.

On the 21st of August, in company with my eldest son, I left my home in Greeley for an extended trip east. On the night of the 23rd arrived at Chicago, where we remained a day. Had a pleasant call with Bro. Hosinger; also, the pleasure of an acquaintance with Dr. Fabney. Saturday the 26th, in the morning arrived at Huntingdon, Pa. Had several meetings, and a very pleasant sojourn with the Pilgrim family and the brethren in that locality. Monday morning we set out for New York city, where we arrived about 10 o'clock at night.—Tried in the city until Thursday morning, when we set out for Philadelphia.—Tried there three days, and on Sunday morning a few minutes after 12 o'clock took the train homeward bound. My son stopped off at Huntingdon where he expects to attend Bro. Zook's school. Thursday morning I arrived in Chicago, an hour afterward set out for St. Louis, and the next morning for Kansas City, where I arrived about 10 o'clock, and passed on same night to Leavenworth, Kansas. Returned to Kansas City next day, and on the day following left for the long stretch of seven hundred miles over the wide extending plains. Arrived at Denver on Friday night. Being behind time I had to remain at Denver until next day, when I arrived at home and found all well. Thank the Lord for his goodness extended toward us. We were gone three weeks less two days, and traveled about 4,000 miles.

In regard to the crops that came under our notice, we found the corn crop in Kansas very good, and in the eastern part of the State a considerable crop of fruit. In Missouri the corn crop is an average one, the fruit not a full one. Southern and parts of Northern Illinois, where the land is rolling, corn is good, but on the level or low lands through which we passed in Illinois the corn was almost an entire failure. In most sections of Indiana corn is good; also in Ohio. The same may be said of Pennsylvania. After crossing the Mississippi River eastward we found the fruit crop good—in Pennsylvania better than for years. Taking all things together, we think the people have reason to be thankful to God for his abundance bestowed upon them.

The outlook of the political skies seems foul and stormy. Bribery, intrigue, and corruption seem to be above par, and from all these cesspools of iniquity may we ever stand aloof. "Come out from among them and be ye separate," should be the motto of every "pilgrim stranger."

In conclusion we will ask those of our brethren who requested that we should stop with them to excuse us for not doing so this time. Our trip was of a business nature and our time limited, so we could not do that which would have been to us such a great pleasure.

District Meeting of Southern Ill.

The District Meeting of the southern district of Ill., will be held with the brethren in the Milmine church, Piatt Co., Ill., on the 2nd and 3rd of October. There will be a love feast at the same place on the 30th of September. Meeting to commence at 4 o'clock p. m. An invitation is given to the brethren and sisters that wish to be with us, and especially the laboring brethren. Meeting to continue over Sunday. A full representation is desired. Those coming by railroad will stop off at Carro Gordo or Milmine. Conveyances will be at both places. The arrangement of the meeting is not to set tables to feed the multitude. Brethren coming from a distance will be cared for.

BENJ. BOWMAN.

Announcements.

We, the members of the Osborn congregation, expect to hold a communion meeting Oct. 7th and 8th, at the house of Bro. John Oaks, two miles south of Osborn. As this is the first meeting of the kind ever held here, we invite all that can to be with us, especially the ministering brethren.

P. R. OAKS.

There will be a lovefeast at Clover Creek, Blair Co., Pa., on the 3rd of October next.

J. L. WINELAND.

The brethren of Lake Branch, Rice county, Minn., expect to hold their lovefeast, the Lord willing, 4 miles east of Morristown, on the 28th and 29th of October next, commencing at 2 o'clock.

SAMUEL OBLINGER.

There will be a lovefeast in the Yellow Creek congregation seven miles southwest of Goshen, Ind., on the 4th of October next.

ISAAC KULP.

The brethren of Gage and Saline counties, Nebraska, design holding their communion meeting on Saturday and Sunday, Sept. 30th and October 1st, at the residence of Bro. Isaac Fry, seven miles south-east of Beatrice, our railroad station. Train arrives at 6 o'clock, p. m.—By order of the church.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

Our dear, long-suffering mother, ANNA RIGHTER, widow of John Righter, departed this life, June 17th, 1876, in the 86th year of her age. After a long time of weariness and hopeful suffering, she was permitted to depart in peace, saying to all, and to the last, "I'll go to Jesus." S. R. M.

In the Bachelor Run church, Carroll Co., Indiana, Sister HANNAH LANDIS, consort of B. O. Jacob B. Landis, aged 60 years and 8 months. She was the mother of 10 children (three of whom have gone before) and 32 grandchildren. She had been serving in the Master's vineyard for nearly 40 years, and during all this time she was never called in council by the church. She closed her eyes in peace with all mankind, and we trust with God. Her remains were followed to the graveyard on the 5th by a large concourse of relatives and sympathizing friends. Oh, that we may all be prepared to meet our dear mot'er in a far better world than this! Owing to sickness among near relatives the funeral was postponed.

WM. LANDIS.

(Pilgrim please copy.)

In the Logan church, Logan county, Ohio, on the 17th of August, 1876, of consumption, Brother CHRISTOPHER BRENNER, aged 64 years, 7 months and 13 days. Funeral services by Elder Jos. N. Kaufman. He leaves a companion—a sister in the church—and six children to mourn their loss.

Also, on the 5th day of September, 1876, in Logan county, Ohio, AMANDA TEMPLIN, daughter of friend Dock and Mrs. Templin, aged about 17 years. Disease, typhoid fever. Funeral preached by the writer from Luke xii. 40, "Be ye therefore ready." J. L. FRANTZ.

THE LUNGS!

CONSUMPTION!

This distressing and dangerous complaint and its premonitory symptoms, neglected cough, night sweats, hoarseness, wasting flesh fever—permanently cured by DR. SWAYNE'S COMPOUND SYRUP OF WILD CHERRY. BRONCHITIS—a premonitor of Pulmonary Consumption, is characterized by catarrh, or inflammation of the mucus membrane of the air passages, with cough and expectoration, short breath, hoarseness, pains in the chest. For all bronchial affections, sore throat, loss of voice, coughs,

DR. SWAYNE'S

IS A SOVEREIGN REMEDY.

Hemorrhage or Spitting of Blood, may proceed from the larynx, trachea, bronchia or lungs, and arises from various causes, as undue physical exertion, plethora or fullness of the vessels, weak lungs, overstraining of the voice, suppressed evacuation, obstruction of the spleen or liver, &c.

Dr. Swayne's Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry

strikes at the root of disease by purifying the blood, restoring the liver and kidneys to a healthy action, invigorating the nervous system.

The only standard remedy for hemorrhage, bronchial and all pulmonary complaints. Consumption and those predisposed to weak lungs should not fail to use this great vegetable remedy. Its marvelous power, not only over consumption, but over every chronic disease where a gradual alterative action is needed. Under its use the cough is loosened, the night sweats diminished, the pain subsides, the pulse returns to its natural standard, the stomach is improved in its power to digest and assimilate food, and every organ has a purer and better quality of blood supplied to it out of which new recreative and plastic material is made. Price one dollar. Six bottles $5. If your druggist or storekeeper has not got it, we will forward half dozen to any address on receipt of price, freight pre-paid.

Should the bowels be costive, or headache accompany your disease, the patient should procure a box of

DR. SWAYNE'S TAR PILLS.

Take first a few doses of pills and follow with Swayne's Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry. The Pills will evacuate the bowels, which is of the first importance, relieve the congested liver, purify the blood, strengthen the nerves, improve the appetite and remove all biliousness. They are purely vegetable and act specifically on the liver as Blue Mass or Calomel, without any bad results from taking. Price 25 cents. 5 boxes $1. Sent by mail on receipt of price.

ITCHING PILES!
PILES, PILES, ITCHING PILES!
Positively cured by the use of SWAYNE'S OINTMENT.

HOME TESTIMONY.

I was sorely afflicted with one of the most distressing of all diseases, Protrusion or Prolapsus, or more commonly known as Itching Piles. The itching at times was almost intolerable, increased by scratching and got unfrequently becoming quite sore. I bought a box of Swayne's Ointment; its use gave quick relief, and in a short time made a perfect cure. I can now sleep undisturbed, and I would advise all who are suffering with this distressing complaint to procure Swayne's Ointment at once. I had tried prescriptions almost innumerable, without finding any permanent relief.

ALL THINGS PERISH SAVE VIRTUE.

Sweet morn—so cool, so calm, so bright,
The bridal of the earth and sky,
The dew shall weep thy fall to-night,
For thou must die.

Sweet rose—whose fragrance now I crave
To glad my sense and joy mine eye,
Thy root is ever in its grave,
And thou must die.

Sweet Spring—so full of shine and showers,
It makes the weary spirit sigh,
To think, with all thy herbs and flowers,
That thou must die.

Sweet music—e'en the lovely song
Which from my harp in window night
Is floating on the breeze along,
E'en thou must die.

And all the bright and glistening train
Of stars that stud the deep blue sky,
Must they all perish—none remain
To glad the eye?

And vales, and fields, and rushing streams,
And mountains that invade the sky,
Are they as baseless as our dreams?
And must they die?

And all that's beautiful and fair
On nature's face—love's melody,
That makes sweet music of the air,
All—! all must die!

And man, frail form of senseless clay,
Though now his glance is proud and high,
Perchance upon this passing day
He, too, may die!

But the bright soul?—THAT, shrined within,
The quenchless light in mortal form—
Though dimmed by misery and sin,
Defies the worm.

When all the stars shall fade away,
And suns in their own blaze expire,
And trackless comets cease to stray
With wandering fire,

The soul shall ever live, nor know,
The lapse of time, but dwell on high,
And share—in endless joy or woe—
Eternity. —Pocell.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. What Christians Shall Approve Of.

BY D. P. SAYLOR.

"That ye may approve things that are excellent."—PHILIPPIANS I. 10.

Paul addressing the brethren at Phillippi, says, "Being confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ." Yet he prays that their love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment; that they may approve things that are excellent; and be sincere and without offence till the day of Christ. The day of Christ alluded to is the time when our Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, will come from heaven and change our vile bodies, and fashion them like unto his glorious body. The time we shall see him as he is, and we shall be like him. This time is near at hand, it lies but just before us. To us it seems a long time ago when the servant of God declared: "Behold the judge standeth before the door." And, "Let your moderation be known unto all men, the Lord is at hand." But unto God with whom one day is as a thousand years, with us it is but a moment of time. And as that day of the Lord will come upon the unregenerate suddenly, as a thief in the night, yea, as the lightning flash, it is of much importance that the brethren be ready to meet him at his coming. For this, Paul prays for those in whom a good work was begun, so Paul called these for whom he here prays.

In Acts, xvi. chapter, we have a detailed account of the call to come over into Macedonia, and help the colonists of which Phillippi was the chief city of that part of Macedonia, and also, on account of the conversion and baptism of Lydia and her household, and of the conversion of the jailor and all his. "And they went out of the prison, and entered into the house of Lydia; and when they had seen the brethren, they comforted them, and departed." Lydia's household, and the jailor's, "all his," are the brethren found in Lydia's house. Note, BRETHREN, not infants or unconscious babes who could not be so comforted. These are they in whom a good work was begun by the Lord. For God was in all the work; from the call of Paul by the man in the vision in the night watches to the opening of the heart of Lydia, and to the jailor's rejoicing and believing in God, with all his house. "All! all! was of God. And none but those in whom God works to will and to do his pleasure are of the Lord's planting; and all others will eventually be rooted out, though it may not be until He will declare unto them, "I never knew you, depart from me ye that work iniquity."

Faith, repentance and baptism is the beginning of this good work;

for so hath the Lord, appointed in his word. See Matthew xxviii. 19, 20; Mark xvi. 16; Acts, ii. 38—41; I. Peter, iii. 21. And so did these, with all others whose conversions are recorded in the Scriptures do. This then, and none other, is the religion recognized by the New Testament Scriptures. But though this work is begun by the Lord, it must be continued, deepened, ripened in holiness, in purity of heart and soul, in Christian perfection, &c., "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." That the knowledge of these things may be communicated to the brethren, Paul prays "That they may approve things that are excellent." Paul said all things were lawful for him, but all things were not expedient. How important then that Christians abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment, that they may know what is lawful and expedient for them to do.

All things forbidden in the Scriptures are neither lawful nor expedient for any man, much less a Christian, to do. And, whereas the Scriptures teach that we give our bodies a living sacrifice to God, and not to be conformed to this world, but to be transformed by the renewing of our mind, &c. That is more fully explained by I. John ii. 15—17, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world; and the devil claims all these as his. For the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them is delivered unto him; and he says, "and to whomsoever I will I give it." And, whereas, the Scriptures further teach that we shall not put on costly array; but to be clothed with humility; therefore it is neither lawful nor expedient to be clothed with gay, gaudy, and fashionable attire. And the man who does so, and says I can worship God as well and acceptable in my gay coat as you can in your plain one, speaks lies in hypocrisy, and does not approve things that are excellent.

Many things in the world may be lawfully used by the men of the world in a worldly way, which at the same time are not expedient for the Christian to meddle with, such as County, State, and National fairs; no difference for the name, they are of the world, and Christians must not be conformed to the world. All shows and exhibitions of every name or kind, whether they be Sabbath School festivals, basket pic-nics, Free Masons, Odd Fellows, Redmen, or any other kind of excursions, all, all are of the world, and are neither lawful nor expedient for Christians to partake with. With Paul let us all pray fervently "that our love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment; that we may approve things that are excellent. That ye may be sincere, not hypocritical in your profession of religion. Not to be sincere in religion is counterfeiting religion and virtue, and is an affectation of the name, joined with a dissatisfaction of the thing. It is the having a form of godliness with denying the power of it. He is a hypocrite who feigns to be what he is not. Hence, Paul will have all who approve things that are excellent, to be sincere and without offence till the day of Christ; when the secrets of men's hearts will be made known.

I have often wondered much why some persons, men and women, belong to, or are members of the German Baptist Brethren church; for there is nothing the church teaches and the true members practice (that they love. Try them on anything outside of the ordinance, (and even these they would improve upon) and you will find them fault-finding. I know some men called brethren who in conversation don't approve one single principle taught by the church that tends to humility. They see no wrong in anything; the picnic, the festival, the fairs, the Centennial, all! all, are legitimate places for them. Of course, plainness in dress is old fozyism with them because they would feel badly with a plain made coat promenading the Centennial grounds; with them there is no religion in plain made coats; and not one of them would go to the World's Fair with one on their back. Brethren, I wonder whether one brother who wears a plain made coat at home and abroad because of conscience, was at the Centennial. Brethren, let us approve things that are excellent; let us be sincere in all things; let us be without offence, till the day of Christ. It is near at hand.

"Serve the Lord."--Deut. x 12.

BY W. R. MURPHY.

I dreamed that a young man and I were on a road that had a slight ascent, running a foot-race. We continued our running till we came to where the road forked, the left hand road leading down a dark lonely ravine, or hollow, overhung with bushes and undergrowth. As I came up and was in the act of turning off to the left after my comrade I heard a voice that appeared so come from a person not more than ten paces distant, very plainly and distinctly, which said, "Serve the Lord." I stopped then and there, and, looking after my comrade, I saw him still going on down the dark, lonely, and rocky left hand road. While thus engaged, I awoke, and knew it was a dream, or vision.

Dear brethren and sisters, the above has caused me to meditate on my past life; and when I look back and see how much time I have spent unimproved, it causes me to rejoice that God has yet spared my unprofitable life. I ask an interest in your prayers, that I may not, as Paul said, be disobedient "to the Heavenly calling;" but that I may ever be found trying in my weakness to serve the Lord, who bought my pardon on the cross, "who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification." Rom. 4:25. May we ever be found in his service whose name is above every name; as the apostle Peter says, "Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is no other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." (Acts 4:12) In whom there is plenteous redemption, if we serve him "in spirit and in truth."

In Deut. 10:12, we have an admonition by the prophet Moses to the children of Israel: "And now, Israel, what doth the Lord thy God inquire of thee, but to fear the Lord thy God, to walk in all his ways, and to love him, and to serve the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul." If we would secure to ourselves eternal salvation, we must not serve him with our hearts only, but we must serve him with all our soul, "Jesus said unto him, thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." Matt. 22:37. This is the language of our blessed Savior. May the good Lord help us to lay aside the many hindering causes—those unnecessary things with which we adorn the body—those things with which the body is disfigured, on which our affections are placed more than on the things that pertain to the service of our blessed Lord and Master. We "cannot serve God and Mammon;" hence we cannot serve our jewelry, &c., and God at the same time. We will hate the one and love the other; or else we will hold to one and despise the other. The apostle Paul to the Romans, 12th chapter and first verse says: "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." Then how can we present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, while it is thus adorned with those unnecessary things which do not contribute to our temporal, much less, our spiritual welfare? "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us: looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith." Heb 12:1, 2, and let us come up "to the help of the Lord against the mighty." Judges 5:23.

Brethren and sisters, there is a great deal that we can do for the salvator of our souls and those of others, if we will but pick up courage and energy. With the Lord on our side to assist us in our weakness, we will be able to accomplish great good in the promotion of the cause of Christ and the advancement of his kingdom on earth.

In conclusion, I will say that, if I am a saint, the least of all, I beg an interest in the prayers of God's church that I may resist and overcome the temptations of Satan.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Christian Watchfulness.

BY S. T. BOSSERMAN.

"Let us not sleep as do others; but let us watch and be sober."—1. THESS. v. 6.

If we would enter successfully upon that new life of holiness, great watchfulness upon the part of the seeker is necessary. Those that sleep, as was understood by the apostle, were those who were engaged in all manner of wickedness and revelry. And as sleep is mostly engaged in during the shades of night, so was the wickedness referred to, engaged in during or under cover of darkness. The parties interested in those revelings were sinners of perhaps every degree, and were unfit and unprepared for the coming of their Lord and Master. And the apostle in alluding to characters of that kind, brings to bear forcibly upon the mind of every candid individual, that "to sleep as do others," would utterly disqualify them for present Christian usefulness and immortal glory. In view of the danger man is exposed to in this sinful life, he is called to watch, to think, to exercise his mind, to follow the example of those that are sober, those who by their economy and honest pursuits are "children of the day," and are preparing themselves for future usefulness; those who are spiritual laborers in the vineyard of the Lord, and who are toiling and bearing the burden of the day so that when the Master comes, he will receive them and reward them greatly for their stewardship. After only a step is taken towards heaven, it is by no means attained. Turning from darkness and joining the Christian church is not all the work. There is yet a great work to do. Inquiring into the practicability of the route, does not complete the journey; we must "push forward" and "watch and be sober," and by strict obedience to our commander, Christ Jesus, all obstacles in the way can be surmounted. While traveling on our Christian journey we are exhorted to watch that we "be not carried about by every wind of doctrine," but "prove what the acceptable will of the Lord is concerning us," and continue steadfast in the path of duty. We must watch that we enter "not into temptation." How often some yield to the tempter's snare, and fall to rise no more. Ah! yes, watch, watch ourselves, watch our natures that we do not sleep, "for they that sleep, sleep in the night," "but let us who are of the day," those of us who are in the light and enjoying the fruits of our high calling, are enjoined in love "to put on the breast-plate of faith and love, and for a helmet the hope of salvation." Yes, and that is a lively hope that the Christian has, by the faithful performance of duty, and he can feel assured that there is a crown awaiting him in the better world. Watchfulness is enjoined upon the Christian everywhere, a warfare against that opposing element—sin; the common foe of Christianity since the world began. Watchfulness is enjoined upon the Christian minister; "take heed, therefore, unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." Oh, what responsibility is resting upon the ministry that they "feed the church," supply it with suitable food that it may be better enabled to grow thereby. As the spontaneous growth of the weeds of sin is every where springing up, well could the apostle say, "watch and be sober." Our blessed Savior, in view of the weakness of man, says, "What, could ye not watch with me one hour?" And again, "Let him that standeth take heed lest he fall." So with all the boasted strength that we may possess, in some unguarded moment wo may fall. Doing all that we can do we are yet "unprofitable servants in the eyes of God." Yet through the mercy of God, he will accept of us, but we must labor for the crown all through life, and then the reward we get is merited upon the part of the possessor.

Kind readers, heaven is attainable, and the route practicable. Let us then push forward with the utmost zeal, that the home that has been sought and obtained by those gone before may be also ours to enjoy in that land of blessed immortality.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Sunday Schools.—No. 1.

BY JOSEPH FAHNESTOCK.

In the Vindicator of September '76, I have read an article written by H. Beelman. A part of his letter shows that he is a brother, and a part does not. How shall we understand him? He finds fault with Annual Meetings for granting Sabbath Schools as though he understood more than the Council.

He says, "The commandment is only to parents to bring up our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; and when we occupy the position of Sunday School teacher, we are not filling our places as parents." If parents teach, they certainly fill the place as parents, teaching them at home and at Sabbath School.

There are many parents who do not feel themselves capable of teaching their children as they should be taught. Some brethren would even fail to tell, when asked, "why do we baptize three times face forward?" The Sabbath School teachers should be capable to teach the doctrine of Christ as understood by the brethren; being careful that pride does not get the ascendancy.

For parents to come together, sing a few hymns, offer up a prayer, read a chapter as a lesson, and to instruct the young in the way that they should go, why is it not right when we know that the young will have some exercise of some kind on the Lord's day?

Since our Sabbath School has ceased some five families in the country and most of the members' children in town, I am informed, go to other schools. And it appears to me that it was a disadvantage to the brethren in this community, that our Sabbath School was discontinued. I would like to have seen it continued.

H. Beelman says, "God's word does not teach anything concerning Sabbath Schools, and consequently it belongs to the world." He will, therefore, have nothing to do with it. The round coat is not described in the Testament, so H. B. to be consistent will have nothing to do with it; no not with the meeting house. The hymn book is made up principally, if not altogether by "people," as B. styles them, "of the world," therefore, he has to renounce our excellent hymn book; in short all that we do not have in so many words in the Testament.

Brother B. thinks it is one of the abominations spoken of by Daniel the prophet, which appears, to be a very extraordinary view. A new idea, indeed. The abomination I thought meant the Roman army, and is so exemplified by Luke, xxi. 20, 21. Abomination on account of its images of the Emperor and Eagles carried in front of the legions, and regarded by the Romans with Divine honors, standing in the holy place. Mark says, "Standing where it ought not." All Jerusalem was considered holy. Matt. iv. 5.

He, also says, "Sunday School is the mother of harlots." All I will say about this is, I almost wonder that Bro. Kinsey would print such a thing, for he knows better.

Brethren when writing of other denominations, and styling them people of the world, I am made to think on the Pharisees and Publicans. Luke xviii. 14-16. I think brethren should not write in that way. What I have written in regard to the order, is not that I find fault, but believe it good to prevent us from following the unnecessary fashions of the world. In regard to Sabbath School, it seems to me that Annual meetings should give rules and regulations.

Out of the heart, not out of the brain, are the best issues of life. And many a one who has not been able to find God, or to construct any satisfactory doctrine concerning him, through speculations of the intellect, has found him by the path of that old beatitude, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God,"—have seen him not as a visible being standing before their outward eyes, nor comprehended him, perhaps, as an infinite person by their intellectual faculty, but found him in the inner consciousness of their hearts, through the vitalizing impulses of that energy of goodness which is the fulfilling of every law of duty.

There is nothing on earth that is so enduring as that time will not cause it to perish. Even the mountains and the "everlasting hills," stones and rocks, yea, all that is in the world, is subject to change. God's word alone abideth forever.

GOD IN THE STORM.

BY MISS PARDOE.

"Did you hear the storm last night, my child,

As it burst o'er the midnight sky,
When the thunder rattled loud and wild,
And the lightning flickered by?"

"I heard no tempest, mother mine--

I was buried in slumber sweet;
Dreaming I stood in the soft moonshine,
With flowers about my feet."

"Can it be, my child, that you did not hear

The roar of the tempest's breath,
As it scattered the tent leaves far and near,
In many an eddying wreath?"

"No, mother; my happy sleep was full

Of gentle and holy things--
Shapes that were graceful and beautiful,
And the music of angels' wings."

"Yet the storm was loud, my darling child--

There was death on the hurrying blast;
And vapors dark overhead were piled,
As the hoarse wind belloved past."

"I thought not of clouds, my mother dear,

When I rose from my nurse's knee;
You taught me that God is forever near,
So what danger could I see?"

"I taught you well, my sinless one;

Yet my own weak spirit quailed,
As the midnight blast rolled madly on,
And the moon's calm lustre failed."

"Were you wrong, then, mother, when you said

That God's eye turned not away,
But in darkness watched about my bed
As it did on my path by day?"

"I am rebuked!" was the meek reply,

As the mother bent her knee;
"On the lip of babes may a lesson lie--
I have learned one, child, from thee:

His wrath, which makes the sinner weep,
By a guilty conscience vexed,
Does but deepen the sinless infant's sleep,
And rock it to gentle rest.

And while thunders hoarsely peal around,

Speaking woo to the worldling's ear,
The Lord in his mercy stills their sound,
When innocence is near:

And while his living fire appals

The guilty here below,
The shadow of the Savior falls
On childhood's sleeping brow."

A Living Faith.

BY CINA SHICK.

Matthew informs us that Jesus came "into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon. And behold, a woman of Canaan came out of the same coasts, and cried unto him, saying, Have mercy on me, O Lord, thou son of David; my daughter is grievously vexed with a devil."—Matthew xv. 21, 23. Here we have an example of that kind of faith which purifies the soul, that is, a living operative faith, which works by love, renews the heart, overcomes the world, and produces good works. When this woman heard of the many signs and wonders, and mighty deeds which Jesus performed, and that none were sent away comfortless, she believed he was the Lord, the Son of David, and unhesitatingly approached him, and cried unto him to have mercy on her, and besought him that he would cast forth the devil out of her daughter. Although Jesus made as though he did not hear her, she continued her cries. She did not become discouraged, but manifested such faith and true piety that Jesus said unto her, "Woman, great is thy faith: be it unto thee even as thou wilt. And her daughter was made whole from that very hour."

Brethren and sisters, a very important and instructive lesson might be learned from the conduct of this woman. First, notice what wondrous appeals she makes in behalf of her daughter; and having full confidence that Jesus would grant her request, she continued to ask until she obtained what she desired. Mothers, do you so faithfully and earnestly beseech and supplicate the Lord in behalf of your obstinate daughters, who so pertinaciously adhere to their own opinion, purpose or design, and will not yield to the appeals you make to their reason and better feelings? You, fathers, who so diligently seek to praise the Lord with all your heart, and desire the salvation of your neighbors, do you ever consider how much more zealous you ought to be for the salvation of your children which God has given you? Or do you love their bodies more than their souls, that you will labor and toil until late at night, and rise early in the morning, in order to provide them with all the fashionable gowgaws or showy trifles of this corrupt generation, and clothe them in costly apparel, and encourage them to go on in vanity and pride? Do you not also cause your little ones to become a prey to the adversary of souls, by dressing them in velvets and ruffles, and telling them how nice and fine or beautiful they look in their new clothes—those of your family who have no knowledge between good and evil and cannot discern between their right hand and their left? Then when they are of the proper age, you are compelled to mourn and lament with a doleful lamentation, because they do not seek the Lord and have no desire to know his will, while you, having a knowledge of the past dealings of God, should have communicated them to your children, as a means of leading them to adore him, and preparing them to transmit this knowledge of his perfections to those who should come after them: "For he established a testimony in Jacob, and appointed a law in Israel, which he commanded our fathers that they should make them known to their children, that the generation to come might know them, even the children which should be born, who should arise and declare them to their children; that they might set their hope in God and not forget the works of God but keep his commandments."—Ps lxxvii. 5, 7.

I fear that some are neglecting to do these things, because the Lord has kept silent. Perhaps you are thinking that he is such a one as thyself; one that will connive at wickedness, and suffer it to go unpunished. If you are, you will see your mistake when there will be none to deliver you; for God often with much long-suffering waits upon those who violate his law, but will finally call them to an account and punish them according to their deserts. "He will surely reprove thee, and set them in order before thine eyes." Now consider this, ye fathers and mothers, that forget the past dealings of God, for it is the highest good of your children in this life and the life to come, in all things right, to obey their parents. It is also the duty of parents to take the course which is best suited to secure this, and lead their children to obey their Father which is in heaven. In order to do this, you must obey him yourselves; daily seek his guidance and blessing; instruct your children to do his will, and present to them the motives which he has revealed. Right here is the most important point: As soon as a child is old enough to distinguish different objects, it understands; then you must enforce rigid discipline. You must accustom them, from their earliest years, promptly to submit their will to your will, so that it shall by habit become easy and pleasant. If you fail in this, in all probability they will not be inclined to receive the instruction of wisdom, justice and judgment.

Then if you love your children, and have faith as this Syrophenician woman had (knowing that the wages of sin is death), you will be solicitous for their salvation. If we confess Christ, believe his words and desire our children to obtain the happy realms of ultimate glory, we will not neglect to teach them all the words of this life: for the commandments of the Lord are as a lamp; and the law is a light; and reproofs of instruction are the way of life. Duty compels us to admonish, reprove, and correct our children, and set them examples of righteousness, and raise them in the fear of the Lord. We must instruct them in the things relating to his righteous judgments, so that they may learn to fear the Lord and turn from evil. But alas! how few there are who rightly think of these things, and put forth all their energies in faithfully seeking the redemption of their children from sin and eternal death. If they can provide for their temporal wants they have gained their desires. In and out of their houses is nothing to be heard or seen but unrighteousness and malice, cursing and swearing, and all manner of disgrace.

Dear brethren and sisters, reflect well on these things; for if the spirit of the Lord dwells in your hearts, you would sooner be seethed in boiling oil than to hear or see such ungodliness in your children, much less to teach or set them an example of such things. Then let all who have a reverential awe of the Lord, and have divine love for their children, seek to save their souls, with your whole spirit, soul and body. If they transgress the law of God reprove them sharply. If they through ignorance have erred, exhort them with all long-suffering. If they have come to years of understanding, instruct them in the way they should go, and guide them gently by your counsels; keep a watch over them continually. Pray for them without ceasing, like this faithful woman of Canaan did, and do not become discouraged in the work until you have gained your desires. Pray God to grant you grace that you may be able to stand against all spiritual wickedness, or spiritual powers of wickedness, devices or stratagems of the evil one to deceive or destroy them. May the Lord help you to walk before God in all righteousness. "For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are ever open unto their prayers, and he will certainly and wholly sanctify and save all who truly believe in Christ and continue to serve him.

Hear me now, therefore, O ye children, and depart not from the instructions of your parents; for you will give your honor unto another, and your years unto a cruel naster; at last you will go mourning down to your grave, and will not be comforted, because you hated instruction, and your heart despised reproof, and you did not obey the voice of your parents.

PACKAGE No. 9.

—SOME persons when convinced of their sinfulness desire to come to Jesus, and profess their faith in him through baptism, but are afraid to do so lest they should afterwards all away. It is very true that no one can keep himself, but Jesus can keep every one that comes to him. He calls himself the "Good Shepherd," and it is the duty of the shepherd to keep the sheep. Satan will, if he can, hinder you from coming to Christ by the thought that you can not keep yourself and Jesus will not keep you. Put the thought aside and try Jesus—trust him.

—We recently heard a ministering brother make use of the following expression in his sermon: "My goodness a life!" It seems to us that in words (not in intent) he came pretty near swearing. Now if "my goodness a life" don't mean God of life, or living God, what does it mean? What sense is there in it? Wish some one would tell us what it does mean. We hardly think the brother that used it in his preaching could tell us what it means, for we think he used it thoughtlessly. In all probability he scarcely knew that he used it at all, and, perhaps, some of his hearers did not notice it, because they are in the constant habit of using similar expressions themselves. Does thoughtlessness excuse bad habits?

—Some one seems to have been trying whether he could not compose a hymn as good as Mr. Sankey's "Ninety and Nine," and nearly succeeded in doing so in the production of the following lines:

THE GOOD SHEPHERD.

The snow was drifting o'er the hills,
Fierce was the wind and loud,
While the Good Shepherd forward pressed,
His head in sorrow bowed:
"O Shepherd, rest, nor farther go,
The tempest hath begun."
"I cannot stay, I must away
To seek my little one!"

A thorn-wreath bound the gentle brow
That beam'd with pity sweet,
And marks of wounds were on his hands,
And scars upon his feet.
Again I said, "O Shepherd rest,
The tempest hath begun."
He murmur'd, "Nay, I must away
To seek my little one!"

"I saw thy flock at peace within Thine own well-guarded fold;
O Shepherd, pause, for wild the gale
That rages o'er the world!"
"No; one poor lamb hath gone astray,
And soon may be undone;
I cannot stay, I must away
To seek my little one!"

"But, since thy flock are all secure,
Why to the height repair?
If thou hast ninety-nine at home,
Why for a truant care?"
"Dearer to me than all the rest
Is that poor, straggl'ng son!
I cannot stay, I must away
To seek my little one!"

"Good Shepherd, tell me, if his need
"Should bring the wanderer home,
Will thou not punish him with stripes
Lest he again should roam?"
"No; I would clasp him to my heart,
As mother clasps her son.
I cannot stay, I must away
To seek my little one!"

Even so, I thought, our gracious Lord
Hath in his heart Divine
A wealth of love for all his saints—

For all the ninety-nine!
But most he loves, and most he seeks
The soul by sin undone;
And still he sighs, "I must away
"To seek my little one!"

How strange that we cannot trust our Great Shepherd more fully, when we know that he loves us like that. The fourth and fifth stanzas reminds us of the Prodigal Son:

"Dearest to me than all the rest
Is that poor, straggl'ng son!"

Reader, have you strayed somewhat away from the fold? Be assured the Shepherd will seek you, especially if you want to be found, for

"Most he loves, and most he seeks
The soul by sin undone."

—How much comfort is contained in this verse of Scripture: "But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption."—I. Cor. 1. 30. I am ignorant and foolish, but he is righteous and his righteousness is imputed unto me. I am unholily, but he saith "for their sakes I sanctify myself that they also might be sanctified through the truth." I am impoverished and helpless, but he has paid the ransom, and become my redemption. Well might Paul say, "He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord."

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Invitation to Christ.

BY PHILIP HEIL.

Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest.—MATTHEW XI. 28.

This glorious invitation was given by our blessed Redeemer and was principally directed to sinners. It was given over eighteen hundred years ago, and still remains as good and full of blessings as it was at the time it was given, for "the word of the Lord endureth forever." "Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them."—Hebrews vii. 25. "Seeing that Christ is both able and willing to save and to bless all that come unto him," even heavy laden sinners. "He did not come to call the righteous but sinners to repentance." O what a happy exchange the sinner can make to exchange his heavy load of sins for an everlasting and eternal rest! We need not be doubtful of the ability of one whom "God has so highly exalted, and given him a name which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven and things in earth and things under the earth, and every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father."—Phil. ii. 9, 10, 11. He is also entitled King of kings, and Lord of lords is our Lord's own proper title, but to be kings and priests and reign with him is ours. Rev. v. 10.

The enjoyment of his kingdom is as the light of the sun, each has the whole and the rest none the less. Oh, the blessed tranquillity of that region where there is nothing but sweet continued peace! Oh, healthful place, where none are sick! Oh, fortunate land, where all are kings! Oh, holy assembly, where all are priests! How free a state where none are servants but to their Supreme Monarch—where the poor man shall no more be tired of his labor. "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more, neither shall the sun light on them nor any heat, for the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."—Rev. vii. 16, 17. Oh, how glorious are all the arrangements of God that we all can come to Christ and live. "Because I live," says Christ, "ye shall also live." No doubt the river of life and love is flowing as freely as ever from the throne of God, and will flow as long as God's own dear Son remains at the right hand of the Father, interceding for us; but, oh, how the kind invitations are slighted.

"It fills my heart with grief and woe,
To see kind Jesus slighted so."

Dear reader, let us accept the kind invitation of Christ, and make our calling and election sure in Christ Jesus, that we "may have a right to the tree of life," and may enter in through the gates into the city to enjoy the great felicity of high heaven."—Rev. xxii. 14.

Every soul that hath a title to this rest doth place his chief happiness in God.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Christian Baptism.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

A stranger, who expresses "great anxiety" as to what constitutes true baptism, and who is "a regular reader of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN," earnestly solicits an explanation of Eph. 4: 5. He has received backward immersion, has faith in the doctrine of the Brethren, save in the matter of trine-immersion, and seems really anxious to have this obstacle to affiliation removed.

That he should be a regular reader of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN and still laboring under non-apprehension of our reasons for practicing a trinity baptism, is somewhat of a mystery to me. Within the past year sufficiently has been published in this paper to beget suspicion in the most prejudiced monodip that to immerse but once is the embodiment of a doctrine which leaves no possible room for redemption. I do not conceive God to be by chance what He is. He is not a Trinity only for man's sake, but His own sake. The philosophy of truth, if such tautology is admissible, demands a pure atheism as the correspondent doctrine of a single immersion. Such a God as is represented by one dip there is none; and if the Bible reveals no other, the world has neither Creator nor Redeemer—atheism is the sum of all truth. To compress Divinity into the mode of being required by single immersion, leaves nothing for the Cross, nor an eucumenical agency to make the provisions of the Cross available. It cuts off both the hands of God, and a maimed Deity is no better than Dagon.

Under what formula was our friend immersed? Simply in the name of God in the flesh, or the names that represent Him as He essentially is in and to Himself? If in the former, you baptized yourself away from the very Fountain of Life which Jesus died to open. He came to negotiate between two, and prepare an instrument of redemption for the use of a Third Person. Salvation by Jesus Christ is symbolically denied by single immersionists. If our friend was baptized under the formula in Matt. 28: 19, he was yet not baptized according to it; for to immerse once only under such a scheme is like "selling a possession and keeping back part of the price." Acts 5: 1, 2. "How is it that ye have agreed together to tempt the Spirit of the Lord?" "Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God." If language so terrible, and an execution so dreadful, goes forth against such a "lie unto the Holy Ghost" in the matter of selling houses or lands, what will be the doom of those who caricature the Almighty, cheat God out of His possessions, and mutilate His institutions? If Three Persons, or three modes of manifestation, are necessary to our salvation, how is it possible to represent them by one dip? You say you were immersed backward. Suppose the formula of Christ contained but one Name, and no other were revealed, you could not have done less than immerse in that Name. Without administering in that One Name, the ordinance would be meaningless, valueless, preposterous. But there are Three Names, representing such a distinctness of personality and operation, as binds us to the same distinctness of action in the ordinance by which they are represented. Christian Baptism consists in an objective trine representation, and a subjective appropriation of what the Father has purposed, the Son executed, and the Holy Ghost applied. As there is One God in Trinity, so there is One Baptism in the same form. Magnify your baptism, or diminish your deity. They are out of correspondence.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Mercy.

BY MARY E. DAVIS.

"Blessed are the merciful; for they shall obtain mercy." Matt. 5: 7. This is what the Savior tells us in his sermon on the mount. Then to obtain mercy, we must be merciful. But how seldom do we think of this! When we are ill-treated, we are too ready to resent, and too slow to forgive, and do not show the mercy to our fellow-beings that we would wish to have shown unto us. "And when ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have aught against any: that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses. But if ye do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive your trespasses." Mark 11: 25, 26. Then we should be very careful when we pray, and be sure that we have that forgiving spirit; for if we are not merciful, we need not expect mercy. "Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful." Luke 6: 36.

Dear reader, to be a true Christian we must have more of the Spirit of Christ, who, "when he was reviled, reviled not again." And when his enemies had brought him to Calvary to crucify him, he could say, "Father, forgive them." Oh, do we follow his example at all times? I fear not. That resentful spirit of the wicked one gets too strong within us. Satan is ever ready to urge us to do wrong. Then let us pray more fervently that we may be able to resist all evil. Let us abhor that which is evil and cleave to that which is good. Therefore, "if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink; for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." Rom. 12: 20, 21.

The Family Circle.

Health of Women.

As hard as the labor of women is it is more than probable that the "worry and fret" are even more destructive. And that this may be plain let it be remembered that the mind has a vast influence over the body, making labor easy and pleasant, or difficult and exhaustive, just according to the attending circumstances. Thus labors of love are performed with comparative ease, while even the thought of labors of a different class is depression. Slight efforts become toils, disgusting toils. Ordinarily her cares are too many, her hours of labor more than those of the more able and hearty, while her vexatious toils are too many to be enumerated. Some of these labors result from false ideas or notions and whims of society, to rise above which but few can be found. Some of them are connected with "having company." In far too many localities this implies feasting and labors so exhausting as to render these social gatherings extremely injurious. It is by no means necessary to cook dishes sufficiently rich and indigestible to sicken the guests to indicate kind feelings to ward them, or to convince them that their call is acceptable. We need not make dyspeptics of them to show that we are cordial.

Far too many of our housekeepers "live on excitement." They rise in the morning fatigued, unrefreshed by sleep—often before they have secured the amount actually demanded by the jaded powers—simply because they feel that they "must" do so, though that "must" may be only a desire. They rush, "tear around," strain every nerve, haste from one duty to another, glide up and down stairs, trip after wood, coal, and water—too much in haste to put on an extra garment when they go into the cold, even though their naked arms may have been in the warm suns for hours, reeking with perspiration—the sudden changes shocking the nervous system and preparing for an attack of the neuralgia and nervous headache. "Push" is the watchword.

A significant "Oh!" or a long-drawn sigh, indicate too certainly the injury sustained by such spasmodic efforts. The doors are closed with a slam—sometimes called door-oaths—the stove-door with a nervous kick, every moment indicating hot haste and excitement, fearfully exhausting vital energies. And why? What is the occasion for all of this haste, so often attended by "fretting and scolding," though more the result of the state of the nerves than of "malice prepense?" Why, simply to get the work all done at a particular time.

Such a jaded housekeeper is laid on a bed of sickness as a legitimate result of such unnatural and unnecessary haste and toil. And here it may be remarked that such excitement and hot haste not only squander the vital energies but accomplish even less than consistent effort—"making haste slowly," to say nothing of the mishaps and accidents necessarily attending excited toils. The excited state of the nervous system is constantly aggravated, the poor woman laboring on borrowed capital, certain to reap the fruits in the form of prostration and illness at same time.—Informers.

The Excellent Woman.

But the holiest of all woman's functions is maternity; and as a mother, her mightiest influence is exerted. God has put highest honor and weightiest responsibility on woman in making her such. When the infant Moses was found, the daughter of Pharaoh said to his mother, "Take this child away, and nurse it for me." So, when God puts an infant in a mother's arms, he says to her, "Take this child, and nurse it for me." Every mother should regard herself as a trainer of immortal souls for God. In this work ceaseless thought, activity, and prayer are expended. In it highest and noblest faculties—all and to their utmost extent—are enlisted and taxed. Love, gentleness, tireless patience, self-sacrifice, toil, are demanded and cheerfully given. And religion enters the nursery as handmaid and helper. The mother gives her child to God, and over its infant days hovers the incense of her prayers. The opening mind is filled with thoughts of purity and gentleness, thoughts of God and of right. Early is he taught to trust and to pray. Parental restraint leads to divine restraint. From obedience to parents the transition to obedience to God is easy. So in all those early years her hand is on the secret springs of character. The clay is plastic, and she fashions it; the twig is tender, and she bends it.

Said the mother of Washington, "A good boy generally makes a good man. George was always a good boy." So she aims to make her children good boys and girls, that they may become good men and women. And these impressions are deep and lasting. The mother of John Newton often retired with him to her closet, put her hands on his head, and implored God's blessing on her son. He never could forget it. In after years of revelry and debauchery, he ever felt her hands upon his head.

A few years ago a company of Indians were captured on the western frontier. Among them were a number of stolen children. They had been with the savages for years. Word was sent throughout the region, inviting all who had lost children to come and see if among the little captives they could recognize their own. A long way off was a woman who had been robbed of her darlings,—a boy and a girl. With mingled hope and fear she came; with throbbing heart she approached the group. They were strange to her. She came nearer, and, with eyes filled with mother-love and earnestness, peered into their faces, one after another; but there was nothing in any that she could claim. Nor was there anything in her to light up their cold faces. With the dull pain of despair at her heart she was turning away, when she paused, choked back the tears, and, in soft, clear notes began a simple song she used to sing to her little ones of Jesus and heaven. Not a line was completed before a boy and a girl sprang from the group, exclaiming, "Mamma! mamma!" and she folded her lost ones to her bosom. So lives a mother's early influence in the hearts of her children.—Sunday School Times

A PLAIN TALK.—An old fashioned woman, writing in the Watchman and Reflector, speaks thus of some of our young seminary girls: "I have found in the classroom that the girls who have the most on the outside of their heads have the least inside. Last summer I heard a fashionable young lady read her graduating essay, earnestly demanding 'a wider sphere for women,' while her chest was so narrowed by artificial means that she could hardly read her essay. She evidently thought this whole world 'pent up Utopia' that was confining her powers; but all the poor girl needed was sufficient strength and purpose of character to free herself from the thralldom of fashion, and go to work in an earnest way to bring nearer to Christ the world she had found so much out of order. Some of you, my dear girls, may be filled with 'infinite longings' for a career. Let me tell you that what our sex most need at present is women who, unembarrassed by fashionable drapery, can walk a few miles without being tired—women whose thinking powers are not injured, who find a 'career' in earnestly doing their Master's work, however homely it may be."—Sel.

For The Young.

The Boy's First Smoke.

He sees his father, other men and the big boys smoke, and he concludes there must be something very enjoyable in smoking since so many older and presumably wiser people indulge in the habit. He heard Uncle John often say that boys would never become men till they would learn to smoke. His anticipations ran high. Of course he wants to be a man, and the sooner he learns to smoke the sooner he will attain to man's estate. Almost every boy has an idea that smoking is something no one can be a man without practicing.

Our ambitious boy saves up the coppers his uncles have given him and buys a cigar. He does it privately. He does not tell the other boys. He wants to learn the smoking trade, and then some day he will be able to puff out as big a cloud of smoke as father, or Uncle John, or any of those "fellows."

He retires with his cigar and march to some back alley, lights it and commences operations. By the time he has sucked and puffed about one-half of his cigar away he fully expects the delightful sensations to begin, but they do not seem to put in an appearance. He feels a little disgusted, and wonders if he has not done it right. So he sits down on a pile of lumber, elevates his heels, and his head is thrown back like father's, or Uncle John's, and his hat tipped to one side. Again he puffs and watches the smoke as it rolls away from his mouth. Soon his head feels dizzy, the pile of lumber seems to be going around and around. The trees and even the town seems to be whirling around him. He is determined to conquer and be a man or die. Puff, puff, puff! But still that horrid unsteadiness of everything continues. He has a strange buzz in his ears. Internally he realizes a strange sensation; he bows his head, the stump of his cigar falls to the ground, he looks as pale as death, his eyes are rolled up, he begins to think and feel that his dinner was disagreeing with him. He blames it on the green corn, cucumbers and mince pie that he had eaten for dinner. Finally he is relieved by a wonderful outpouring of the contents of his stomach. His father bears his groans and hastens to the place of distress. On arriving, our brave boy by this time was about resuming his stump of cigar, the father discovered the situation of causes and effects, and the boy gets a "trouncing" and peremptory orders not to try that on again. But he says to himself, Father, your example is stronger than precept. So he continues the habit, but is very shy about it. His mind is made up to be a smoker, and a smoker he is. Through much tribulation he has attained the desired end, and then spends all his after life in smoking away his health and substance, and sorrowfully regrets that he ever learned to smoke. He is now a husband and father. His wife persecutes him. His breath is corrupt. (Job xvii. 1; xix. 17). My breath is strange to my wife. He has smoked for fifty years. His tobacco on an average has cost him $10 or $12 a year. Hence he has paid five or six hundred dollars, and no value received. Instead of making him a man it has made him a slave to an acknowledged filthy habit. He is not only reproached by his tidy wife, but he often reproaches himself.

He has often been heard to say,
I'll quit this habit this very day,
In less than a week, without a joke,
He says, I'll die if I do not take a smoke.
W. H. OLIVER.

Little Strings.

You may have amused yourself with a face made of gutta-percha; pinching it one way, and pulling it another, and remarking what different expressions it will assume. When you left off pulling it, it returned to the same face it was before.

Now, your faces are softer than gutta-percha, and they are full of little strings called muscles, and these muscles pull them one way or another, just according to your feelings. You feel sad; the little muscles pull your face into a doleful expression. We can tell, by looking at you, how you feel. Or you feel merry; then the muscles pull your face into smiles and dimples.

But often there are wicked passions at work at the strings. Anger pulls, and oh what a disagreeable look the face puts on in a minute! Pride pulls the strings, or vanity, or discontent or deceit; and each brings its own expression over the face.

The worst of it is that when these passions pull very often the face does not return to what it was before, but the muscles harden and retain that ugly expression. By indulging in evil passions people may work their faces up into such awful faces that sometimes when you meet a man in the street you can tell, just by looking at his face, what his character is. A face that was very lovely when it was that of a child has had the passion of anger pulling at it so often that it always wears a sullen, cross, dissatisfied look.

Now, dear readers, do you want to have pleasant faces, that every one will love to look at? Then don't let the ugly passions get hold of the strings. Put them into the hands of love and charity and good will and truth and honesty, and then they will be beautiful faces.

I have seen faces without a single handsome feature that were sweeter to look at than the most perfect features that were ever formed. And why? It is the expression. And what makes the expression? Oh, it all depends upon whether the bad passions or the lovely graces get hold of the little strings.—Sunshine.

A Lesson for Young Men.

In passing through the prison, I accosted an elderly looking convict. He held down his head as though ashamed to look me in the face. On my handing him a tract he said: "I knew your voice as soon as I heard it, sir: I have heard you before to day, sir."

I found that at one time we were members of the same congregation and sat under the same faithful ministry. I anxiously inquired how it was that he had fallen so low as to become the inmate of a prison.

"A glass of ale was my ruin"

"How could that be?" I asked.

"I was at one period of my life, sir, very intemperate, but happily led to give up drink entirely. I became a regular attendant at the place of worship, and went on very happily for some years, until one evening I was returning from ———, when I met with some friends from the city. They prevailed upon me to go to the public house and have 'but one glass' Conscience reproved me, but having entered upon the enchanted ground I was readily induced to take more liquor, until I became overcome by it. The next morning I was ashamed to show myself, and left the town. My old appetite for drink had been rekindled; I became reckless, and joined a set of counterfeitters. We were discovered, convicted, and now I am to be transported. Oh, that I had never taken that ONE GLASS!"

A Word for Boys.

Truth is one of the rarest gems. Many a youth has been lost in society by not allowing it to adorn his character, and foolishly throwing it away. If this gem still shines in your bosom, suffer nothing to displace or diminish its lustre.

Profanity is a mark of low breeding. Show us that man that commands much respect, an oath never trembles on his tongue, Read the catalogue of crime. Inquire the character of those who depart from virtue. Without a single exception you will find them to be profane. Think of this, and don't let a vile word disgrace you.

Honesty, frankness, generosity, virtue—blessed traits! Be those yours, my boys, and I shall fear not. You are watched by your elders. Men, who are looking for clerks and apprentices have their eyes on you. If you are upright, steady and industrious, before long you will find good places, kind masters, and the prospects of a useful life before you.—Peninsular Herald.

RULES FOR AGENTS.

1. At the head of every letter give the name of your own post-office, county and State; and the date on which it is written.
2. Write the name and give the full address of every subscriber you send, as legibly as you can.
3. Write "New" before the names of all new subscribers.
4. In ordering a change of address, give the post-office, county, and State, to which the paper is sent, as well as the post-office, county, and State to which it is to be sent.
5. Do not mix up different items of business; but take up and finish one item before you take up another.
6. Write items intended for publication on a separate slip.
7. Make every lawful effort to obtain subscribers, and to do good in whatever way you can.
8. Send money by drafts, post-office money orders, or registered letters.
9. Observe the above rules, and you will expedite business, save us from much trouble, and yourselves and our subscribers from disappointments and vexation.

"I CAN'T LOSE MY PLACE IN SOCIETY."

A correspondent of one of our exchanges, writing from New York city, and describing the effects of extravagant living, gives the following case: "I know of one man, now a clerk, at $2,000 a year, who, four years ago, was making as a merchant on his own account, not less than $30,000 per year. He allowed his wife carriages, horses, parties, diamonds, &c., to the tune of $20,000 a year, and was satisfied. Times got dull, goods went down, the ground was slipping out from under him, and he implored her to stop. She would not listen. I can't lose my place in society, was her answer, and on she went.— Finally the smash came, there was nothing behind them, the sheriff sold their house, and the pair are now living in two rooms, and taking their meals at a very cheap restaurant." This is only one of the many cases of the kind that are continually occurring among the business men of our country. "Pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall." Prov. xvi. 18.

"I can't lose my place in society," exclaimed the merchant's wife, though she was told no doubt by her husband that bankruptcy must follow if their expenses were not curtailed; and bankruptcy would be followed by more or less dishonor and humiliation. But whatever evils she could foresee would follow her husband's failing in business, both to themselves and his creditors, she did not possess enough of the spirit of self-denial to deny herself of those fashionable gratifications which proved too expensive for their income, although that was considerable. How true it is that "godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come." 1 Tim. iv. 8. And as godliness itself is profitable unto all things, so is every principle connected with it. Godliness is a resultant effect of a faithful observance of all the divine principles designed for the government of human conduct, or the formation of the divine human character in man, or more plainly, the planting and developing of the divine nature in man. Christians under the laws and power of the kingdom of heaven, are made partakers of the divine nature. And if we are made partakers of the divine nature, the divine nature in us will resemble the divine nature in Christ. And it is said, and that to his honor, that "he pleased not himself."— Rom. xv. 3. And if godliness prevailed universally, with its principles of self-denial, frugality, justice, honesty, and truth, our world, which in its moral aspect so much resembles a barren desert, would be as a fertile valley or beautiful garden. There would be no failures in business, no hard times, no suffering from want.

The spirit which prompts men to seek the welfare of others rather than their own, is so much wanting among professing Christians! And this is the true spirit of self-denial, the spirit of Jesus. And where this spirit reigns, those that are governed by it, will be ready to deny themselves much for the sake of their brethren, companions, and all their fellow-beings, and still more for the sake of the Lord. The merchant's wife who said, "I can't lose my place in society," though perhaps a member of the church, possessed but little of the spirit of self-denial, or she would have readily foregone all the carnal gratifications that her place in fashionable society afforded her, and appropriated the money saved by her self-denying economy to the use of her husband, who, apparently, was anxious to avoid the crisis his wife's extravagance brought upon him.

The spirit of the merchant's wife is too frequently met with in the affairs of every day life. The husband is not as ready to deny himself for the sake of his wife's comfort as he should be, nor she for his. The children are not as ready as they should be to deny themselves for their parent's comfort or the comfort of one another. How reluctant we are to forego a little carnal gratification for the benefit of some body else! Human suffering in some of its various forms makes its appeal for help, or some of the benevolent institutions of the day designed for the promotion of the physical or spiritual welfare of mankind ask for help to further their plans. The young Christian lady decorated with jewels is asked to give them up, and sell them and appropriate the proceeds to some charitable cause like the foregoing. But she declines, "she can't lose her place in society," she cannot deny herself the gratification her jewels afford her, though by doing so she would relieve some suffering creature of a burden that is causing great sorrow, and honor and please the Lord. The young man who is spending an amount of money every year in smoking cigars or in using tobacco in some way, that would be a nice donation to some charitable cause, is asked to make the sacrifice, but he "can't lose his place in society," he cannot forego the pleasure his cigar affords him, though by doing so he would do much good. The man of wealth too, and by profession a Christian, who is joined to it as Ephraim was to his idols, is solicited, and expected to do a good share in some worthy cause, but as he has set his heart on riches, and desires to be counted a rich man in society, he cannot give much, as he too is afraid of "losing his place," or his money.

Though professing to be the disciples of Jesus, how slow we are to learn some of his lessons, especially that of self-denial. And yet how practical this lesson is, and how many opportunities do we meet with in life for practicing it. And if it was practiced more, how much better it would be for the world. If we would consult our duty and high Christian principle more, and mere sensual and self-gratification less, how much better it would be both for the church and for the world, both for our temporal and our eternal interests.

"I can't lose my place in society," said the fashionable lady. Did she forget that she must sooner or later lose that place? It is most likely she did. And yet how certain it is that she must. And so must the young lady give up her jewels, the young man his cigar, and the man of wealth his riches. But how much better would it have been for the merchant's wife to have given up voluntarily her unwarranted expenditures, and thus saved her husband from bankruptcy, and enjoyed the pleasure arising from a consciousness of doing right? And how much better would it be for every person to abandon every thing that is prejudicial to his spiritual interest, and in the exercise of the noble spirit of self denial, forego the pleasures of sin, which are but for a season, and instead thereof seek the purer, the higher, the more satisfactory, and more lasting joys of a Christian life, than to continue in sin and in the enjoyments of its pleasures, until forced by death to quit them, and then meet the end of the unfaithful, "shame and everlasting contempt?" Dan. 12 : 2.

RAIN AND HIGH WATER.

For the last two weeks we have had a good deal of rainy weather, and a large quantity of rain has fallen in this locality. But the crisis of the rainy spell seemed to be reached on Sunday, the 18th inst. It rained unusually hard during the greater part of the day, and Flaugherty creek, which runs through our town, was very high. And it reached its greatest height about 11 o'clock at night. Some persons who had crossed to attend our evening meeting, were informed by their friends that there was danger that they could not recross it if they delayed much longer, and they were hurried away before the services closed. A number of families living along the creek left their houses for awhile on account of the water entering them. The Castleman River was also very much swollen. Although the waters were high, beyond the inconvenience that those experienced who found it necessary to leave their houses, and the loss of some fences, and some damage to the Narrow Gauge railroad across the river, there was not a great deal of damage done here.

The Redstone creek at Uniontown was also very high, and considerable damage was done at that place and along the creek, by the swollen condition of the stream. Considerable damage is reported as being done along the river between this place and Pittsburgh, and along the streams that enter into the river.

The storm seems to have been severe in the East, and it is said by the New York papers that it extended from Florida to Maine, doing a good deal of damage on the sea coast. The great fall of rain was, in places, accompanied with high wind, and the two elements did a great deal of damage.

THE FULL REPORT.

We have after much delay and disappointment filled all our orders for the Report of the A. M. We have already several times apologized to those who had sent in their orders, and we again refer to it, although it is not a pleasant subject to refer to. The idea of getting the work done where either Bro. Brumbaugh or myself could give it some attention struck us favorably, and hence Bro. Brumbaugh made an engagement with a printer in Huntingdon, to have the work done there. He did not possess the facilities for putting work through rapidly that Bro. B. thought he did, and hence the work was much delayed. After we commenced getting them from the publisher they came slowly, and therefore some orders were filled a considerable time before others. We hope all who sent orders will receive what they ordered. Should they not, they will please let us know it. We are likely to have a considerable number left on our hands, and we therefore still solicit orders. As far as we have heard, our brethren are pleased with the Report. And we think it will prove edifying and instructive.

Querists' Department.

BRO. JAMES:—Will you, or some one of the brethren, tell us whether John's mission and baptism were under the law, or the gospel dispensation? If the latter, please give us the Scripture, and explain. Please answer through the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. T. B. DIGMAN. Fellowville, W. Va.

ANSWER.—We believe that John's baptism was under the gospel dispensation. 1. There was no ordinance of baptism such as John practiced under the law. It is true there were various immersions and washings, but there was no commandment that required one person to baptize another. 2. Mark commences his gospel as follows: "The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God." Mark i. 1. He then goes on to give an account of John's ministry introductory to the history of Christ. He evidently puts John and his baptism and ministry in the beginning of the gospel, and therefore in the gospel dispensation. 3. It is said, Luke xvi. 16, "The law and the prophets were until John; since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it." It is very evident from this language that John was not under the law since the law only continued until his time, and then it was discontinued, and the kingdom of God was preached by John. The preaching of the kingdom of God is evidently equivalent to the preaching of the gospel.

4. In Acts i. 21, 22, we read as follows: "Wherefore of these men" which have accompanied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, beginning from the baptism of John, unto that same day that he was taken up from us, must one be obtained to be a witness of his resurrection." Here the apostle Peter is speaking upon the occasion when the disciples were to select one to fill the place of Judas. And he gives it as a necessary qualification of the successor of the fallen apostle, that he should have been with him, from the beginning, from the baptism of John. Here the baptism of John is evidently as the beginning of the gospel.

5. The object of John's baptism was the same with that of Christ's, and therefore it would appear that they did not differ. John warmly exhorted those whom he baptized to repentance, and and faith in Christ, and said unto the people, "I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." Math. iii. 11. And in Christian baptism, repentance and faith in Jesus as the Son of God are likewise the principal things which are required on the part of those who submitted to this rite. We have no reason to believe that any who had been baptized by John were baptized by any of the apostles. Apollos, mentioned in Acts xviii. 25, knew only the baptism of John. Aquila and Priscilla took him and "expounded unto him the way of the Lord more perfectly." But it does not appear that he was baptized again. The circumstance recorded in Acts xix. chapter, of the baptism of twelve persons at Ephesus, who had been previously baptized, does not prove that John's baptism was not Christian baptism. These persons had never been baptized by John, as is evident from the fact that they declare that they had "not much as heard whether there by any Holy Ghost." John taught the existence of a Holy Ghost, and that the Messiah whom he taught the people to believe on, would baptize in him. It does not appear that John authorized any to baptize; but it does appear that some took up the baptism of John without authority and practiced it. These were false disciples of John, and of course the baptism they administered was not valid. Such seems to have been the character of the baptism of the twelve that Paul met at Ephesus. And as their first baptism was not valid, they were baptized again—"in the name of the Lord Jesus," or with the baptism he instituted.

Dr. Knapp in his Christian Theology, says, many theologians of the Romish church formerly maintained that there is a difference [meaning a difference between the baptism of John and that of Christ.—Ed. P. C.], but Protestants usually take the opposite side, although some, especially the more modern, have again adopted the former.

BRO. JAMES:—Will you or some one else please give an explanation of the first part, or the first two verses of Rev. xxii? Also of 1 John v. 6—8.

S. MUSSELMAN.

Tipton, Iowa.

ANSWER.—The verses in the query read as follows: "And he shewed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations."

We have in the closing chapters of this wonderful book of Revelations, a glorious view of what this world will be, and of the enjoyments of the faithful in connection with it, when all God's purposes and prophecies relative to it are fulfilled. They present us with a state of things that will exist when the restorative and redemptive work of our blessed Lord is completed. The world originally, with man upon it, and with all the variety of enjoyments by which he was surrounded, was a delightful place. May we not say that it was the highest manifestation of the wisdom and benevolence of God? Everything in the freshness of its creation was perfect. We would not say that God could not have made even a better world than this, or that he could not have increased the facilities for man's enjoyment, however great and many these were, but we will say that we should want nothing better than this world and all in it were, while they retained the perfection of their primeval state. And God's great purpose relative to man and this world is, to bring them back to their original state, so far as their happiness and holiness are concerned.

The connection, then, between many of the ideas in the closing chapters of Revelations and the opening chapters of Genesis, will appear evident, and their sameness apparent to the attentive student of the Scriptures of truth.—And the reference in the part of the book of Revelations to which our attention is being directed, to the garden of Eden, must be kept in view, to understand, or at least to get the leading ideas of St. John as here expressed, concerning the glorious future of our earth, with redeemed man upon it.

It is said in Genesis, "And the Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden: and there he put the man whom he formed. And out of the ground made the Lord God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food:

the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and the tree of knowledge of good and evil. And a river went out of Eden to water the garden: and from thence it was parted, and became into four heads." Gen. 2: 8—10.

"He shewed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb." In the first Eden there was a river, and in "the great city, the holy Jerusalem," as seen by John, there is also a river. This no doubt is an emblematical or figurative representation, of the eternal life and fulness of joy, which shall be the portion of all the glorified inhabitants of of the new Jerusalem. "Whosoever drinketh of this water," said our Lord to the woman whom he met at Jacob's well, "shall thirst again; but whosoever shall drink of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." This is living water, the same kind of water as is the river of the water of life. It exceeds "out of the throne of God and the Lamb." This is the source and fountain of all good. The Lord calls himself "the fountain of living water." Jer. 2: 13.

"In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life." Instead of "the tree," Biblical scholars tell us, we should read "a tree;" and this means there was a tree on each side. This seems to agree better with the context. How one tree could be on either side is not so plain. "Bear twelve manner of fruit." It should be noticed that the word manner in our common version is in italics, and this indicates that the translators added it to explain the passage. But the passage does not seem to mean "twelve manner of fruits," but that there will be twelve successions of fruits, and this agrees with the language. "It yielded its fruit every month. As the Jews had fresh manna every morning, the saints will have new or fresh fruit every month. This is a grand idea, of the freshness of the life of the saints.

"And the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." The saved nations were once sick. "The whole head is sick, and the whole heart is faint," said the prophet, when describing man in his sinful condition. But in the saved state, there is no sickness. The saved have been healed by the leaves produced by the tree of life. And cured by its leaves, and partaking of its fruit, the saints shall enjoy perfect health and perfect life, for ever. While there are a river and a tree of life, in the new Jerusalem, as there were in the first Eden, the "tree of knowledge of good and evil," which was in the first Eden, will not be in the second. The fidelity and integrity of the saints will not be submitted to another trial, and therefore the test of man's faithfulness, which was necessary in the beginning, will not be necessary in the new Jerusalem state. These things were seen by John in a vision; and how much will have a literal fulfillment, and how much a spiritual, is not so easy to decide. But they are full of suggestive, edifying and quickening truth.

The Last Chance.

The time has now come when the matter for the Almanac for 1877 must be arranged and placed in the hands of the printer. This fact is mentioned so that those who have anything for its pages may yet send it. Several appeals were made for help in this line, and we have waited as long now as we can wait; and as we have received but few responses, we must now use what we have, and fill up with what we can find and what may be sent immediately. This is the last call and last chance. There is yet space for advertisements. B.

Editor Absent.

On Wednesday morning, the 27th ult., when the matter for this paper was all in type, except a few items, the editor, accompanied by his daughter Mamie, left for the State of Ohio, where Sister Quinter and little Gracie, their youngest daughter, have been for a few weeks.—The entire family is now there, and we hope they may enjoy themselves very much and have a safe return. Our correspondents and contributors will please remember this, and afford us all the help they can in the way of essays and church news. B.

BRO. W. R. Deeter, of Delaware Co., Ind., writes as follows: "You may say to the brethren and sisters, that the Missis-sinawa church is in a prosperous condition, union, harmony, fellowship, and love characterizing the members. She is making an invasion on the kingdom of darkness. Twelve persons have been added during the present year, five at our last meeting. There are several applicants who will be buried at our next meeting to rise and walk in newness of life.—We expect, if the Lord permits, to hold a communion meeting on the 27th of Oct. Usual invitation is given."

BRO. A. B. Snider, of Cerro Gordo, says: "We are having much ruin and bad roads. Sickness is prevailing extensively. Bro. L. Hillery has been laboring for us this week and we hope it may be to the awakening of the brethren and sisters from the lethargy of soul, and move them to more zeal in the blessed cause."

BRO. J. W. Hawn, of Hamlin, Kansas, says: "Health is good, and the weather wet. Crops generally are good, but a great deal of grain spoiled in the stack. We have no grasshoppers in this country yet, and are not likely to this year."

Miscellaneous.

A Lightning Bolt Writing God's Name on a Blasphemer.

Some of our contemporaries seem disposed to question the truth of our statement that a negro man who was killed by lightning a few days ago in Campbell county had the letters "G O D" on his body. Dr. Thomas E. Moorman, whose Post Office address is Mt. Zion, Campbell county, has furnished the Richmond Christian Advocate an account of the circumstances, from which we extract the following:

"On the evening of the 6th inst. Perry Jones and George Brown, colored men, notoriously the most profane, wicked persons in the whole community, with three other colored persons, took refuge, during the rain, accompanied by thunder and lightning, in a tobacco barn on the land of Mr. George Creasey.

"From their several positions one would have thought that two of the others were in more, and the third in as much danger as Jones and Brown were. They, as their custom was, were engaged in cursing and swearing. Suddenly the lightning descended upon them, and while the other three were comparatively uninjured, Jones was killed, and Brown was stricken down senseless and almost lifeless for a time. He revived after a few minutes, and soon seemed to have regained all of his strength, but was dumb and bereft of his mind for several hours. The lightning had set fire to his clothing, and he was burned on his chest and left side and arm before the fire was extinguished. In his maniac efforts to free himself from those who were restraining him, the skin was rubbed from the burned flesh, and presented the following characters, G O D. A very close representation, to say the least of them, of the capital letters used in printing the name of Deity, while around and between them the skin was unremoved, and apparently not burned. The above characters occupied the angles of an equilateral triangle, which, as you are doubtless aware, was in ancient days a symbol of Deity. This man, then, seems to have been branded with the name of his Creator in the symbolic language, it may be, of his forefathers three thousand years ago, and in the printed language of the nation to which he belongs.—Lynchburg News.

Methodist Reunion.

The Methodist Episcopal church was formed in 1774, substantially as at present constituted, a preachers' government, consisting at the time of humble, devoted men who were ultra reformers, set by their founder, Wesley, against the world's spirit and the world's evils. Of a stiller Wesley had said, in a volume which every preacher must read and embrace, "They murder his majesty's subjects without stint. They drive them to hell like sheep." Coming to this country, Wesley said to the slave-holders of Georgia: "Your lands, houses, furniture, all that you have, is covered with blood," and his sentence, "American slavery, the vilest that ever saw the sun," has become an American proverb, and the Methodist Discipline was set square against the system.

In 1845 Bishop Andrews had become a slave-holder by marriage and refused to emancipate. And although in 1836, the General Conference at Cincinnati censured Orange Scott and George Storrs for praying at an anti-slavery meeting in that city, nine years' discussion had made the slave system so unpopular that the Conference dared not justify Bishop Andrews' slaveholding, nor did they dare condemn it, for fear of a Southern secession. They took a middle course and caused two sessions, North and South. They left Andrews a Bishop but gave him no work, leaving him to look on like the fifth calf in the fable. This action was based on no known principle, human, divine, or Satanic, but it doubtless pleased Satan as a complete ignoring of Christ and his code.

In 1868, the General Conference at Chicago, on petition of L. C. Matlack and others, re-cinded their censure of Scott and Storrs, long after the men were dead, and five years after the fall of slavery by Lincoln's proclamation.

Now, in 1876, ten commissioners, five from the old church, and five from the church South, have met at Cape May in New Jersey, and agreed on terms of mutual recognition preparatory to reunion. They dispose of slave-holding, rebellion, Ku klux, White League, color line,—everything, in short, which involves error and sin, or holiness or justice in connection with the slave question, in the following naive and gentle words:

"It is not to be supposed that in respect of some matters of mere opinion, all ministers and members of either church will be in accord!"

We incline to think no human utterance ever equalled, certainly never exceeded, the above in cheek. Its theory is that there is but one moral or religious principle, viz: the union and prosperity of the M. E. church; slavery, present oppression, injustice, violence, and years of blood, are "matters of mere opinion!" Is this the "Church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth?"

Thoughtful Methodists will ponder these things in their hearts. Some will leave, and some will remain to pray and toil, and hope to purify it. But the lodge, the invisible sentinel of all evil, will resist them.—Christian Cynosure.

Catholic Orders in the United States.

The Jesuits entered Florida in 1565, Maine, in 1613, and Maryland in 1634.—The Franciscans came in 1528, and the Dominicans in 1539.

The Carmelites entered California in 1602, and the Augustinians came to the United States in 1790. The Lazarists, Redemptorists, and Passionists Congregations of regular clerks have all commenced their labors in this country in the present century. The Benedictine and Cistercian order of monks; the former dating back in antiquity; 1,300 years, was introduced into the United States in 1846, and the latter in 1803. The Cistercians are represented by its severest form—that of La Trappe. The Trappists have two abbeys, one in Kentucky and one in Iowa.

As regards the religious orders of women, we have houses of all the sisterhoods, the Sisters of Charity, established in the United States by Mother Seton in 1809, the Sisters of Mercy of St. Joseph,

Sacred heart, Little Sisters of the Poor, and others too numerous to mention.

For the instruction of boys, the Christian Brothers, Brothers of Mary, Xavierian Brothers, and other communities.

The Archbishop of San Francisco is a Dominican; the two successive Bishops of Buffalo have been Lazarists; the first Bishop of New York was a Dominican; and in Philadelphia Bishop Egan was a Franciscan, and Bishop Neumann was a Redemptorist; and the present Bishop Gross of Savannah is also of that order. The Vicariate Apostolic of Kansas is governed by Bishop Meigs, a Jesuit, and Bishop Fink, a Benedictine.

News-papers.

I am sure that every person will be willing, as I am, to acknowledge, in the most ample terms, the information, the instruction and amusement derived from the public press.—Lord Lyndhurst. The newspaper is the chronicle of civilization, the common reservoir into which every stream pours its living waters, and at which every man may come and drink; it is the newspaper which gives to liberty practical life, its perpetual vigilance, its unrelaxing activity. The newspaper is a daily and sleepless watchman, that reports to you every danger that menaces the institutions of your country, and its interests at home and abroad. The newspaper informs legislation of the public opinion, and it informs people of the acts of legislation; thus keeping up that constant sympathy, that good understanding between people and legislators, which conduces to the maintenance of order, and prevents the stern necessity for revolution.—Sir E. L. Bulwer.

Faith.

The first exercise of faith upon Christ is the boldest and most vigorous, because it is for the saving of the life when the soul sees no recovery any way but in Christ; and it is the most noble, seeing it was under the discouragement of such mountains of guilt. It also gives Christ the greatest honor, for it is an act of greater confidence in him than any succeeding act can be. Now if thou didst put forth such a high and daring act of faith when all thy sins hung about thee, with how much more confidence mayest thou come now, since thou hast tried how successful thy first faith hath been! When the devil with all his black legions besets thee round, thou art not in a worse condition than at the first, when all thy sins did not only besiege thee, but possess thee.—Charnock.

AN IMPORTANT DECISION.—An important decision, of interest to all who reside in cities, towns, or villages, was recently made in the Lebanon county court by Judge Henderson. A man was indicted for assault and battery on a neighbor because he claimed the fruit on the limbs of a tree overspreading prosecutor's lot. Judge Henderson said that the owner of the land is the owner of it from his line upward as far as he desires to make claim of it. This being the law the prosecutor had a right to the fruit on the branches extending over his lot. He might even have sawed them off. The decision is important at this particular time and is generally misunderstood by the people.

To My Friends.

It is physically impossible to answer the queries that are sent to me for elucidation. To my mind and heart no letters come amiss; but I need the sinews of a Hercules to accomplish what mind and heart dictate. Let no one think that he or she is neglected; attribute my non-acknowledgment to the limitations which debility and a meagre exchequer impose. Bread and butter, or their equivalent, kick the beam even against all our periodicals in the opposite scale. Moreover, a more frequent and intelligent reference to the Bible and Dictionary, and a closer concentration of mind on the principles of the fragments I contribute to our papers, would often result in a satisfactory unfolding of subjects which are presented by letter for further explanation. Nevertheless, write often, dear brethren and sisters, even if no benefit accrues beyond the suggestions awakened in my own mind. I need the thoughts of others as much as any one can need mine. An independent thinker there is none. But above all, pray for me as you would nurse a crushed toe or finger, extending that sympathy and concern which the continuity of members under one life begets. But higher and more imperative still, labor and pray for the sanctification and development and glory of the Body of Christ.

C. H. BALSBAUGH,

BEAVER RIDGE, TENN. }
Sept. 9th, 1876.

Bro. Quinter:—I feel it a serious duty to make a confession to the many readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, for it is more serious to make an unbecoming expression that goes so far and then fail to make amends for it. The language that I allude to is in the article, "The True Nazirite." The reading of it as it appeared in print did not chord well with my mind, but I passed it by until the reading of your "apology" for not continuing the exchange of views on the subject of the full beard. This again called my attention to it, and I became convinced that I for one had used language that was "objectionable." It is irrelevant to the divine person of our Lord and Savior to shape the idea of the propriety of imitating any part of his external manners into a "conundrum" with an "if" before it, whether there was any design in it intended for us to pattern after or not. Instead of the conundrum, I should have said "If we insist on imitating that part of the pattern which the world endorses we should regard the rest of the pattern with equal reverence. With the help of God I will in the future try to guard against language that is unedifying or unbecoming and ask forgiveness for the past.
Yours in love,
C. F. DETWEILER.

Brethren Editors:—Being deprived of going to church this evening, I was engaged in reading the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. And in reading reports from the different parts of the brotherhood of the prosperity of the church, I was made to rejoice that we have the means whereby we can hear from the different parts of the brotherhood. And while we have this means at hand, let us not forget to keep each other posted in relation to these matters. Church news and correspondence seem to be items of much interest to the brethren in general. And as stated above, while we have the means so freely offered us, we should embrace them. I will drop an item from our locality.

We are still trying to labor in our Master's cause with the ability that the Lord giveth. We have received five this summer by baptism, and reclaimed one. Bro. Daniel D. Sell from the State of Missouri has been laboring for us, for a few days. To-day he starts to Philadelphia to spend a week, and we hope he may be successful in his new field. Brethren and sisters, you that have the talent to write, go on in the good work, let us have your thoughts on good practical subjects. Keep the editors supplied with original reading. Oh, how I love to see our papers filled up with good original matter. It is an evidence the brethren are alive to duty. With this I close.

From your weak brother,
DANIEL D. SELL,
Newry, Pa., Sept. 16, 1876.

In Memoriam.

Died, on the 21st day of August, in the Neosho county church, Neosho Co., Kansas, our beloved sister, Elizabeth Eiler, wife of Bro. John Eiler, aged 35 years, eight months and seven days. She leaves a sorrowing husband and seven children to mourn their great loss; yet they mourn not as those who have no hope. She was a consistent member of the Brethren church for nineteen years. Conscious that the passing moments were speeding her to eternity, her hope and faith never for an instant faltered, but rose higher and higher as she approached the river of death and the crystal fountain on the other shore.—Strong in faith and a glorious immortality she passed away. A friend to all who knew her, her light was ever on a hill, and all her words and deeds reflected the humble follower of the cross. Her whole life was a beautiful exemplification of the power of Christian virtue, and in accents of sweetness bids us follow her example, that in the hour of death we may rise superior to the trammels of mortality, and bask in the benign influence of the holy angels around the throne of God. In conversation with her a few days before her departure, she said there was one thing more she had not done that she desired, which was, to be anointed. This the brethren attended to, thus casting her last mite into the great store-house of God. Her disease was complicated. Her funeral was preached by the brethren.—Children, remember mother's good cheer and counsel, and her many acts of kindness to you which only a mother can show to her dear children. Remember the many prayers that her poor heart has offered for you. Sister Eiler was the daughter of John and Mary Kesler. To do justice to our departed sister and her numerous relatives scattered over the country, we pen these few lines. I would still say to her relatives, Sister Elizabeth lived a Christian life, and died as she lived. Let us all imitate her example, so that when done with the trials and conflicts of earth we may meet Sister Eiler and all the flood-washed throng on the other shore, where parting will be no more.

Editors Primitive Christian:

Some time since I received a circular from R. W. Acers & Co., proprietors of the Iola Mineral Water, at the Iola mineral well, situated at the city of Iola, Allen county, Kansas, on the Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston railroad. This water alone, without the aid of medicines, has clearly and unmistakably been shown to be a "certain cure" for the following diseases, namely: Fever sores, erysipelatous sores, syphilitic sores and ulcers, sore eyes, salt rheum, rheumatism, asthma, catarrh, dropsy, piles, dyspepsia, constipation, and indigestion; also, diseases of the kidneys and urinary organs. So says the circular. And I would be glad to know the facts in the case, as there is so much deception practiced in our day it is difficult at all times to know the truth. I thought if you would be so kind as to give this a place in your worthy paper, (as I have never been to Kansas,) of making inquiry of any one who knows about this mineral water, to give through our periodicals their names and addresses, and what they do know, either for or against their curative properties. There has been much sickness and several deaths in our country recently. This leaves us in moderate health. The Lord be praised.—Hope you are all well.

HIEL HAMILTON.

Our communion meeting is just over, and I feel like writing a few lines for our encouragement in the divine life, from the fact that the work of the Lord is still going on slowly. There have been twelve added to our number during last winter and this summer by baptism. Bro. S. Yoder from Washington dropped in occasionally and gave us a few sermons for our edification and encouragement. Bro. L. Rupp from Sonceca county, Ohio, came among us quite unexpectedly on the 6th of August, and delivered six sermons to the people while here. He plead earnestly with sinners, for them to forsake their ways and turn to God before it was too late. The ministers at our communion meeting were brethren S. Yoder and B. J. Harmon. They truly preached the word of God unto us in great power and in its primitive simplicity and purity.—May God bless their labors abundantly, is my prayer.
JOHN FRITS.

SALEM, Jewell Co., Kansas, }
Sept. 11, 1876.

Dear Bro. James:—We have just returned from the baptismal grave. Down in the beautiful grove, upon the banks of White Rock Creek upon this beautiful autumn morning our songs resounded, our prayers ascended, our hearts rejoiced, our little flock was strengthened, souls were reclaimed, tears flowed, and love, communion, peace, and harmony mightily prevailed. Spirits rejoiced, and "Glory to God" arose from every heart as one grand, solemn incense offering of praise.

Since a day in 1875, dating back from this date ten months, our White Rock congregation has been strengthened by just 53 accessions, only 5 of whom have been by letter. Two more meetings will close our series. Thence we go to the communion in O-boro county, and from there to the feast in Republic county.—Bro. Samuel C. Stump is with us and will remain during the meetings.

One word to Bro. Stein: We are sorry, dear brother, that you could not be with us. Pray for us, that the work wrought among us may be an everlasting work.

To those brethren to whom we have written for assistance and who did not so much as reply to our letters, we would say, God bless you, dear brethren, that you may henceforth remember to be pitiful and courteous. God has been our helper; we shall not lack. We shall not want. Yours most affectionately,
JAMES L. SWITZER.

Editors Primitive Christian:

On the 6th of July my wife and child and I left our home near Missouri Valley, Iowa, and arrived at Brooklyn, Poweshiek county, on the 7th at 3 a. m. We found all well—my mother, brothers, sisters, and friends. We had a pleasant visit of five days with them. We arrived in Pittsburgh on the morning of the 13th, stopping one day, and at Layton Station, at my wife's father's house, on the same evening. We enjoyed a pleasant visit with our step-mother, uncles, aunts, and cousins, whom we found well. We had preaching on the 16th at 11 a. m., also at 4 p. m., and one person was baptized. There was pretty good attention paid to the word, and we trust that we will all observe and live more in harmony with the teachings of our blessed Savior. We visited through Westmoreland county on the 22nd and 23rd; we also visited Aunt Landis, a sister, at her brother, Dr. Pfutz's, and we enjoyed the visit much. She is lonely and wept appeared to have no real pleasure in this life, and said she wished to leave this world. We encouraged her to be faithful amidst all the trials that might appear, until death; that the Lord would comfort her. But she took very sick in three days after we left for Greensburg.

On the 24th we arrived in New York. We had many strange things to view—the many boats and ships and the great waters, and many crowded streets, with business and cares, of this life mostly.

We arrived at Bro. Custer's on the 26th, in Philadelphia, and had a pleasant visit of four days. Had meeting at 10 a. m.; also, at 8 p. m. But few attended, as it rained almost all day, making it unpleasant. But we met with many kind brethren and sisters, that feel interested in the true worship of God. And we all should know that nothing short of obeying the gospel in its plain teachings, will save any one from sin.

We reached Baltimore on the 31st, and Frederick city, Md., in the afternoon of the same day, where we stopped with Bro. and Sister Gibbon. On the 1st of Aug. Bro. Samuel Pfutz met with us and conveyed us to his house. We remained there one week in visiting, mostly among the Pfutz families, my wife's mother's cousins and some other friends. We also met for public worship at 10 a. m. and at 3 p. m., at the Beaver Dam meeting-house, and had a good attendance, and trust that some good was done, and that our meeting together was not in vain in the Lord.

On the 8th we arrived at Meyersdale, took breakfast with Bro. and Sister Quinter and family, pleased to meet with them once more. We also met with brethren J. W. Beer, C. G. Lint, and others, and had a pleasant conversation, but a short visit.

We arrived at Dawson, on the evening of the 8th, where we were kindly received by Lewis and Eliza Huston, our cousins, she being a sister, and found many old friends. We had meeting on the 10th in the evening, and had good attendance, and trust some good may have been done through the name of Jesus. On the 11th we were called to the funeral of Sister Freeds, who is also a cousin. Her death was caused by heart disease. It rained and thundered and by some token of God's kind providence he caused a hot stroke to strike the pole on the top of the heltry, and it ran down the corner through the roof, ceiling, partition, floor, &c., damaging the building but little. The same meeting-house was kindly opened and lighted up for us the night before.—On the 12th we were called together at Dr. Pfutz's, to the funeral of our Aunt Landis. She died on the 11th, aged 79 years and 6 months. We met brethren J. Garver and F. Wetmer, ministers; also other brethren and sisters. On the 13th we met for public worship at the Jacobus Creek meeting-house, and had a good attendance. We also had preaching near Connellsville, at Rev. J. Addis in school house, on the evening of the 18th, had good order, also at the same place on the 20th, at 11 a. m., and at 3 p. m. Also the evening of the 27th, there was meeting at the Pleasant Grove school-house. We had the privilege of seeing and hearing and talking with many, and found some Christians also some fully persuaded, and many that know and do not. We do hope and pray that they will not cease loving God and searching his word until they have fully obeyed the gospel of our Lord Jesus-Christ. We arrived at Tama City, Iowa, at our cousin Rosenberger's on the night of the 30th, found them all well, stopped 3 days, had pleasant conversation together, and found some that believe the gospel, and say they would try and live a Christian life if they could enjoy the church privilege in the true meaning of observing and doing all the commandments, such as to love God, and our Neighbor, love and pray and do good to them that hate us; wash one another's feet and love one another. The teaching of John 2: 3—20, with all other gospel teachings, is their belief. We arrived safe home on the second night of Sept, found all well. We feel to thank the Lord for privileges we have enjoyed in meeting many of our Relatives and brethren and sisters in Christ, and friends, to whom we feel thankful for kindness. We could have desired no more hospitality than was shown to us. In my unlearned way I have tried to show all points in our visits. We held our regular meeting on the 10th, also on the 16th had a small congregation but good attention. The grasshoppers passed over our corn and damaged it some little. We have now wet weather, and low bottom lands are overflowed and some hay damaged. We feel thankful we are favored with enough to do us for the present.

L. S. SNYDER.

LA PLACE, Piatt Co., Ill., }
Sept. 15th, 1876.

Dear Brother:—I find a query by Bro. Longanecker in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN page 586, current volume, asking you to tell what was to be killed, a beef or a lamb and your answer to him was that it could not be told what, or if anything was killed. But if we closely notice the word, we find the disciples were to prepare the passover and the word saith they did as Jesus had appointed them and made ready the passover (easter lamb.—German.) The Bible tells us plainly what composed the passover (not a passover). It was to be a roasted lamb of the sheep or goats. Afterwards the command was to take it from the sheep or herd, (from the sheep or from the cattle Deut. xvi.) Now, I wish to say to Bro. Longanecker, that according to my understanding the disciples prepared the passover on the very time the law required it, on the day they called the passover, the first day of unleavened bread. The lamb was to be killed by some body, for it is not likely that they should prepare it without it was first killed. I notice in a case of dilemma the priests had to kill the passover, but I do confess that I can't find it in my Bible, that God commanded the priests to kill all the passovers for all the people. I hope Bro. Quinter or some other brother will tell me where to find that chapter. I would further say that when the passover was sacrificed, it was always to be done according as Moses had commanded, with all rites and ceremonies belonging thereto. I do think if we can't prove our position in the Bible, it must be a weak thing if we must refer to history to prove our position. Yours in the bond of love, MARTIN NEHER.

The Primitive Christian.

is published every Tuesday at $1.60 a year, postage included.

This Christian journal is devoted to the defense and promotion of Primitive Christianity, as held and practiced by the Church of the Brethren, or German Baptists.

They accept the New Testament as the only proper rule of faith and practice, and hold to the observance of all its commandments and doctrines; among which are Faith, Repentance, Baptism by Trine Immersion, Prayer, the Washing of the Saints' Feet, the Lord's Supper, the Communion, Non-Resistance, Non-conformity to the world, and the Perfecting of Holiness in the fear of the Lord.

As space will permit, some attention will be given to such secular matters as may be judged instructive to our readers.

Subscriptions may begin at any time. For further particulars send for a specimen number.

"THOU FOOL, THIS NIGHT."

The farmer smiled to see his bursting barns,
His fields yet ripening in the summer's sun,
And cried, with pride unswelling from his heart,
"Lo, what the toil of my two hands hath done!"
A sweet voice whispered from the rustling wheat--
"To God, who giveth increase, praise is meet."
"There is not room within those little sheds
To store from loss and theft my yellow grain;
So will I build me greater, that I may Rejoice and cheer my soul with this my grain."
Still plead that angel whisper, low and sweet--
"Give to the poor who have no food to eat."
"Cease troubling me! Why should I not be glad?
For hard hath been my toil, and long the strife;
Now will I laugh and fill my heart with joy,
And live right merrily the rest of life."
"O fool," the angel whispered with a sigh,
"Repent, for thou, this very night, shalt die."

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
What is Essential.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

In an anonymous letter from an "Earnest Seeker," occur these words: "I wish you to show me the necessity of water Baptism; that is, show that it is essential to salvation. Also show that it is necessary for Christians to take the Communion."
Why are you not in doubt, my good friend, whether you must eat if you want to live? Are not the conditions of salvation as rigidly fixed as those of our mundane existence? Is there a law in Heaven or on earth that may be infringed with impunity? or is there an atom in the Universe not subject to law? There must be such things as water-baptism and communion, or you could not make them matters of interrogation. Whence are they? You do not believe that they are of human origin, or you would never have wondered whether they are essential to salvation. The simple fact that they carry sufficient authority to raise a question in your mind in relation to eternal well-being, is a sufficient argument to prove their Divine Source. And why should they not have such authority, being found in a Book which purports to be "the Book of the generation of Jesus Christ?" Do you believe there is any thing essential to salvation? What? Is the blood of Christ essential? How do you know it? Does the fact of its having been shed, and the declaration of our dependence on it, rest on stronger asseverations than the symbols by which this fact is represented? Do you believe that the Divine Incarnation is essential? Why? Could not an Omnipotent, Omniscient, Omnipresent Being deliver us without such a conjunction with sin-corrupted matter? What can you advance against the necessity of Baptism and Communion that has not been repeatedly and vehemently urged against the necessity of the Cross? Do you deny the facts of which Baptism and the Eucharist are the embodiments? This I will not suppose. Then why call in question the form God has given these facts? Have you anything better, or more significant in which to express your death to sin, and your appropriation and enjoyment of the Divine Life? These ordinances must be essential, or mean nothing. They cannot occupy a half way position. When God puts authority into Chanticleer's bugle, Peter's heart will go to pieces like a rock under a gallon of blasting powder. When Christ says, "wash ye one another's feet, as I have done to you," that ordinance becomes a pivot between Heaven and Hell. When the Holy Ghost flames out of the mouth of Peter in the world comprehending mandate, "repent, and be baptized every one of you," the honor of God rests on your damnation if you disobey. When Christ puts all the emphasis of His Godhead into the words, "this do in remembrance of me," your disobedience will put all the emphasis of His wrath into Matth. 25: 41. God is a Being who respects Himself. He commands no more than is essential, both to His glory and our welfare. Every word means life or death. God blows no bubbles, and will not allow us to blow any at His expense. He makes no will, and then blots parts of it, as though He had got ahead of His intention or wisdom. Believe it, dear friend, you are not going to find a favorable reception in the court of Heaven, if you tear such items out of the King's Manifesto as are offensive to you. Be immersed and commune, and be what these symbols indicate, and eternal life is yours.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
The Association of Saints.

BY JAMES WIRT.

The church of Christ, represented in the Sacred Word as the body of the Lord Jesus, is composed of all those who have been translated from the kingdom of God's dear Son, incorporated into one association, and governed by the one harmonious law of the Lord, in whom all the building fitly framed together growth unto a holy temple in the Lord." It is a glorious privilege to be together in worshipping assemblies to participate in the observance of the ordinances of the Lord's House; for Jesus has said, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." By associating together the higher qualities of the soul are enhanced, and the prospects of future blessings are brightened in anticipation of the fulfillment of those precious promises given by our Elder Brother. The instructions are to forsake not the assembling of ourselves together, showing plainly that there is a worthy end to be attained.

What a beautiful sight to see babes in Christ and hear them lisping the gospel alphabet! "And now, little children, abide in him, that when he shall appear, we may have confidence and not be ashamed before him at his coming." 1 John ii. xxvii. This same Apostle informs us why he writes to the different members in the family of God: to the children, because they have known the Father; to the young men, because they are strong and the word of God abideth in them, and they have overcome the wicked one; to the fathers, because they have known him that is from the beginning.

Common observation testifies that the Christian is so constituted that it is necessary to use the legitimate means in order to strengthen the social affections. This desire to be in the society of our kindred, who are heirs of salvation, establishes the fact that our spiritual nature needs its proper gratificaution. How dull and insipid life appears when compelled to be in constant solitude. There are times when we love to be alone, to retire from the busy scenes of active duties to meditate in hours of calm devotion; but there is a limit, and to go beyond this is rather more painful than pleasant.

The relation saints bear toward their kindred of this holy race is very close, as their affections are knit together by the ties of Christian fellowship; and they will ever maintain this bond of union, as they are heirs of the same inheritance, and like children of the same family can say Abba, Father. God has exalted us to this glorious union with himself, and through the rich provision of his grace gives eternal life, a crown of righteousness, and has prepared for those that love him a future feast of good things, and hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit. In Hebrews we read that the saints "are come unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the firstborn, which are written in heaven, and to God the judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus the mediator of the new covenant." In our blessed Redeemer rests the whole of our eternal salvation, therefore we should, as brethren in Christ, acknowledge Him as our Lord and Master, before a sinful and dying world, that when He comes again the second time, without sin unto salvation, we may all be prepared as welcome guests to enter with him to enjoy that great gospel feast of blissful association to all eternity.

Pause and Consider.

SELECTED BY S. C. HAWVER.

Pause and consider, on which road you are traveling—the broad one, or the narrow one?—the one which "leadeth unto life," or the one which "leadeth to destruction?" It may be, you have never seriously considered this question. It may be, you have never sat down and quietly considered, if you were to be cut off suddenly, as thousands are, whether you would spend your eternity in heaven or hell. Pause now, I entreat you, and consider your ways. Your soul, surely, is worth a moment's sober consideration.

If you ever be admitted into heaven, you must be fitted for that holy place, for nothing unholy or unclean can ever enter those pearly gates and bright abodes. The word of God says, "You must be born again," that is, you must be changed by the Spirit of God; you must become a new, a different creature from what you are by nature; otherwise, the Lord declares, you "cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven."

Now let me reason with you. Is it worth your while to indulge in your sins and your wicked ways, it may be but for a few short days, and then make your bed forever in hell? Is it better "to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season," and then be damned to all eternity? Do pause and consider. Is it not madness to pursue such a course? If heaven were a cheat, and hell a delusion, then you might go on in your sins, and laugh at religion. But if, indeed, there be a hell for impenitent sinners, and a heaven for penitent ones, and if you must dwell throughout all eternity in one place or the other, I again put a plain question to you,—are you wise in living as you do, unthinking, careless, and godless? But now, my friends, if you would be delivered from the service of sin and Satan, and would know the way of salvation, let me tell you that the door of mercy is open still. You cannot save yourself. God knows that, and therefore, "for His great love where with he loved us," he has provided a Savior for the lost.

The Son of God left the throne of heaven, and came down into this lower world "to save sinners." He saves them by his atoning death—by bearing the punishment of death which their sins deserve. He "gave his life a ransom for many." He paid the great sin debt which we owed to God, and which we never could have paid. So that now you must have nothing to do but to accept Jesus as your Saavior. If you will heartily trust him, you shall be saved.

You have God's word for it. Relying on that word you never can be confounded. Oh! I will you not come to Jesus and be saved? He wept over lost sinners that refused him. "Come unto me," he says "all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." Matth., xi: 28, 29, 30 "And him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." John vi: xxxvii.

No Armor for the Back

SELECTED BY J. W. GALLATIN.

Let us wear no armor for the back when we have determined to follow the track of truth. Receive upon our breast plate of righteousness the sword cuts off our adversaries; their stern metal shall turn the edge of our foemen's weapon. Let the right be our lord paramount, and for the rest be free and our own master still. Follow truth for her own sake; follow her in evil report; let not many waters quench our love for her. Bow to no customs if they be evil. Yield to no established rules if they involve a lie. Do not let evil though good should come from it.

"Consequences!" this is the devil's argument. Leave consequences to God, but do right. If friends fail us, do right. If foes surround us do right. Be genuine, real, sincere, true, upright, godlike. The world's maxim is, trim your sails, and yield to circumstances. But if we would do any good in our generation, we must be made of sterner stuff, and help make our times rather than be made by them. We must not yield to customs, but like the anvil endure all the blows, until the hammers break themselves. When misrepresented, use no crooked means to clear yourself.

Clouds do not last long. If in the course of duty you are tried by the distrust of friends, gird up your loins, and say in your heart, I was not driven to virtue by the encouragement of friends, nor will I be repelled from it by their coldness. Finally be just and fear not, 'corruption wins not more than honesty;' truth lives and reigns when falsehood dies and rots.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Why so few Assemble.

BY HENRY GARBER.

Since our last church meeting we have wondered and mused in our mind, why it was that so few assemble on such soul reviving occasions. As one family we are equally interested in the business of the church, and the prosperity and purity of the same; and surely we should be equally concerned in the saving of the soul. Then it becomes the duty of every active and zealous member to attend church appointments. We will give a few quotations bearing on this point: Heb. 10: 25, "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another." Malachi 3: 16, "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name." Psalms 89: 7, "God is greatly to be feared in the assembly of the saints, and to be had in reverence of all them that are about him." Colossians 3: 2, "Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth." Matthew 6: 33, "But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." Christ has reference to worldly things, which do so likely and often absent us from church meeting. We believe the man and woman who is zealous in observing the above, with many other lessons of the Bible, will be in and at their place (unless providence prevents) on such times of duty. When members alone meet then it is that we try to settle matters of difficulty. Various admonitions are given by the elder brethren as regards our duty to God and to one another. Humility, which we all so much need, as a general thing, is cultivated among us on these occasions. Oh, how can we become so cold hearted and worldly-minded that with a frivolous excuse we can neglect foremost duty?

Should we not try to work for him to whom we have vowed, and let slip that upon which we have turned our backs? Had there been a hundred dollars at stake for each member not present, would they not all have been after it? Surely a good turnout would have been the result. On the other hand what benefit could that sum be to a dying man or woman. But were we zealous in the work of the Lord at all convenient seasons, especially on those under consideration, seeds might be sown in the heart by the way, which might do us good beyond this world, and be of more enjoyment than ten times one hundred. The reasons which absent so many of us, are principally based on carnality, and to be carnally minded is death, we are told. But if we would all be thoroughly spiritually minded, we would not so easily excuse ourselves with various trifles.

Some time since, I asked a brother why he did not attend church meetings. "O, says he, I thought I had no business there." Another one has engaged the threshing machine; some owe him and they must help him. Others go to the city on some business. This, that, and the other thing, is in the way this time; next time, perhaps, I will go. Next time comes; lust, world and the devil have combined in throwing more obstacles in the way, so we let the church do her business, and we in the rear, claiming to be part of the church too, are doing nothing for her, and consequently nothing for the Lord. We may not at once appreciate the good we can do by our presence on such occasions. The world, even, will notice, whether we be zealous or not. This zeal may be part of that loudest preaching to them. O, that we could shake off more of the world, and put on a little more of Christ, and with the Jews of old present our offering before the altar if it be but small. The Jews were required to do so; and if we wish to gain heaven, I believe we are also required to do so. But our heavenly Father does not compel us to serve him. It is left to our choice. If we wish to be a drone in the church we can, perhaps, slide along with a name, but in the end no crown will be awarded. Then, brethren and sisters, let us lose a few more days of earthly treasure and add them to the heavenly treasure. By it we will gain something, that will be more lasting. We must all lose the world ere long; also the treasure that belongs to it. Naked we came into the world, and so we must go out of it. When we weigh mortality with immortality the contrast is so great that it should awaken any drowsy soul to a sense of duty.

Brethren, we can all work in this respect. If I see that my neighbor brother is getting a little lukewarm, it is my duty and privilege to try to get him lively again. Sister, if you know that some are becoming cold and indifferent with regard to assembling, tell them the danger; persuade them; do all in your power to help each other. In this way much good can be done among us as private members, and the ministers may be encouraged, and the cause of our Master prosper.

New Lebanon, Ohio.

The Love of Christ.

It was on the love of Christ that the early Church so strongly leaned. It is to this love that we find the apostle Paul so continually turning. This was his soul's true resting-place and refuge. It was under the branches of this palm tree that he found a shadow from the heat. This was the deep well out of which he drank his endless consolation. He needed no other.

To be "able to comprehend with all saints the breadth and length, the height, and depth" of this love, was his aim; and to "know that love which passeth knowledge," was the sum of his prayers.

This love is our refuge too—our true and quiet home. The knowledge of this love is perfect peace. We sit down and let this love breathe freely into us, and straightway all is calm. Each storm has gone to rest, each gust has died away. Love beyond all loves, in greatness, in freeness, and in efficacy! Gifted with strange power of soothing, and healing, and comforting! He who has possession of this love, has got hold of a hidden spell, mighty to charm away all heaviness of heart, all bitterness of soul. What can withstand it?

In this love are all the loves of earth gathered up and centered. It is a father's love, yet far beyond the love of earthly father. It is a brother's love, yet passing far above it. It is a bridegroom's love, as the song of Solomon shows us, but tenderer than the love of mortal bridegroom. It is a husband's love, yet truer and more faithful than the love of the truest and most faithful husband upon earth. It is a love without beginning and without end—a love without any intermingling selfishness, or jealousy, or coldness, or forgetfulness, or weariness—a love without intermission, a love without fickleness, a love without decay.—H. Bonar.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. "The blood of Christ."

BY B. B. BOLLINGER.

The spear that pierced the side of the Saviour, opened the veins of the fountain that cleanseth from all sin; not the literal application of blood to our souls, but the acceptance of the sacrifice by Jehovah, under the terms of the Gospel, which is the "power of God unto salvation" to them that believe.

"Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth."

"Seeing you have purified yourselves by obeying the truth."

"Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you."

"He was raised for our justification."

"He became the author of salvation to all those that obey him." In the above quotations we have some of the renovating means:

1. The blood of Christ.

2. The Gospel.

3. Faith in the Gospel.

4. Obedience to the Gospel; for faith without works is dead.

5. Prayer; for he says, "Ask and ye shall receive."

6. Love: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God," &c.

Therefore, O ye ministers of the Gospel, shun not to declare all the counsel of God; for salvation is not by faith alone, neither by prayer alone, baptism alone, nor by the blood alone, but also by the resurrection and by his death. "He died that we might live." How many links can we spare from the great chain that reaches from earth to heaven? We cannot spare one link. The ordinances, even, "the form of doctrine," Repentance, faith, love, obedience, prayer, baptism, the communion, the Lords supper, Feet-washing, the holy kiss, Alm-giving, humility, noneconfirmit—"take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones." Man liveth not by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

—What you can effect depends on what you are. You put your whole self into all that you do. If that self be small, and lean, and mean, your entire life work is paltry, your words have no force, your influence has no weight. If that self be true and high, pure and kind, vigorous and forceful, your strokes are blows, your notes staccatos, your work massive, your influence cogent—you can do what you will.

—Plenty and peace breed cowards; hardness ever of hardness is mother.
—Shakespeare.

CHRIST AND THE LITTLE ONES.

Mark 10: 13; Luke 18: 15,

"The Master has come over Jordan,"

Said Hannah, the mother, one day;

"He is healing the people who throng Him
With a touch of His finger, they say.

"And now I shall carry the children,
Little Rachel, and Samuel, and John;
I shall carry the baby Esther,
For the Lord to look upon."

The father lo-oked at her kindly,
But he shook his head and snlled:

"Now who but a doting mother
Would think of a thing so wild?

"If the children were tortured by demons,
Or dying of fever, 'twere well;
Or had the taint of the leper,
Like many in Israel."

"Nay, do not hinder me, Nathan,
I feel such a burden of care;
If I carry it to my Master,
Perhaps I shall leave it there.

"If he lay his hand on the children,
My heart will be lighter, I know;
For a blessing forever and ever
Will follow them as they go."

So over the hills of Judah,
Along the vine-rows green,
With Esther asleep on her bosom,
And Rachel her brothers between,—

"Long the people who hang on His teaching,
Or waiting His touch or His word,
Through the row of proud Pharisees listening,

She pressed to the feet of her Lord.

"Now why should'st thou hinder the Mae-ter,"

Said Peter, "with children like these?
Seest not how from morning to evening
He teacheth, and healeth disease?"

Then Christ said, "Foi bid not the children!
Permit them to come unto Me!"
And he took in His arms little Esther,
And Rachel He set on His knee.

And the heavy heart of the mother
Was lifted all earth-care above,
As He laid His hand on the brothers,
And blessed them with tenderest love.—

As He said of the babes in His bosom,
"Of such is the Kingdom of Heaven;"
And strength for all duty and trial
That hour to her spirit was given.

—Julia Gill.

What Might Have Been.

The people of the northern United States know but little of the horrors of war from personal experience. Not since the Revolutionary War have these states been devastated to any great extent by the ruthless hand of the destroyer, and the days of '76 are too far in the past to be remembered by the present generation. The carnage and destruction during the rebellion were at the South. With the exception of two or three brief invasions of Maryland and Pennsylvania, Morgan's raid in Indiana and Ohio, and Quantrell's in Kansas, the North was almost entirely unmolested. It is true that the lives of a million of Northern men were sacrificed or made miserable and lifelong sorrow entailed upon millions of families; it is true that our wealth was wasted and a debt incurred which almost bankrupted the nation, but after all, with the exception of the soldiers, the northern people know but little of the dreadful realities of war. The soldiers do know it, and hence many of them wish never to see another. If the Northern States had been the scene of the conflict, if these states had for four years been overrun by opposing armies, as the Southern ones were, if our property here had been forcibly taken from us, if our homes had been burned, and we left without food or shelter, if our aged parents or helpless children had been left to wander unsheltered and unfed, then we might realize something of the dreadfulness and wickedness of war.

The Southern people did realize this, and they complained that the Northern soldiers were rapacious and cruel. But they seem to forget that war itself is cruel, that there is no such thing as humane warfare, and that if they had been the invaders, the cities and villages and farm houses of the North would have been the places of diabolisms of which even devils would have been ashamed.

We propose to show what soldiers will do when their respective governments pretend to absolve them from all obligations to obey God, and place them under the command of men whose word is law and whose trade is slaughter. And as the scenes of horror and devastation during the rebellion, were so much more numerous and heart-rending at the South than at the North, from the fact that the former was the seat of war, we shall present facts from that region, though to some extent in the language of our own men.

After the battle of Fisher's Hill, in Virginia, Gen. Sheridan wrote from Strasburg as follows: "Lieut. J. R. Meigs, my engineer officer, was murdered beyond Harrisburg, near Dayton. For this atrocious act, all the houses within an area of five miles were burned. In moving back to this point, the whole country, from the Blue Ridge to the North Mountain, has been made entirely untenable for a rebel army. I have destroyed over two thousand barns, filled with wheat and hay and farming implements; over seventy mills filled with flour and wheat; have driven in front of the army over four thousand head of stock, and have killed and issued to the troops, not less than three thousand sheep. This destruction embraces the Luray valley and the Little Fort valley, as well as the main valley."

A Northern correspondent who traveled with Sherman's army during its march to the sea, thus reports its prowess in pillage. "Such little freaks as taking the last chicken, the last pound of meal, the last bit of bacon, and the only remaining scraggy cow, from a poor woman and her flock of children, black or white not considered, came under the order of legitimate business. Even crockery, bed covering, and clothes were fair spoils. As for plate or jewelry or watches, these were things rebels had no use for. Men with pockets plethoric with silver and gold coin; soldiers sinking under the weight of plate and fine bedding materials; lean mules and horses, with the richest trappings of Brussels carpets, and hangings of fine chenille, negro wenchs, particularly good looking ones, decked in satin and silks, and sporting diamond ornaments, officers with sparkling rings, that would set Tiffany in raptures, gave color to the stories of hanging up or fleshing an 'old cuss' to make him shell out. A planter's house was overrun in a jiffy; boxes, drawers and escritaires were ransacked with a landable zeal, and emptied of their contents. If the spoils were ample, the depredators were satisfied, and went off in peace; if not, everything was torn and destroyed, and most likely the owner was tickled with sharp bayonets into a confession where he had his treasures hid. If he escaped and was hiding in a thicket, this was prima facie evidence that he was a skulking rebel; and most likely some ruffian, in his zeal to get rid of such vipers, gave him a dose of lead, which cured him of his Secesh tendencies. Sorghum barrels were knocked open, bee hives rifled, while their angry swarms rushed frantically about. Indeed, I have seen a soldier knock a planter down because a bee stung him. Should the house be deserted, the furniture is smashed in pieces, music is pounded out of four hundred dollar pianos with the ends of muskets. Mirrors were wondrously multiplied, and rich cushions and carpets carried off to adorn teams and war steeds. After all was cleared out, most likely some set of stragglers wanted to enjoy a good fire, and set the house, debris of furniture, and all the surroundings in a blaze. This is the way Sherman's army lived on the country."

In the language of a historian othe war, we report other scenes as follows: "Gen. Sherman was the author of the sentiment, "War is cruelty and you cannot refine it." This extraordinary doctrine he at once proceeded to put in practice by depopulating Atlanta, and driving from their homes thousands of helpless women and children. It was the most cruel and savage act of the war. In vain the mayor of Atlanta had pointed out to him that the country south of the city was crowded already with refugees, and with out houses to accommodate the people, and that many had no other shelter but what they might find in churches and out-buildings, that the consequence would be woe, horror and suffering, which could not be described by words. Sherman was inexorable. He affected the belief that Atlanta might again be rendered formidable in the hands of the Confederates, and resolved, in his own words, "to wipe it out." The old and decrepit ones were hunted from their homes, they were packed into railroad cars; tottering old age and helpless youth were crowded together; wagons were filled with wrecks of household goods, and the trains having deposited their medley freight at Rough and Ready, the exiles were then left to shift for themselves. On the night of the 15th, the torch was applied to Atlanta, and when the merciless commander had already created a solitude, he determined to make a second conflagration, by the light of which his marching columns might commence their journey to the sea. The work was done with terrible completeness; buildings covering two hundred acres were in flames at one time; the heavens were an expanse of livid fire; and amid the wild and terrific scene, the Federal bands played "John Brown's soul goes marching on." The next morning, Sherman's army moved from a scene of desolation such as had occurred in no modern picture of civilized war. From four to five thousand houses were reduced to ruins; and four hundred left standing was the melancholy remnant of Atlanta. Nearly all the shade trees in the park and city had been destroyed, and the suburbs, stripped of timber, presented to the eye one vast, naked, ruined, deserted camp.

After Sherman had taken Savannah, he wrote in his official report, as follows: "We have consumed the corn and fodder in the region of country thirty miles on either side of a line from Atlanta to Savannah, as also the sweet potatoes, cattle, hogs, sheep and poultry, and have carried away more than ten thousand horses and mules, as well as a countless number of their slaves. I estimate the damage done to the State of Georgia and its military resources at one hundred millions of dollars, at least twenty millions of which has inured to our advantage, and the remainder is simple waste and destruction."

From Savannah, Sherman invaded South Carolina, where his track of destruction is thus described. "The country was converted into one vast bonfire. The pine forests were fired, the resin factories were fired, the public buildings and private dwellings were fired. The middle of the finest day looked black and gloomy, for a dense smoke arose on all sides, clouding the very heavens. At night the tall pine trees seemed so many pillars of fire. The scenes of license and plunder which attended these conflagrations, were even more terrible. Long trains of fugitives lined the roads with women and children, and horses and stock and cattle, seeking refuge from the pursuers. Long lines of wagons covered the highways. Half-naked people cowered from the winter under bush tents in the thickets, under the eaves of houses, under the railroad sheds, and in old cars left them along the route. Habitation after habitation, village after village, sent up its signal flames to the others, and lighted the sky with crimson horrors. Granaries were emptied, and where the grain was not carried off, it was strewn to waste under the feet of the cavalry, or consigned to the fire which consumed the dwelling. The roads were covered with butchered cattle, hogs, mules and the costliest furniture. Valuable cabinets, rich pianos, were not only hewn to pieces, but bottles of ink, turpentine, oil, whatever could efface or destroy, was employed to defile and ruin. Horses were ridden into the houses. Beautiful homesteads of the parish gentry, with their wonderful tropical gardens, were ruined. Ancient dwellings of black cypress, one hundred years old, were given to the torch as recklessly as were the rude hovels. Choice pictures and works of art from Europe, select and numerous libraries, objects of peace wholly, were all destroyed. The inhabitants were left to starve, compelled to feed only upon the garbage to be found in the abandoned camps of the soldiers. The corn scraped up from the spots where the horses fed, was the only means of life left to thousands lately in affluence.

Columbia was surrendered to Sherman on the morning of the 17th of February, by the mayor, Mr. Goodwin, who asked for the citizens "the treatment accorded by the usages of civilized warfare." Sherman promised this. But the work of pillage had begun when the Federal troops had first reached the head of Main Street. Stores were broken open, and the contents strewn on the sidewalk; citizens were robbed in the street; no one felt safe in his own dwelling. Robbery was going on at every corner. Meanwhile, the flames spread from side to side, from front to rear, from street to street. All the thoroughfares were quickly crowded with helpless women and children, some in their night clothes. Agonized mothers seeking their children, all affrighted and terrified, were rushing on all sides from the raging flames and falling houses. Invalids had to be dragged from their beds, and lay exposed to the flames and smoke that swept the streets, or to the cold of the open air in the back yards. The sun rose with a wan countenance, peering dimly through the dense vapors which seemed wholly to overspread the firmament. The best and most beautiful portions of Columbia lay in ruins. Eighty four squares of buildings had been destroyed, with scarcely the exception of a single house. The capital building, six churches, eleven banking establishments, the schools of learning, the shops of art and trade, of invention and manufacture, shrines equally of religion, benevolence and industry, were all buried together in one congregated ruin. Nothing remained but the tall, specter-looking chimneys. The noble looking trees that shaded the streets, the flower gardens that graced them, were blasted and withered by fire. On every side there were ruins and smoking masses of blackened walls, and between, in desolate groups, reclining on mattresses, or bed, or earth, were wretched women and children, gazing vacantly on the site of what had been their home.

"The burning of Columbia was but of a piece with Sherman's record. He had burned six out of every seven farm houses on the route of his march. Before he reached Columbia, he had burned Blackville, Graham, Rainberg, Buford's Bridge, Lexington, and had not spared the humblest hamlet. After he left Columbia, he gave to the flames the villages of Allston, Pomaria, Winnsboro, Blackstock, Society Hill, and the towns of Camden and Cheraw."

Reader, this is war and this what war makes of men who were tender-hearted and humane. We do not quote these descriptions to condemn Northern soldiers, but to condemn war itself. We have before intimated, that if the North had been the theater of the war, and the Southern armies the invaders, they would have done no better, and we of the North should have more valid impressions of its dreadful consequences than we now have.—The Informer.

The Christian's Hope.

BY ELLA KAHLER.

"Which hope we have is an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil." Heb. 6: 19.

Hope is a prospect, which we think of with pleasure, and are desirous of obtaining. The Christian's hope of eternal happiness and glory is founded on the merits, the blood, the grace, the promises and Spirit of Christ; and the unchangeable truth and almighty power of God. Christ is called "our hope," because he is the only foundation on which to build our hope of any real good here or hereafter.

Hope has great influence in the salvation of Christians, and the gospel is suited to inspire it. But in order to this, the gospel must be believed. And that hope which arises from true faith tends powerfully to make men holy, and lead them, notwithstanding all trials, to persevere in holiness to the end. "We are the children of God," and what we shall be doth not yet appear; but we know that when he, our righteous Lord, shall appear, at the second coming, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." He was manifested to take away our sins, and in him is no sin. Every man then that hath this hope in him, of not only seeing the Savior as he is, but of being found like him when he appears in that "glory to be revealed," which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor the heart conceived,—or as the Psalmist expresses it with such solemn beauty, when we shall awake with his likeness—he, from that high motive alone, that love and inspiration and worship, that holy longing and elevating sympathy and glorious prospect of resemblance more and more forever. "He that hath this hope within him will purify himself even as he is pure." There is a hope of a blessed immortality, in that glorious heaven above, to all the righteous, and that hope is termed, "the helmet of our salvation" and "the anchor of our soul." There are many vessels floating over the great deep, and each vessel has its anchors; for when tossed to and fro with tempest, they can cast their anchors; but they are not sure of not being shipwrecked. Many a fine ship has left port and never returned.

My dear Christian friends, as we all are sailing o'er the sublime deep of human life, we have many storms to face, and I sometimes think some of us are almost wrecked. But if we have that anchor which is both sure and steadfast to cast, we need not fear, though surrounded on all sides with danger. Job, that illustrious example of patience under affliction, consoled his spirit in the midst of adversity by the hope he entertained of a blessed immortality. "I know," says he, "that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and after I awake, though this body shall be destroyed, yet out of flesh shall I see God." Hope dispels the terrors which naturally surround the messenger of death and throws a radiance over the mansions of the tomb. It cheers the gloomy vale of death, and transforms it into a passage which leads to a world of perfection and happiness, where moral evil shall be forever abolished, where intellectual light shall beam with effulgence on the enraptured spirit, and where celestial virtue now so frequently persecuted and contemned, shall be enthroned in undisturbed and eternal empire. "As for me," says the Psalmist, "My flesh shall rest in hope; for thou wilt not leave my soul in the grave. Thou wilt show me the path of my life; in thy presence is fulness of joy: at thy right hand are pleasures forevermore. Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me. Surely goodness and mercy will follow me all the days of my life, and I shall dwell in the house of the Lord forever."

O the hope, blessed hope of the Christian soul,

'Tis a star that shines forever,
And its cheering light he loses never.

Religion.

BY J. W. SMOUSE.

Religion is a most cheerful and happy thing to practice, but a most sad and awful thing to neglect. Blessed be God for that religion that has power to enlighten the heart and mind, and to afford the hope of a blessed immortality.

Religion is the soul of love; it is an instructive light and evidence of what is not to be proved—but which cannot deceive—a light to lighten us on the narrow way to Heaven. In heaven there is rest from all our earthly temptations—from sickness, sorrow, pain and death. There will be no false friends, no unkind relatives, no bitter enemies; all will be peace, joy, love and happiness. We are like the leaves in the forest, we come forth in beauty and only for a short time, and we are numbered with the dead. How important, then, is religion!

Blessed be God for that religion which supports us in the hour of death. How dark and dismal would this world be, when tempted, wounded and troubled, if we could not fly to our heavenly Father, who is ever ready to dry our tears and heal our wounds!

Sinners, I exhort you to embrace this holy religion. What would it profit us, though we should gain the whole world and lose our own soul? Religion will lighten you through this uneven world and lighten you through the valley of death, and land your souls safe in the haven of eternal joy and happiness. May God bless and save us, is my prayer.

The Influence and Power of Books.

On one occasion James the First, of England, made a visit to Oxford, and was publicly received in the Bodleian Library. He said, "If I were not a king, I would choose to be a university man. If it ever should be my lot to be a prisoner, I could wish for nothing better than to be imprisoned in this room, with all these books around about me for my friends, my counsellors, my comforters, and my advisors. Books are among the best friends that it is possible for any man to have. They will be silent when he does not wish to converse; they will speak to him when he desires to be spoken to; they will take no offense at his comments. They include the most illustrious of the living and the most illustrious of the dead. Having books, a man can number among his friends those who have distinguished themselves in civil life and in military life; he can have friends from the state; he can have friends from the church. He can entertain them all his life at least possible expense, because they ask no more at the hands than the tenderest accommodations and the quietest place in his dwelling."

Something like that was said regarding books many centuries ago. It has been said again and again by multitudes on platforms and in print; but it has not always been assigned to its cultivated and talented author, many of whose other works are practically forgotten. Books in many respects are like men; but they are all like the greatest of men—men so great that they can make their voices heard through the coming generation.

Said Fenelon, "If all the crowns of Europe were placed at my disposal on condition that I should abandon my books and my studies, I should spurn the crowns away and stand by the books." Such utterances as these would have been impossible if there had not been an immense attractiveness about books.

The Lord enjoined that the Hebrew king when he came to wield his scepter should, with his own hand, write out a book and keep it by him, that it might instruct him in his royal duties and guard and warn him against the temptations of his station. God himself made communications to man, and it pleased him at length to put them in the form of a book. When Jesus was here on the earth he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath-day, as his custom was, and the book was offered him and he read, and he was pleased to speak out of the book. Infinite wisdom! Incarnate love! The Son of God himself condescending to speak to men from the wisdom of a book!

When he left the world he made provision for another book, to be given to mankind through his servants, and so we have the New Testament; and by the book he is continuing to teach men. By the book he will continue to teach, we believe, until the trump of the archangel shall sound and the Son of God shall come again in his glory.

"Forever, O Lord, thy word is settled in heaven," and forever that word is settled to be the instructor and the guide of men on earth. If men will not hear Moses and the prophets, if men will not believe the testimony to the spiritual and eternal world that is borne in the book, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead.—Rev. John Hall.

The Two Injunctions.

BY C. F. DETWEILER.

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."

"For every man shall bear his own burden." Gal. 6: 2, 5.

To the infidel who looks at the gospel of Christ from a side view, with an eye bent on finding an inconsistency, these two passages may seem to be contradictory: but to one who looks into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, they are in complete harmony. The first applies to the church as a body, and the second to "every one" individually who is a member of that body. For we are "one body in Christ and every one members one of another." When one member suffers all the members suffer with it, and when the burden of one member is communicated to the body every member receives a burden of his own to bear, in compliance with the first injunction. The church may bear this burden, while a few of its individual members refuse to bear any part of it. But every one who thus fails to "bear his own burden" disobeys not only the second injunction, but the first also. Almost our whole duty to one another as brethren, is contained in these two injunctions; and a question that goes far in fixing our eternal destiny is: How far have we come in fulfilling them? "He that knoweth to do good and doeth it not to him it is sin."

A Riddle.

I have been putting a little riddle to myself. Here it is. Is it easier to trust God when you have nothing, or when you have all things? Is it easier to say, "Though he slay me I will trust in him," or to say, "Though he make me alive I will trust in him?"

Will you think it over? Shall I help you?

Here is a man without a farthing in the world; his cupboard is bare, his flocks are cut off from the field, and his herds from the stall; is it hard for that man to trust in God? If you say so, I will not dispute with you.

But here is another man who has a bank full of gold, his meadows are covered with flocks and herds, his barns are ready to burst with corn, and his trade prospers on all hands. Now, sirs, is it easy for that man to trust God? Do you say "Yes?" I say "No." I say that he has a very hard task indeed to live by faith, and the probabilities are that when he says, "I trust God," he is trusting his barn or his bank.—Sel.

The Molten Calf.

In the 32d chapter of Exodus we read that in the absence of Moses the people constrained Aaron to make a molten calf. They said, "Up, make us god's which shall go before us; for as for Moses, which brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what has become of him." In due time the image was made, and the people worshipped the image that they had wrought. So I fear it is with some of us now-a-days; we are very apt to come to the conclusion that the great Centennial, or world's fair, which is being held at the city of Philadelphia, is a gathering of very pious people, partly because it is frequented by members of different religious denominations, as well as the world at large; and we are simply going to see the great show, and then herald the news of its pomp and splendor to the gazing and gaping world in the periodicals of church and state. But there is a still small voice that tells us of a greater and grander and a more pompous place for all those that fear and obey the great Creator, who's in the heavens above, who has created both heaven and earth and all therein contained, from the smallest creeping thing to the great leviathan. We should rather strive to gain that great pleasure ground where the streets are of pure gold, and the dwellings of the grandest design—grander than our faculties can comprehend. Then why should we gape and gaze at those perishable images that poor and deluded man has fashioned to gratify our lusts? Let us go on and upward in our course, and neither turn to the right or left, or look behind us as did Lot's wife. But go on and look forward to the goal of our hopes.

A. BAKER.

A Cheerful Spirit.

Bishop Jeremy Taylor as a chaplain to Charles I. had followed his fortunes, and suffering in the Revolution the consequences of his loyalty, he passed many years in the retirement of a Welsh village, where he engaged in the humble occupation of school teaching. It was here that he penned the following cheerful thoughts:

"I am fallen into the hands of publicans and sequestrators: and they have taken all from me. What now? Let me look about me. They have left me sun and moon, fire and water, a loving wife, many friends to pity me, and some to relieve me, and I can discourse, and unless I list, they have not taken away my merry countenance, and my cheerful spirit, and a good conscience; they have left me the providence of God, and all the promises of the Gospel, and my hopes of heaven, and my charity to them too. I can walk in my neighbor's pleasant fields, and see the variety of natural beauties, and delight in all that in which God delights; that is, in wisdom and virtue, in the whole creation and in God Himself. And he that hath so many causes of joy, is very much in love with sorrow and peevishness, if he loses all these pleasures, and chooses to sit down on his own little handful of thorns."

It is a fact that God's care is more evident in some instances of it than in others to the dim and often bewildered vision of humanity. Upon such instances men seize and call them providences. It is well that they can, but it would be gloriously better if they could believe that the whole matter is one grand providence.—George MacDonald.

For The Young.

A Broken Dish.

Joe was the village idiot, and like many an unfortunate of his class, often surprised people by his shrewd sayings. He had an odd habit of calling at the neighbors towards sundown where he would sit by the kitchen fire an hour at a time, muttering in his foolish, harmless way. He came to our house the other night when mother was busy preparing tea. In one of her journeys from the dining-room she dropped a china bowl, breaking it in a dozen pieces.

This little act seemed to give Joe infinite delight. He rubbed his hands over the stove, and chattered and chuckled more like some animal than a human being. Then looking with a silly leer, he said: "Folks is like dishes mostly; you can't handle such kind rough," pointing to the ruin on the floor. "Ain't good for much when they're broken, and they break mighty easy." Rolling his eyes toward the more common ware ranged on the kitchen shelves, he continued: "That's the sort for use? They're the people to do the work in the world! Not so nice and purty as t'other, but you don't have to treat 'em so tender." Poor joe! I wondered if his mind were nor like delicate porcelain, which some careless had let fall in early life, hopelessly shattering it.

Mother, with that rare sympathy belonging only to matured motherhood, humored his fancy by saying: "Well, Joe, you know all kinds of dishes are needed at a feast. There is a greater supper than this to take place by and by, when the Master comes to sit down at the table he will want something besides the china and silver. It won't make so much difference then what we are, if only we bring the food he expects. The Lord never looks for 'strong meat' in a vessel which can carry only milk."

Joe looked at her with his vacant stare, showing that he but dimly understood her meaning though he seemed to comprehend Scriptural ideas easier than any others. Does this verify the words of the prophet, that a wayfaring man, though a fool, shall not err therein.

Watching the fragments as they were brushed into the dust-pan, he burst forth again. "Ha! ha! Guess He'll tak care of the pieces! Things don't get broken in His hands though. He knows the difference 'tween tin and chin-y!"

Half-witted words, perhaps, but hiding a depth of meaning full of truth and pathos. Are we not, as Christians, responsible for some of the broken vessels in the Lord's treasure-house? Though there may be but few, like Joe, whose minds are a complete wreck, are there not among us many sensitive, highly-organized natures, whom in our rude jostling we have given a jar they will feel for life? It may not have been in the shape of a harsh word or an unkind act, but simply in withholding the sympathy and encouragement we might have given, or even in the failure to recognize that they are more delicate mold. To how many thirsting souls they might have carried the water of salvation had not their power been weakened!

We never place fragile glass upon the heated stove, but we do subject each other's characters and modes of action to fire of scathing criticism or uncharitable remark, and then wonder that they do not stand the test. We carefully protect our porcelain from undue frost and cold, but leave many a soul shivering from indifference or neglect. I believe with Joe, that the Son of Man will "gather up the fragments, that nothing be lost," and at the marriage supper of the Lamb we shall recognize many a broken vessel that here on earth we condemned as unfit for use, because failing to act in the way we judged best.

"Things never get broken in his hands!" Shall they in yours, Christian, when he has made you your brother's keeper?—Selected.

The Gift of Song.

A touching story is told of a little girl sent by her parents from Spain, during the time of religious persecution there, to take refuge with some friends in England. The vessel was lost on a rock-bound coast during a severe storm; but the little girl was saved through the efforts of some heroic men. She was too young to tell her story, but by a series of providential events, was brought at last to the house of a friend of her parents just as, released from imprisonment, they arrived in England to seek their long lost darling. A familiar tune that the mother had taught to her little girl in former days, became the clue that led to their joyful meeting.

A remarkable incident is that of a Scottish youth who learned with a pious mother to sing the old psalms that were then as household words to them in the kirk and by the fireside. When he grew up he wandered away from his native country, was taken captive by the Turks, and made a slave in one of the Barbary States. But he never forgot the songs of Zion, although he sung them in a strange land and to heathen ears. One night he was solacing himself in this manner, when the attention of some sailors on board of an English man-of-war was directed to the familiar tune of "Old Hundred," as it came floating over the moonlit waves. At once they surmised the truth, that one of their countrymen was languishing away his life as a captive. Quickly arming themselves they manned a boat, and lost no time in effecting his release.

What a joy to him after eighteen long years passed in slavery! Should you not think that he would always love the glorious tune of "Old Hundred?"

Children, never let your sweet young voices be employed in using profane or unseemly words. It is a quaint saying, but it is true, 'Furnish the mind with good things and there will be no room for evil.' They will be like nails fastened in a sure place. You know when a nail is driven in tightly you cannot wedge anything else along side of it. But you may have a tuneful voice and love to sing, and yet remain unaffected by the beautiful words. O, how sad if they who sing about Jesus on earth shall not be of the number of the 'redeemed who join in the "new song" before the throne of God and the Lamb!' — Child's words.

Mr. Choate and the Ambitious Plow-boy.

A great many boys mistake their calling, but all such are not fortunate enough to find it out in as good season as this one did.

It is said that Rufus Choate, the great lawyer, was once in New Hampshire, making a plea, when a boy, the son of a farmer, resolved to leave the plow, and become a lawyer like Rufus Choate. He accordingly went to Boston, called on Mr. Choate, and said to him:

"I heard your plea up in town, and I have a desire to become a lawyer like you. Will you teach me how?"

"As well as I can" said the great lawyer. "Come in and sit down."

Taking down a copy of Blackstone, he said:

"Read this until I come back, and I will see how you get on."

The poor boy began. An hour passed. His backed ached, his head and legs ached. He knew not how to study. Every moment became a torture. He wanted air. Another hour passed, and Mr. Choate came and asked:

"How do you get on?"

"Get on! Why, do you have to read such stuff as this?"

"Yes."

"How much of it?"

"All there is on these shelves, and more," looking about the great library.

"How long will it take?"

"Well, it has taken me more than twenty-five years."

"How much do you get?"

"My board and clothes."

"Is that all?"

"Well, that is about all that I have gained as yet."

"Then," said the boy, "I will go back to plowing. The work is not near so hard, and it pays better."

Poverty pinches, but not half so hard as vice. The one wounds to heal, the other leaves an ulcer.

The Family Circle.

Home Courtesy.

No pleasanter sight is there, than a family of young folks who are quick to perform little acts of attention toward their elders. The placing of a big arm-chair for mamma, running for a footstool for aunty, hunting up papa's spectacles, and scores of little deeds, show the tender sympathy of gentle, loving hearts; but if mama never returns a "thank you, dear;" if papa's "just what I wanted, Susie," does not indicate that the little attention is appreciated; the children soon drop the habit. Little people are imitative creatures, and soon catch the spirit surrounding them. So if, when the mother's spool of cotton rolls from her lap, the father stoops to pick it up, bright eyes will see the act, and quick minds make a note of it. By example a thousand times more quickly than by precept, can children be taught to speak kindly to each other, to acknowledge favors, to be gentle and unselfish, to be thoughtful and considerate of the comfort of the family. The boys, with inward pride of their father's courteous demeanor, will be chivalrous and helpful to their own young sisters; the girls, imitating their mother, will be patient and gentle, even when big brothers are noisy and heedless. In the homes where true courtesy prevails, it seems to meet you on the threshold.—You feel the kindly welcome on entering. No angry voices are heard up stairs. No sullen children are sent from the room.—No peremptory orders are given to cover the delinquencies of housekeeping or servants. A delightful atmosphere pervades the house—unmistakable, yet indescribable.

Such a house, filled by this spirit, is a home indeed to all who enter within its consecrated walls. And it is of such a home that the Master said: "And into whatsoever house you enter, first say, Peace be to this house. And if the son of peace be there, your peace shall rest upon it." Luke x. 5, 6.

"Blessed are the sons of peace,
Whose hearts and hopes are one;
Whose kind design to serve and please
Through all their actions run.

"Thus on the heavenly hills,
The saints are blest above;
Where joy like morning dew distills,
And all the air is love."

Anti-Early Rising.

Farmers generally do not rise as early as they did twenty years ago, and I think they ought not to. Some, however, retain the old habit, and are up at three or four o'clock, have breakfast at lamplight, and then work commences. Now, I know well enough that if there are hired men, and if work pushes, it is necessary to stir early, but, on the whole, I think what is known as the habit of early rising is so much an error as to do more harm than good. I should say that for an ordinary household, where nobody but the family is in the house, breakfast at eight o'clock is soon enough for winter, and from six to seven for spring and summer. It would be a good plan, though, if there is one in the house who likes to rise early, to build the fires that the rooms may be warmed, though by having good stoves fires can be kept all night. I object to breakfast by lamplight, because the children are made get up at an hour when they would be much better off in bed and asleep. It is cruel to tear boys out of bed in the dark and cold, since they always go to bed tired, and growing as they are, they need all the rest and recuperation they can get; and when they do arise, they ought not to be hurried out to the barn, probably in cold, damp boots, to fodder and take care of stock. It is much better for the man himself to go out and see that work is properly done, though the boys might go along, if they are warmed, and help get fresh air before breakfast.

I doubt whether anything is gained by feeding cattle before sunrise, and I am sure milking ought not to be done until the morning becomes a little cheerful.—The amount of work that boys can do on a cold morning is not much, and it will seldom be done well. They are in a hurry to get back to the fire, and they ought not to be blamed, but it would be a good plan to have them help about breakfast, if their help is needed. The point I want to make is, boys are neither tough nor strong, nor have they got the use of their muscles so that they can apply to advantage what strength they do possess. If school hours press, and they are to go, they ought not to have any time to spare. When night comes, everything should be made comfortable; have plenty of lamps, and have plenty of books and papers.—An intelligent father neglects his duty if he does not help the teacher, and vast help can be given by hearing the children read, and in making them read correctly, and in considering various subjects.—Dr. Cross in New York Tribune.

Hunger.

When the system begins to need nutriment, it sends a fluid from every portion of the body toward the stomach, where it accumulates in little reservoirs, the distension of which causes the sensation of hunger; the fuller they become, the more hungry we are.

This fluid not only gives notice that food is needed, but it has the power of dissolving it, as water dissolves sugar, and thus prepares it for yielding its nutriment to the system. If, therefore, a person eats without an appetite, without being hungry, there being none of this dissolving fluid in the stomach, the food is not dissolved, does not undergo any healthy change; on the contrary, being kept up to the stomach heat of about one hundred degrees, it soon begins to ferment, to decay, to rot; if meat, it literally becomes carrion; if vegetable, it sours; in either case, generating gas and wind, causing unseemly belchings and noisome eructations; or these gases, being confined, distend the stomach, causing pressure against the nerves, originating various pains and discomforts more or less distressing, to last sometimes for hours or half a night, preventing refreshing sleep, to be followed by a day of general discomfort and unfitness for business. Sometimes the stomach becomes so distended with wind that that it crowds up against the lungs, preventing them from receiving their proper amount of air, and there follows a distressing feeling of impending suffocation. The same effects follow when too much food is eaten; more than there is fluid in the stomach to dissolve.—Dr. Hall.

Sunny Rooms Make Sunny Lives.

Let us take the airiest, choicest and sunniest room in the house for our living room, the workshop where brain and body are built up and renewed. And let us there have a bay window, no matter how plain in structure, through which the good twin angels of nature—sunlight and pure air—can freely enter.

This window shall be the poem of the house. It shall give freedom and scope for eye and mind. We shall hang no picture on our walls that can compare with the living and overlasting pictures which God shall paint for us through our ample window. Racy dawns, golden-hearted sunsets, the tender green and changing tints of spring, the glow of summer, the pomp of autumn, the white of winter, storm and shine, glimmer and gloom—all these we can have and enjoy while we sit in our sheltered room, as the changing years roll on.

Dark rooms bring depression of spirits, imparting a sense of confinement, of isolation, of powerlessness, which is chilling to energy and vigor; but in light is good cheer.

Even in a gloomy house, where walls and furniture are dingy and brown, you have but to take down the heavy curtains, open wide the window, hang brackets on either side, set flower-pots on the brackets, and ivies in the pots, and let the warm sun stream freely in, to bring health to our bodies and joy to our souls.—Ec.

Childhood's Sweet Memories.

Few parents realize how early the minds of the little ones are capable of forming ideas, or being impressed by incidents, to be remembered a lifetime. I well remember when I was a very small child, so small, indeed, that my father took me up in his arms and paced the room, backward and forward, soothing my little restless form to repose, while mother was busily engaged in her household duties. And, as I then thought, to amuse me, he used to repeat the twenty-third Psalm, until I had learned it perfectly from beginning to end. And though the seed sown lay so long apparently dead on the barren soil of the little heart, it has done its work. But not until after I had gone out in the world, did I realize the depth of sweetness contained in that first verse, "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want." And now, often after the sun has gone down, and night is fast drawing its mantle close around a tired world, I live all over again, and fancy myself the little child once more in my father's arms. An irresistible power impels me to repeat the words just as I used to do. And to me, a few moments of these memories of childhood, yield tenfold more sweetness than whole hours of communion with new friends and other faces.

I have told this little story, hoping it may touch a tender chord in some heart that has outgrown its childhood love, and forgotten its home training. And may God bless the little seed and make it to bring forth fruit, to be reaped by redeemed souls in eternity.—Selected.

RULES FOR AGENTS.

1. At the head of every letter give the name of your own post-office, county and State; and the date on which it is written.
2. Write the name and give the full address of every subscriber you send, as legibly as you can.
3. Write "New" before the names of all new subscribers.
4. In ordering a change of address, give the post-office, county, and State, to which the paper is sent, as well as the post-office, county, and State to which it is to be sent.
5. Do not mix up different items of business; but take up and finish one item before you take up another.
6. Write items intended for publication on a separate slip.
7. Make every lawful effort to obtain subscribers, and to do good in whatever way you can.
8. Send money by drafts, post-office money orders, or registered letters.
9. Observe the above rules, and you will expedite business, save us from much trouble, and yourselves and our subscribers from disappointments and vexation.

MISSIONARY WORK.

The church of God, in the true sense, is a missionary society. By this we mean that the church is not merely an organized body in the world, but that she is clothed with a delegated authority, with certain powers for the executing of a most important work in the world. This work is not local, but world wide in its scope: it was not limited to the wilderness and hills of Judea, where it was first inaugurated, but was intended to reach and affect the remotest parts of the earth. Jesus said to his heavenly Father, "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I sent them into the world." The words of commission, as uttered by him who had all power in heaven and earth given to him, are these: "Go ye therefore and teach (disciple) all nations"

(Matt. xxviii. 19); or as Mark has it: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." (Mark xvi. 15.)

That the church of God was under solemn obligations to obey this injunction, no one who professes to believe in Christ will deny; but it is a subterfuge to which some now resort, and at which the godly soul sickens, that, because Paul says the gospel "was preached to every creature which is under heaven," therefore the church is released from this obligation and responsibility. We say a subterfuge, because we can only regard it as a miserable shift, or evasion, or artifice employed to escape censure, or to justify neglect.—The great day of God's justice will reveal another phase of this important matter, and all our subterfuges and sickening apologies will be swept away with a single word, and we will be left naked and without excuse for our neglect. Oh, for an earthquake in the bowels of a sleepy church, to shake it from centre to circumference, to arouse it from its lethargy! There is most assuredly no justifiable excuse for failing to make an effort—and the utmost effort—to carry the gospel, in its fullness and purity, into all the world, and to plant the banners of the true church in every part of the uninhabited globe. We shall not attempt to prove that it is our duty to make such an effort. We hold that the plain command of Christ is argument enough for a conscientious Christian, and those who are inclined to dispute it may contend against the Lord, if they will. It is our business to obey; and it is our purpose, in this article, to make a move for a systematic plan for co-operative missionary work.

Before we proceed to make any suggestions, we will state a few facts, which may assist in preparing our minds for them. The first of these facts is, that we have no plan for co-operation in missionary work. We have not been altogether idle. As individual Christians and as Christ's body we have done a little; but considering the importance of the work—the momentous results for time and eternity, and comparing what we have done with what we might and should have done, we must say that we have done but very little. Many hearts have burned to see the work progress; many hands have been ready to work; and many purses have been open to draw from to defray necessary expenses; but we have had no plan for bringing these warm hearts, willing hands, and open purses together, to unite their power in the work.

The next fact is, that our general conference fails to take any steps toward inaugurating a plan for missionary operations. If we are to judge from past actions of the general conference, we must conclude that there is no disposition to give us any such plan, nor to assume any responsibility whatever in relation to missionary work. The last conference even refused, as a body, to speak a word of approval and encouragement to those who set on foot the Danish Mission. We will pass this by without comment, as we think it would be neither prudent nor beneficial to scourge the conference for such a palpable omission of duty; but we state the fact, without color or cover, so that we may see and appreciate the true state of the case.

Another fact of prime importance is this, that, while the general conference gives us no plan for missionary work, and while it fails to give us any direct encouragement in that direction, it does not interfere with nor oppose any orderly and lawful effort that is made by our members, either singly or in combination. If the brethren in Pennsylvania wish to send missionaries to Maine, they can do so; if the brethren of Illinois, with the help of others, are moved to send missionaries to Denmark, the general conference does not interfere with them nor oppose the movement. Reasoning from these cases, we are ready to say that our general conference will not interfere with our liberty nor oppose our efforts, if, in an orderly way, we organize a missionary society, or inaugurate a systematic plan for co-operative missionary work. For this we praise God; and from a consideration of this glorious fact, we take courage.

That we need some plan by which we can unite our means and talents in spreading the gospel, needs no argument. If there is efficacy or power in united effort, we should avail ourselves of it; and that there is strength in union both nature and revelation attest. Men everywhere and in all their aims recognize this truth; and in union our Lord declares the power to exist to convert the world. (See John xvii. 21.) If, then, such a plan is needed; if we have no such plan; if our general conference fails to give us such a plan; and if we are at liberty to adopt any orderly plan that does not encroach on the religious liberties or duties of any member; and if, above all, God will hold us accountable if we fail to obey his commandments, what will we do? Considering these facts, taking a full survey of all the circumstances surrounding us, I ask again,—and may the Holy Spirit press it home to every saint,—what will we do? We must obey or be classed with foolish builders; we must do the will of God or be excluded from the kingdom of heaven. With these general statements we will now proceed to make some suggestions, which we hope may lead to glorious results in the near future, and more glorious as time moves onward.

Our leading suggestion is that we should proceed at once to the organization of a Missionary Society. That we may not be misunderstood, we will try to define what we mean by a Missionary Society. The church of God is composed of all God's children; but these, for local advantages, are divided into congregations or churches; and these, again, according to locality, and by the consent of those concerned, are united into districts. In a certain State there may be seventy-five congregations, or churches; and these seventy-five churches may form themselves into districts of an equal or unequal number of churches. Now, if every individual church had a treasurer to receive the funds that are (by some plan adopted by all the churches) collected by that church for missionary purposes, and if every district had a treasurer to receive the missionary funds from the treasurers in the several churches in the districts; and if the church had one treasurer to receive all the missionary funds from the treasurers in the several districts; and if the general conference would appoint a committee on missions, to use this missionary fund in sending out faithful men, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, to preach the gospel as the united wisdom of the church might direct, then the church would be a missionary society, and we would need no farther organization. But we do not have it so, and our general conference does not pretend to give us any such system; neither would all our members be willing to contribute regularly and stately to such a fund. Now what we mean by a Missionary Society is, that all those who feel interested in missionary work should unite together in a similar way, to carry on the good cause.

The questions may arise, and very naturally will arise, When shall this be done? and how shall we proceed to effect an organization?

In answer to the first of these questions we would say now—right now, in God's own time for doing good. Such a society can be fully organized, and the plan be in harmonious operation throughout the brotherhood, before this centennial year closes, if we are willing to work—to spend and be spent. Let it be understood that the movement is on foot, and let all who love the cause of Christ give a helping hand, and the work can soon be done. We will never find a better time.

But how shall we proceed? This is a question that is susceptible of different answers. There are several courses that might be pursued so as to attain the desired end. Some one whose heart is in the work might call a meeting, at some central point, for the friends of missionary work to meet for the express purpose of organizing a Brethren's Missionary Society. This being done the way is open, and nothing but indifference or neglect would allow it to fail. Or there may first be a general correspondence among those who feel an interest, and the time and place for a meeting may in this way be arranged. This is the plan which we think would be most satisfactory. A meeting, however, seems to be necessary to effect an organization.

In order to open the way, or, rather, to put this movement on foot without delay, we announce ourself as ready to register the names and address of all who will send them, as being interested in the work, and willing to help along with it. We suggest, too, that you write to us in reference to the time and place for a meeting for organization. The work is important, and should not be delayed. Souls are exposed to eternal death, and many are calling for the bread of life; will we come to the rescue? Our Lord commands; will we obey? Send in your name and address at once and have them entered. No name will be entered unless the post-office address is also given; and no name will be entered unless we are properly instructed to do so. Whenever enough names are entered, and the necessary correspondence completed, the time and place of meeting will be duly announced. In sending in your names and addresses, or in writing to us in reference to this matter, be sure to address the writer as below. We shall pay no attention to names sent in letters addressed to the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, or in letters of business with the office. It is a distinct business, and we shall insist on a distinct correspondence. If you desire an answer enclose a stamp or a postal card. In all your correspondence with us in relation to this work, be sure to address, J. W. BEER, Meyersdale, Somerset Co., Pa.

Gleanings and Gittings.

REPORT OF ANNUAL MEETING.—In a few cases heard from it seems that, by some oversight, we sent only one report to parties who had ordered more. So far as we have been informed of such mistakes, we have corrected them. If others were so treated, they should notify us at once and have the error corrected. We still have a number of copies left, which we should be pleased to send out at 25 cents a copy, or $2.50 a dozen.

A GUIDE TO CHURCH FURNISHING AND DECORATION.—This is the title of a small, unique book, full of useful instruction to such as are interested in building or finishing churches. It contains a lengthy article on "The Canon of Taste in Church Architecture and Furnishing;" some account of the "Primitive Churches and Furniture;" of the "Rise and History of Gothic Architecture, and its Principal Characteristics," and a "List of Christian Emblems, with their Signification." It also contains a number of advertisements of articles used in church building and furnishing. The publishers, A. H. Andrews & Co., Chicago, Ill., are manufacturers of Church Furniture. The price of the Guide is 50 cents per copy, but it is sent free, upon application, to such as wish to purchase any of the work therein described. Write, stating what is wanted.

B.

PANACEA.—On Monday the 2nd inst., we had a call from Bro. J. O. Stouffer, the travelling agent for Dr. P. Fahrney's Brothers & Co., Waynesboro', Pa., for the sale of the old and popular medicine, the Fahrney Panacea. Brother Stouffer reports having traveled over seven States and having visited most of the churches and towns in those States, and meeting with great success. Having entire confidence in the Panacea which he offers for sale, all he asks of those who have never tried it is, to give it a fair trial. He says: "Thousands have been relieved, and thousands will yet turn to this medicine." Having heretofore used the Panacea in our family with good results, we embraced the opportunity of purchasing a few bottles. Dr. Beachly of Meyersdale, is an agent for the Panacea.

B.

It may be noticed that the present issue contains more than the usual amount of selected matter. This is not because we have no original matter, but because we lacked time to prepare it for the printers. The editor is yet absent, and we have the copy to collect and prepare for the Almanac for 1877, so that we could not give as much time to the paper as we otherwise would have given. We hope, however, that our readers will find in it, at least, some food for the mind.

B.

It is Wednesday morning, and as our love-feast will be this evening, and as there are several applicants for baptism this morning, we shall soon have to leave the sanctum. But the printers want copy, and we must furnish enough to fill this page. To satisfy the compositors, and to meet other duties, we give a few items to fill the space. May they be manna to hungry souls.

B.

PEACE.—Peace does not dwell in the outward things, but within the soul; we may preserve it in the midst of the bitterest pain, if our will remains firm and submissive. Peace in this life springs from an acquiescence even in disagreeable things, not an exemption from suffering.

—Fenelon.

It seems as though, at the approach of a certain dark hour, the light of heaven infills those who are leaving the light of earth.—Victor Hugo.

A house uninhabited soon comes to ruin, and a soul uninhabited by the Holy Spirit of God verges faster and faster to destruction.

Miscellaneous.

The Muscularity Apostle.

Dr. Winship, one of the apostles of "muscular Christianity" in this country, died recently at the early age of forty-two. When a young man he was quite slight and puny. A paragraph is going the rounds of the press, which states that while a student at Harvard, a stalwart classmate grossly insulted him. He was no match for his antagonist, and submitted perforce. His "grit" was up, however, and he at once went into training at a gymnasium, developed a powerful biceps, and then gave his former enemy his choice between an abject apology and a sound thrashing. Whether this story be true or not, it is certain that Dr. Winship continued a course of training until he became the greatest of modern athletes. At one time he lifted a weight of 3,000 pounds.

The early death of this man only adds another to the already numerous proofs that excessive muscular development and long life do not usually go together. A few years ago a great cry went up for more athletic sports and muscular exercise for the young, and for men of sedentary habits. Of late the current has changed. It is now a recognized fact that a man may have too much muscle. The best medical authority is not on the side of "muscular Christianity."

We would not be understood as discouraging athletic sports or muscular training of any sort. But we believe the facts to be these. Every man has a certain amount of vital energy which he can expend each day without drawing on his reserve fund. If he is a student, a professional man, or a merchant, he must expend the greater part of this vital energy in brain work. He has but little to spare for muscular activity. Hence such a man can take with safety only sufficient exercise to keep himself in good bodily health, and his muscles in fair condition. And this is really all that he wants. It is important that a lawyer should have a sound mind in a sound body, but it is not necessary nor even desirable that he be able to swing a pair of 100-lb dumbbells.

Overtraining of the muscles, too great devotion to athletic sports, has broken down many a student and professional man. One who is blessed with an exceptionally strong constitution may bear for years this double strain upon his vital energies. But nature is a severe reckoner, and the breakdown comes sooner or later. We plead, then, not for the abandonment of athletic sports and gymnastic training, but for a more prudent use of what, used prudently, is a great blessing to men of sedentary habits. Let us remember the old proverb, "In the middle you go most safely."—Examiner and Chronicle.

Hurry and Haste.

"Never do anything in a hurry," is the advice given to attorneys and solicitors by Mr. Warren. "No one in a hurry can possibly have his voits about him; and remember that in law there is ever an opponent watching to find you off your guard! You may occasionally be in haste, but you need never be in a hurry; take care—resolve—never to be so. Remember always that others' interests are occupying your attention, and suffer by your inadvertence—by that negligence which generally occasions hurry. A man of first-rate business talents—one who always looks so calm and tranquil, that it makes one's self feel cool on a hot summer day to look at him—once told me that he had never been in a hurry but once, and that was for an entire fortnight, at the commencement of his career. It nearly killed him; he spoiled everything he touched; he was always breathless, and harassed, and miserable; but it did him good for life: he resolved never again to be in a hurry—and never was, no, not once, that he could remember, in twenty-five years' practice! Ooserve, I speak of being hurried and flustered—not of being in haste, for that is often inevitable; but therein is always seen the superiority and inferiority of different men. You may, indeed always define hurry as the condition to which inferior men are reduced by haste. I one day observed, in a committee of the House of Commons, sitting on a railway bill, the chief secretary of the company, during several hours, while great interests were in jeopardy, preserve a truly admirable coolness, tranquillity, and temper, conferring on him immense advantages. His suggestions to counsel were masterly and exquisitely well-timed; and by the close of the day he had triumphed. "How is it that one never sees you in a hurry?"—said I, as we were pacing the long corridor, on our way from the committee room. "Because, it's so expensive," he replied, with a significant smile. I shall never forget that observation, and don't you!"—Warren on Attorneys and Solicitors.

Something Worth Imitating.

Rufus R. Graves, a prominent citizen of New York, and a Congregationalist, died a month ago at Morristown, N. J.—His will has just been admitted to probate. Besides large bequests to his family, he gives as follows: To the American Board of Foreign Missions, $10,000; the Woman's Missionary Society of America, successors of the Woman's Union Mission, $10,000; Brooklyn Orphan Asylum, $10,000; Berea College of Kentucky, $10,000; Oberlin College of Ohio, $10,000; Consumptive Home in Boston, $5,000; Children's Aid Society of New York, $5,000; Newsboy's Room in Brooklyn, $5,000; Bethel and Plymouth Mission, Brooklyn, $5,000; Holyoke Seminary, South Hadley, Mass., $5,000; Howard Mission, New York, $5,000; City Mission, Brooklyn, $5,000; American Missionary Association, $15,000; Home Missionary Society, connected with the Congregational Church of the United States, $10,000; town of Sunderland, Mass., for the town library, $2,000, and a further sum of $1,000, to be invested for the same; and the sum of $100,000 to be applied to the education of the colored people of the Southern States.—Can't some of our Baptist brethren imitate this? Or better yet, can't they make themselves their own executors, and give of their wealth now?—Examiner and Chronicle.

Missionary News.

The receipts of the English Baptist Missionary Society for the year 1875-'76 amounted to $223,810. The debt of the Society is $21,773.

The Moravian Missions are carried on in Greenland, Labrador, among the North American Indians, in the West Indies and the Moquito Coast, in South Africa, Australia, and Tibet. The number of stations is 92; missionary agents, 307; native ministers, 29; active helpers, 1,530; communicants, 21,960; total 67,795.

The receipts of the Southern Presbyterian Board for 1875-'76 were 61,273; the expenditures, $56,401. No new missionaries were sent out; but the debt was reduced to $9,848. The Board has six main stations in Indian Territory, 1 in Mexico, 2 in the United States of Columbia, 2 in Brazil, 1 in Italy, 2 among the Greeks, and 2 in China. Most of these stations have been commenced in recent years and the number of converts is still quite small.

It is impossible correctly to estimate the results of the wide circulation of the Holy Scriptures now going on in heathen lands. The last report of the English Baptist Missionary Society gives several instances of fruits from the Bible distribution in India, which bear upon the general subject. In the north-west of the Dacca district, which is a very out-of-the-way part of the country, the native evangelist was heartily welcomed by a Brahmin, who said he was in the habit of reading a Scripture portion daily, and that his late father had renounced idolatry and led a different life after he had begun to do the same. In a zavana a lady met a young woman well acquainted with the Scriptures. Her father, a Brahmin, had bought a Bible years before, which he had read to her almost daily, which had led him to give up his faith in idols. A missionary, in his tour last year, found ten or twelve Hindus who were in the habit of perusing the New Testament together. Their fellow villagers had excommunicated them for reading Christ's gospel and speaking about him; while they insisted that they were not Christians, but merely readers of the Christian shastras. At a melah a Hindu, on seeing the books brought out, rushed eagerly forward and said: "Have you a copy of the New Testament of Jesus Christ?—How much must I pay? I will give you whatever you ask?" After he had paid for the book he said, with great earnestness: "I have been looking for a copy of this book for years, and now, thank God, I have found it at last." He went away, kissing the book over and over again. Formerly, when Bibles were given away, the Hindus suspected that it was a device of the missionary whereby to destroy their caste. This superstition has now been dispipated by the sale of the volume. Having paid for it, the people treasure the book carefully; and, while the missionaries hear of but few of the copies again, the results of this secret reading of the Bible in a multitude of heathen homes will, doubtless, be found one day to have been of vast influence in Christianizing India.—Christian Advocate.

THE Jewish Rash Hashana, or New Year, was very generally observed by the Jews of New York City, Wednesday, September 20th. The quarters where the Jewish mercantile houses are most numerous presented a holiday appearance and all the synagogues were thronged.

Correspondence.

Correspondence of church news collected from all parts of the Brotherhood.

OSBORN CITY, O-born Co., Kan., }
Sept. 18th, 1876.

Dear Bro. James.—We have just parted with Bro. S. C. Stump, who has gone over to the North Fork to break a little of the heavenly bread to the Gentiles over there; and now it is raining gently, moistening up the surface that has been parched for some weeks by the hot sun and dry winds. My mind turns toward home, friends, and family,—is lifted in praise and gratitude to God; remembers the glorious uprising of our young Boanerges in the East; and is soled by the reflection and invincible proofs that the good Spirit is also at work among us. Six were buried in baptism yesterday and one this morning. Two laborers were called into the ministry—brethren Wm. Himes and John Fuller; two deacons were chosen—brethren Joseph Morrow and Daniel Shook; and Bro. Henry Landis was advanced from the first to the second degree of the ministry.

The feast among the brethren here passed off splendidly, with good order, deep solemnity, and the best singing I have heard for a long time.

By request, Bro. Stump spoke upon the trine action in baptism yesterday before an attentive congregation. It is useless to attempt to comment upon that sermon. To realize its power it would be necessary that your soul should be brought under the stirring influence of the spiritual sword as he wielded it. The wounding, destroying, killing—"the slaughtered heaps around"—that marked his course as he turned the sword every way to keep the way of the tree of life, was truly astonishing.

We buried the dead in the South Fork of the Solomon River. More anon.

Affectionately yours,
JAMES L. SWITZER.

WATERLOO, IOWA, Sept. 20, 1876.
ELD JAMES QUINTER:

Beloved Brother in Christ.—Hearty greeting to you, and to all to whom these lines may come.

Your correspondent, with brethren Peter Forney and Michael Sissler, were appointed a committee by the Standing Committee of our late A. M. to visit the church at English River, Keokuk Co., Iowa. On August 30th, I, in company with brethren J. A. Murray and S. M. Miller, left home, and on Sept. 1st met with the brethren at Deep River, in Poweshiek county, Iowa, where we had a communion season on same day. Had preaching at the same place twice a day for the next two days, Saturday and Sunday.—The Deep River church is newly organized. They have built a very neat meeting house during this summer, and appear to be in a prosperous condition.—Their ministers are brethren Wm. Palmer, I. Fuak, and — Hopwood. At this place we met with brethren M. Sissler and C. Long, of Dallas county, and numerous brethren from other parts of the State. The audience at this place was large, order good, and I trust good has been done in the cause of the Master.

On Monday morning, Sept. 4th, we proceeded on our journey to Keokuk Co.

Arrived with the Brethren at English River same afternoon; met with the brethren and sisters at their meeting house next morning, and after singing and prayer the committee organized by appointing a foreman, and brethren Murray and Miller as clerks. We proceeded with our investigations, and after seriously, arduously, and prayerfully laboring for two and a half days, we closed, to the satisfaction of all concerned, we think.—Our labors appear to have been blessed. May love, peace and union abound with our dear brethren and sisters at English River. Will the dear members at this place accept of our thanks for the kind reception and brotherly kindness manifested to usward, whilst we were with them? May God abundantly bless them.

Thursday afternoon we entered on our homeward journey, and as the streams were very much swollen by the late rains, we encountered dangers, both seen and unseen by us; yet the good Lord brought us safely on our journey homeward, and on Tuesday, the 12th, I arrived home, finding my family well. Thank the Lord for his fatherly care and protection,

ELIAS K. BUECHLEY.

Voting.

The above has, for some time, been upon my mind. As the Presidential campaign is now in progress, and as the Brethren in Annual Council have in their wisdom granted brethren the privilege of the elective franchise, I will endeavor to present some Scriptures with which there may be some danger of brethren coming into conflict by using this privilege.—Christ declared in his prayer to his Father, that his disciples are not of this world. The true disciples of Christ are of God, and the people of God are distinct and separate people from the world. It is to be feared that brethren who take part in elections are not as separate from the world as they ought to be. The general influence that rules during elections is to idolize men and parties, and attribute too much importance to the success of candidates and, under that influence brethren may forget their responsibility to God, and act as if they were only responsible to the party in concert with which they are acting. "What part hath he that believeth with an infidel?"

"For what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness?" "Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and I will receive you." "Purge out the old leaven that ye may be a new lump." Christ said: "Abide in me"; "continue ye in my love"; "follow thou me." Paul said: "Abhor that which is evil"; "cleave to that which is good"; "let us so run that we may obtain"; "follow after love and desire spiritual gifts"; "he that is born of the Spirit desireth the things of the Spirit."

Brethren, we are to be a light to the world. Let us then walk in the light, and "take heed, therefore, that the light which is in us be not darkness." Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptations.

I will close with Rev. xviii. 4, "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues."

Yours in love,

A. B. BARNHART.

Dear Bro. Quinter.—I am alone and not able to attend meeting, which, to-day, is at the distance of about 12 miles. My young days are over and my head is turned white for the grave. I have been a member of the church of the Brethren for 24 years. My husband does not belong to any denomination, which is much against me and my family's living close to our Maker. I have had many trials and difficulties to contend with. I have seven children, all married but one daughter; two daughters are members of the M. E. church, and two daughters and one son are not members of any denomination. One daughter married into the Catholic faith. One son is a member of the (so named) "Dunkards." One of my daughters was married in the year 1868, and had one child. Her husband shortly afterward was killed, leaving them to mourn his loss. My daughter and her child came to me for support. The child grew up to be a beautiful boy, and by my taking him into my care and protection, he thought as much of me as he did of his mother, and I begged of her not to take him from me. In July, 1875, she was again married, and seeing that I wanted the little boy, had him bound to me. He was a very intelligent boy, and his little, black eyes I shall never forget. His name was Elijah Wesley. But soon he was taken ill and his sufferings became great, and he grew weaker and weaker, and his voice grew faint; but in all of his sickness his request was to sing for him. Just before he breathed his last, he said, "All sing." They all sang,

"Oa, for a closer walk with God,
A calm and heavenly frame;"

and while singing he said, "I am going home." Some one said, "To what home, Wesley?" He said, "Home to heaven." He locked his little finger in his uncle's coat sleeve and drew him up to him, saying to him, "Oh! will you meet me?" and he put his little hands together and passed away. Oh, yes, his uncle and I are trying to live so faithfully as to fulfill his request. Brethren and sisters, pray for us, that we may be steadfast, unmoved, always keeping in the faith once delivered to the saints.

In the bonds of Christian love,
MARY STEWART.

Dear Brother:—I feel to write a few lines to the ministering brethren of the awful responsibility in which they stand to God and man when they make such trifling excuses for not attending to the means appointed for the rise and progress of salvation, justification, and sanctification in this life. It is their duty to preach, pray, and weep for the lost as Jesus gave example. Jesus wept for Jerusalem—

"He wept to think their day was past,
And come their night of gloom"

"Weep for the lost; Lord make us weep,
And toil with ceaseless care,
To save our friends ere yet they pass,
That point of deep di-pear."

And what are the means to be used to save our friends from "deep despair?"—First, ministers should be as salt, and as a light to the dark, blind, unregenerate, unpenitent, unbelieving world. Preach, pray and weep, that the sleepy may be made awake, the weak strong, the cold warm, and the dead in sin alive, by faith in the Son of God, and God's name be glorified. Angels in heaven rejoice with the saints on earth that sinners are saved from the wrath to come, and obtain a crown of life. But when we hear ministers put in their excuse, saying, The nights are too short, or the moon does not shine, let me here say, Such ministers are too cold—too little concerned for the lost. A cold minister makes a cold congregation. This I have seen and felt. But let the fire of love for Christ, for saints and sinners be felt in the minister's heart when preaching or praying for the congregation—the electrical fire, the Holy Spirit, coming forth from the throne of God, in company with the word of life from the minister, sinking in through their ears down into the hearts of the hearers, which is manna to obedient believers, but a scourge to the disobedient. Ministers should feel what they think, and speak what they feel, that the people might feel what they hear, and that hearts might be made soft as wax before the blessed rays of the midday sun. If we would be more like children in writing to one another, in talking, exhorting, inviting, and preaching; and if congregations would pray for their minister and children and friends, and try to get the right feeling themselves, what an amount of good might be done for themselves and others, in the way of salvation and holiness! Nothing is harder for a minister than to preach to a cold congregation; it is hard to warm where there is no fire. But if the ministers and members are warm with love and holy fire, the congregation will soon find it out. We hear of ministers holding series of meetings in the short nights, and many are coming from Satan to Christ, from darkness to light, from death to life, and are baptized upon their faith and repentance into the mystical body of Christ. May the Lord lead them by his Spirit in the way of sanctification. S. prays your brother, DANIEL LONGANECKER.

Bro. Quinter.—For the satisfaction of those who feel anxious to know what damage the grasshoppers have done us, I will say, They came here Aug. 24 h, and have been coming and passing over ever since, when the wind was in the right direction for them to travel. Only a few, when compared with the numbers that have been here, remain to devour the wheat as soon as it comes up. Yet they don't take it all. They have destroyed nearly all of the vegetables that were not in a fit condition to be stored, although a large amount has been preserved. They came too late to injure corn, more than to strip off the blades and silques. The damage done was not what was apprehended. Their appetites have been satisfied, and out of the abundance we anticipate having fully sufficient to supply our wants with that which we have laid up. It is of the Lord's tender mercy that we did not have everything consumed. Should the Lord deal with us according to our sins, and reward us according to our iniquities, all our blessings would be taken from us, and our souls be visited with indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish forever, for we are not worthy of the least of all his mercies. Then how thankful we should be unto him, that he will be merciful to our unrighteousness and does not punish us according to our acts of injustice. Let thy mercy, O Lord, be upon us, for our good, in accordance with the hope which we have in thee.

The church is in union and in Christian fellowship. Our church council is in the past. Arrangements were made to hold our lovefeast on the 7th of October, south-east of Beatrice, at the house of Bro. Martin Spires. We expect to have not only a feast of love, but a grand and triumphant outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and we will be made to feel that the promise of our Savior has been verified: "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

SINA SHICK.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstance in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to see all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Sugar Creek church, Allen Co., O., Aug. 31st, 1876. Bro. MARCUS MILLER, son of Emanuel Miller, deceased, aged 33 years. The subject of this notice suffered much from rose cancer, but bore his affliction with Christian fortitude, and when he was conscious the disease would prove fatal, he called for the elders and was anointed according to the Scriptures, and died in the blessed hope of immortality beyond the grave. A funeral occasion improved by the Brethren, to a large assembly of friends and neighbors, from 1 Peter i. 24 25.

Also, in the same church, Sept. 2nd, 1876, EDWARD MILTON, son of Bro. A. I. aid Sister Elizabeth Miller, aged 8 years. Funeral services by the Brethren.

Also, in the same church, Sept. 16th, 1876, of typhoid fever, Bro. JACOB DRIVER, son of Bro. Peter and Sister Peggy Driver, aged 25 years. Being conscious of the near approach of death, he made every arrangement possible for his future happiness, and was anointed in the name of the Lord, and then said he was willing to leave this world of sorrow. Funeral services by the Brethren to a very large assembly of friends and neighbors, from Isa. xxxviii. 1. DANIEL BROWER. [Visitator please copy.]

In the Quemahoning district, Jenner township, Somerset county, Pa., Sept. 19th 1876, Sister REBECCA, wife of Aaron S. Walker, aged 45 years 3 months and 27 days. Funeral services by Tobias Bugh and others. E. J. BLOUGH.

In the Upper Deer Creek church, Cass county, Ind., Aug. 16th, 1876, Bro. EMANUEL MILLER, aged 63 years. He was a member of the church for many years. Disease, inflammation of the bowels. Funeral services by Abraham Rinehart and Jacob Cripe from 1 Cor. xv. 49—58 to a very attentive congregation.

Also, in the same church, Sept. 4th, 1876, HESTER, daughter of Bro. George and Margaret Wolf, aged one year eight months and 24 days. Disease, inflammation of the bowels and head. Funeral services by Abraham Rinehart, Jacob Cripe, and the undersigned, from Rev xxi 4. W. S. TONEY.

In the Willamette Valley church, Marion Co., Oregon, Sept. 6th, 1876, our much beloved brother, WM. JOHNSON, aged 66 years and 23 days. Disease, affection of the kidneys. He emigrated from Scotland to Oregon in 1835, and was a member of the Hudson Bay Company in an early day. He united with the Brethren in June, 1874, lived a consistent member of the church, and was loved and respected by all who knew him. He leaves a wife (a sister) and twelve children to mourn their loss. Funeral discourse on the day of interment, from Job xiv. 10, to a large assembly of sympathizing friends, by the writer. DAVID BROWER.

BALANCING MILL-STONES.

No mill should ever be run without being in proper balance. Ask the average miller if his burrs are in a good condition, and he will give you a vague answer. He is conscious that something is not exactly as it should be, but it does not occur to him that the fault lies in the balancing; but look at his bran and middlings, and if he has a stone turned over, look at its face and you can tell for yourself. The stone may be in a standing balance, but not in running balance. The fault cannot properly be charged to the miller. To put a stone in running balance requires a skill that comparatively but few possess. But give a nicely balanced stone in care of a person who understands and loves his business, and he will have no trouble. If he is running on custom work, he will have no trouble in giving satisfaction to his customers, and he will have no trouble in keeping the neck of his spindle cool, and tight in the bush. He will find out that one hour's picking will answer where he had formerly to spend two or three hours. He will undoubtedly discover too, that if he formerly needed fifteen-horse power to run a stone, he can now get off with twelve. And what about the quality and quantity of the product? The meal will be both finer and the flour more lively, and will be able to turn out a few pounds more per bushel if on close grinding, and more and better flour on high grinding. If he has his heart in his business, he will treat his burrs as gently as he would his tenderest child, and his employer will be amply rewarded for having his running stone put in perfect running and studding balance; both are equally important and indispensable to a well organized mill.

I will be at the mill of Lint & Shumaker in Meyersdale, for some weeks, making changes and improvements in their mill.—Should any be desirous of obtaining my services as a mill-wright or draughtsman, they can be accommodated by addressing me at Meyersdale, or I can be consulted in person at Meyers' mill in Meyersdale Summer Co., Pa.

 IS A SOVEREIGN REMEDY.

Hemorrhage or Spitting of Blood, may proceed from the larynx, tracheis, bronchis or lungs, and arises from various causes, as undue physical exertion, plethora or fullness of the vessels, weak lungs, overstraining of the voice, suppressed evacuation, obstruction of the spleen or liver, &c.

Dr. Swayne's Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry

strikes at the root of disease by purifying the blood, restoring the liver and kidneys to a healthy action, invigorating the nervous system.

The only standard remedy for hemorrhage, bronchial and all pulmonary complaints. Consumptives and those predisposed to weak lungs should not fail to use this great vegetable remedy.

Its marvelous power, not only over consumption, but over every chronic disease where a gradual alterative action is needed. Under its use the cough is loosened, the night sweats diminished, the pain subsides, the pulse returns to its natural standard, the stomach is improved in its power to digest and assimilate food, and every organ has a purer and better quality of blood supplied to it out of which new reparative and plastic material is made. I was sorely afflicted with one of the most distressing of all diseases, Prurigo or Prurigo, or more commonly known as Itching Piles. The itching at times was almost intolerable, increased by scratching and not unfrequently becoming quite sore. I bought a box of Swayne's Ointment; its use gave quick relief, and in a short time made a perfect cure. I can now sleep undisturbed, and I would advise all who are suffering with this distressing complaint to procure Swayne's Ointment at once. I had tried prescriptions almost innumerable, without finding any permanent relief.

 Agents Wanted

To sell the New Patent Improved EYE CUPS. Guaranteed to be the best paying business offered to Agents by any House. An easy and pleasant employment.

The value of the celebrated new Patent Improved Eye Cups for the restoration of sight breaks out and blazes in the evidences of over 1000 genuine testimonials of cures, and recommended by more than one thousand of our best physicians in their practice.

The Patent Eye Cups are a scientific and philosophical discovery, and as ALEX. R. WYTHE, M. D., and WM. BEATLEY, M. D. writes, they are certainly the greatest invention of the age.

Read the following certificates:
 FERGUSON STATION, LOGAN CO., KY., June 6th, 1872 Dr. J. BALL & Co., Gentlemen:—

Yours of the 17th ult. in relation to the new Patent Improved Eye Cups, has been received, and I am glad to see that science has ever achieved, but like all great and important truths, in this or in any other branch of science and philosophy have much to contend with from the ignorance and prejudice of the general public; but truth is mighty and will prevail, and it is only a question of time as regards their general acceptance and endorsement by all. I have in my hands certificates of persons testifying in unequivocal terms to their merits. The most prominent physicians of my county recommend your Eye Cups.

I am, respectively, J. A. L. BOYER,
 WILLIAM BEATLEY, M. D., writes: "Thanks to you for the greatest of all inventions. My sight is fully restored by the use of your Patent Eye Cups, after being almost entirely blind for twenty-six years."

ALEX. R. WYTHE, M. D., ATHERTON, Pa., writes: "After total blindness of my left eye for four years, by the paralysis of the optic nerve, to my utter astonishment, my new Patent Improved Eye Cups restored my sight permanently in three months."

Rev. S. B. FALKENBERG, Minister of the M. E. Church, writes: "Your Patent Eye Cups have restored my sight for which I am most thankful to the Father of Mercies. By your advertisement I saw at a glance that your invaluable Eye Cups performed their work perfectly in accordance with physiological law; that they literally did the eyes that were starving for nutrition. May God greatly bless you, and may your name be enshrined in the affectionate memories of multiplied thousands as one of the benefactors of your kind."

HOBACE R. DUNN, D. D., says: "I sold, and effected future sales liberally. The Patent Eye Cups, they will make money, and make it fast, too; no small catch penny affair, but a superb, number one, top-top business, promises, as far as I can see, to be life-long."

MAYOR E. C. ELLIS wrote us, November 16th, 1869: "I have tested the Patent Ivory Eye Cups, and am satisfied they are the greatest of all the age. They are certainly the greatest invention of the age."

HOB. HORACE GIBBLEY, late Editor of the New York Tribune, wrote: "Dr. J. BALL of our city, is a conscientious and responsible man, who is incapable of intentional deception or imposition."

Prof. W. MERRICK writes: "Truly I am grateful to your noble invention. My sight is restored by your Patent Eye Cups. My eyes were blind and preserve you. I have been using spectacles twenty years. I am seventy-one years old. I do all my writing without glasses, and I bless the inventor of the Patent Eye Cups every time I take up my old steel pen."

ADOLPH BIORNBERG, M. D., physician to Emperor Napoleon, wrote, after having his sight restored by our Patent Eye Cups: "With gratitude to God, and thankfulness to the inventors, Dr. J. BALL & Co., I hereby recommend the trial of the Eye Cups (in full faith) to all and every one that has any impaired eyesight, believing, as I do, that since the experiment with this wonderful discovery has proved successful on me, at my advanced period of life—90 years of age—I believe they will restore the vision to any individual if they are used as directed."

ADOLPH BIORNBERG, M. D., Commonwealth of Massachusetts, Essex, ss.

June 6th, 73, personally appeared Adolph Biornberg, made oath to the following certificate, and by him subscribed and sworn before me, and by me published.

WM. STEVENS, J. P.
 LAWRENCE CITY, MASS., June 9th, 1873.
 We, the undersigned, having personally known Dr. Adolph Biornberg for years, believe him to be an honest, moral man, trustworthy, and in truth and veracity unspotted. His character is without reproach.
 S. B. W. DAVIS, Esq. Mayor.

GEORGE S. MERRILL, P. M.
 ROBT H. TEWKSBURY, City Treas.

Reader, these are a few certificates out of thousands we receive. Give us the right, we will guarantee your old and diseased eyes can be made new; your impaired sight, dimness of vision and overworked eyes can be restored; weak, watery and sore eyes cured; the blind may see; spectacles be discarded; sight restored, and vision preserved. Spectacles and surgical operations useless.

Please send your address to us, and we will send you our book, A GLEN WITH LEADING!

The Primitive Christian.

is published every Tuesday at $1.60 a year, postage included.

This Christian journal is devoted to the defense and promotion of Primitive Christianity, as held and practiced by the Church of the Brethren, or German Baptists.

They accept the New Testament as the only proper rule of faith and practice, and hold to the observance of all its commandments and doctrines; among which are Faith, Repentance, Baptism by Trine Immersion, Prayer, the Washing of the Saints' Feet, the Lord's Supper, the Communion, Non-Resistance, Non-Conformity to the world, and the Perfecting of Holiness in the fear of the Lord.

As space will permit, some attention will be given to such secular matters as may be judged instructive to our readers.

Subscriptions may begin at any time. For further particulars send for a specimen number. Address,

OCTOBER DREAMS.

The hope that fades, the dream that dies,
The cloud that sweeps across the skies,
The wind that passes by,
Are scarce more brief than mortal life;—
Is it then well to vex with strife
A thing of days with dreams run rife
That with the night shall die?

So asks my soul, this autumn day,
As round my feet the dead leaves play
And eddy in the blast.
The lily and the rose are dead:
The farmer's wain stands in his shed;
The fields are bare, and overhead
Dun clouds are drifting past.

And thou, why should I vex thy mind
With memories of words unkind,
Seeing we both shall die;
And in the tranquil, stilly grave
From which no hand is strong to save—
Our dust shall sleep while winds shall rave
And dull clouds vex the sky.

Thine, while the sad October blast
Wakes a faint candence of the past
I feel no tinge of pain;
The bitter words that once could give Long nights of pain, no longer live;—
I have forgotten, and forgive.
Where shall we meet again?

Aye, where?—Perhaps beyond the stars
When Death the Morning's gates unbars!
And we may find at last
That bitter words, and tears, and pain
Are preludes to the rich refrain
That for Life's after acts remain,
When this wild scene is past.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Obedience.

BY THURSTON MILLER.

"If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." John 13: 17.

The above Scripture is very significant, and indicates the strong attachment, love and affection cherished by our Lord toward his disciples. It does not only serve as an awful warning against apostasy, cutting off, as it does, all promise, if in case we know "these things," we do them not, but is one of the strongest expressions of encouragement to the saint that could be uttered. The promise is in positive terms, "happy are ye if ye do them."

It is not only significant but also suggestive, and intimates something to be observed which is our duty to perform. Nor is it alone such as I have already described, but is one of the most comprehensive sentences contained in the holy volume. The Lord of life and glory is now standing between the past and future,—is on the very verge of eternity,—has given very many divine instructions; many "things" has he taught them to "know." He is now about to seal all with his own life's blood. He looks upon that little, devoted band, and contemplating his past life of precepts and examples, he utters the sublime language of the text.

It is one of the most comprehensive texts, because in its application are included all the "things" taught by our Lord and also by his apostles after him. In effect it reaches through time, and through all the ceaseless ages of eternity; and the importance of the expression can only be properly realized when we consider that upon its observance is based all the hope we have of eternal salvation; that is, if upon obedience, and upon no other condition is the free gift offered. Then it becomes highly important to know what would constitute true gospel obedience, such as would sustain us amid the waves of affliction, or the more boisterous waters of death's passage from a time world to an eternal one. It is true that by referring to Webster we find it defined, "Compliance with a command," but we should consult higher authority about that upon which depends our everlasting weal or woe. Then when we apply to the divine law, and consult heaven-ordained authority, we find that something more than a mere compliance is required. "Obey with the heart the form of doctrine" comprehends much more than is contained in the definition by our national standard. It is the definition of God's standard, and is not subject to alterations to suit each succeeding generation of apostate man, but is immutable, unchangeable as Jehovah himself, and means believing, receiving, doing, acting, living and loving that which we are commanded. We are to obey then "in the spirit and in the truth," if we would have the approval of him who "seeketh such to worship him."

Again, the language of our blessed Master should forever settle the question of a mere outward compliance, when he reproved a certain class of hypocrites who were willing to honor him with their lips, but whose hearts were far from him, thus requiring heart obedience rather than lip service.

Very many, indeed, are the tests made use of in the holy Scriptures to prove God's children. But let us draw the lines a little finer and divide those who obey into three classes: 1. Those who willingly obey, though but with an outward form; 2. Those whose compliance is forced; 3. Those who through love of duty toward God, themselves, and their fellow-man, humbly follow the divine instructions. The first although he goes with alacrity, does not obey with any higher motive than did the self-righteous Jew in the temple, with whose prayer their's may be properly classed, nor are they any more acceptable. The second is such obedience as the ox renders under the goad of the driver—forced by surrounding circumstances or church authority—and can never satisfy divine justice; for in such compliance we fail to discern the smallest shade of faith, without which it is impossible to please God.

Do you ask, then, what is gained by interposing church authority in case of transgression on the part of a member of the body? I answer very much may be gained every way; first, the offending ones in this way will doubtless be brought to realize their true relationship with the church; and if obedience is secured, a hearty, voluntary compliance with the commands of God, will be almost the inevitable result; second, as a community the church also has her duty to perform, and must use the authority committed unto her, and retain, as far as possible, that purity within her sacred jurisdiction that is to represent the church triumphant above. Let us remember, too, that the bishops, or elders, are placed under great responsibilities, and that their duty is not all done when they have "preached the word," nor when they have become "ensamples to the flock;" but they were also appointed to "watch over the flock," which signifies, not only the supplying such spiritual meat or drink as is required, but to correct all irregularities in the conduct and deportment of the members of the flock that may come under their notice, or to their knowledge; and although they may require the assistance of the church, so be it, their duty must be performed faithfully and impartially, if they would acquit themselves as true workmen, approved of God.

Beloved brother, dear sister, are you ready to murmur against the church, or your elder, because of their anxious solicitude for you, when your proneness to worldly conformity and careless regard for the humble simplicity of God's people becomes manifest? Will you not hesitate one moment, and consider the awful responsibility resting upon your elder, who, in solemn tones and impressive manner, charged you upon the brink of your watery tomb to lay aside all ungodliness and superfluity, and particularly those things that God in his word has forbidden—that the world grasp so eagerly after—which charge you accepted, and with equal solemnity and apparent earnestness gave the required promise before God and many witnesses? What does the sequal show? How has that vow been kept? Where is that sacred covenant? Has obedience been our watchword at morning, noon and night? Have we loved the church better than all else in this world? or have we not rather given her the back seat in the heart, and invited the world to the front? O my dear brother, and sister, too, I greatly fear that some of us have almost, or quite, forgotten those solemn baptismal vows. If so, may God send as a mighty rushing wind, a renewal of the Holy Ghost, into every throb of our apostate hearts, that we shall remember them and fly for refuge before overtaken with that fearful looking for of fiery indignation, that shall devour the adversary, that the apostle warns us of. And now, may God add his blessing, and enable us all to "do these things," that will make for our present peace and eternal welfare, is the prayer of your unworthy brother.

Tobacco Motives.

Why do you raise, manufacture, or deal in tobacco? Not because you love your neighbor and wish by your business to do good; not to make them richer, healthier, holier, or happier, here or hereafter; not to make them better Christians, better citizens, better fathers and mothers, husbands and wives, sons and daughters. Certainly you do not do this work, honestly intending to please and glorify only "the high and lofty one that inhabiteth eternity." Why, then, do you open in your field this poisonous main, which flows out and pollutes the world? Why do you carry your abominable wares to the four quarters of the globe, to cities and countries, palaces and hovels, legislative halls, alms-houses and prisons; to schools, churches and parsonages; to saloons, bar-rooms, brothels, gambling-hells, etc., etc.? Why do you stand everywhere, day and night, holding out with both your hands that which is not bread, tempting all races, colors and conditions of men,—Christians and heathen, saints, and sinners, kings and beggars, presidents and idiots, ministers and blacklegs, young and old, male and female,—tempting with all your power the innocent and clean to pollute and enslave themselves with this indian idol; doing all you can to rivet more firmly the chains of carnal appetite on those already bound? Why do you do these things? Partly to satisfy your own selfish appetite, but mostly for gain; for money you put this poison to the lips of the innocent children, and youth; for money you not only furnish these, but those who have already fallen into the pit which you have digged—the filthy slough of the tobacco-sot—with the instrument of physical and spiritual suicide; for money you are more than accessory to this double crime; for money, for money—that is that for which the distiller and rumseller do their murderous work; that is the motive of the highwayman. Judas betrayed his Lord for silver and the poet says of him:—

"O, cursed lust of gold!

When for thy sake the wretch

Throws up his interest in both worlds—

First hang'd in this,

Then damn'd in that which is to come!"

You take money from men for that which is worse than worthless; art thou not then a robber? You poison men; are you not then a murderer? May it not truly be said of you, "He buys, he sells, he kills for gold?"

Oh, I pray you, do not wipe your mouth with affected innocence, and say with thy brethren, the rumsellers, and thy brother, Cain, "Am I my brother's keeper?" It will not wash away your guilt, though it may soothe your conscience, to give this foul money to the poor or to build fine churches. Be at least as pious as the chief priests, who would not put the thirty pieces of silver into the treasury of the Lord, for said they, "It is the price of blood." "The love of money is the root of all evil." But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition."

The consumer's motives for beginning the habit may be, 1st, vain curiosity; to be a gentleman; to be a fashion.

You say with what apparent satisfaction and delight your parents' high officials—the honorable, the M. D.'s, D. D.'s, the President Grant, the Rev. Mr. Spurgeon, gentleman-loafers, bar-room dandies, etc., etc.—snuffed Scotch, chewed nig'gerhead, and smoked Havana. 2d, to please thoughtless or wicked companions; recklessness, thoughtlessness, idleness; troubles of life—possibly conscience. 3d, in rare cases, to satisfy an appetite almost imperceptibly formed by working in tobacco, handling it, or inhaling the smoke. 4th, to prevent, relieve, or cure diseases; for instance, toothache, consumption, fevers, dyspepsia, "corns," etc., etc. Perhaps the prescription of some fossil quack, or some old tobacco cure.

These motives—the best that can be offered—are the motives of wine-bibbers and moderate-drinkers; these were the motives of drunkards. All of them, except possibly a few cases under motive No. 4, are manifestly foolish, absolutely selfish and therefore wicked.

Persons generally find by experience the falsity of these motives; why, then, do they continue the use of tobacco? Not for the glory of God, or the good of men. After the habit is formed, not one in a thousand uses it as a medicine; but in spite of the disease it creates,—for every such person is diseased poisoned of tobacco; heedless of the counsel of reason, the warnings of nature and God he holds on his filthy way, chewing, puffing and spitting, stumpy because he likes either the tobacco or its effects; this is the motive of the drunkard and opium-eater, a motive which disgraces true manhood.

Multitudes use tobacco while they are satisfied that it injures them, and that its use is wicked. They know it is killing them, but this incl. an devil of unnatural appetite has become their master; the more tobacco they give him the more he demands, and the weaker they are to resist his power. They so love the sleepy oblivion or grateful stupefaction it induces, and so dread the exertion it will cost them to break the chains of the habit, that multitudes of them, like the drunkard, would use tobacco if they knew positively it would shorten their lives ten years. O, what wicked, abject slavery is this, for which men give money, health—and a life!—Selected.

If I Be in Christ—What Then?

I am safe, whatever this present year may bring; nay, my night is far spent, my day is at hand. The wilderness is nearly traversed; Canaan and Jerusalem are almost within my view; the summits of the everlasting hills are already appearing. What manner of person, then, ought I to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hastening unto the coming of the day of God? I must be consistent and heavenly minded, walking worthy of my calling, and setting my affections on things above. For what have I, who have a crown in prospect, a kingdom in reversal, to do with the vanities or pleasures of this passing world? My eye is above; my treasure is in heaven; shall not my heart be there also? If I am in Christ, I must seek to be like him, and to follow him more and more closely, as the night is hastening to an end, and the day about to break. If I am in sorrow, I shall call to mind that weeping endureth but for a night, joy cometh in the morning. If I am in comfort, I must see that this prosperity which God has given me is making me a holier man, and more self-denying worker for him who loved me and washed me from my sins in his own blood. If I am poor, I shall rejoice that my day of wealth is just at hand. If I am rich, I shall take this gold which my Lord has given me and lay it all at his beloved feet. Mine must be no half discipleship—no service of two masters—no divided heart: The night is far spent, the day is at hand. What remains of this brief life of mine must be given wholly to the Lord.—H. Bonar, D. D.

The Love of God

Love is an attribute of the heart. I pity the individual who has never felt its sweet influence; indeed I doubt if there ever was an intelligent person who did not love something. It may be the wealth of the heart's affections is lavished upon a companion, a child, a friend, earthly treasure, a pet animal, or even a plant; but still the heart loves, and that love keeps it alive. Oh! the coldness, the bitterness, the barrenness, the hardness of life without love! Language cannot describe it. The mind of man cannot imagine it. It may be many are not aware that they love, but if the veil were taken away they would see they do love, and love fervently. The painter loves his art; the mechanic loves his trade; the botanist loves his flowers, the geologist loves rocks; and all have more or less love for the works of nature.

Earthly friends may prove unkind, untrue, and unsympathizing; earthly pleasures may be interrupted; earthly treasures may be taken from us; a painful aching void may be left in the heart, and we may be bitterly disappointed with the world; but there is a friend that "sticketh closer than a brother," one whose love is so amazing as to demand our souls, our lives, and our all in return. It is this love which is the source and fountain of all true love. In it we may find full and free course for our heart's affections. As the heart was made to love something, is it not right that it should lavish its warmest, best affections upon the Creator? What earthly friend is there so sympathizing, forgiving as he who laid down his life for us? In trying to comprehend this love our minds become wearied and overwhelmed, and we are satisfied to rest content, knowing that it is so.

The love of God is a pure stream a living fountain, a satisfying portion, a hiding-place from the wintry storm, a shelter from the noon-day heat, "the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." This love invites you to come: It promises you in this world, peace, rest, a calm happiness, and the joy of loving the "King of Glory" and being loved by him; and after this life a position higher than the highest earthly office, a title grander than that of the greatest earthly monarch; and an inheritance richer than all the fabled wealth of the Orient. Who can afford to spurn the love of God?—Review and Herald.

Your Treasure.

I have always felt that if Jesus would come and dwell in this world, and banish all pain and sorrow and sin, then it would be all that any heart need desire. It would be good enough for any one. But no place can ever be heaven to the Christian where Jesus does not reign. He is willing to labor in the field of his toil until his work is done. He is willing to suffer for Jesus' sake and bear his cross. But he feels that by and by, when the warfare of life is finished, he will want to go and rest with Jesus; he will want to dwell with him around whom the affections of his heart have so long been twining. There are his treasures, and there is his home. Where your treasure is, there will be your heart and your home also.

So, if your treasure is on earth, your heart will be there also. This is the sad, sad thing that brings sorrow to my heart when I think of it. If you have no Christ, you can have no heaven, and the soul will be so poor, so utterly poor, for the time will come to all when every earthly treasure must be left behind. No language can express the poverty and emptiness of a soul without Christ. It will be a desert over which will blow no balm from Eden; a wilderness of unknown paths, without a sun or star.

This is why Jesus, the Lord of heaven, has stooped down to our world, that to every loving heart he might become a precious, priceless treasure, the external joy and inheritance of all who are his.—W. O. Cushing, in Herald of Gospel Liberty.

A peculiar season for the duty of heavenly contemplations is when thou art in a suffering, distressed, or tempted state. When should we take our cordials but in times of fainting? When is it more seasonable to walk to heaven than when we know not in what corner of earth to live with comfort? or when should our thoughts converse more above than when they have nothing but grief below? Where should Noah's dove be but in the ark when the waters cover all the earth, and she cannot find rest for the sole of her foot? What should we think on but our Father's house when we have not even the husks of the world to feed upon? Surely God sends thy afflictions for this very purpose. Happy art thou, poor man, if thou make this use of thy poverty, and thou that art sick, if thou improve thy sickness.—Baxter.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. Inconsistent.

I sometimes inquire of our Christian friends who have musical instruments in their church house, why it is they use them in the worship of God. Their answer usually is that there is nothing against it in the New Testament, and their use was recognized under the old dispensation. Sometimes I ask them, why they do not observe the ordinance of feet-washing? Their answer is, that it is not certain that it was ever practiced by the Apostles. I will only give two of Paul's assertions, and then leave it with them.

Paul, in 1 Corinthians 13: 1, says, "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal." Poor things indeed, wherewith to worship God.

Paul in speaking of the duties incumbent upon a widowed Sister, before she can become a church charge, says, "If she have washed saint's feet." 1 Timothy 5: 10.

Strange! strange! If Paul did not observe the ordinance, that he would enjoin it upon others.

Is a Discussion a Contention?

I read the Gospel Visitor the Christian Family Companion, and also the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN thus far, and I noticed several discussions with which I was well pleased, as I thought I received much light on certain passages of scripture. Now I don't see anything wrong in it, as discussions have been engaged in by pious men ever since the commencement of the christian era; and even Paul had many disputes with the Jews; and at one time the contention grew so sharp amongst the apostles that they departed asunder one from the other. Acts 15: 39. This may perhaps be called a contention, but a discussion is altogether a different thing.

As in a court of law where the two sides of a case are held up to a jury, the truth is more clearly seen, so also a religious affairs where recourse is had to an interchange of thought, each is left to judge for himself as to truth and error. Now I will not burden the editor with a lengthy article, but I would like to hear some other minds on the subj c.

HAZEL BLOSSOMS.

The summer warmth has left the sky.

The summer songs have died away ;
And, withered, in the footsteps lie
The fallen leaves—but yesterday
With ruby and with topaz gay.

The grass is browning on the hills ;
No pale, belated flowers recall
The astral fringes of the rills,
And drearily the dead vines fall,
Frost-blackened, from the roadside wall.

Yet, through the gray and sombre wood,
Against the dusk of fir and pine,
Last of their floral sisterhood,
The hazel's yellow blossoms shine—
The tawny gold of Africa's mine.

Small beauty hath my uncaring flower,
For spring to own or summer hall ;
But in the season's saddest hour,
To skies that weep and winds that wail,
Its glad surprises never fail.

O, days grown cold ! O, life grown old !
No rose of June may bloom again ;
But like the hazel's twisted gold,
Through early frosts and latter rains,
Shall hints of summer-time remain.

And as within the hazel's bough
A gift of mystic virtue dwells,
That points to golden eves below,
And in dry, desert places tell
Where flow unseen the cool, sweet wells ;

So, in the wise diviner's hand,
Be mine the hazel's grateful part,
To feel, beneath a thirsty land,
The living waters thrill and start,
The beating of the rivulet's heart !

Sufficeth me the gift to light
With latest bloom the dark, cold days ;
To call some hidden spring to sight,
That in these dry and dusty ways
Shall sing its pleasant song of praise.

O love ! the hazel wand may fail ;
But thou canst lend a surer spell,
That, passing over Barca's vale,
Repeats the old-time miracle,
And makes the desert lend a well,

—From Whittier's Hazel Blossoms.

White Robes in Sardis. Rev. iii. 4.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To Sister America A. Bonsack, of Indianapolis, Ind.

"The whole world lieth in wickedness." 1 John 5: 19. Iniquity abounds. "The fountains of the great deep are broken up," and a deluge of corruption is whelming the earth. Sin looms up in Alps and Andes, Himalayas and Alleghanies, Heclas and Etnas. It trickles in drops, ripples in rills, roars and rages in rivers, surges and thunders in oceans. It rises in defiance to the very Throne of God, and reaches in its loathsomeness and diabolism to the lowest hell. It taints the origin of life, Ps 51: 5, infects the innocence of childhood, overshadows the bridal altar, turns the sanctuary "into a den of thieves," sows fresh seed into the furrows of the snow-crowned brow, and writes victory on the coffin and tombstone. Our first pre-natal pulse throbs with it, we inhale it with our first breath, we imbibe it with our mother's milk, our whole being is ingrained saturated with it, death is its wages, and the resurrection its final and thorough expurgation, or its eternal triumph.

Cities are Sutan's synagogues. There he has his most expert tutors and aptest pupils. There wickedness springs forth like mushrooms on a dunghill. Indianapolis is in the category of the great hell centres of earth. Sin is rampant there as in Sodom and Gomorrah, London and Paris. Look where you will, the hideous thing confronts you. It sits on every door-step and stares from every window. It glares in silver letters above the corpse, and flaunts in black folds about the hearse. It rolls in tides of blasphemy and curses through every street, and poisons the atmosphere with whiskey, rum, tobacco, and lewdness. Who can keep his garments white in such a moral cesspool? Who can keep from being suffed in such a sinroom loaded with the vapors of the pit? O what depths of sin and heights of grace are expressed in the word "even." "Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments." The same God that nurtures and warms and beautifies the Alpine flower on the bosom of the snow, can also keep the pure, white linen of holiness from stain "even in Sardis,"—even in Indianapolis. Christ found "a few names" amid the abounding defilements of Sardis who were the synonyms of holiness. How many in Indianapolis? We count on A. A. B. as one. To have it said in Heaven that there is one name in your city whose garment is undefiled, and that name your own, is greater honor, greater glory, greater joy, than if you could concentrate in yourself all the beauty and rapture and riches and honor of the world for a thousand millenniums.

Sin has made this world a dirty place. There is not an inch which the devil has not bespattered with his filth. There is not a clean spot on earth on which to make a single undefiled footstep. Every thing we touch was first beslimed by the Serpent of the Lake of Fire. We have ourselves become, body and soul, the depositaries of corruption. Defilement within and without, how are we to be "pure as He is pure?" WE "MUST BE BORN AGAIN." "The world must be crucified unto us, and we unto the world." "Our life must be hid with Christ in God." We must "walk even as He also walked." We must be "in the light as He is in the light." It is not the heart that is spoken of but the garment. The world knows us by what we manifest. God knows us by what we are. These two constitute "pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father." Sardis needs no bushel smothered candles, nor Indianapolis either. He who walks in the midst of the seven Golden Candlesticks carries an oil vessel and a pair of golden snuffers. He will replenish with grace and pick out the sooty core, if we will but allow Him. O the solemnity no less than the difficulty of maintaining the lustre of our celestial linen. This is especially true of those who live in Sardis. City-Christians are too often the Devil's fag-ends. Compliance with the conventionalisms of Sardis has decolorated every city church on earth. The light of every city-candlestick in the past has been dimmed and extinguished by concessions to the surrounding reign of sin. How few, alas, can be found at present in city-communities, whose garments are undefiled. How many there are, in the city and out, who profess to find Christ in 1 John 2: 15, 16, instead of Gal. 5: 24, and 6: 14. A dainty, flesh flowered, sin-plumed hat on a sister's head, severs the wearer from the "few names" who have "not defiled their garments." A candle with such a bundle of soot in the centre will not give light enough to lead a single soul to Jesus. Living epistles of Satan, is a truthful characterization of many who "name the Name of Christ." All the Divine poetry of Isaiah, and all the tears and lamentations of Jeremiah, will not convince them that their garments are bedraggled with the mire of hell. The Cross strips the sinner naked, body and soul, and arrays him in myrrh-smelling, aloe-flavored, cassia-perfumed garments out of the ivory palaces. Ps. 45: 8. To wear an undefiled garment is to be "made white in the blood of the Lamb." This means death to sin. The blood of Christ cannot fill our hearts till we are first led to death—emptied of the last drop.

We know hard and difficult it is to convince even many professing Christians of the sublime verities of "the world to come." God is not so glorious, Salvation not so rapturous, Hell not so horrible, damnation not so woeful, sin not so hideous and holiness not so enchanting, that we may not let the eye lust a little, and the flesh enjoy a little, and the heart revel a little, in the evanescent, poisoned sweets of sin. So reasons the carnal mind. And so responds the amen of devils. But all hell knows that it is a fearful lie, and soon, alas, the votaries of pleasures and victims of delusion, will have Beelzebub's mask stripped off and find that carnal enjoyment was only a mispronunciation of damnation and "everlasting contempt." As Heaven alone can unfold the height and depth, length and breadth of Divine Love, so Hell alone can reveal how cruel a murderer and great a liar the Devil is. He has his placards up at every corner and on every door in Indianapolis. He has his mystic paper and ink on which he writes his name first, and over the same letters he prints the name of Jesus. He is a great counterfeiter. He populates the infernal regions with bankrupts. It is as easy, and easier, to become insolvent in gaiters, flounces, hair puffs, headrigging, mammon and tobacco, than in fornication, murder, and arson. The father of lies and legerdemain finds it less easy to spell orthodox out of the baser crimes and unpopular sins, than out of the vanities and falsities that have been sanctioned by Christendom. A man may grind the weed, or burn incense to perverted appetite, till it turns one's stomach to salute him, and yet hold the highest office in the bestowment of the church. Sisters appear uncovered, at the altar, or perhaps with a chignon or decorated hat; draw aside fashionable veils to salute, or feign the holy kiss through their veils; gossip in the street, giggle in the prayer-meeting, convert home into a milliner shop, and consign the closet to dragons and satyrs. These are not among the undefiled few in Sardis. The promenade in white is not for them. Poodles will not be admitted at the entrance of pearls. "Without are dogs," and dogs are prone to snarl, and bark, and bite, and rove, and "eat their own vomit." To be baptized into the death of Christ, and then pander to the life that caused the agonies of Gethsemane and Golgotha, is to be doggish, or as "James the servant of God" has it,—earthly, sensual, devilish. "Pure in heart." "Holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners." "Cleansed from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit." "Without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing." A soul whose right intent is as sound as the heart of God, and whose life is a constant transformation to such intent: Such are the "few names in Sardis which have not defiled their garments." This gives "confidence toward God." 1 John 3: 21. This gives "boldness in the day of judgment." 1 John 4: 17. This fills the soul with the laugh of Eternity. Luke 6: 21.

You are called to be the representative of Jesus in the city of Indianapolis. A "high calling." You have been baptized under the solemn promise to be a faithful witness to the truth to the close of life. Your obligations to your Redeemer, and the exposure to the eternal wrath of God of those around you, demand fidelity. "None of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself." You are charged with the destiny of immortal souls. God will require blood at your hands. You are a handful of heaven to infuse the elements of salvation into your neighbors. Mighty with God in prayer, mighty in your walk in holiness, you will not go out of Sardis into Zion without drawing blood washed souls after you. O the dignity and glory and blessedness of the Christian life! Work, beloved sister, while it is day, and be ever on the alert to "pluck brands out of the burning." Watch at the gates of providence for openings into the hearts of your fellows with the power of the cross. Be wholly Christed, and you will win jewels for the diadem of your precious Saviour. Let the glory of God and the recovery of sinners to holiness, be the all-absorbing objects of existence. Keep your garments white, and whiten others. May the super-midday reflection of your Christliness, lay some furious, blaspheming, scoffing Saul at the foot of the Cross. God offers Himself to you for the work. "Strong in the Lord and in the power of His might." Is not this enough to make all the ruddy little Davids run to meet the Goliaths of sin? God's slings and pebbles can silence all the batteries of hell. If you rest in the life of Christ, His power will rest on you. God has lighted one candle in Indianapolis. That flame has light enough to kindle a thousand more. Christ has attired you out of the wardrobe of His Everlasting Pavilion. He has made you beautiful with the glister of His glory. Luke 9: 29. Ravish others with the fascination of the wedding robes of the Lamb's wife. Jesus asks it, has promised grace to accomplish it, and to this you are pledged. O that I could inspire you with zeal equal to the significance of your baptismal vow. May Christ Himself interpret to you the height and depth of Rom. 6: 4, and 8: 35—39. Let the disinterestedness of Christ reappear in you. Live over again the unfathomable tenderness of Christ—His untold solicitude for sin-fettered, hell-claimed human souls—in your wrestling prayers, in your tones of entreaty, in your heaven-illuminated, Christ-proclaiming department. Weep yourself into the feeling and confidence of the lost. Live as it Jehovah had committed to you alone the interests and honor of His Throne. This is the undefiled garment in Sardis. This is the foregleam of the "walk in white" with the Beloved through the golden streets of the gem-built Zion.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Who is on the Lord's Side?

BY C. F. DETWEILER.

"Then Moses stood in the gate of the camp, and said, Who is on the Lord's side? let him come unto me." Ex. 52: 26.

This question which must one day decide the destiny of every individual forever and ever, was forcibly impressed upon my mind by a sermon preached by a Methodist minister a few days ago, and I desire with the aid of God to present it to the readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. I will not attempt a discrimination between that which I received directly from the preacher, and that which I did not. It is not necessary, "see Christ be preached; and so ye believe" Rom. We will present the subject by two outlines, in its practical bearings upon our every day life.

In the first outline we will consider the conditions of our acceptance according to the revealed word. To consider the subject fairly, therefore, we must consider it on its negative as well as its positive side. Catholics, Protestants, Universalists, Unitarians, Trinitarians, Mormons, and all, claim to have their faith grounded upon the revealed word, and yet the amount of variation among all these, is, in itself, conclusive evidence that they are not all on the Lord's side. One incontrovertible conclusion that we come to is that there is absolute deception somewhere, and it behooves us every one, individually, to examine the foundation of our religion closely, and be assured that we are not deceived. In this examination we must take the word of God alone as a standard, and as its own interpreter. Every test that does not conform with this is deceptive: If the word is not true, then religion is a farce. But "Let God be true and every man a liar." If we are on the side of God's revealed word, we are on the Lord's side, and in this we should be thoroughly fixed. It is always safe and right to be right, but especially in this important question above all others. Every mistake in our life that does not affect this great question, can affect us in nothing after this life; but the issues of this question after the moment of the last fleeting breath will be fixed, ETERNALLY FIXED.

We cannot rely alone on men of high culture and learning to solve the problem; for such there are in every denomination, all assuming to draw their conclusions from the same word. There are men in every denomination and sect, who are very zealous in the principles of their church or creed, yet great zeal, much learning, and great error, can be abundantly proved to exist together, by the fact that these in many cases are in direct antagonism. There are then evidently principles capable of deception, which are strong enough to counteract the highest degree of human knowledge, intellectual culture, and religious zeal. So it was at the time when the Savior was on earth. When "the world, by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe. 1 Cor. 1: 21. Then Christ was not a Savior to read about and have his divine precepts interpreted according to the itching of the ears. He testified to the world that its deeds were evil. His words and the power which accompanied them did not call forth any quibble as to their significance. Those who invalidated them in part, rejected them in toto and the divine person with them. The line of demarcation to-day, though much disputed about, is no less definite and no less fixed than it was then, and many who rest assured that they are on the Lord's side, are deceiving and being deceived. To deny this would be to justify, not only the inconsistencies of the protestant churches in general, but also those of Catholics, Mormons, and all others, that claim Christ as their head. The spontaneous question then arises here, like it did with the disciples of old, "Lord, are there few that be saved?" and he said unto them, Strive to enter in at the strait gate, for many, I say unto you will seek to enter in and shall not be able." Luke 13 : 23.

Many are deceived by being lulled to sleep on the lap of popular sentiment; some are "tossed about" by almost every wind of doctrine, and some are fixed in principles of error and delusion by early training. Erroneous impressions received in childhood, with the aid of the influences of father, mother, brothers, sisters, and friends, go far in confirming men in religious principles that are erroneous. The Catholic church, which is extremely scrupulous in the training of its children, is an emphatic demonstration of the effects of early training. The Pharisees were an illustrious example of the same. They accused the Savior of transgressing the traditions of the elders, when they themselves transgressed the law, by which they assumed to be strictly governed, by their traditions.

Many, at this time, who are zealous of their creed, or the religion of their fathers, and assume to be strictly grounded upon the word, take offense at principles that are plainly set forth in the New Testament; and those who desire to conform to the whole gospel of Christ, to take upon themselves the yoke of Christ, as well as to carry the banner, are evil spoken of. MEN LOSE THE SENSE OF RESPONSIBILITY TO DIVINE REVELATION, AND DISCARD DOCTRINES; and when the sober truth is set forth in their defense, they say, "There is too much contention about these small matters." "We ought to all work together."

The apostles were scoffed at by false brethren, who claimed to be Christians, and wanted to be recognized as such. Moses, in the wilderness, was confronted by the same spirit of disobedience, when it was said, "Ye take too much upon you, seeing all the congregation are holy, every one of them, and the Lord is among them: Wherefore then lift ye up yourselves above the congregation of the Lord?" But there was not then, as now, a lifetime given as a day of grace to repent in; but "the ground clave assunder that was under them * * * and they with all that pertained unto them, went down alive into the pit." There is nothing dark or mystic about what the word of God demands of a true disciple. So much of the gospel is written in remarkably plain language. There is nothing grievous about it. The yoke of Christ is much easier than the yoke of Satan. All the darkness there is about it, is by reason of the "veil" (of flesh) upon the hearts of benighted Christendom. When men will eat swine's flesh, raise mules, mar the corners of the beard, or shave it off, and a score of other things contrary to the law, and then preach that Christians ought to keep the law, it is a fixed fact that the veil "remaineth untaken away in the reading of the Old Testament; which veil is done away in Christ." Faith, repentance, baptism—these embrace our entrance into Christ; and when complied with in good faith, there can be no deception in them.

When the crucifiers of the Savior, under the preaching of the apostles and the convicting power of the Holy Ghost, were made to cry out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Peter told them just what to do; and nothing is said from which we could possibly infer that any one of them was any longer a "seeker" of religion.

When Paul under the influence of the same power said, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" it was said: "Arise and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do." There in the city he waited and fasted three days, until the ambassador of Christ came to tell him what he must do. Here, again, like in all other cases on record, the conditions were the same. Nothing about making peace with God first, or praying and repenting until he should feel that his sins were forgiven before receiving baptism. No; to use his own language, it was said, "And now why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Faith, repentance, baptism, then remission. The great sinners and the small ones, the Jews and the Greeks, the wise men and the humble fishermen, all entered by the same way. There never was a soul who sought to enter by this way, in good faith, and failed. THERE NEVER WILL BE. When God makes promises and prescribes conditions, he means what he says. Christendom can boast of learning and experience, but it cannot improve upon the oracles of a faith that takes God at his word. The word of the Lord is sure and steadfast, and all who are on the side of the word are on the side of the Lord.

THE TESTIMONY OF THE SPIRIT.

"As many as are led by the spirit of God they are the sons of God." Rom. 8: 14.

If any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his. Rom. 8: 9.

In this outline we will notice a negative side also. In reality, the Spirit and the word are one; in the dispensations, the Spirit of Christ and the revealed word are closely related. The revealed word is that which is rendered tangible to our rational nature, and is communicated to us. The Spirit is that which communicates. Every form of spirit that does not agree with the complete testimony of the word, is not the Spirit of Christ.

We will first notice the fruit of the Spirit. Paul says in his epistle to the Galatians: "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. These several graces, or 'fruits,' we will try to illustrate as they were taught and exemplified in the life of the Redeemer.

LOVE.—Every recorded act of our Savior from the manger to the cross, to friend or enemy, was an act of love. When he was reviled, he reviled not again; and when he suffered, he threatened not. To his disciples he said, "Love your enemies; do good to them which hate you; bless them that curse you; and pray for them which do spitefully use you." This is the Christian spirit of love. Love in the church is maintained in this wise: "Moreover, if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone. If he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established. And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church; but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as a heathen man and a publican." This rule is perfect and complete. The Corinthians had another rule, and this is what Paul says about their rule: "Dare any of you having a matter against another go to law before the unjust and not before the saints? Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? And if the world shall be judged by you, are you unable to judge the smallest matters? Know ye not that we shall judge angels? how much more things that pertain to this life?" "I speak to your shame. Is it so that there is not a wise man among you? No, not one that shall be able to judge between his brethren? But brother goeth to law with brother, and that before the unbelieving. Now therefore, there is utterly a fault among you, because ye go to law with one another. Why do ye not rather take wrong? why do ye not rather suffer yourselves to be defrauded?" "Little children love one another."—John.

JOY.—The joy of the Holy Ghost is a joy that will stand the test of adversity. The joy over a temporary success in life may be prostrated by adversity. The joy of a pleasant festivity, even though it be a religious out-door picnic, may be quenched by a thunder shower; but the joy of the Holy Ghost can only be marred when sin has had the upper hand to mar our peace with Christ, and then all the joy of earth is tasteless and dead.

"How tedious and tasteless the hours
When Jesus no longer I see!"

The joy that droops in a dry spell, or when the fruit is in danger of the frost, or when the hay and wheat are in danger on account of rain, or when we meet with a temporary loss, is not the joy of the Holy Ghost. A man who is led by the Spirit of God can never enter a libel suit. The Savior said: "Blessed are ye when men shall bate you, and shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you, and cast out your name as evil for the Son of man's sake. Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy! for behold your reward is great in heaven." Luke 6: 22, 23. We are not to rejoice for the evil's sake, but for the reward's sake. He also said to his disciples when he gave them power over unclean spirits, "In this rejoice not that the spirits are subject to you, but rather rejoice because your names are written in heaven" "Rejoice evermore."

PEACE.—The Spirit of Christ is a spirit of peace. The spirit of the kingdom of peace in which it is no longer "an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth," is incompatible with war. God ordaineth the higher powers as ever before, but under the new dispensation there is no affinity between the kingdom of Christ and the kingdoms of this world. By reason of this the Jews were, in the days of the Savior, solicited about their national existence. On one occasion the chief priests and Pharisees gathered a council and said: "What do we? for this man doeth many miracles, and if we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him; and the Romans shall come and take away both our place and nation." John 11: 47, 48. Christian professors reason from the same standpoint as did the Jews. There never was a war between Christian nations in which there were not Christian professors engaged on both sides, each claiming to be on the side of justice and God, and yet there never was and never can be such a thing, as two Christians, "led by the Spirit of God," into mortal combat with each other. The spirit by which it was said of two swords, "It is enough," is not a spirit of war. The spirit by which the Savior said, "Put up thy sword in its sheath," is not the spirit by which it was drawn out. The spirit by which the ear of Malchus was healed on, is not the spirit by which it was hewn off. The spirit of peace is a non-resistant spirit.

LONG-SUFFERING.—The Spirit of Christ is a spirit of clemency. "Then came Peter to him and said, Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me and I forgive him? till seven times? Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee until seven times, but until seventy times seven." Matth. 18: 21, 22. "If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your heavenly Father forgive you your trespasses."

GENTLENESS.—A servant of the Lord must be gentle. 2 Tim. 2: 24.

GOODNESS.—"Love your enemies, do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again; and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be the children of the highest, for he is kind unto the unthankful and to the evil."

FAITH.—Christian "faith is the substance of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not seen." Therefore it cannot be the anxiety about things that may happen, nor the trouble about things not known. Faith needs no insurance policy, nor affinity with Odd Fellows, Freemasons, Grangers, or any other secret order. By faith we seek first the kingdom of heaven, and look to God for sustenance. Faith prevents us from being cast down in adversity or exalted in prosperity.

MEEKNESS.—The spirit of meekness minds not high things but condescends to men of low estate. Rom. 12: 16. Meekness makes the road even and comfortable through evil report and through good report, through obscurity and fame, through poverty and riches. Meekness confesses its own faults and is indulgent with the faults of others.

TEMPERANCE.—The spirit of temperance is a spirit of moderation in eating, in drinking, in conversation, in the wearing of apparel, and in all the actions of life. Every true church (or congregation) is a temperance society; the constitution is the perfect law of liberty; the regalia is the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit; and the "sign" is "the holy kiss of charity." Not one real member is a rumeller, nor a tippler, nor a glutton, nor a brawler, nor a back biter, nor a devotee to fashion; and if there is anything else, it is comprehended in the words of Paul, "Be ye temperate in all things."

I now leave the subject to the serious consideration of the reader, and ask his kind indulgence for anything that might seem tedious. It is a subject of vast scope, and to treat it in more brevity than this, it would scarcely be worth while to take it up. Therefore, "lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the ingrafted word which is able to save your souls. But be ye doers of the word and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves." James 1: 21, 22.

"Like as the hart panteth for the water-brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God." O Fountain of Living Water, when shall I approach thee, when have traveled through this dry and desolate wilderness, in which there is no way; that my soul may be satisfied with the plenteousness of thy mercy? Behold, O Lord, I thirst; thou art the well of life, O quench my thirst. Yea, after the living God do I thirst, O suffer me to drink of thy pleasures, and hasten that day of praise and thanksgiving; that day which thou, O Lord, hast made, that thy servants my rejoice and be glad in it.—St. Augustine.

For The Young.

Polly's Revenge.

The bell clinked merrily the signal for dismissal; forth from the school house poured the happy children, foremost among them Polly Dayton, who, running briskly down the road soon out-distanced her noisy companions.

It had been a trying afternoon for Polly. Her sums would not add; she had descended the spelling class third from the foot, and had barely escaped extra imprisonment because of her general inattention and disorder. Ordinarily she was busy as a bee, and her teacher could see no reason for her strange misbehavior.

But Polly thought there was a very good reason. That noon-time she had gone into the woods to inspect the chestnut trees; not with much hope, for the season was backward and the burrs persistently green; when to her joyful surprise, she beheld a goodly company of brown coats scattered here and there on the ground. Quickly she stopped and began gathering them into her apron; but the school bell broke in upon her raptures and spoiled her hopes of a feast. She hurried her picking, and depositing apron and all at the foot of a tree, scampered dutifully back.

So far Polly was a good little girl, yet it required much effort for her to face those long columns of figures, when her thoughts had room only for the brown coats in the woods. But she battled hard, and might have succeeded, only that, as the minutes passed, she noticed Bob Butler's seat still vacant, and no prospect of his return. Bob Butler was Polly's dread; he was the source of her greatest troubles, failures, and disappointments; and the belief that he was even now devouring her chestnuts was more than Polly could bear. She gave full vent, to her wrath and indignation, nor cared for the result.

Polly was right. Escaped finally from durance vile, she hurried to the woods but to view a heap of empty burrs, and Bob Butler's unmistakable tow head re-creating down the road. It was too much for Polly.

"You mean boy," she shouted, "I'll do somethin' dreadful, see if I don't," and with this, great tears ran down her cheeks. She sobbed aloud.

This would seem foolish behavior for Polly, when shortly there would be a deluge of chestnuts in the land; but you see, it was not so much the loss of the brown coats that grieved her, as the part that Bob Butler had played therein. I am sorry to admit that presently she dried her tears and meditated some plan for revenge.

But although Polly thought and thought, she as constantly shook her head. It was no easy task; there was little that she could do for which Bob would care. Suddenly her face brightened.

"I know!" she cried, and with an unconscious kick at the empty brown coats, she fairly flew down the roadway, never pausing till she reached a small house, in the door of which sat an old gentleman reading.

This last was Uncle Alec, a man with no relatives in the world save the meek little woman who kept his house yet uncle to all the children in the neighborhood, the special object of their veneration and love. To these Uncle Alec was wisdom personified; to Polly, especially, unflinching help. That he could solve her problem she did not doubt.

"Uncle Alec," she cried, breathlessly "I want you to tell me somethin' dreadful to do to Bob Butler!"

"And what did Uncle Alec—scold, look stern, and tell her what a wicked girl she was? Not at all; he simply patted her flushed cheek and said softly:

"Why, little Poll, what has Bob Butler been doing to you?"

Polly, in her eagerness to punish the enemy, had thought only of Uncle Alec's power to help; something in the grave voice troubled her; she wished she hadn't come. Still she poured out hurriedly the story of her wrongs, exclaiming:

"I must do somethin' dreadful! He's a bad boy, and I will!"

Did Uncle Alec scold? No he smiled.

"Little Poll," he said, "you want to be revenged on Bob Butler? You want to do something that will make him—oh, so sorry that he emptied your brown coats, and keep him from ever troubling you again? You want to punish him dreadfully?"

"Yes," gasped Polly.

"Well," continued Uncle Alec "I've just got the recipe. Only you must promise to do as I say,"

Polly, I am sorry to admit, gave hearty assent. But when next Uncle Alec spoke she blazed indignant.

"Little Poll," he said, "In a few days nuts will be ripe. You must go to the woods and empty enough brown coats to fill your dinner pail. Heap it fully and plenty, then go to Bob Butler and say you picked them for him."

For a moment Polly could find no speech. Suspense, disappointment, and anger, held her spell-bound. Pick chestnuts for Bob Butler! Fill her dinner pail for that odious boy!

"I won't!" she cried spasmodically, "Uncle Alec, I won't!" and without another word she rushed from the house.

But the next day came to Polly the remembrance of her promise; she dared not lie to Uncle Alec, so desperately she began her task. Speedily the brown-coats multiplied, and at the end of a week Polly found her pail full, and in company with herself, standing in the presence of Bob Butler.

"These are chestnuts," she said bluntly. "I picked them—for—you."

Bob stared.

"Picked them for me!" he echoed.

"Yes," she replied, "because you stole mine. It's the receipt."

Bob Butler was not deliberately a wicked boy—only mischievous, and poorly taught. A great tear rolled down his cheek; he hung his head in shame.

"I don't understand you quite, Polly," he said I'm awful sorry. And I'll take you sleddin' every day this winter—see if I don't!"

And Bob kept his word; not only in this promise, but proved henceforth so true a friend to Polly that she had reason, all through her life, to rejoice over Uncle Alec's "receipt."—Christian World.

The Age of a Besetting Sin

Its age is not always the same. Sometimes an evil propensity is born with us and develops with the earliest intelligence. Some bring with them into the world an irascible temper which is their cross from infancy to old age. Some exhibit a constitutional inability in matters of appetite, so that if they but wet the shoe in the puddle of intemperance, there is no arrest until they sound the foulest depths of drunkenness.

But oftenest the besetting sin is of later date, a parasite not born with us but fastened upon us; something foolishly learned, carelessly contracted; something induced by the atmosphere in which we chance to dwell.

"How long is it ago since this came upon me? How many years have I dragged this weary chain of besetting sin?" Thus may each one question himself?

"Of a child," must be the answer? Aye, and "ofttimes it hath cast me into the fire and into the water to destroy me! How inveterate then is that disorder, and how must it have engrained itself into the very fibers of our being. Surely, this kind goeth not forth but by prayer and fasting.

Or is it otherwise; something not so much sent as chosen; something learned when you had no need to learn it; that became by reason of indulgence and repetition a habit, which a little while ago was not a habit? How does this consideration enhance the misery and add pungency to the self-censure.—Bishop Lay.

SET the morning watch with care, if you would be safe through the day; begin well if you would end well. Take care that the helm of the day is put right, look well to the point you want to sail to, then whether you make much progress or little, it will be so far in the right direction. The morning hour is generally the index of the day.—Spurgeon.

The Family Circle.

A Model Family.

How few model families there are, at least in every respect! Human nature is so full of imperfections that, as a general thing, we expect to find shortcomings in everybody, in one direction or another.—But it does not necessarily follow that these shortcomings are always sinful.—Often they are not. Sometimes they may be simply slight deviations from the common rules of etiquette, or they may be errors of judgment, without possessing any moral quality whatever.

But are there not at least some model families, religiously considered? We often speak of model business men, model statesmen, model lawyers, model preachers, &c. Why should we not also have model Christians, model parents, model children, and model families? There certainly are such, in more than one sense. And are there not also at least some model Christian families? This is unquestionably true also.

I have just been thinking of the family of Joshua, and have said to myself, That was a model Christian family. The conclusion is based on the noble resolution of Joshua, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." A whole family serving the Lord is, without doubt, a model family in the best possible sense.

Let us look a little at that family—the parents first. Joshua resolved to be personally pious. He, as the head of the family, was determined to serve God.—His language implies that his wife was of the same determination. Hence, as parents, they were resolved to set their children a good example of piety, and here, doubtless, was the secret, in a large measure, of the piety of their children. All parents would do well to remember this. Joshua and his wife made religion attractive to their children. They did so in their daily lives. This went very far to win their children over to God. It is the true way to influence others to become pious. If professed Christian parents were to let their children see "the beauty of holiness" manifested more in their every day life, there would not be so many godless children over whom to lament and weep.

But it is also natural to suppose that, added to a good example, Joshua and his wife instructed their children in the principles of true religion. I have no doubt they also prayed for and with them.—Family worship was unquestionably regularly observed. The deep interest those parents felt in their children must have led them to make constant applications of the truth. This is a most important feature of home religious instruction.—Many parents neglect it greatly. They should not depend on the mere truth itself as a means of the salvation of their children any more than the husbandman depends on the mere seed to produce fruit. As the seed and plant must have the heat and light of the sun and the rain from the clouds to bring forth fruit, so must religious instruction be accompanied with proper applications to the mind and heart, as well as with fervent and believing prayer for the salvation of the soul.

And is it not altogether probable that Joshua began early to labor for the salvation of his children? How exceedingly important is this if we would have good success! A great many parents and others are too unbelieving in child piety.—Children can be Christians as well as adults can be such. And it is generally much easier for children to become Christians, for reasons which may be readily imagined. The Holy Spirit can adapt itself to the young mind and tender heart of the child as well as to the mature understanding of the adult. A blessed promise is, "They that seek me early shall find me." And it is the duty of parents to endeavor to induce their children to seek God early. Parents can often get little children to do almost anything, but not so with large boys and girls.

And the general bringing up of Joshua's children was such that they were willing to serve God. They did not require coaxing or driving. They made choice of the service of God, as a result of the faithfulness of their godly parents. Not to have voluntarily chosen the service of God would not have been accepted service, and none other can result in salvation. Joshua's piety, and doubtless his wife's, too, shone out with such a luster that their children were attracted by it to serve God. Those parents represented Christianity, and their children irresistibly fell in love with religion.—Many professors of religion misrepresent Christianity, and, as a consequence, keep people from Christ instead of leading them to him.

In the family of Joshua, then, we have a true model family—at least a model Christian family—all serving the Lord.—What a noble pursuit! What a grand spectacle! Surely such a family is a type of heaven. And is it not, indeed, a heaven on earth? Such a heaven might be in every family. Jesus in the heart of every member of the family, will most certainly be the means of bringing heaven into every household.

Reader, are you a parent? Does Jesus truly and constantly live in the hearts of all the members of your family? If so, blessed are you and yours! But if such is not the case, then resolve with Joshua that you and your house will serve the Lord.—Rev. A. W. Orwig, in Evangelical Messenger.

Prayer.

It seems to me from the way a great many professors pray, and then from the way they act or conduct themselves after thus praying, that they don't understand the nature of a petition, or prayer.

We often hear persons presenting petitions in prayer-meetings, like the following: "O Lord help us to be Christians in deed and in truth." "Enable us, O Lord, to walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we have been called." "Conduct us through life, indulgent Parent, to thy honor, and thy glory."

Now the above petitions are all right; are very good and appropriate for professors to make. We have no objection to the petitions, for it is right and proper for professors to pray for divine help to be Christians. But how do we often see such persons acting, after thus praying?

Do we see them acting as though they expected or desired an answer to their petitions? No; but we often see them acting as if they had never offered such a prayer. And when they are in the company of some, they will treat their profession of Christianity with as much indifference as though they had never made a profession. Now let me say to all that act thus, that such is not well pleasing in the sight of Almighty God; and further, that it is one thing to present a petition, and another to prosecute the case.

Here comes in the nature of a petition or prayer. It is absurd for any one to make a prayer or petition to any man or body of men and then act contrary to his petition. Think you that any man or set of men would grant your petition, if they were to find out that you were thus acting, after presenting said petition?

So it is with the professor. God knows just how he acts after presenting his petition. Do you think that he will answer your petitions if you do not walk or act in harmony with them? No! he will conclude you do not want them answered. Now my kind friend—my judgment-bound companion, if you truly want to be a Christian, and pray or petition God to aid and bless you in your endeavors to be, do not walk or act contrary to your petition; but try by his grace, to always live in harmony with your prayers. Yea, always try to live out your prayers. For if you will always try to live in harmony with your prayers, then God will bless you. This is prosecuting the case.

Always, after presenting your petition as a Christian should, try and live as though you desired and expected it answered, and you will not only gain the approbation of God, but also the respect, love, and esteem of all, whether godly or ungodly, with whom you associate. May the Lord help us to live out our profession, and thereby be an honor to our profession, and a glory to his cause, knowing that he will require an account of our stewardship while here.—J. L. Warman, in Christian Times.

ALL things considered, it occurs to me that it is easier to trust God in adversity than in prosperity; because whatever trust there is in adversity is real trust; but a good deal of the faith we have in prosperity is a kind of faith which you will have to take upon trust, and whether it is faith or not is a matter of serious question. Sirs, where is the room for faith when you can see already all that you want? A full barn has no room for faith, if that be any bigger than a mouse; but in an empty barn, faith has scope and liberty.—Spurgeon.

AMONG the numberless contradictions in our nature, hardly any is more glaring than this, between our sensitiveness to the slightest disagree which we fancy cast upon us from without, and our callousness to the grossest which we bring down on ourselves. In truth, they who are the most sensitive to the one are often the most callous to the other.—Guesses at Truth.

NEARNESS of life toward the Lamb will necessarily involve greatness of love to him. As nearness to the sun increases the temperature of the various planets, so close communion with Jesus raiseth the heat of the affections toward him.—Spurgeon.

We are not to expect the joys of heaven while here on earth. Let us be content that there is a highway to its blessedness for us to walk in, and a Leader to conduct us in that way.

RULES FOR AGENTS.

1. At the head of every letter give the name of your own post-office, county and State; and the date on which it is written.
2. Write the name and give the full address of every subscriber you send, as legibly as you can.
3. Write "New" before the names of all new subscribers.
4. In ordering a change of address, give the post-office, county, and State, to which the paper is sent, as well as the post-office, county, and State to which it is to be sent.
5. Do not mix up different items of business; but take up and finish one item before you take up another.
6. Write items intended for publication on a separate slip.
7. Make every lawful effort to obtain subscribers, and to do good in whatever way you can.
8. Send money by drafts, post-office money orders, or registered letters.
9. Observe the above rules, and you will expedite business, save us from much trouble, and yourselves and our subscribers from disappointments and vexation.

ALWAYS A GOOD SERMON.

It is not at all uncommon for people to return from the house of God complaining to themselves, if not to somebody else, about the sermon, because it was not good, and because they were not benefited by it. Now, there is no occasion for this. Every sermon we hear may be a good one to us if we make the use of it we may make. And not only may we make the common sermons of the sanctuary good sermons to us, and profit by them, but we may greatly multiply sermons and have the advantage of them.—A bishop was one day returning from church, and he saw a funeral coming.—Upon reaching home, one of the family that had not been to church, inquired of the bishop whether he had heard a good sermon. He replied with much truth and propriety, "I have met a good sermon." He meant by the reply, that the solemn sight he had seen was to him a good sermon. If we, in the language of our Redeemer "possess our souls," that is, maintain the control of our feelings, and remain self-possessed, to some considerable degree, at least, or as much as possible, amid the various circumstances of life under which we find ourselves placed, we may see a great many things which, from the nature or appearance of the things themselves, or from the law of association, a mental power which we possess, and by which one thing calls up or suggests another, a great many things may be called up before the mind which may start pleasant thoughts, or solemn thoughts, and thus lead the mind into reflections which may be very beneficial.

Such a state of mind our heavenly Master seems always to have possessed. When he was traveling from place to place, his mind seems to have been always looking out for some object that he might turn to a religious or spiritual advantage. When he saw the vine, it suggested or preached to him the relation between his disciples and himself. When he saw the sower scattering his seed, he thought of the word of God that he was preaching, and what a great difference there was in the results produced by that word in different individuals. Upon some the solemn truths of the gospel produced no effect whatever, and their hearts were as barren of anything good, as the highway trodden by man and beast is of any fruitful vegetation. On others, of an impulsive nature, the word fell and made impressions, but alas! having no root, they withered like the herb on the rock where there is no moisture. So did our ever wakeful and watchful Lord philosophize, or rather moralize, upon the objects on which his eyes fell, or on the sounds that fell upon his ear. "The wind," he said, "bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit." Thus we see that the noise of the wind preached to our Lord and gave him apt illustrations of great spiritual truths. When he observed the housewife busy in making her bread, he thought of the progressive character of gospel grace spreading its influence over those of whom it had obtained possession, until the whole man is brought under its divine influence. And the parable of the leaven in the meal was used by him to express the truths his mind had received from the humble labor of the housewife.

Paul's visit to Athens brought him within sight of the altar which had on it the inscription, "To the unknown God."

How fertile was his mind in receiving religious thoughts from that silent, but powerful preacher, that heathen altar! And it was the text of the apostle's sermon—a powerful and successful one. David's devotional and contemplative habits of mind fitted him for the reception of religious ideas from the external or natural world. The nineteenth psalm shows us what use he made of the works of nature as a religious teacher: "The heavens declare the glory of God: and the firmament showeth his handy work. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge. There is no speech nor language, where their voice is not heard. Their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world." In such a strain he continues to give expression to his pious thoughts upon beholding the starry heavens. They preached to him, and he felt the power of the sermon. There is truth in the remark of a writer when he says, "Though all the preachers on earth should grow silent, and every human mouth cease from publishing the glory of God, the heavens above will never cease to declare and proclaim his majesty." Thus do devout and reflecting minds draw knowledge and the spirit of devotion from the productions of divine skill and benevolence, with which they find themselves surrounded. Oh, yes, there are many preachers proclaiming the goodness and power of God, and we have many aids to devotion and holiness, if we are prepared to see and appreciate them.

While the heart of the worldly man which is not in harmony with the divine will, nor in love with the divine character, becomes more secularized by looking upon natural objects, the Christian regards them as monitors to remind him of God, and he uses them as means to help him to remember and adore God. The man of business and speculation may contemplate things around him only from a business stand-point, and value them only as they can be turned to his own temporal interest, or to that of some one else. But Christians with properly disciplined minds, look at things quite differently. To them "The invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead." Thus nature and providence, and the works of men, both good and evil, may be put under contribution and made to administer to our good if we understand the Christian art of turning every thing to our spiritual advantage.

"Happy the man who sees a God employ'd
In all the good and ill that checker life!
Resolving all events, with their effects
And manifold results, into the will
And arbitration wise of the Supreme."

But in following our thoughts we have digressed from the leading thought or thoughts we had in view when we took up our pen to write the present article on "Always a Good Sermon." We have got off the subject of a good sermon, on that of many sermons from the many preachers we have to preach to us. We surely need not be without some good preaching and a good sermon, though the minister of Christ whom we look up to for spiritual food, and words of comfort, edification, and instruction, may not be in a condition to meet our wants and expectations. The sanctuary of God should be regarded as a sacred place. And the mind of the Christian believer, if it is in the frame it should be in when he enters the holy sanctuary, will be impressed with divine things. The Bible that usually lies where it can be seen, cannot fail to suggest to the serious and devout mind sacred thoughts. All the associations of the place of worship should be sacred. To some it has been a wonder why our Quaker friends meet for silent worship, and why they should go some distance to the place of worship and then sit in silence. They could not see the propriety of their doing so. But it is to have the advantage of those silent preachers, the sanctuary and its sacred surroundings.—These are helps to devotion, though not absolutely necessary to awaken a devotional spirit.

So if the soul is seeking after God, and if we use judiciously the means of grace within our reach, or such as we may be favored with, though they may not be the best, or all that might be desired, God may be found and felt. It is an encouraging thought that there are various ways in which religious feelings and ideas may be awakened in the mind, though a very common way is by the instrumentality of truth, presented by the agency of the Christian ministry.

CONSOLIDATION.

After considerable reflection and consultation we have come to the conclusion to consolidate the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN and the Pilgrim into one paper. Satisfactory arrangements have been made by the parties concerned, and the necessary steps have been taken to accomplish it. We hope the change will prove satisfactory to the patrons of both papers, and that the paper we shall give them hereafter at the proper time, will be an improvement on its predecessors. Next week we shall give a more full explanation of the change we contemplate making, and will also send out our Prospectus for 1877. We hope our friends and agents will be ready to enter upon the work of obtaining subscribers with that diligence and zeal which are desirable in every good cause.

OUR LATE VISIT TO OHIO.

We spent a week recently in Miami county, Ohio. We were called there on business, and the business for which we went there occupied the most of our time. We spent Sunday, the 1st inst., with the brethren in Covington, that being their regular meeting day there. We had an opportunity of seeing the most of the brethren of the Covington church, as they were generally present at the meeting. We enjoyed the meeting with the Christian friends in Covington, and were glad that we had the privilege of worshiping again together. We remember with very tender and yet very pleasant feelings our former relations to, and associations with the Covington brethren.

Our visit at Troy was as pleasant as could have been expected under the circumstances. Our brother-in-law, J. E. Pearson, was very sick at the time of our visit, which interfered with the pleasure of it, and especially with the pleasure of our companion, as she could be with her sister but little. We are glad to learn our brother-in-law is recovering.

THE COLLECTION OF THE MINUTES OF A. M.

This work which was committed to Bro. Davy and ourself is at length completed. While we were in Ohio lately we helped to complete the Index to the work, and we presume by this time, according to the promise of the publisher, the work is ready for distribution. The work is considerable larger than we expected it would be. It will contain about four hundred and forty pages. It will be sold for $1.50 single copy, and 10 cents will be added when it is sent by mail, making it by mail $1.60. Orders for the work are solicited. They may be sent to this office, or to H. D. Davy, Casstown, Miami Co., Ohio.

In an article containing a short sketch of our late visit to Ohio, we alluded to the illness of our brother-in-law, J. E. Pearson, and upon the information contained in a letter we received from Troy since we left there, we said he was better. This morning (11th inst.) we received a dispatch, containing the sad intelligence of his death, which occurred last night (the night of the 10th).

Mr. Pearson was one of the most active and successful business men in Troy. He was a respectable and useful citizen. His generous disposition prompting him to help others when help was needed, obtained for him many friends. In his death Troy has lost a useful citizen; but the loss will be most grievously felt in his family. We sympathize with the bereaved and afflicted family, and trust that a gracious God will comfort them in their affliction, and sanctify this painful dispensation of his providence, to their eternal well being. We regret the existence of circumstances which prevent ourself and family from being present at the funeral services.

Cleanings and Jottings.

Bro. S. H. Bashor requests us to say that his address will be Scalp Level, Cambria county, Pa., till Nov. 15th.

The late hurricane in Porto Rico was very destructive to the cane, rice, and coffee plantations, almost totally ruining the coming crops.

The Baptist Battle Flag says, and we suppose, not without authority, "Bishop Ames of the Methodist church has decided that there is no Bible authority for ordaining or licensing women to preach."

In the remains of an ancient city which has been discovered on the steppes bordering on the Caspian Sea, several minarets of Arab architecture were found in a perfect state of preservation.

It is stated that Don Carlos is about quitting Paris for Belgium or Switzerland, and that he has informed the French Government that he would not re-enter Spain at the cost of another civil war.

AN exchange says: "The German Government has built the mammoth kitchen. It is 1,000 feet long, and constituted of stone and iron, and is designed to supply food for the army in time of war. Two 1,800 horse-power engines drive its machinery, which is capable of boiling down and condensing for transportation 187 oxen, and will grind 350 tons of flour, and makes 300,000 loaves of bread daily. It can also supply enough preserved oats for one day's feeding of the horses belonging to 280,000 men." When will men make such provisions for the army of the Lord?"

THE REPORT OF A. M. We still have a number of these on hands, which we should be pleased to send out as soon as possible. Terms: Single copy, by mail, 25 cents; or $2.50 per dozen.

MR. Huxley delivered three lectures in this city [N. Y.] last week. They were devoted to a maintenance of the theories he espouses, and were the strongest showing which, perhaps, can be in favor of "Evolution." He was listened to with great attention by good audiences of the best cultured people of the city, and among them many of the clergy of all denominations. Those who heard, and those who have read his lectures, generally give the opinion that his facts did not justify the deductions he makes. Mr. Huxley, it is to be hoped, has greatly enlarged the circle of his personal friends by his visit to the United States, but the new disciples he has made to his teachings are very few.—Baptist Weekly.

Miscellaneous.

The Scriptures according to Scientists.

Some two years ago we gave a Scripture reading of modern scientists, especially those who train in the schools of Tyndall, Huxley, Spencer, and Darwin. While Prof. Huxley is on a missionary tour in this far-away land of darkness and superstition, and thousands, even of Christians, are flocking to his ministry, it is eminently proper to give the first chapters of Genesis as rendered by the school of these modern prophets. Their rendering is as follows:

1. Primarily the Unknowable moved upon cosmos and evolved protoplasm.
2. And protoplasm was inorganic and undifferentiated, containing all things in potential energy; and a spirit of evolution moved upon the fluid mass.
3. And the Unknowable said, Let atoms attract; and their contact begat light, heat, and electricity.
4. And the Unconditioned differentiated the atoms, each after its kind; and their combinations begat rock, air and water.
5. And there went out a spirit of evolution from the Unconditioned, and working in protoplasm, by accretion and absorption, produced the organic cell.
6. And cell by nutrition evolved primordial germ; and germ developed protogene; and protogene begat coozon, and coozon begat monad, and monad begat animalcule.
7. And animalcule begat ephomera; then began creeping things to multiply on the face of the earth.
8. And earthy atom in vegetable protoplasm begat the molecule, and thence came all grass, and every herb in the earth.
9. And animalcules in the water evolved fins, tails, claws, and scales; and in the air wings and beaks; and on the land they sprouted such organs as were necessary as played upon by the environment.
10. And by accretion and absorption came the radiata and mollusca, and mollusca begat articulata, and articulata begat vertebrata.
11. Now these are the generations of the higher vertebrata, in the cosmic period that the Unknowable evolved the bipedal mammalia.
12. And every man of the earth, while he was yet a monkey, and the horse while he was a hipparion, and the hipparion before he was an orodon.
13. Out of the ascidian came the amphibian and begat the pentadactyle, and the pentadactyle by inheritance and selection produced the hylobate, from which are the simiadae in all their tribes.
14. And out of the simiadae the lernur prevailed above all his fellows, and produced the platyrhine monkey.
15. And the platyrhine begat the catarrhine, and the catarrhine monkey begat the anthropoid ape, and the ape begat the longimanous orang, and the orang begat the chimpanzee, and the chimpanzee evolved the what is-it.
16. And the what-is-it went into the land of Nod, and took him a wife of the longimanous gibbers.
17. And in process of the cosmic period were born unto them and their children the anthropomorphic primordial types.

18. The homunculus; the prognathus, the troglodyte, the autochthon, the terragen—these are the generations of primal man.

19. And primeval man was naked and not ashamed, and lived in quadrumanous innocence, and struggled mightily to harmonize with the environment.

20. And by inheritance and natural selection did he progress from the stable and homogeneous to the complex and heterogeneous—for the weakest died, and the strongest grew and multiplied.

21. And man grew a thumb for that he had need of it, and developed capacities for prey.

22. For, behold, the swiftest men caught the most animals; and the swiftest animals got away from the most men; wherefore the slow animals were eaten, and slow men starved to death.

23. And as types were differentiated, the weaker types continually disappeared.

24. And the earth was filled with violence; for man strove with man and tribe with tribe, whereby they killed off the weak and foolish, and secured the survival of the fittest.

Here is their account of the race until after the flood. Good reader, which account do you accept, the Scripture as it is, or the Scripture as rendered according to Tyndall, Huxley, Spencer, and Darwin? Yet there are thousands in this age of intelligence who are running after just this kind of nonsense. But what is the end of this kind of faith? Does it comfort and sustain? Listen to the dying words of the late Harriet Martineau: "I have no reason to believe in another world. I have had enough of life in one, and can see no good reason why Harriet Martineau should be perpetuated." What gloom and sadness! And yet the religion of rocks and of evolution can give nothing better. In what contrast are Paul's last words. Listen to him: "I have fought a good fight. I have finished my course. I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day." Who, in the light of such experience, can refrain from exclaiming, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."—Golden Censer.

[From the Sunday Mercury.]

The Rev. Dr. Price's Remarkable Adventure with an Impressionable Robber.

The Rev. Dr. Price, formerly rector of St. Stephen's Episcopal church, lived until recently at 109 West Twenty-second street. Early in the summer he went to Hempstead, leaving his furniture and silver locked in his dwelling. A week ago Friday the Doctor came to New York, unlocked the front door, and entered the parlor. Soon he heard footsteps coming softly down stairs. He went into the hall and there he discovered a burglar.—"What are you doing here?" asked the Doctor. The burglar pointed a pistol at the clergyman's head and said: "If you move I will blow your brains out," and dragged him into the parlor and told him to sit down. "I began to talk to him," said the Doctor to a Mercury reporter. "My good fellow," said I, "what induces you to commit this crime upon crime? You have committed burglary, and now you are about to commit murder. It will do you no good to kill an old man like me. You have already run the risk of twenty years in the State Prison, and to little purpose. If you kill me you will be found out, for I have many friends in the city and am well known here. The murder will cause great excitement and you will be hanged for it. As a mere matter of policy it is folly to kill me. And then why do you want to add crime to crime?" "Well, you take the matter pretty coolly," said the burglar. "Who are you, anyhow?" "I'm the Rev. Dr. Price, of the Episcopal Church, and have spent a portion of my time laboring among your class of people." The burglar's manner changed when I said this, and he took the pistol away from my head. Taking the burglar's left hand in mine (the right held the pistol) I added: "My good fellow, what has induced you to lead this life of crime? Why do you do so?" The hand containing the pistol dropped by the burglar's side. "I am suffering," he said, "for food to eat and am without work and no one pities me. You are the first man, sir, that has spoken a kind word to me in a long time. I shall not harm you. I am surprised at your coolness. You are the most remarkable man I ever saw."

The Doctor had a heavy gold chain hanging from his vest, and a gold watch attached to it. He also had money in his pockets. The burglar did not attempt to rob him. He said: "You have destroyed all my desire to steal, and as for harming you, you need not fear that. But I must escape, and how to do it I don't know. I am afraid to go out, for you will give an alarm and I shall be arrested. I cannot stay here, that's certain, and I cannot harm you, for you talk so kindly to me. I haven't the heart to injure you. I don't see any other way than to tie you. Is there a closet handy to put you in?" "That is unnecessary," said the Doctor. "I will allow you to escape. I will give you all the time you want. I will not make any alarm until you are out of danger. My life is in danger, and I promise you that you shall have all the time you want."

"Well, I guess I'll trust you." He started for the door. As he was about to go out, the Doctor called to him: "My good fellow, you say that you are in want. Here take this dollar (handing him a silver dollar). I am willing to help you further if you will write me when you get away. You need not fear to do so, for I will not trouble you, if you really desire to reform."

The burglar stood leaning against the front door of the house with one hand on the knob, looking pensively at the floor. Drawing a long breath, he raised himself full length, and, changing his position to rest himself, he said, slowly, and with much feeling: "Ah, thank you, sir, thank you, sir. I expected to have a fight with you, when I heard you come in the door. You have conquered me without fighting. You shall hear from me again, sir; I will never forget this occurrence. I believe there is one kind-hearted man left in the world. Good-bye."

The burglar, casting a glance behind him, slid out upon the stoop, and shutting the door after him, walked rapidly away toward Ninth avenue.

Our own company we cannot avoid; make it then as good as possible.

Correspondence.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood.

On Sunday Schools.

While I was in bodily affliction lately, there appeared a request in the Pilgrim and also in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN from our young brother, Thurston Miller, that I should write something on this subject; but my condition forbade the same. I am barely able to sit up now.—But the subject was the exercise of my mind while upon my sick-bed, so that I often forgot for a little while my misery.

I always took pleasure in teaching the young, as those that know me, will testify. I early learned the truth, in theory and practice—

"As the twig is bent
The tree's inclined."

I therefore betook myself to that work which might produce the most good, as my qualifications were small.

As it is a question with our brethren whether it is expedient to establish Sunday-schools, I shall first try to settle that question by asking, Is it right to teach the young? And my answer is: Not only right, but unavoidable. All the kindred and nations of the earth do it; the beast of the field and the birds of the air, all—all teach their young.

The second question comes up: "What are they to be taught?" We answer: All that is needed for their present and eternal welfare and happiness.

A third question presents itself: "Who is to teach them?" Nature saith, and the brute creation confirms it, The parents.

Now let the kind reader go with me into the room where the young mother is with her little offspring. She has just washed and dressed the same, and is now trying to play with it. She uses various means to make it notice her and smile. What a thrill of joy passeth through her soul when she hath gained her object!—The child improves from day to day. It distinguishes the sound of her voice. It quits crying and goes to sleep by the sweet lullaby of the mother. Teaching and learning goes on; the germ of love is cultivated; the consequence is happiness. But ah! another scene is introduced. In her playfulness the mother assumes an air of anger; her voice is changed; threatening words, looks and gestures frighten the child. It feels miserable. Tears come to its eyes. Quick as electricity the mother changes, hugging and caressing the little one. What has the mother done? She hath dropt the first seed of falsehood and deception into the little heart. Thus from day to day the child learns more and more that all is not true the mother says. It practices the same, and thus falsehood is propagated. After a little another evil is instilled into the mind of the child. Mother wants to wash and dress it for church; but the little one shows an aversion to being washed. But it is told it must put on the nice pink dress like cousin Mary's. This has the desired effect. The child goes to church. Its whole mind is taken up with the pink dress; it hears nothing and sees nothing else; and when meeting is over, talks nothing but dress. What hath the mother done? She hath dropt the first seed of pride. Next comes a Sunday-school picnic, or some other exhibition of colors and finesses. Now the little one is told it must have prettier things than cousin A and Mrs. B. Now comparisons are instituted. Not only "ye shall be as God's," but even superior; hence the changes of style and fashions! !

I have given a few things out of many to show the kind reader how the child is taught bad and good from infancy, so that as it grows up it cannot discern between good and bad. The disease ought to be cured. What is the remedy? Gather the little ones together, and make them acquainted with the word of God, for it is a cure for every evil—it points to the great Physician.

This was the leading principle of the start of Sunday schools. But alas! it has failed, if not altogether, yet in a great measure. And why? Because the prime object, that of teaching the children to read and understand the word of God, was soon set apart or made a secondary object; for it would seem that the adversary saw that if the young were made acquainted with and imbibed a love of the truth, he would lose his sway in a great measure over mankind. So he moved some wise head to present the idea that the Bible alone was too dull reading and not adapted to the mind of the young; and also that the solemn sacred church music did not suit the ear of the jovial, light hearted youth. Consequently a Sunday-school singing-book must be gotten up. And oh, what a mixture of frivolity and solemnity! What a discord and disharmony! Just so with the books and pamphlets that make up the library of the Sunday-school. Truth and error mixed so that even old persons cannot discern, let alone children. In course of time there is as little left of the Bible reading as possible, as if the word of God was not in itself able to improve and instruct the minds even of little children without comment, if only brought to pay heed to the reading. My own experience bears testimony to the fact, and God said, "My word shall not return void but shall accomplish that for which it is sent."

We now come to another phase in the history of Sunday schools. Each sect or denomination sees proper to introduce its own special creed and bend the reading of God's word to sustain that creed. This move proves a success, and Sunday-schools are the nursery of the church. Now the zeal is increased; means and ways to draw the children to our school must be gotten up, among which stand foremost picnics, socials, evening parties, etc., etc. You see it in the local papers: "The picnic of the M. E. church yesterday was a perfect success." The programme is set forth; and, what is best of all, it brought into the treasury $—— for the use of the school.

The U. B. read the advertisement and they must not be undone; therefore they get up something superior. All the other churches are stirred up to emulation. What! to make humble followers of the meek and lowly Jesus? No—not that; but to dress finer; make a more showy parade; blaze abroad the superiority of their institution. Oh, the solemn mockery! Well might it set the adversary of religion a grinning at the conduct of the meek(?) disciples of Jesus!

Thus have Sunday-schools been transformed from their original design into nurseries of falsehood, deception, pride and many other evils that should have been extirpated, and peace, love, and good will cultivated. We would not wish to be understood as condemning all that is done, written, or taught in Sunday-schools; but only call the attention of the kind reader to the mixture of good and bad, truth and falsehood, which the devil always aims to introduce into every good and noble object, which we ought to avoid.

Now, from the above evils, and many more that might be named, many of our brethren have risen in opposition to Sunday-schools, and even have strained passages from Holy Writ to condemn them, such as the prophecy of Daniel about the abomination standing where it ought not; and also referring to Christ and his apostles, that they never introduced or taught Sunday-schools, yet ignoring the fact that Jesus took children in his arms and blessed them. Go, my brother, and be a blessing to the rising generation in whatever way or manner you can. Don't condemn Sunday schools because much evil is taught and practiced there. There is certainly some, yes, much good done.

Supposing your neighbors were to clear off some ground, and break up the virgin young soil, then take chess and cockle and mix with their seed-wheat, and sow their ground. The consequences would be, "Whatever a man soweth that shall he also reap," and that would be more chess and cockle than wheat. Would not that spur you up to diligence and care, that not a grain of foul stuff would fall into your soil, but clean wheat, and with the blessing of God, a rich harvest will be your reward. Let me speak freely to you, my brethren. For fifty odd years I have observed Sunday school operations, and have come to this conclusion: That if ever there was a necessity for you to take hold of Sunday schools and gather your children, and as many others as you can, that necessity exists now. And you, fathers and mothers, bring them to the school or meeting-house, and then and there have them taught solemn music that cheers the heart and ravishes the soul. Bend your knees with them in devout prayer and praise. Set them an example of earnestness that they will imitate. If you don't do this, your children will go anyhow, being allured by fashionable surroundings, and become what you would grieve over while you live, and perhaps longer, for aught I know.

Yours in love

F. P. LEHR.

Bloomington, Mich.

HARLEYSVILLE, Pa., Oct. 1, 1876.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—As I am alone and my thoughts roving, I will for the first time (if the Lord add his blessing), give you a little church news from this part of the brotherhood. The communion meeting was appointed at Hatfield on Thursday, the 28th of September. There was a goodly number of brethren and sisters present, and in the evening the house was full, and a great many outside. These inside were very quiet, but the outsiders were as they generally are. There were ministers from a distance expected, but did not come; but those of surrounding churches were there and spoke as the Lord gave them utterance, and I think the blessing of the Lord was felt among those that are in the faith,

But there seemed to have been some in the apostle Paul's time who were weak in faith, or he would have had no need to admonish them to examine themselves whether they be in the faith (2 Cor. 13: 5); and if at that time there were such, we need not expect it any better in those latter days.

The meeting passed off pleasantly that evening, but there was a slight disappointment next day; as there was no preaching next morning (on account of a love-feast in Skippack, on Saturday) and those a little distance off not knowing it, came to the place of meeting and found the doors and shutters closed, for which I felt sorry.

I will now leave this subject. I have written in the fear of the Lord what I have written.

As I said when I commenced writing, I am alone. So I often am, as my husband has left me and gone to the spirit land. Although he is gone one year and six months I often think: Is it possible he never will return? No, no—never! You who read this, and have had the like experience, you know what tears and groanings it costs till we can say, "Thy will be done, O Lord, and not mine."—But however hard it does go, we still have no better way than to trust him as a kind heavenly Father, who doeth all things well. I sincerely believe he has gone to rest, and if I strive lawfully I hope to meet him again on the other side of Jordan.

SARAH TYSON.

Multiplicity of Periodicals.

Briefly, deliberately, and from a sense of duty, I take up my pen to express some thoughts on the multiplicity of periodicals. I am persuaded that one paper, in any one language, containing all the cream of all the papers now in the brotherhood, would command more service to the cause of Jesus than they all do now.

First. One paper would do more service because of the reason above given—possessing more nutriment in a small space.

Second. One paper would do better service from the fact that there could be a much larger circulation with the same amount of money. I do not know the number of copies sent out from either office, but we will suppose, for an illustration, that there are sent out 1,500 copies from each office. Now suppose among these subscribers there are 500 who get all the papers. There are four papers in the brotherhood, the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, the Pilgrim, the Vindicator, and the Brethren at Work, to which this article has reference; but as the Vindicator is a monthly, we will take only three to illustrate. Three times 500 papers are 1,500 papers, the number paid and received by the 500 subscribers. Now if there were only one paper, then right here there would be 1,000 copies for the same amount of money to be distributed to non-subscribers.

Third. One paper would do better service from the fact that much useful information is lost to those who get only one of them. Some fine information is given in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, then all we get the other papers and not this, are deprived of that information; sometimes the information is given through the Pilgrim, and then all who do not get that paper are deprived of that information, &c.; and to publish a certain fact through all the papers is three fourths of the labor lost. And if any get all the papers and the same information is published in each, then they pay for the same thing three or four times. This is bad economy.

Fourth. To pay for all the papers is a thing which too many are not able to do; and among these many are the very ones who should have the information therein given. I have reference to the ministers of the church. As a general thing the minister is loaded already with a heavy burden, and then, to be well informed as to what is going on in the Redeemer's kingdom, he should needs spend a heap of money yet to get that information.

Fifth. Time is precious. "Redeem the time," is Paul's injunction. And in nothing is there a greater necessity to "redeem the time" than in reading the word of the Lord directly. And if we, as ministers of the gospel, peruse all these papers, where then is time left to read and study the Bible? And whatever privilege the minister has in this respect, I claim for every member of the church.

Sixth. So much reading cramps our minds and causes indigestion. Our minds are too much engaged on literature aside from the Bible.

I will now leave the reasons for the present.

I do not question the motives of our editors: the scrutinizing of motives belongs to a Higher than I am. I believe they all have a good motive, and are sincere. It is also a matter of indifference to me (and I believe it is to every true Christian) as to who is editor,—whether he is a Quinter or a Beer, a Brumbaugh or a Kinsey, a Plate or a Meyers, a Moore or an Eshelman,—provided he is worthy of the position. Is every editor ready to say in return, "If the edification of the church, and the salvation of souls, and the upbuilding of the Redeemer's kingdom in the earth, and the glory of God are better promoted if only one paper is published, then I will let my paper and position go?" "Ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder." 1 Peter v. 5.

Dear editors, I ask you not to slight my effort for unity. If the Lord could open the mouth of an ass to rebuke a prophet, think ye not he may also guide the pen of his servant to induce editors to proper courses? What do you say of yourselves? Would you, Bro. Quinter, please make some remarks on this subject?

I will now let the above thoughts suffice for the present.

Cornwall, Pa.

Our Communion Meeting.

Never before did I witness exhibited such Christian love and sympathy (it being the first communion meeting of the kind I ever attended). There seemed to be union in the true sense of the word. I must say that it was the happiest meeting I have ever experienced. I have often been present at what was called the communion of the Lord's Supper; but a contrast it was when performed in a cold, haughty, distant manner, as if one was afraid of being contaminated by the touch of another. This last seemed to show forth the purity of Christianity.—There were many spectators, as it was something entirely new in Kentucky, or at least in this part of the State, and I think it will make a lasting impression on the community, as there have been many inquiries made concerning the foundation of the ordinance. We feel greatly encouraged, and hope that the Giver of every good and perfect gift intends a great work in Kentucky, and that ere long many will see the errors that are getting among the different sects of religion. I, myself, remained hedged in, as it were, so long by conflicting theories, that I have a great desire that those who are similarly situated should come to the true light of the gospel, for many seem to feel as I did, that there is a great wrong in the different churches, but can not see where the remedy is to come from; and I am certain if they once could see and understand the Scriptures aright, they would go with us at once.

And now, dear brethren, I will say to you once more, Help us all you can. If there should be any ministering brethren traveling from east to west or otherwise, if they could call on us they would be thankfully received by the little flock here; or any others that feel like visiting our State. We feel ourselves very weak and needy of assistance. I do not want the brethren to think me too impotent, and hope they will consider the urgency of the case. I have so lately been brought to know what it is to be a true follower of the meek and lowly Lamb, and see thousands around me so blinded by pride and other inventions of the wicked one, that my heart aches for them, as I know many of them mean well and are so much deceived. I do know that my kind and loving brothers and sisters can not avoid sympathizing with me.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In Bareville, Lancaster county, Pa., (Conestoga church) May 6th, 1876, Bro. SAMUEL MYERS of erysipelas, aged 43 years 4 months and 4 days. He was a faithful and much beloved brother and a minister in the second degree.

In the Naperville congregation, Dupage county, Ill., on the 7th of September, 1876 JOHN VROMAN, aged 18 years 10 months and 16 days. Funeral sermon by Bro. Jacob Sullenbarger, from 1 Peter 1. 24, 25. This youth suffered long, not having the use of his lower limbs for a year or more. He lost his eyesight about the same time, and finally died of decay of the brain. With all these afflictions he never murmured. May the benediction of father and mother continue on in the good cause of Christ, and the only sin or give her heart to Jesus.

ROAR EARLY.

In the Ashland church, Ashland county, Ohio, Sept. 10th, 1876 Mrs. SARAH BATES, consort of friend Solomon Bates, aged 22 years one month and 23 days. Funeral services by P. D. Parker and the writer, from Col. iii. 1-3.

Also, in the same church, Sept. 7th, 1876, infant son of Bro. D. B. and Sister L. Clark, aged 2 weeks and 3 days. Funeral services by the writer, from 1 Thess. iv. 13

D. N. WORKMAN.

Sept. 12th 1876. Sister MARY EMMERT, wife of Bro. Michael Emmert, aged 59 years one month and 12 days. She suffered much during her affliction, which lasted twelve years, during which time she went a great deal. She finally fell asleep, we trust in Jesus. The solemn occasion was improved by the Brethren, from Psa. xxxix. 4, 5.

EDMUND FORNEY.

Near Middlebury, Clay county, Ind., Aug. 23rd 1876, CHARLES WILLIAM, son of Vely and Barbara Aone Holms, aged three weeks and five days. Funeral services from Mark x. 13-16, by the wrter.

Also, near Middlebury, Aug. 17th, 1876, ELISHA SNOOK aged 26 years and 22 days

Also, at the same place, Sept. 10th, 1876, Sister SARAH SNOOK (the mother of Elisha Snook), aged 69 years 10 months and 25 days. She was formerly from P. M., and her maiden name was Fadelly. She had her home with her son, Azariah Snook. Funeral services for both the above at the same time, by the writer from 2 Tim. iv. 7, 8

Also, at the same place, Sept. 27th, 1875, JAMES M. CHASE, son of Moses Winkelbeck, aged one year and 12 days. Funeral services by the writer, from Rev. xiv. 12, 13.

Also, at S line City, Clay county, Indiana, Sept. 10th, 1876, MORRIS L. B. NORTON son of Sister Elizabeth A. and step son of Bro. Henry Aynes, aged 8 years 8 months and 7 days. Funeral services on the 1st day of October, by the writer, from Heb. ix. 27, 28.

BALANCING MILL-STONES.

No mill should ever be run without being in proper balance. Ask the average miller if his burrs are in a good condition, and he will give you a vague answer. He is conscious that something is not exactly as it should be, but it does not occur to him that the fault lies in the balancing; but look at his bran and middlings, and if he has a stone turned over, look at its face and you can tell for yourself. The stone may be in a standing balance, but not in running balance. The fault cannot properly be charged to the miller. To put a stone in running balance requires a skill that comparatively but few possess. But give a nicely balanced stone in care of a person who understands and loves his business, and he will have no trouble. If he is running on custom work he will have no trouble in giving satisfaction to his customers, and he will have no trouble in keeping the neck of his spindle cool, and tight in the bush. He will find out that one hour's picking will answer where he had formerly to spend two or three hours. He will undoubtedly die over too, that if he formerly needed fifteen-horse power or a stone, he can now get off with twelve. And what about the quality and quantity of the product? The meal will be both freer and the flour more lively, and will be able to turn out a few pounds more per bushel if on close grinding, and more and better flour on high grinding. If he has his heart in his business, he will treat his burrs as gently as he would his tenderest friend, and his employer will be amply rewarded for having his running stone put in perfect running and standing balance; both are equally important and indispensable to a well organized mill.

I will be at the mill of Lint & Shumaker in Meyersdale, for some weeks, making changes and improvements in their mill.—Should any be desirous of obtaining my services as a mill-wright or draughtsman, they can be accommodated by addressing me at Meyersdale, or I can be consulted in person at Meyers' mill in Meyersdale, Swazest Co., Pa.

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

Not a Dye; makes harsh hair soft and silky; cleanses the scalp from all impurities, causing the hair to grow where it has fallen off or become thin.

Can be applied by the hand as it does not stain the hand or soil the finest linen. As a Hair Dressing it is the most perfect the world has ever produced. The hair is renovated and strengthened, and natural color restored without the application of mineral substances.

Since the introduction of this truly valuable preparation into this country, it has been the wonder and admiration of all classes, as it has proved to be the only article that will absolutely without deception, restore gray hair to its original color, health, softness, lustre and beauty, and produce hair on bald heads of its original growth and color.

This beautiful and fragrantly perfumed article is complete within itself, no washing or preparation before or after its use, or accompaniment of any kind being required to obtain these desirable results.

HERE IS THE PROOF OF ITS

SUPERIOR EXCELLENCE.

Read this Home Certificate, testified to by Edward B. Garrigues, one of the most competent Druggists and Chemists of Philadelphia, a man whose veracity none can doubt.

I am happy to add my testimony to the great value of the "London Hair Color Restorer," which restored my hair to its original color, and the hue appears to be permanent. I am satisfied that this preparation is nothing like a dye, but operates upon the aortations. It is also a beautiful hair dressing and promotes the growth. I purchased the first bottle from Edward B. Garrigues, druggist, Tenth and Coates streets, who can also testify my hair was quite gray when I commenced its use.

MRS. MILLER.

No. 730 North Ninth St., Phila.

Dr. Swayne & Son—Respected friends: I have the pleasure to inform you that a lady of my acquaintance, Mrs. Miller, is delighted with the success of your "London Hair Color Restorer." Her hair was falling rapidly and quite gray. The color has been restored, the falling off entirely stopped, and a new growth of hair is the result.

BOSTON TESTIMONY.

July 23d, 1871.—Dr. Swayne & Son: Last winter, while in Trenton, N. J., I procured six bottles of London Hair Color Restorer, which I like very much, in fact better than anything I have used in the last nine years. If you please, send me one dozen bottles C. O. D., care of W. S. Fugler & Son, druggists, No. 723 Tremont street, Boston.

Respectfully yours,

ADA BAKER,

No. 59 Rutland Square.

"London Hair Color Restorer and Dressing" has completely restored my hair to its original color and youthful beauty, and caused a rapid and luxurious growth.

SONG AND SILENCE.

"When the song's gone out of your life, you can't start another while it's a-ringing in your ears, but it's best have a bit of silence, and out o' that may be a psalm'll come by and by."

When the song's gone out of your life,
That you thought would last to the end—
That first sweet song of the heart
That no after days can lend—
The song of the birds to the trees,
The song of wind to the flowers,
The song that the heart sings low to itself
When it wakes in life's morning hours?

"You can start no other song,"
Not even a tremulous note
Will falter forth on the empty air;
It dies in your aching throat,
It is all in vain that you try;
For the spirit of song has fled—
The nightingale sings no more to the rose
When the beautiful flower is dead.

So let the silence softly fall
On the bruised heart's quivering strings;
Perhaps from loss of all you may learn
The song that the seraph sings;
A grand and glorious psalm
That will tremble, and rise, and thrill;
And fill your breast with its grateful rest,
And its lonely yearnings still.

Sabbath School.

BY D. J. SHAFFER.

The Bible declares that if a child is trained up in the way he should go, when he is old he will not depart from it. This training the Sunday-school teacher aims to give, by imparting religious knowledge to his pupils, teaching them to avoid the broad road that leads to death, and to walk in the narrow path that leads to life; by producing a deep impression of the duties they owe to God and man, and by forming those religious habits in youth which we desire to see in future life. The Sunday-school acts in view of the solemn truth that the child is an heir of immortality, destined to be eternally happy or eternally miserable, according to the character possessed in this life.

It seeks by combining the above instrumentalities, in dependance on God's grace, to lead the young to seek him early who has said, "Those who seek me early shall find me." How this religious knowledge is communicated, these impressions made, and these habits formed, we shall see by-and-by. From seeking the great object of all Sunday-school instruction, incidental advantages result, such as the following:—

1. They prevent infidelity, by removing the sources of it, such as these—1st. Neglect of early moral training, and 2nd. Ignorance of the character and contents of the Bible. Nearly all of this class who have been brought to embrace the truth have acknowledged that they were ignorant of that Book whose truths they professed to reject or disbelieve. 3rd. Ignorance of the evidences of the truth of the Bible. 4th. Disregard of the Sabbath. The best prevention of scepticism is an early and thorough acquaintance with the Bible.

2. A second advantage of the Sunday-school is, it prevents the spread of popery. It is feared much by some good men that popery will one day prevail in this land; and that it will be here as in other countries where that corrupt system obtains the ascendancy—that we shall lose the privileges of civil and religious freedom which we now enjoy. There is nothing that popery fears so much as the popular study of the Bible. A seal is placed upon this sacred book wherever she has the power. Let it be studied by her members, and they will no longer receive her unscriptural teachings. Imbue the young minds of American children with the teachings of the Bible, and you preserve them from the corruptions of popery.

3. The Sunday-school tends to prevent the desecration of the Sabbath. Many in the dungeon and upon the gallows have acknowledged that the first step in their downward course was the desecration of the Sabbath. Children will be busy. If we give them nothing good to do, they will be doing some evil. Employ their minds pleasantly on the Sabbath, in committing to memory and reciting portions of God's word, and studying that blessed book in the Sunday-school; reading the library-books, singing and reciting hymns, and attending a preached gospel, and you prevent any disposition to spend the day in seeking pleasure abroad—because they find greater pleasure in the Sunday-school. Let them grow up in the habit of attending the courts of God's house, and keeping the day holy, and they will in manhood feel and say, "How excellent are thy tabernacles, O Lord of hosts!" We would have the teacher begin the great work of teaching the children to remember the Sabbath day, by obtaining correct and scriptural views of its importance himself. Then we would have him teach the class, when and by whom it was instituted, its use to mankind, and the effects of its being neglected. Here is one of the great excellences of the Sunday-school institution—one, too, which is not appreciated by the world or the church. I mean the principle of prevention. It has been well said, that "the conversion of one bold, hardened infidel, may be a more striking proof of the benefit of faithful Scripture instruction, than the prevention of a thousand Sunday-school children from becoming infidels;" but eternity will show that in the latter case the benefit was no less real and far more extensive than the former. Thus the Sunday-school teacher can labor through life, preventing the above mentioned evils, and receive not the glory of men; but to such will God say, "Well done, good and faithful servants."

4. The Sunday-school forms a taste for profitable reading. Give a child a taste for reading good books, and you give him a powerful preservative from temptation to read bad ones through life. The young man who has this taste finds more pleasure and better company in books than he could find by mingling in the frivolities and follies of thoughtless youth. Who are found spending their Sabbaths in idleness or visiting? To whom does the Sabbath seem a weariness? Not generally to those who have had an early taste for good reading. It is worthy of consideration that the direct influence of the Sunday-school is to prevent crime and intemperance, not only by instilling virtuous principles, but by leading to virtuous and elevating associations.

5. The Sunday-school costs nothing. Sunday-school instruction is like the air we breathe, or the blessings of the gospel, "without money without price." If a sum of money were charged for tuition in Sunday-schools, how many thousands, owing to poverty, or the indifference of parents, would be deprived of its blessings?

The Sunday-school exerts an influence on parents. There are many parents who cannot be reached, and, therefore, cannot be influenced, except through their children.

What the children learn is repeated to their parents. The books they take home from the library are read by them. Thus hearts are influenced and opened for good, by the interest and sympathy manifested in, and the instructions given to their children in the Sunday-school.

Watch.

BY J. W. SMOUSE.

We see in the above word a world of lessons for the followers of Christ. How many of us as professors of Christianity watch as we should? Christ tells his Apostle to "watch and pray;" and again he says, "Watch ye, therefore, for ye know not when the Master of the house cometh, at even or at mid night, or at the cock crowing, or in the morning; lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping."—Mark 13: 35, 36. Now if our Lord and Master told his disciples to watch, how important it is for us to watch, so we enter not into temptation, for we may pray and still not watch as we should, and unless we watch as well as pray, we may be led into temptation. How many of us watch and pray as we should? We must truly acknowledge, sometimes, that the "Spirit is willing but the flesh is weak;" therefore, my beloved brothers and sisters, let me admonish you to watch and be ready, that when the Master cometh he will find us with oil in our lamps, and have them trimmed and burning. I am sorry to state that many that profess to be followers of the meek and lowly Redeemer never pray, and never thank God for his care and protection over them. I think that if all of us as professors would erect a family altar, and would all pray with our families, we would not only be refreshed ourselves in spirit, but might lead others to the feet of Jesus and hide a multitude of sins. So I would say, let us watch and pray so that when we come to the valley and shadow of death, we may have Jesus to guide and accompany us and land our souls safe in Heaven. "What I say unto you I say unto all, Watch."

The Providence of God.

S. T. BOSSERMAN.

"Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father." Matth. x. 29.

He who cannot feel himself secure under any and all circumstances, and feel that God careth for all has not fully committed all, to the care and trust of the all-wise Ruler, and verily has not found that peace that will launch him safely on the shore of eternal deliverance. He who is conscience stricken on account of his sin, has a sorrow in his heart, and possesses such mental anguish that none can describe save that heart which "knows its own bitterness." He has a distrust in his Maker, and is unwilling to acknowledge his providence over him, and thus has a troubled mind by his infidelity to God that none can calm or pacify, save the power of God when allowed to be applied to the mind that has this diffidence towards his Creator.

The soul that has reposing confidence in God has a never failing spring of joy that is inexpressible,—has a joy that no tongue can express,—a calm repose, a sure retreat that the unregenerate mind cannot conceive.

Those who have not their minds stayed upon God have not that faith to make them feel secure in this life; consequently they dread the entering upon another world; or in other words dread death. Otherwise they could rely upon God's care and his promises, which are "sure and steadfast," which would insure them a relief from their bondage, for he (Christ) came to "deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage." Heb. ii: 15. Those, then, who are thus held in bondage through fear of death can have all those fears removed by a proper faith in the promises of God. For Christ holds the keys of death, and he commands us not to fear. Rev. i. 17, 18. Yea, and none need fear while he has his eye of faith firmly fixed upon the precious promises of God. "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." Psa. xxiii. 4.

If we but consider the great difference in value between the little birds spoken of in the text, and the believer in Christ, we cannot but acknowledge God as our supreme head, and that he careth for us as a part of his finite being. Those little birds were sold "two for a farthing," and ascertaining their value in accordance with our circulating medium of commerce, we find their value to be but small, yet they were kindly cared for by the Father's hand, and they were ever ready to acknowledge their protector by singing praise to him. While upon the other hand, man, the most ungrateful, was redeemed by the "precious blood of Christ" (1 Peter. i 19), a price of inestimable value, and yet so loth to acknowledge God and yield obedience to his divine law.

If, then, our Father is so careful of the little birds who were created without the infusion of the "breath of life," could you for a moment suppose that he would be less mindful of man who was created in the "likeness of himself?" Gen. v. 1. No; his care for you will be far the greatest, for "ye are of more value than many sparrows." Fear not, then, my dearly beloved; believe in God and in the Lord Jesus Christ, and you shall enjoy a safe retreat from all the darts that the enemy can throw against you. Kept by the Father's hand as you are, then fear not. He will preserve you. Though you may have to endure afflictions with the people of God for a season, yet they which are counted as "light afflictions" will work for you a far more "exceeding and eternal weight of glory" in the world to come. "Seek ye first the kingdom of heaven," and prepare for death and a glorious immortality beyond the grave, then you will have "nothing to fear. No need then of a fear of death. All is yours to enjoy in this life, and you will be constrained to say, Whether Paul, or Apollous or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours." And praise God, the Christians are are Christ's; and Christ is God's." 1 Cor. iii. 22, 23.

The Psalmist, in view of his Divine Protectorship, declares that "the Lord God is a sun and shield: the Lord will give grace and glory; no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly." Psa. lxxxii. Let us labor to lay upon treasures in heaven while here upon earth, for this treasure we can gather if we are diligent, and we need not fear; for who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good? Then, my Christian friends, and kind readers, in order to secure Divine protection, is to do good and be good,—to live in accordance with the law of God. The unconverted may have great fears of a want of protection from sin, from judgement in a world to come, but to the Christian his fears are allayed, and peace and tranquility are precious boons for his soul in time and eternity. Let us all while in life prepare for death; that our conversation may be in heaven; from whence also we look for the savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." Phil. iii. 20, 21.

I Rejoice and yet I'm Sad.

BY I. S. ROSENBERGER.

The general interests of our brotherhood are growing; at this we rejoice.

The earnest, untiring labors of many of our brethren are causing many to not only feel almost persuaded to be Christians, but to resolve that as for "them and their house they will serve the Lord;" at this we rejoice.

Our ears almost daily are greeted with the Macedonian call to "come over and help us;" which receives generally a favorable response. Every issue records some encouraging conversions. Tract societies are being formed. Our reading matter is being published in different languages. The literature of our brotherhood is also increasing. At all these we rejoice, and are led "to thank God and take courage."

But when we notice the government and discipline of our brethren in many parts, alas, we're sad. That marked distinction between the church and the world, which the fathers in our fraternity have been so active in maintaining, is little by little becoming extinct, gradually being erased; at this we're sad.

We may gather some light on this point, by turning to the literature of other churches. In section 6 of the Methodist Discipline, issued in 1844, the question is presented: Shall we insist on the rules in dress? Ans.—By all means. This is no time to give encouragement to superfluity of apparel. Therefore receive none into the church until they have left off superfluous ornaments. Give no tickets to any who wear high hats, enormous bonnets, ruffles or rings.

We also find in the United Brethren's Discipline, page 48, the following on dress: "Inasmuch as the Lord has commanded us, not to be conformed to this world, to lay apart all filthiness, and superfluity of naughtiness, and as the principles of the Christian religion are taught both by precept and example, we therefore humbly beseech and admonish the members of our church, to observe these divine precepts in buying, making, and the wearing of apparel; also the cutting and wearing of the hair: especially our ministers and their families, they being examples to the flock." The Discipline used by the Evangelical Church, is also similar, and forbids the wearing of gold, pearls, "or ornaments of the head."

John Wesley, in Vol. II, of his sermons, sets forth the principles of plainness in dress, in the strongest terms; in perfect harmony with the order of our ancient brethren. Relative to the scene of pride and fashion among the Methodists in his day, he says: "I am in distress; I know not what to do; I see what I might have done once, but what I can do now, I cannot tell." If the scene of fashion in Wesley's day (1788) produced the above effect upon his mind, what would be the effect of a scene in the same circle to day. Appalling, certainly. At the above we feel sad.

We sorely regret that the above

Disciplines are not regarded by their respective churches; for then we as a church could easily prevail on our dear members to keep in that essential, fertile valley of humility. Brethren would no longer blush at our plain apparel; sisters would cease to feel uncomfortable in wearing a plain cap; for each would have plenty of company.

When we remember that "we are men of like passions as they are," living under the same unhealthy influences that they are; not only so, but tending and even drifting in the same directions that they have been; it makes us feel sad,—very sad, indeed.

That there are branches of our brotherhood departing, the following occurrence illustrates: A female relative residing in Ohio, whose parents and several of whose brothers and sisters are active members in the church, was East recently on a visit. While stopping in a city she concluded to attend our brethren's worship in that city. As she was not feeling very well, she declined going to the morning service; but the husband went. On his return the wife wanted to know if he found the Dunkard church. He said he found what they told him was the Dunkard church, but they are nothing like the Dunkards with us. Our friend was not satisfied with this, hence accompanied her husband to the evening service. She told us that she beheld neither appearance, practice, nor principle that to her looked like the Dunkard church, save two old brethren and one aged sister. The latter she conversed with, and asked her if different persons in the congregation were members. To her surprise she found they were. She said to us: "I am no member of the Dunkard church, but it made me feel sad to see them so fashionable." She remarked to us a second time that she regretted that she did not call the attention of the ministers, in the friendly conversation with them, to their great departure from the plain principles of the Dunkard church. If the above scene caused this woman, a member of fashionable religion, to feel sad, what effect, dear brethren and sisters, ought it to have on us?

Hearing and Doing.

BY N. S. DALE.

"But he ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves." James 1: 22.

These are words worthy of attention, my beloved, that we be doers of the word, and not hearers only, thereby deceiving ourselves. We understand that hearing is also an important part of the work. We hear the blessed Savior, while teaching the multitude from the sea, among other things, saying: "Take heed, therefore, how ye hear." We would turn our attention to you, dear readers,—you who are spending your precious time in the vanities of a giddy world. Let me, as a well wisher of your souls, entreat you to remember your Creator in the days of your youth, and in so doing to take heed what and how ye hear; for we are told that many false prophets have gone out into the world. And more than this, my friends, they shall even show signs and wonders, that if it were possible, even the elect would be deceived. We are told not to believe every spirit, but to try the spirits whether they be of God; for in these days we have many hard sayers saying, Lo, here is Christ, and lo, he is there. But we entreat you to try the spirits. You may inquire, By what? We answer, By the word of God. "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and these are they that testify of me."

In the 8th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles we have the account of a certain character deceiving the people of Samaria—one that preached himself and not the doctrine of Christ; for we read that he gave out that he was some great man, and so deceived the people that they all gave heed unto him, from the least to the greatest, saying, "This man is the great power of God."

Thus we see how very careful we should be in these last evil days; how very easily we may be deceived by listening to the creature more than the Creator. We understand from the words before us that if we be hearers, and hearers only, we will still deceive our own selves. But we are told what to do and that is, "Be ye doers of the word." A hearer and not a doer of the word is likened unto a man "beholding his natural face in a glass, who goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was; but whose looketh into the perfect law and continueth therein, he not being a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, that man shall be blessed in his deed."

Thus let us all strive, my dear friends, to be doers of the work, in order that we may receive that great blessing, when time and timely things shall pass away. For how many of us who are to-day buoyant with health, may be in the spirit land long before another year has gone, to make up the record of the ages of the mighty past.

MILTON'S PRAYER OF PATIENCE.

I am old and blind !
Men point at me as smitten by God's frown ;
Afflicted and deserted of my knd,
Yet I am not cast down.

I am weak, yet strong :
I murmur not that I no longer see—
Poor, old and helpless, I the more belong,
Father, supreme, to thee.

All merciful One !
When men are farthest, then thou art most near ;
When friends pass by, my weakness to shun,
Thy charlot I hear.

Thy glorious face
Is leaning towards me, and its holy light
Shines in upon my lonely dwelling place,
And there is no more night.

On my bended knee
I recognize thy purpose clearly shown—
My vision thou hast dimmed that I may see Thyself—thyself alone.

I have naught to fear ;
This darkness is the shadow of thy wing ;
Beneath it I am almost sacred—here
Can come no evil thing.

Oh ! I seem to stand Trembling, where foot of mortal ne'er hath been,

Wrapped in that radiance from the sinless land,
Which eye hath never seen.

Visions come and go ;
Shades of resplendent beauty round me
throng ;
From angel lips I seem to hear the flow
Of soft and holy song.

It is nothing now,
When heaven is open to my sightless eyes,
When aise from Paradise refresh my brow,
That earth in darkness lies.

In a purer clime,
My being fills with rapture ; waves of thought
Roll in upon my spirit ; straine enblime
Break over me unstraight

Give me now my lyre !
I feel the stirrings of a gift divine !
Within my bosom glows unceasing fire,
Lit by no skill of mine.

A Fragment.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To an Aged Saint on the bank of Jordan.

The border stream of the milk-and honey Eden is a perilous passage None reach the evergreen shore save the foot-dry. When the Ark is absent destruction is present. Unbelief parts no rivers. Over the sinner the floods clap their hands as the Divine Avengers. Over the saint they chant the halleluiahs of the Divine Beatitudes. The believer's path leads through the river. The reprobate is swept down the current into the Dead Sea—"the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone."

Death is the wages of sin, and sin is the sting of death, and righteousness is the intensifier of sin ; but the Cross cancels the first, extracts the second, and satisfies the third. Justice is how equally interested with Love in the rescue of guilty humanity. "Sin has become exceeding sinful," and salvation exceeding glorious, through the wrath bearing, sin-atoning, sin-pardoning exhibition of Divine Love. Hell is deeper and hotter, and Heaven higher and more ecstatic because of the Cross
When Jehovah exhausts His omni-potence, it rends the veil before the Holy of Holies and knocks the bottom out of Hell. The Cross is such a revelator of Infinite Love and Holiness, that it procures for the saint "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," and for the sinner a "much sorer punishment" of endless torture, a "fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation," an eternal baptism of fire and brimstone into which is poured the cup of the wrath of God without mixture.

You are on the brink. The wave-lets of Jordan are kissing you a welcome to the joys to which they form the crystal gateway. Every surge of the solemn river whispers peace. The glowing heart of Jesus beats like a Divine telegraph through the waters, and bears the thrilling message, Come, thou good and faithful servant, enter into the joys of thy Lord. Grapes from Eschol, and figs and pomegranates from the Hill of Frankincense are refreshing your spirit on the border of Moab.
Deep, broad currents of "joy unspeakable and full of glory" from the "sea of Glass" are rolling their tides through your soul. The entrance of the Dark Valley is transformed into a Tabor. It is good to be here, but better to be yonder.
The hill is sweet, but the Fountain sweeter.

Should the valley turn to twilight, and the twilight to midnight,
"be of good cheer, it is I." Cling to the Crucified with full purpose of heart. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." This did Jesus —for you, for me, for the vilest, for all. "Who is he that condemneth ?
It is Christ that died, yea rather that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us." This is the great argument of the saint at the Mercy-seat. When Sinai belches forth its flames and rolls its thunders ; when Satan accuses and conscience upbraids ; when the sky is overcast and the future dark ; then it is a "faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."

"Who is he that condemneth ?" Is it the law, or conscience, or the devil? "It is Christ that died."
This is the plea that overcomes God.
This is the victory that makes the true Israel. "If God be for us, who can be against us?" Who will lay anything to the charge of God's elect, if God himself has espoused their cause? Righteousness and Mercy have been betrothed before the Altar of Calvary, and that marriage-covenant can never be disannulled. Justice and Love have clasped hands in eternal wedlock, and all the saints are locked in that embrace of deathless rapture. "My Beloved is mine and I am His."
Let this be the psalm of your life, and your Christ-honoring, bliss expressing death-song. Trust God in the dark. His eye sees where your's is dim, and His strong, loving hand retains its grasp when your's is paralyzed. The longest and darkest eclipse is transient. O death where is thy sting? "It is Christ that died." In a few days at the longest, the Great High Priest's prayer will be fulfilled in you. John 17: 24 You are now in the vestibule of Heaven. Another step and you pass through the doors of pearl into the bosom of the Eternal Bridegroom.

Man's Fall and Redemption.

BY H. SMITH MYERS.

When the Lord created man, he formed him in his own image, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul.
He placed him into the garden of Eden to keep it, giving him the right to use every thing for his own benefit, except the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil ; for he says, "In the day that thou eat-est thereof thou shalt surely die."
Man now was in a state of perfect happiness. Everything was there that he could wish for. His bodily wants were all supplied. Being formed in the image of his Creator, he was pure. No sickness, sorrow and disappointment were there to mar his happiness. Being in close communion with his Maker, he had all that his soul could desire. But alas ! Satan, the enemy of mankind, was there. No sooner did he see man in this perfect state of bliss than he conceived the idea of tempting him, and winning him over to himself. The Devil knew that Adam would not, at that time, die a physical death, and this is the plea that he laid before him in the temptation. Satan knew that, if Adam would consent to his wicked devices, the Lord would cast him out of that beautiful place forever. He knew that all mankind would become wicked; and how plainly it was verified! No sooner did our first parents yield to the temptation, than they beheld their nakedness, and began to devise means to cover themselves. A feeling of shame and guilt was smiting their hearts. They knew that they had disobeyed their Lord. When they heard his voice walking in the garden in the cool of the day, they hid themselves for fear. Then the Lord called them, and inquired their reasons for concealing themselves from him, and how they had discovered their situation. Being informed of this, it was then that he pronounced the dreadful sentence upon them and their posterity. It was then, that sin and death entered into the world broadcast, and that man fell from that high estate in which the Creator had placed him, and followed his own carnal desires and lusts. It was then, that man who had been the recipient of all the blessings, both spiritual and temporal, that he could possibly desire, was forced to eat his bread in the sweat of his brow. Having disobeyed his Lord, he took the responsibility upon himself. Nothing but trouble and disappointment surrounded him on all sides. What could have been the feelings of poor, sin-fallen man at that moment? Oh, the anguish that he must have suffered! Stung by the feelings of remorse and guilt, and by the knowledge of his having sinned against the Almighty, his feelings must have been terrible in the extreme. Thus we see, in a few short passages of Scripture; man's creation; the happiness he once enjoyed; how he was led astray by the Prince of darkness, and forsook all that was noble, good and true, for the pleasures and vanity of sin; also, the terrible punishment that God inflicted upon him for doing so.

Although God is just and cannot utter an untruth, he is also merciful and kind. No sooner had man fallen, and was banished from that blissful abode, than God devised means to reclaim him, and draw him into his fold again. Although through Adam's fall Satan had established sin in the world, God gave man a chance to come to him, by following his precepts and laws, which he then instituted. Thus we have from the outset a division among the people, a few following the guidance of the Almighty, whilst the greater portion is following carnal desires, being blinded by the love of sin. But God promised a Redeemer to his people. Christ, the only begotten Son, was to come into the world, to redeem that which was lost by the transgression of our first parents. This was made known to the world by God's chosen prophets. And Christ did come, taking upon himself flesh and blood. He suffered and died an unnatural and shameful death upon the cross, that man, who was lost in Adam, might be saved in him. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." 1 Cor. 15: 22.

Now as Christ's entrance into the world created a revolution in the manner of man's coming to God, we shall notice the means which he has given us: "For the law and the prophets were until John; since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth thereto." Christ's mission on earth was not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance; to make salvation general, "that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." And when our Saviour was on earth, he instituted those ordinances which he wishes us to observe, and which we must observe, if we wish to become the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus; for he says that man cannot live by bread alone, but by every commandment that is of the word of God.

We hear men, sometimes, saying that there is nothing in the observance of these external commands; that love is the only thing necessary to become a true Christian. To prove this, they quote the language of our Saviour when he says, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commands hang all the law and the prophets." But the same Lord and Saviour who gave us these commands also said, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." "Whosoever saith that he loveth me, and keepeth not my commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." We admit that love is, or should be, the ruling element of our nature. Not that carnal love which those people had of whom Christ tells us, who honored him with their lips while their hearts were far from him, but that divine love that originateth and proceedeth from God himself, and spreadeth abroad and encompasseth every true and faithful follower of Jesus Christ. How can any man claim to follow the Saviour and love him, and then do as he sees best, or as his own evil nature prompts him to do? Where is the consistency in such work? There is no spirit of Christianity manifest in it at all. It is a concoction of the wicked one. The same devil that tempted Adam, is in the world to-day as busily at work as he was then. He was here in Christ's time; for Christ was sorely tempted by him. But, glory be to God, it was of no avail. God had promised a Savior, and he gave him power to reject the temptation. Had Christ succumbed, all would have been lost; but he triumphed over Satan, sin, death and the grave, and established his church here upon earth, the means by which we are drawn to him. He then ascended to heaven, where he dwells on the right hand of the Father, until he comes again in the clouds of heaven to judge the quick and the dead, and award to every man his just deserts.

But no sooner was Christ's church established on earth, than Satan began to creep into it; for Paul in writing to the churches says, "I hear that there are heresies and divisions among you." See what progress the devil was making. He did not try to make them believe, at once, that Christ was all a sham. No; he was too cunning for that, for he knew that some of Christ's chosen apostles were yet on earth, who could testify of Christ. But he began by creating a feeling of selfishness in some of them, marring that love and harmony which existed in them, and which should exist among all of God's people. It was through the instrumentality of the devil that the true church was divided; and see how he has succeeded! What a great number of denominations have sprung up since that time, each one claiming to be the true church of Christ; but when we come to examine their creeds and doctrines, how comparatively few agree with the teachings laid down by the blessed Savior! Pride and money are the ruling elements, each church striving to outstrip the others in point of wealth and numbers. Warring, stifle, lying, cheating and extortion are apparent among some of the members of the same fraternity. What a solemn thought, that the great mass of church members, who are so zealous in attending meeting, should be led so far astray from the true faith, by those false, unfaithful teachers; and particularly in this enlightened country, where the Bible, God's own book, can be read by all. How strange it is that some of these honest thinking people cannot see for themselves, but from the time they can talk and read, they are instructed in the faith that man has laid down instead of Christ; and studying their Catechism and Church Book more than their Bible, they are given over to their own lusts and desires, and thus become to believe a lie. O brethren and sisters, how earnestly we should strive and pray to keep on the narrow road which leads to life eternal! We are all sinners by nature since the fall of Adam. Christ is the only means of redemption, and it is through him only that we can enter into that beautiful home where God and the angels dwell. How careful, then, we should be to observe everything that he has commanded us; for James says, "If a man keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." What a glorious promise awaits us, if we hold out faithful to the end! How my heart beats with joy at the thought of dwelling with Jesus forever,

"We've no less days to sing God's praise
Than when we first begun."

Ruffs Dale, Pa.

Spurgeon and his Cigar.

DEAR SIR:—I address you as an elder, who am also an elder, respecting your late public defense of the use of TOBACCO. Through a London pulpit and a London press, you give the world to understand that you smoke, and will smoke, and smoke to the glory of God, whocver may oppose.

Had you told us, my dear sir, that you used Tobacco occasionally as an anodyne or medicine, what rational man, what man of sense would have questioned your unqualified right so to do? But when you vauntingly defend your habit as a habit, and tell us it is an indifferent act, a small affair and no sin,—when you challenge us to prove from the Bible that it is a sin, you arm us against your position and compel us to resist this outrage upon Christian civilization. Your voice, my brother, is potent for good or evil. It is somewhat like the "English drum beat, heard round the globe." Thousands this side of the Atlantic read your defense of this demoralizing, destructive habit, who never read your sermons. Thousands will copy your vice who will never copy your virtues.

For many years I was a victim of this baneful narcotic, hence I speak ab imo pectore, that which I do know, and testify that which I have seen. You assign ONE REASON for using tobacco—your reasons amount to but one. Were it necessary we might give forty reasons to show that a preacher of the everlasting Gospel should be ashamed to use it.

1st. It tends to make him a slave. The habit once formed and fondly indulged becomes imperious and despotic beyond description, proverbially a match for that of alcohol or opium. The genuine devotee will steal tobacco, who will steal nothing else, rather than do without it, for nothing else has he such a monstrous appetite. To appease its demands, proud ships have been hailed and stayed in mid ocean, and armies have threatened to rebel from right to left if not furnished with it. "Sir," we said to a neighbor, "Do you use tobacco?" "No, sir," was his reply. "Tobacco uses me" Dear sir, we said to a brother clergyman, do, I pray you, give up tobacco. "Not I, not I," was his reply, "I will use it if it shortens my life seven years. I will live while I live." If this is not slavery what is slavery? Is it not a sin to practice a habit which makes an abject slave?

2nd. The habit tends to paralyze the preacher's power to battle intemperance. The alliance between rum and tobacco, I take it, is known and read of all men. They are both deceivers—both intoxicants—twin devils, as often said, and both must be fought with pretty much the same weapons—must they not?

The blandishments of the rum-seller draw, and the insatiable thirst superinduced by tobacco, drives the poor victim to the cup,—"the cup of devils!"—gamblers playing into each others' hands.

Under the influence of this drug, my brother, may you ignore the powerful affiliation which binds up these vices in almost indissoluble union? If so, tell us how it is, that drunkards are tobacco users, nine to ten, probably ninety-nine to a hundred? Tell us how it is, that drunkenness on distilled liquors, and this habit were about contemporaneous, and began in the world together? Tell us how it is, that dram-shops and tobacco-shops are generally one and the same? Tell us how it is, that men of science, reliable physicians, Mussey, Woodward, Alcott, Agnew, Twitchell, Warren, Brodie, and a host in Europe, hold it to be a physiological doctrine, that one artificial appetite generates another, and that tobacco, by wasting saliva, parching the throat, and inflaming the chest, creates thirst for strong drink, and paves the way to downright drunkenness?

Temperance lecturers—slaves of tobacco—are becoming scarce with us; they are as Horace Greeley might say, "white blackbirds," and if well informed, high-spirited Englishmen can tolerate such inconsistent lecturers and preachers, they must be largely endowed with the "patience of the saints."

Drop your cigar, dear brother. Wheel your pulpit as a goodly battleship into action against this destructive narcotic, and you will accomplish a grand work for Temperance and our suffering, perishing race.

3rd. The habit is filthy, its victims as well as others derounce it as filthy, and men who bear the "vessels of the Lord" are required to be cleanly, in a special sense. The most intelligent, most refined, most godly people in our churches are wont to recoil from a snuffing, chewing, smoking pastor. Tobacco is an aromatic which penetrates blood and bone and sends its profane stench through all the avenues of social life.

The rank smoker, find him where you may, in stage, car, hall or church, breaking bread at the Lord's table, or bent in prayer at the bed of a dying saint, pollutes and poisons the common air. Said a Boston merchant, "I wish you would call on my pastor, Dr. S and cure him of smoking." Do you know that he smokes? "Yes, I know it by the stench about him. He baptized me, and as he led me to the baptistry, I was pained, I was disgusted, I was almost indignant, and as true as you live, I was on the point of breaking from his arms and resisting baptism at his hands. Oh, the abominable odor."

"Come into my study," said a brother clergyman; when there, "what do you smell?" he asked. After a pause, I exclaimed, "Smoke! tobacco smoke!" "Fresh smoke or stale?" "Not fresh surely. Old, old enough!" he laughed, and added, "My predecessor was a smoker, he quit this study two years ago, and I am sorry to say, that this abominable scent is the most tangible evidence we have of his ministry."

Ah my brother, dear saints in the agonies of death, have with pale and trembling hand waved tobacco using pastors from their bedsides, pastors they loved!

Pardon us, if we say to the young men, you are educating for the ministry,—dear young brethren, "Affect, in things about thee, cleanliness, That all may gladly board thee as a flower."

4th. The habit tends to waste the Lord's money and the preacher's salary. This may be comparatively an inconsiderable item, we admit, but as you ignore it utterly, it might be gratifying to know, dear sir, what proportion of that $70,000,000 which the English pay year by year for tobacco, is chargeable to your account? To your own Master you stand or fall we admit, but we are impelled to ask, do you not spend a sum upon, this poison sufficient to support a needy widow?—an orphan child?—or perhaps to educate some noble boy for a missionary—some young Carey, Buchanan or Judson? Your personal expenditure may not be worth naming, but the tendency of your example is to waste money enough to give the Gospel to every creature under heaven! Is it right to waste the Lord's money,—is it right by our example to tempt others to waste it upon a narcotic which, says Dr. Franklin, does a well man not the least imaginable good!

5th. You tell us dear sir, that this habit is not sinful or a sin, and challenge its assailants to show any command or law of God against it. Are not rational creatures environed by law, laws within, above, beneath and around? And what are these laws, these laws of nature, but the laws of God! If constituted like other men, you sinned surely by self-abuse when you began to smoke. The normal, unabused physical nature, repudiated the nauseous, noxious abomination, and cried aloud, I will spew thee out of my mouth. You now "thank God for a good cigar"—but did you thus thank Him when retching, plunging and tumbling, in taking the first lesson in this accomplishment? There are exceptions, we admit. Here and there a victim inherits the appetite, but these cases are in fact anomalous, monstrosities, and we ask in such a case, who sinned, this man or his father, that he was born with such a loathsome appetite, an appetite which would even diminish our respect for a dog? Who sinned, this man or his father? Sin is here somewhere. A law is broken. You demand chapter and verse in condemnation of your habit. Know ye not, my brother that the Bible is essentially a book of principles, and that it is left to common sense and honesty to apply these principles. The scope, the reason, the intent, the spirit of law, is the law, the letter killeth.

Know ye not, my brother, that according to the English proverb, "The man who squares his conscience by the letter of the law is the synonym of a wretch?"

Why call for an explicit command against your impure habit? Is not the whole Levitical economy against uncleanness, and were it now in operation, would it not come down like an avalanche, and expel every devotee of this abominable poison from the ministry?

Tell us not, my brother, that the Bible has nothing against your habit. The Bible enjoins benevolence from beginning to end. The tobacco habit is selfish, intensely selfish, it is a public as well as an individual curse. The smoker has as good a right to poison his neighbor as well as to poison the air he breathes. All this obtrusion of saliva, smoke and stench upon the public is a violation, a gross violation of the law of love, love which constitutes the very web and woof of the word of God.

Smokers whilst smokers, are hard to convert, and if they cling to their idol when converted, they are prone to become drones in the church or pitiable backsliders. Facts, mournful facts, would rather substantiate this statement in America. How is it with you? Devoted Christians of the Whitfield and Wesley type with us are not smokers. Our evangelists and missionaries of the Apostolic order are not smokers. We have good men who use tobacco, but men of self-denying piety, who have laid aside the sins that easily beset them, who stand fast in the liberty of Christ are in no such bondage.

You praise the virtues of your cigar as a soporific—it puts you to sleep. Yes, my brother, here is the world wide mischief of this narcotic. Thousands of young men hear you preach, are awakened, resolve to become Christians, thank God for a good cigar which allays their convictions, and their good resolutions evaporate in smoke.

Church members hear you preach on sanctification and resolve to abandon their sins and go on unto perfection; they resort to a good cigar, and enveloped in its lethean fumes, come to the conclusion that they cannot abandon every sin, and leave death and the grave to finish up the work.

Yes, my brother, tobacco is a soul-destructive soporific to millions. It stupefies the sensibilities, sears the conscience, paralyzes the will, and renders millions absolutely unable to obey God and embrace Christ.

The project of converting the world by the gospel of Christ, by the power of the Holy Ghost, and by man's free agency is not a humbug, but a rational, scriptural, glorious project, eclipsing every other. The idea of converting the world whilst rum, opium and tobacco are its master, is a humbug—Geo. Trask.

"So He Bringeth Them."

We pray, God answers, and then we complain of the way he sends the answer.

We ask for patience, and increased provocations, vexations, the promised tribulations are ours. We are amazed, forgetting that "tribulation worketh patience."

We pray for faith, strong faith in God. The path becomes hidden, clouds gather, night overtakes us, we look about with affright. O, how we press up now to the side of the Master, how eagerly do we hearken to his word, nor for one moment dare we look away from his face. The darkness deepens—"we will trust and be not afraid." "He giveth songs in the night." Again we ask that self may die, be crucified with Christ, and straightway we cry out when God work-eth in us mightily; as if there could be death without pain, or crucifixion without suffering.

We do so love the green pastures and still waters

"For comfort's cry with eager haste."

It is so much more comfortable on the "flowery beds" than "railing though bloody seas." It is so much easier to believe all pleasant and sunny things are for the best, than to count in the hard and distasteful and painful experiences. And yet we pray for thy dear image, Lord! Shall we have no fellowship of thy suffering!

Truly, there is no royal road to heaven. It is the blessed old way of the cross—of tears and sighs, of groans and burdens and of wondrous triumphs and victories "I cannot sing—

"E'en though it be a cross

That raiseth me,

Nearer, my God to thee;"

said a Christian lady. "I cannot, cannot sing it. I start and shiver and shrink. I fear lest something dreadful come to me or mine." The heart consents to go without the added love and grace, to rest afar from the bosom of its Lord, rather than to get there by the way of "a cross."

O, the hidden manna! the honey out of the rock, the corn and wine and finest of the wheat! To be gathered in his arms! to lean on his bosom—'held in his heart!' What is all ease or comfort or freedom from suffering to this? What are groans and sighs and piercings, if they lift us there!

The soul in which has been implanted a true genuine love of holiness, seeks the image of his Master at whatever cost. He counts all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus his Lord. He fully trusts the love and sympathy as well as the wisdom of the Father. He fears not the heat of the furnace, for Jesus will be with him there. Infinite love tempers the fire and will not hold him in it one moment longer than is needed. It is a glorious thing to have the Almighty in earnest about our completion and perfection. The consecrated soul urges on the divine refiner and cries, "Stay not thy hand, for my quivering flesh, but bring out thine image, Lord in me."

There is no virtue in suffering to purify the soul, or to purchase spiritual blessings. They have already been purchased by the precious blood of Christ. We can receive them only as gifts.

But temptations and trials may be a means to bring the soul into a condition where God can pour the riches of his grace upon him. While the exercise of our graces always increases and strengthens them.

God takes not pleasure in our pain. Rather, in all our affliction, he is afflicted. He in his measure feels, what every member bears, but he will that we become "partakers of his nature." Holy, holy, as thou, Lord God Omnipotent. — Selects.

Natural History Talk.

BY HOWARD MILLER.

A gentleman writing from Maryland, asks a question that has puzzled many a man, and being of general interest, it will do for a text in this department. Why will not an ungrafted tree produce the original fruit? Thus, in other words, if I take one hundred apple seeds, fifty of which are out of rambo apples and fifty from the fallowater, and from these seeds get one hundred trees, instead of producing fifty rambo and as many fallowater trees there results a terrible mixture, with perhaps the whole lot worthless, comparatively speaking.

The ancient Romans had, according to Pliny, twenty two varieties of apples; now there are many thousands of varieties in cultivation. The apple's native soil is Europe, and the mild fruit from which all our cultivated kinds have descended was a very sorry lot. The apples that the Swiss lake dwellers ate would not be gathered to feed hogs by the intelligent farmer of to-day.

Out of the many worthless kinds, resulting from chance seeding, one tree might produce a very passable apple, which would be due to location, soil, surroundings and conditions being all favorable. Grafting will perpetuate it, but as it is impossible to secure just the same conditions for a second tree it is impossible to duplicate the result.

By a few thousands of years' selection of the better varieties and cultivation man has brought the wild apple up to the present condition; but there is a constant tendency toward the original type, and if left alone would go down stairs faster than it was coaxed up. There is nothing strange or remarkable about it. It is like water seeking its level. Seedlings from very ordinary kinds do not show so great a variation as the better kinds, because the downward tumble is not so great, or so appreciable, and as an extremely rare thing, one better variety may happen, for reasons given before; but Nature will be true to herself and go to the ground floor if not arrested by the grafter.

My intelligent friend states the aphorism that "Like begets like," and is puzzled over Nature's contradiction. His trouble is at an end if he will but remember that it is only true on the first floor, and then only in a general sense, for Nature utterly abhors and detects fac-similes. An apple seed or a peach seed pit will certainly beget peach and apple trees, but that is the end of the likeness. The passengers on the Cumberland Valley R.R. who tossed apple cores and peach seeds from the window of the car did not plant the superior fruit they ate, and would not have recognized in the tree fruiting this autumn any resemblance to its parent they unintentionally planted from.

All fruits and cultivated plants would go back to "barbarism," if I may be allowed the term, in a very short time, if they had the chance. Every one who knows anything of gardening is aware of the unreliability of the plants that "come up of themselves" in the spring, and how soon they terminate in utter worthlessness.

One great point gained in putting questions to Nature is in having correct ideas of her general manner of working. The primitive condition of all the plants in cultivation and animals under domestication is much, very much lower than we have them about us; and when Nature is left alone, she takes her children to her humble home.

During a recent visit, on school bus iness, to the southern part of the state, it became necessary for me to cross the mountains several times; and on the mountain side I noticed in one place where an old orchard of seedlings had been planted right in what had once been a clearing, but now is full of forest trees; the house had been burned years ago and the trees took care of themselves. They had reached out, some of them thirty feet without a limb, to form a sickly head, and shed the miserable apples on the mossed rocks for the rabbits and wandering and wandering sheep to eat. The planter has probably gone to his long rest, but he has left a nameless monument of his ignorance of the fact that Nature and he worked differently and she was the stronger. When we plant a tree, we should remember that a good one takes no more room or trouble than a scrubby seedling, and that we should plant the best. The seduction pictures in the agents book are no guide, but a day's ride around the country to see what varieties do well and what fail is really valuable knowledge.

One thing more: When readers ask the names of plants, which some have sent for determination, they must send the flower, as by this part the name is hunted down. It will give me great pleasure to be of any assistance in this way to anyone, and especially so to the youth.

Elderton, Pa.

Unchaste Christian.

Few are aware to what an alarming extent unchaste conversation prevails in the world, especially among the young. Being a teacher, I have had many opportunities of knowing the extent of this evil and of raising my voice against it. I have been shocked at the knowledge of sin manifested, and the obscene language used, by even the smallest children in the common schools.

Many people think it no harm to talk about the sinful deeds and acts committed by their neighbors; and so they get together and talk, and laugh, and joke about those things which Paul says "ought not to be mentioned by those professing godliness.

The mind is the seat of all sin. Keep the mind full of licentious images, and the animal passions gain strength and clamor for indulgence. Impure thoughts lead to impure words, and impure words, to impure acts. No person changes from purity and holiness to depravity, corruption, and crime, in a moment. The work is gradual, and takes time. The mind becomes debased by encouraging the constant presence of low vulgar thoughts, and the sin which was once loathsome becomes pleasant.

No one can take "coals in his bosom and not be burned," no more can an individual associate with the sensualist and not be influenced to all evil. Many virtuous youths have been led into the path of the libertine by indulging in impure conversation. Although at first such conversation shocked the finer sensibilities of their souls and caused a feeling of disgust to creep over them, yet by degrees these feelings wore off, lustful passions took their place, their natures became low and sensual, and ruin of the body and soul was the result.

Human language is not forcible enough to picture the misery, woe, and unhappiness caused by unchaste conversation. It leads to a sin which the Bible rebukes in language of the greatest detestation, and which it frequently and earnestly admonishes men to loathe and abhor.

In this generation, unchastity is the prevailing sin; and those who would be pure must resolutely shut their eyes and close their ears against that knowledge which leaves a stain upon the soul. The only safety for any one is in diligently seeking that wisdom which comes from above, that will destroy all desire for corrupt knowledge, raise men from the lowest depths of sin and degradation, and elevate them to unfading beauty and purity in the paradise of God.—E. H. Morton.

"The joys of religion are the encouragement of youth and the prop of old age. Without them we sicken even in the midst of prosperity; and with them adversity loses all its terrors. They sweeten our slumbers, they soothe our waking hours; at home and abroad, in private and in public, they are our constant companions, our richest treasures. The vigor of youth and the blush of health are transitory blessings, the pride of rank soon wears; and riches make themselves wings and fly away; but the joy of a christian, though it walks upon earth, hides its head in heaven. It is the gift of God; and God alone is able to deprive him of it."—Faber.

What is merely matter of prayer on earth will be entirely matter of praise in heaven.

THE CONSOLIDATION OF THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN AND THE PILGRIM.

To meet the wants of the brotherhood more fully, and to render more efficient service in the advocacy of the truth as it is in Jesus, we have concluded to consolidate the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN and the Pilgrim into one paper; and we design to make that paper about one-fourth larger than either of our present papers. And by concentrating the writing talent that has hitherto been divided between the two papers, and by enlisting new contributors, as we hope to do, and by uniting the labors of the editors of the two papers, we indulge the hope that we shall be able to give our readers a Christian journal that will render satisfaction to them. The two papers, the PRIMI-TIVE CHRISTIAN and the Pilgrim, which are to be consolidated into one, have apparently met with a very general favor among our brethren, and have been read by persons both in the church and out of it, with edification and profit. And the advantages, some of which have been given above, that the one paper will possess over the two, are such that we feel assured we can promise our patrons a paper that will be superior to those we have been publishing.

The PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN will be the name that our paper will bear, as that expresses the character we shall endeavor to give it, and as it will be the advocate and teacher of the sound doctrine, practical faith, and those gospel principles which constitute the Christian character inculcated in the New Testament, and which our fathers sought to reproduce in the organized form of Christianity which they have given us. Non-resistance, non-conformity to the world, spirituality of mind, self-denial, humility, gentleness, temperance, purity of heart, sanctification of life, and entire devotion and obedience to God, will be among the principles to which prominence will be given.

We will also continue to publish the Young Disciple, a paper for our youth and for our Sabbath-schools. Increased effort will be made to make this paper subsolve the purposes for which it is designed.

The enlargement of our paper, and the improvement we purpose making in it, will add considerably to our expenses.—Will our friends now appreciate our work and sympathize with us in our increased desire to make our paper as useful as possible, and to increase its circulation? We trust they will, and we solicit their hearty co-operation to further and to give success to our enterprise. And knowing, as we do, that the success of any cause depends much upon judicious effort, we hope the friends of consolidation and of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, in its enlarged form, and with its increased facilities for usefulness, will work with zeal and diligence to give it a good circulation for 1877.

SOME REMARKS ON CONSOLIDATION.

Our readers will find from the present number of our paper that the consolidation of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN and the Pilgrim has at length been accomplished. The subject has been talked of at different times, but the way did not seem sufficiently open until lately.—Brethren in the East and in the West have expressed their desire to have the periodical literature of the brotherhood more consolidated. We likewise have thought it desirable, and therefore have consented to it. In doing so, both parties have made a considerable sacrifice of feeling. But thinking we can better promote the cause of Christian truth, both in the church and out of it, by uniting our labors and papers, we sought to come to an agreement of terms, and without much difficulty succeeded.

The press is an important auxiliary to the gospel in promulgating the truth, and an instrument of great power. But it is important that it should be judiciously used, if the power it exerts is exerted for good. And we think a judicious use of the press is adverse to a multiplication of periodicals in a body so larger than our fraternity, and with the literary ability we possess to furnish our paper with sound, pure, instructive, and edifying reading matter. Perhaps there is no body of professing Christians with no more numerical strength than our fraternity possesses, that has so many periodicals as we have, although they all are in advance of us in education, and consequently have more writers among them who are competent to write for the press. At the present time we have three weeklies and two monthlies. The United Brethren, whose number, perhaps, will compare pretty favorably with that of our brotherhood, have but one weekly paper. The Church of God, or Winebrenerians, have but one weekly paper. Their membership is considerably less than ours, but they are working with a good deal of system and energy to increase their number.

Looking, then, at our periodical literature as we have done, we have thought that its character might be improved, and its efficiency increased, by diminishing the number of our periodicals, and have accomplished the union alluded to. We hope the change will not only be satisfactory, but beneficial to all parties concerned.

In the last number of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, Bro. G. Bucher has an article upon the union of our papers, and desires us to make some remarks upon the subject. We hope the foregoing remarks, with what we have done, will be sufficiently explicit to explain our views of consolidation. And we would further say, that if the edification of the church and the promotion of the cause of our holy Christianity, would seem to require a consolidation of all our papers into one, we would favor such a consolidation.

AN APPEAL TO OUR FRIENDS.

We have informed you of the change we have made in regard to the Primitive Christian, in uniting it with the Pilgrim. As elsewhere explained, we purpose to give you a larger paper and a better paper, when we enter upon our next volume. It has been decided to continue the name of Primitive Christian to the paper in its consolidated form. We hope this will be satisfactory to the patrons of the Pilgrim, as we feel assured it will to those of the Primitive Christian. We expect to embody the general character of the two papers in the one we shall continue to publish, but hope to improve it in every respect, in its mechanical, literary, and especially in its Christian character. We shall use our utmost endeavors, and hope we shall meet with the hearty co-operation of all our contributors and correspondents, to clothe the Primitive Christian with, and make it breathe, the meek and gentle spirit that is both the power and ornament of primitive Christianity.

And we hope we shall have the hearty co-operation of all the friends of the two papers. As the editors have cordially united, so we trust that all the subscribers will unite, and work harmoniously to further our enterprise. While we hope our agents will work faithfully, we also hope that each individual subscriber will work, too, and that successfully. And let us not forget that "except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the watchman walketh but in vain." And remembering this, let our enterprise be sanctified by prayer.

TOO LATE.

The expression is in very common use. We hear it spoken by men, women and children, almost everywhere, and under very different circumstances. Although it always means "after the proper time; not in due time," the feelings of the speaker or those awakened in the hearer may be quite different, and, in fact, even opposite. If we are "too late" to realize our desires in relation to anything good or lawful, whatever it may be, we feel disappointed and unhappy, and others will sympathize with us; but if our aims or desires should not be good, then, if we are "too late" to realize them, while we may be sorry, others will rejoice. The burglar arrived "too late" to execute his wicked purposes, and he is grieved at it, but no good person is sorry that he was "too late."

We are receiving letters in almost every mail requesting us to make certain changes in the list of ministers for the Almanac for 1877; but the copy is sent away to the printer, and, although we will do what we can to meet these requests, we fear that many will be disappointed by not receiving it—just a little—"too late." It was this that suggested our subject at this time, which we will now pass on to improve as we may have ability and grace given us.

We have before us a few pages of an essay headed "Too Late," which seems to have been written by some brother in Maryland. Unfortunately a part of the essay and the name of the author are lost. That the whole essay may not be lost, we will here give a part of it:

"Some time ago I received intelligence from Bro. A. C. that I should meet him with others, at an appointed place, to assist in baptizing a sick woman. We met at the place at the appointed time.—There was quite a number gathered at the house of Bro. J. F.—'s to witness the scene; and a very solemn scene it was. The applicant was bowed down in the last stage of consumption. She was truly the picture of death. While we were exercising in reading, singing and praying, she was deeply wrought upon, and every eye in the room was moistened with tears of sympathy. After the services were concluded, we all resorted to the water, the applicant all the while manifesting a spirit of resolution, until she was led in to the water. Then her spiritual and physical strength began to fail, and she cried loudly, 'Take me out, or I will die!' She was admonished to yield herself into the hands of a kind God, but she insisted the more that it could not be accomplished, and consequently she was carried back to the house unbaptized.—Then it was that the solemn words greeted our ears, 'Too late—too late! My God! what shall I do? I have waited too long. Oh! too late—too late! I am lost.' She was taken to her home where she lingered a short time and died. Dear reader, these words have driven terror and anguish to many hearts."

Who can read this sad account and not be moved! Well might the words "Too late," spoken under such circumstances, drive "terror and anguish to the heart. The awful meaning of "Too late," uttered with such irretrievable despair, "the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone" alone can define. May our merciful God and Savior preserve us from ever learning the depth of its bitter signification.

"Too late" implies that there was a time when the object of our desires might have been attained, but through some inadvertency or neglect, the time passed by unheeded and unimproved, and now the thing is impossible—our wishes can never be realized. Salvation was once offered; time and opportunity were once afforded for its acceptance; the way was open, and circumstances were sufficiently favorable; but this sinner was inattentive to the gracious call; that sinner presumed on length of days and a convenient season; another was too busy to give the matter much thought; another was too proud, and could not stoop; while still another was so bound by his sinful and beaming habits, that he could not shake them off; and so on, to the end of the devil's catalogue of inventions. With all of these, and with multitudes of their classes, the favorable time, the gracious call, the happy opportunity have gone, and it is now TOO LATE! How bitter must be the reflections of those who live in Christian lands, and who have been surrounded by Christian influences and privileges, when the awful truth is sealed upon their hearts that their day of grace is past, and that they are lost—forever lost!

Reader, have you made your peace with God? Have you an interest in the atoning blood of the Lamb of God? If death were to meet you now, what would be the sentence of your own heart? Examine yourself, and if all is not well, accept salvation as it is offered, without farther delay, lest you should pass the limit of hope, and in agony of soul cry out, "TOO LATE." B.

OUR PROSPECTUS FOR 1877.

With this number we send out our Prospectus. We try to get them to our agents, but sometimes there are mistakes made. Should any of our agents fail to get a Prospectus, we desire to be informed of it, and we will send one.—Should any get a Prospectus whom it does not suit to act, we request them to give it to some one that will take an interest in working in the cause.

THE NEXT NUMBER.

The next issue (No. 44) will be mailed from Huntingdon, Pa; and as we must move our addressing machine and galleys, and some of our type, &c., there may be a few days' delay. We aim to be on time; but we give this notice, that our readers may know why it is, if the next issue should be a little later than usual. B.

PUBLIC SALE.

We wish to say to our readers, whom it may concern, that, as we have agreed to go with the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN to Huntingdon, Pa., we wish to sell our home at Meyersdale, Pa. Having no time to seek a purchaser, we have concluded to offer it at public outcry, on Wednesday, Oct. 25th, at 2 o'clock, p. m.

SITUATION.—The property is situated near the south end of the Fleigherty bridge, adjoining the old Daniel Buechly stand, of which it is a part.

DESCRIPTION.—The lot fronts on Buechly street 253 feet, extending from First street to Second, and contains about 87 square rods. The house is a two-story frame, with a one-story addition, containing seven rooms. There is a good cellar under the main part; and spring water from a hydrant in the kitchen. There are a number of fruit trees of choice fruit, and some other improvements on the lot.

Terms will be equitable, and will be made known on the day of sale.

The PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN building will also be offered at the same time.

Miscellaneous.

A Marked Philanthropist.

Last week a notable man passed away. A notable man, we say, for James Lick had not only the industry, the economy and the business foresight necessary to accumulate his large fortune, but the wisdom, the generosity, the public spirit which prompted him to dispose of that fortune well. Many have amassed as much; few have given as largely and as wisely.

Mr. Lick was what is styled a self made man. He was born in Pennsylvania in 1796, and had only such educational advantages as could be obtained in the common schools at that time. Taught the trade of a cabinet maker, while a mere lad he obtained a reputation as a careful and a trustworthy workman. At twenty-eight years of age he went to South America, and engaged in the manufacture of pianos. In 1857 he went to San Francisco, having a capital of $40,000—quite a little fortune in those days. The gold fever which broke out soon after did not affect him, but it made his fortune. Foreseeing the future greatness of San Francisco, he invested every dollar he could command in real estate. The vast streams of population that soon flowed in created a demand for this property, and in a few years he was a millionaire. There is a singular correspondence between his career and that of John Jacob Astor. Both began at the bottom of the ladder. Both were over forty years old before they had gained more than a competence. Both made their fortunes by shrewd, far-seeing speculations in real estate. Both died possessed of great wealth. Here the parallel ends, Astor was grasping, selfish, penurious, mean. Lick has shown himself generous, benevolent, philanthropic—another Peabody.

A few years ago Mr. Lick ceded the bulk of his property to seven trustees, to be used for benevolent and scientific purposes. Among the items of this munificent project were $700,000 for an Observatory, $300,000 to endow the California School of Mechanical Arts, $150,000 for building and maintaining public baths in San Francisco, and numerous smaller sums for various objects. The total value of this trust fund is estimated at over $5,000,000.

Some trouble has grown out of the management of this fund. Mr. Lick suggested various changes in the details of the plans, but without altering his intention, so far as is known, with regard to the main points. Some differences of opinion arose between him and the trustees, and the latter resigned their trust, with the exception of John Lick, Esq., his son. It is feared from the action of Mr. Lick's son, that he intends to contest the matter in the courts, and try to set aside his father's deed of gift. It is to be hoped that such a contest should have but one issue. The breaking of wills has already gone so far that no rich man can die feeling certain that his property will be disposed of according to his wishes. This has tempted men of wealth to become their own executors, and divided their property during their lifetime. But if a deed given years before a man's death, when his sanity was unquestioned, should be set aside, in what possible way can any man hope to bestow his property upon benevolent and scientific objects?

As to the religious opinions of Mr. Lick we know nothing. We have heard that he was not a Christian man. We only know that he has acted as if he had felt himself to be a steward of the Lord. He has used the wealth entrusted to him not for himself or for his family, but for the common weal of his fellowmen. Many a professed follower of Christ might take a lesson from the life of this man who made no such profession.—Examiner and Chronicle.

Wrong and Right Use of Words

Aggravate.—This word should never be employed when used in reference to persons, as it means merely to add weight to, to make an evil more oppressive; injury is aggravated by insult. It is sometimes improperly used in the sense of irritate, as "I was much aggravated by his conduct."

Balance, in the sense of rest, remainder, residue, remnant, is an abomination. Balance is, metaphorically, the difference between two sides of an account,—the amount necessary to make one equal to the other.

Bountiful is applicable only to persons. A giver may be bountiful, but his gift cannot; it should be called plentiful or large. "A bountiful slice" is abused.

Fetch expresses a double motion,—first from and then toward the speaker; it is equivalent to "go and bring," and ought not to be understood in the sense of "bring" alone.

Calculate, besides its sectional misuse for think or suppose, is sometimes, in the particular form calculated, put for likely or apt: "That nomination is calculated (designed) to do no such thing, though it may be likely to."

Citizen should not be used except when the possession of political rights is meant to be implied. Newspaper reporters have a bad habit of bringing it out on all occasions, when "person," "man" would express their meaning better.

Couple applies to two things that are bound together or united in some way. "A couple of apples" is incorrect; two apples is what is meant.

Dirt means filth, and is not synonymous with earth or soil; yet people sometimes speak of a dirt road, or of packing dirt around the roots of trees they are setting. They mean earth.

Execute—When a murderer is hanged, his sentence is executed, the man is not. A man can not be executed,—that is, followed out or performed. And we say, a culprit is hanged, while pictures are hung.

Expect looks always to the future. You can not expect that any thing has happened, but only that it will happen.

Get means to obtain, not to possess. "He has got all the numbers of the newspaper;" "Have you got good molasses?" "They have got bad manners?" Why will people persist in introducing the word in such sentences as these, where it is evidently superfluous?

Help Meet—An absurd use of these two words, as if they together were the name of one thing—a wife—is too common. The sentence in Genesis is, "I will make him an help meet for him;" that is, a help fit for him. There is no such word as helpmeet.

Love rules the heart, not the stomach. You love your wife, or ought to; but favorite articles of food you like.—Pennman's Gazette.

On the 21st of May next year the pope will reach the fiftieth anniversary of his consecration as bishop. Offerings of money and other testimonials to his Holiness are invited from all parts of the world.

THIRTEEN students from Yale Seminary, three from Hartford, and two from Chicago, have spent their vacations in Nebraska supplying vacant churches, assisting overworked pastors, and working up new fields.

A YOUNG lady who recently renounced Romanism, being told that as she was born in the Catholic Church, she ought to die in it, promptly replied, "I was born in sin, but I have made up my mind not to die in it."

SOME silver coins, shekel and half-shekel, were lately found at Jerusalem, with the budding rod on one side and a cup of manna on the other. The date shows them to be about two thousand and twenty years old—being made 144 years B. C.

THE Hebrew population of Jerusalem is probably double what it was ten years ago, owing to the unprecedented return of the Jews to Palestine, especially from Russia. The Jews, instead of being confined to the poorest parts of the city, now occupy all parts.

"ONE Toe wanting," says the New York Observer, in referring to a lecture by the evolutionist, in that city, "and if Prof. Huxley could have found an ancient horse with one more, his hobby would have been complete. 'Tis ever thus in life. Truth is always perfect; error lacks something to make it complete, and when it is almost proved, there is always at least "one toe wanting."

This Very Day.

Reader, have you ever soberly considered that each day, as it arrives, may be your last? Have you ever seriously reflected that your eternal doom, as regards heaven or hell, may hang upon this very day in which you are reading these lines? To-day you are in the land of the living; you know not where you will be to-morrow.

"O God! on what a slender thread Hang everlasting things!"

God gives you to-day to think of the concerns of your soul. He has not promised to give you to-morrow. You cannot tell whether you will see to-morrow. You cannot be certain that to-morrow will be yours. But it is certain that a day is coming which will be your last day on earth, and your first day in eternity.

Reader, there is another solemn consideration which we must bring before you: God calls on you to turn to him; he calls on you to turn to the Lord Jesus Christ and be saved; he has warned you; he warns you by the very words which you are reading. He says, "To-day, if you will hear his voice, harden not your hearts." He says again, "This is the day of salvation." To-morrow may be to you the day of judgment. If it should prove so, what answer can you give for neglecting so great salvation? God calls on you to "acquaint yourself with him, and be at peace." He calls on you now—this very day. Oh, sinner! how will you act? Will you listen to his message? will you hearken to his words? or will you, when you have read these lines, go your way, and think no more about them?

Reader, we address you as one of that thoughtless throng that seldom think of their souls, and seem to care not how soon destruction may overwhelm them. Are you one of that number. If it be so, what can you think of your conduct? We appeal to you, what would you think of a man who remains at ease over a magazine of gunpowder, although he is warned to run for his life, and is told that the fuse is already fired, and that in a few moments, if he remains where he is, he must be blown to pieces, or be buried amidst the universal ruin? What would you think of such an one? Would you not charge him with folly, madness, infatuation? Is your conduct, then, more rational? You may be this very moment on the brink of eternal destruction, and yet you refuse to fly for safety. Reader, as the Lord liveth and as thy soul liveth, there may be but "a step between thee and death." Pause, then, I pray you, and ponder the path you are pursuing.—You must acknowledge your soul to be worth more to you than ten thousand worlds; and yet will you turn a deaf ear to that tender voice of divine compassion which entreats you to flee to the only refuge from destruction? Does not this extraordinary indifference prove that you care neither for your soul, nor for God, who addresses you? And what are you pursuing? on what are you spending all your time and energies? Is it not on things that on your dying bed will appear but trifles? Suppose you were to accomplish all your plans, and to obtain everything on which your heart is set—what will be the value of them when you come to die? How soon that may be you know not; it may be to-day.

Are you bent upon that desperate resolve to give up God until you must give up everything else? Is it your present thought that when you can think of nothing else, you will then begin to think of him? Put your conduct into words (for actions speak as well as words): You deliberately reject him; you prefer every thing else to him; you say by your actions, "Depart from me, for I desire not the knowledge of thy ways." (Job xxi. 14.)

Well, then his words to you may be like these: "Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart obey thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes; but know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment." Eccl. xi. 9.

Let us remind you, dear reader, it is not only the authority of God which you are rejecting; not merely his warnings and threatenings you are despising; but you are also making light of his invitations and promises. God sees you in your lost condition, and he entreats you to return to him. He is saying, "Come now, and let us reason together saith the Lord: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."—Isa. i. 18. "As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way and live." Ezek. xxxiii. 11.

You hear these words of love and tenderness. How will you treat them?—Will you listen to them and then go your way as though God had never spoken. Will you not turn even now, this very day, to the Lord Jesus Christ and be saved? Oh, listen again to that word, "Let the wicked forsake his way and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return to the Lord and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon." (Isa. lv. 7)—"For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul? For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works." (Matt. xvi. 26, 27. ELI YOUNG.

Sunday School Conference.

Report of the Conference of Sunday-school Workers of the Northern District of Indiana, held by the Brethren at their church near Wawaka, Noble county, Indiana, September 15th, 1876.

Inasmuch as it is necessary to have a form to organize, the following preamble, being amended, was adopted:

PREAMBLE AND RESOLUTION.

Inasmuch as the Sunday-school workers of Northern Indiana assembled, have no regular form of organizing, holding, and conducting Sunday schools, and believing such a move is highly necessary, therefore, Resolved, That we, the Sunday-school workers, organize a conference for the Northern District of Indiana, for the purpose of meeting from time to time, to establish a good and wholesome order and government of the same, and for self-improvement in the Sunday-school work. The meeting then proceeded to further organize by permanently electing the following officers: Elder Jacob Berkey, superintendent; Elder Adam Appelmann, assistant superintendent; Bro. Wm. G. Cook, Secretary; Bro. John Sturzia, assistant secretary; Bro. Isaac L. Berkey, corresponding secretary; Bro. Abraham Huff, treasurer, and Bro. Adam Appelmann to gather statistical strength of Sunday-schools among the Brethren. A committee of three brethren was appointed by the conference to draft a form of resolutions to be subject to adoption, or amendment, or disapproval by the conference. The committee is composed of the following brethren: Jesse Calvert, Jacob Berkey, and Adam Appelmann.

Adjourned to partake of some refreshments.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The meeting was called to order by the Superintendent. A hymn was sung, and the report of the committee called for, after which the chairman proceeded to read the following which stands as amended and adopted by the conference without a dissenting voice:

RESOLUTIONS FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF OUR SABBATH SCHOOLS.

Sec. 1. Resolved, That each school shall elect its own officers, electing only members of the German Baptist church.

Sec. 2. Every school shall be opened by singing some appropriate and sacred piece of music out of the Brethren's hymn book and prayer. After prayer the Superintendent shall read out of the Bible. The singing, except opening exercise, may be out of any songster the school may choose to select, and as much as they deem necessary.

Sec. 3. The school shall be formed into classes, and read out of the Bible or New Testament, reading the book through when commenced.

Sec. 4. Each teacher shall ask questions upon the Scripture read that day. There may also be general questions asked by the school.

Sec. 5. The school shall be closed by singing and prayer. If before preaching prayer may be dispensed with at the close of the school.

Sec. 6. The doctrine of the Bible shall be defended by the teachers of the schools, and that in its primitive purity, against all opposition.

Sec. 7. The scholars shall not use the lesson leaves published by the different denominations in our country.

Sec. 8. None but our own papers or books shall be circulated in our schools.

Sec. 9. That we take no part in picnics or Sabbath school celebrations, or in getting up banners, &c., but oppose them all.

Sec. 10. That we maintain in Sabbath-school our humble, plain character both in manners and in dress, as well as in the church.

Sec. 11. Our objects shall be to teach and learn the Scriptures and instill in the minds of the young the pure principles of Christ and his religion.

Sec. 12. We believe it to be the duty of every member of the church to take an active part in the Sabbath-school work and thereby encourage it.

Sec. 13. Resolved, That we, the members and Sunday-school workers in conference assembled, use our influence to further the cause of Sunday-schools, and bring them into as great a prominence among the brethren as possible upon these principles by us adopted.

The following propositions were then submitted and adopted for discussion at our next session.

Prop. I. What is the duty of the church toward Sabbath schools? Opening address by Dr. P. R. Wrightsman.

Prop. II. Can the church and the cause of Christ be benefited by the Sunday-school? Opening address by Adam Appelman.

Prop. III. What has been the benefit of Sunday schools to the world and to our church? Opening address by Davis Younce.

Prop. IV. How shall we secure the interest and co-operation of the members of the church in behalf of the Sunday-schools? Opening address by Jesse Calvert.

Prop. V. How can we best interest the school in the study of the Scripture?—Opening address by Isaac L. Berkeley.

Decided to hold the next conference the second Saturday in February, 1877, in the Rock Run district, Elkhart Co., Ind., at their church near Bro. Berkeley's. Notice will be given by the brethren where to stop off, &c., or by addressing Bro. Isaac L. Berkeley, Gosport, Ind., our corresponding secretary. All communications of a statistical form should be addressed to Elder Adam Appelman, Plymouth, Ind. Resolved, that these proceedings be published in the Pilgrim and Primitive Christian. There being no further business before the conference, we adjourned by singing hymn 253, and prayer by Bro. Leopold.

WM. G. COOK, Secretary,
JOHN STUENIGIS, Ass't Sec'y.

Our Lovefeast.

In accordance with previous announcement, the brethren, sisters, and friends convened on the 4th inst., at the meeting-house in the Eagle Creek church, Hancock Co., Ohio, at 10 o'clock a. m. The ministers preached on the occasion were Elders J. P. Ebersole, Dan'l. Brower, David Early, Levi Dickey, and others. The room was filled to its seating capacity, when services were introduced by Eld. Brower, after which Bro. Early favored us with an elaborate discourse, treating upon purity of thought and action with regard to Christian workfulness and resignation, from 1st Peter 2: 1, 2.

After services and the satisfaction of an hospitable repast, a special labor devolved upon the elders present. At the opening of the evening services, Bro. S. T. Bosserman, who, but a few years since was called to the ministry, having during this time shown himself approved and as being a successful collaborer in the ministration of his sacred calling, was forwarded to the second degree, in which we hope and trust, by the prayers of the church and his own earnest endeavors, his labors and general deportment may meet the appropriation of the Fountain of all goodness. A choice also having been held for deacon, the "chosen vessel,"

J. R. Spacht, he was accordingly installed, and our desire and prayer to God is, that he may by the grace of him who helpeth in every time of need, show unto the church that he was chosen by "the spirit which worketh mightily in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure."

The evening services were ably conducted, Elders Brower and Ebersole officiating. Our enjoyment, and we believe that of all the vast number of brethren and sisters seated around those tables, was truly great. It was a rich feast for the soul—a commingling with the spirits of saints. Notwithstanding the room's being filled to its utmost capacity, good order was maintained. The solemnity of the occasion apparently seemed to preclude the breast of many an anxiously beholding spectator; and we saw some weeping! Oh, may that weeping not be for naught, for Jesus when uprising on the cross said, "Weep not for me, but for yourselves." Having partaken of the fruit of the wine, "we sang a hymn and went out."

The next day at 10 a. m. we met again for services, and our beloved Bishop J. P. Ebersole addressed us, from the words, "If ye then be risen with Christ," &c., Col 3: 1, 2, 3, dealing out bountifully of that "heavenly manna," admonishing us so ardently, "to continue in the faith once delivered unto the saints," that we believe every heart was touched, and we all most assuredly felt that during our session of meetings "we were sitting in heavenly places in Christ Jesus," who agonized for us, and suffered even the death of the cross" that we might be redeemed from sin, and restored to the favor and friendship of our Creator. May we then consider well the earnest appeals and advice unto us by our hoary-headed fathers in Israel, who have fought so valiantly for our Master for many years, and are now about ready to be offered to pass over into the celestial mansions to reap the riches of their reward.

LETTER FROM BROTHER HANSEN.

DENMARK, July 26, 1876.

M. M. ESHELMAN: Beloved Brother:—Grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ, be to you and all yours.

I will let you know that I am alone these times, using the time for reading and prayer and writing. And think in these times what our Lord and Master said, Matth. x. 25. It is enough that we be like him; and oh! how I see it is truth that Paul wrote to Timothy (2 Tim. iii. 12).

Our dear Savior, Jesus Christ, commendeth us to rejoice, and be exceeding glad, because we have a great reward in heaven, if we for Christ's sake shall be reviled, persecuted, and spoken all manner of evil against. For even so persecuted they the prophets, the apostles, and the disciples of Christ which were before us. It is also enough to us that we be as our Master in this world, for all so to be like him will he come again, and then be with him forever, as he said, "Where I am, there ye shall be also."

Oh! I think and see in these times much what Jesus said; "I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves; be ye therefore wise as serpents and harmless as doves," and this, too, I have ever found to be so. "And ye shall be brought before governors and kings for my sake, for a testimony against them and the Gentiles." But oh! also, there our Father is in us by his Spirit, for Christ says: "When they deliver you up, take no thought how or what ye shall speak, for it shall be given you in the same hour what ye shall speak, for it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father that speaketh in you." "And henceforth fear not them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul, but rather fear him which is able to kill both soul and body in hell." To-day I am for the same cause as it used to be; but let us all be faithful and not faint in the good work. Let us under all our circumstances, pray for one another, and faithfully go on working for the salvation of souls, not expecting any other treatment than that our Lord and Master said would come upon those who would take up their cross and follow him. He says, "He that taketh not his cross and followeth not after me is not worthy of me." "He that findeth his life shall lose it, but he that loseth his life shall find it again." But oh! that we shall know that we are in him when we follow him, doing his will and keeping his commandments; in all we are assured, and all things shall work together for our good, because we love God our Father and Jesus our Savior, and follow our Comforter, which teaches us to do and follow all things whatsoever is commanded by Christ in the Holy Bible.

And we are sure that our Father always watches us, for he says that the very hairs of our head are numbered, let us therefore fear not. Dear brother and sister let us still go forth gathering souls for everlasting life, by going and teaching all nations. Always remembering that whosoever shall confess Christ before me, him will Christ confess before his Father which is in heaven. But whosoever shall deny Christ before men, him will Christ deny before his Father and the holy angels.

Oh! how valuable is one soul, when shall meet before God's throne in heaven, when the holy angels shall rejoice more over one soul that returneth, than over ninety nine that need no repentance. If we do suffer a little in these last days, in the short time we have left—if we only gain souls for everlasting salvation, then all our suffering, prayer, and tears, and a faithful work is well paid for, not as our own, but as the Lord's, we being but weak tools in the hand of God.

Dear brethren and sisters pray for us, that the good work may have good success. Pray for me—remember how the church prayed for Peter while King Herod kept him in prison, and was answered. Our best wishes to you all.

Call for a Sabbath-school Convention

To the brethren of N. E. Ohio, Greeting: Being assembled with the brethren at Bristolville, in Trumbull Co., at their communion meeting on the 8th of October, 1876, a number of brethren being present from adjoining churches, we then and there by unanimous voice of all the members present, agreed to issue the following call for a

SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONVENTION,

to meet at the Reading meeting house in the Sandy church, Columbiana county, Ohio, on the 16th day of November, 1876, to open at 10 o'clock. All the brethren are cordially invited, and the Sandy church has promised us a cordial welcome. It is requested that each school in the district of N. E. Ohio send at least one delegate with report of their school during the past summer.—And in the fear of the great Teacher, let us consider what is the most approved manner of conducting Sabbath school according to the gospel, and the order of the church. Members coming from the West will stop at Hamworth on the Cleveland and Pittsburgh railroad, and those from the East at Beloit, on the P. F. W. and C. railroad, where they will be met with conveyance, by giving timely notice to Eld. Lewis Glass, North Georgetown, Columbiana county, Ohio. Preaching is to continue over Sabbath, the 16th:

P. J. BROWN, Clerk, pro tem.
Congreg. s. Ohio.

At the Centennial.

In reading the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN I came across an article written by Bro. D. P. Saylor, wherein he closes with an admonition not to attend places of worldly amusement, with special reference to the Centennial.

This, no doubt, was the cause of my attending. For as I lay on my bed I had a "dream which was not all a dream." I started for the Centennial and took my hired boy and little girl along. You see this helped me as an excuse for myself. (I wanted to show it to the children.) Everything passed off pleasantly. I arrived on the grounds and entered the Main Building. You see I did not expect to meet Brethren there; but still I was on the lookout lest some would be there who knew me and would carry home the news. "Why, Bro. Bucher was at the Centennial." I passed through the Main Building and saw the wonders. Next I went to the Horticultural Hall; from there to Machinery Hall, where I saw the monster engine, &c.; but all the while I felt I was on strange ground, and my conscience was not quiet. Amid the pleasures, the crowd, and the tumult, that "still, small voice" said, "This is no place for you."

What still more added to my remorse, I met a person there who attends our meetings at home, and who knew that the order of the Brethren at A. M. was not to attend. I tried to evade his glance, but he knew me, and commenced a conversation; but I moved on. All my pleasure was gone. This man would go home and tell the other brethren that he saw me at the Centennial. In short, I was found out, and would be brought to account for my behavior.

I tried to form excuses; but as soon as they came conscience told me, "The brethren will not believe you." I was tumbling on my bed in a troubled sleep, till at last I awoke, and lo,—it was a dream!

And I was glad; yea, thankful, that my brethren need not suffer because I was disobedient; and still more thankful that I had the trouble off my mind of defending my attendance at the World's Fair.

If any brethren think to attend, my dream may be a lesson for them; and if any have attended, they will find that my "dream was not all a dream."

UNION DEPOSIT, PENN'A, }
July 22nd, 1876. }

Bro. Daniel Speicher and Family, of Lester Center, Iowa:

A precious letter is yours of the 11th inst. It stirred the fountain of my heart. Oh, that I were worthy of the love and sympathy you so touchingly express. I am only a poor sinner, hoping for mercy and eternal life through Christ Jesus—"There is no condemnation to them which walk after the Spirit;" but this does not always secure us against the sense of condemnation. Many walk securely as to feeling, who do not walk safely as to fact; and vice versa. Many are ready to burst with hallelujahs, who are just as ready to burst with spleen and bile. Many whose phylacteries are broadcast, and whose bells tingle the loudest, have their fingers deeper in their neighbor's pockets than in Christ's wounds.—It is being, not feeling or seeming, that brings in the impuration of the everlasting righteousness of God.

Your present, contributed by the whole family, I could not accept under any consideration, save the one you so earnestly urge. You press its acceptance for "humanity's sake," for "love's sake," for "Christ's sake." For so great a plea, I will. But are you not more in need of it than I? I would grieve to think you curtailed your comforts to increase mine. But sanctified love has a mighty will.—Being in God's character, it determines with God's will. I know to what self-sacrifice the love of Christ constrains the saint. One of the sweetest luxuries of an heir of grace is to make heavy costs for the Beloved. In John iii. 16, and Matt. x. 8, is the law of love objectively. In Rom. ix. 3, and 2 Cor. xii. 15, is the same law subjectively. Love must live on benefactions. God himself must have opportunity to pour himself out on some needy race. A new-born soul can no more be kept from sacrifice, than a new-born babe from breathing. God begets no niggards. They are the devil's progeny. When the lightning-eyed, star-wielding, gold-girdled, brazen-footed God man gets his key into the heart, it unlocks hand and purse for the relief of want, and the advancement of Jehovah's interests. As soon as selfishness is dead in the church, Christ's travail will be accomplished, and he will enjoy his universal heir-ship. Heb. 1:2. The sum and essence of religion is right giving. "As God has prospered him" 1 Cor. xvi. 2. Here is the measure. "God loveth a cheerful giver." 2 Cor. ix. 7. Here is the disposition.—"Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth." Matt. vi. 3. Here is the manner. These three constitute God's ordinance of sacrifice. It is not attained by gold speculation and a nice distribution of dollar and cents. The apostles tried that and were rebuked. Matt. xxvi. 10. Mary's love entered deeper into the mind and purpose of God without knowing it, than the money-calculating religion of the male disciples. When treasure is to be poured out on the feet of Jesus, how many Iscariots hoarsely cry, "to what purpose is this waste?" A most blessed thing it is to have the life so "hid with Christ in God," that we can come "aforehand" and anoint him for his future and ours. Mark xiv. 8. This is the sweetest of all privileges, and the highest of all attainments. All artificial, flesh-pleasing, passion-feeding habits must go under the nail and hammer before we can break the "alabaster box of ointment of spikenard, very precious." What cannot survive the Cross can never reach Heaven. Whatever must shrink from the Cross to live, must live in "everlasting fire with the devil and his angels."—WHO IS DEAD WITH CHRIST? AND WHO RISEN?

C. H. BALSBAUGH.

Paint Creek, Kansas.

By the request of brethren I will give a short sketch of our council and communion meeting. The Southern District of Kansas convened in the Paint Creek church in council on the 6th day of Oct., 1876, and carried on the business of the church in a manner worthy of the name of the Church of the Brethren: There was the best of feeling manifested among the children of our Heavenly Father, and all business matters were satisfactorily disposed of. There were many members present from a distance, among whom were John Harshey, Addison W. Baker, Samuel Chick, and William Harvey, of Missouri, and Daniel Burnhart, Jacob Buck, James E. Hilkey, Jesse Stulebaker, George Myers, Jacob Krain, Sidney Hodgden, brother Flack, Christopher Fory, Emanuel Miller, A. C. Numer, W. W. Rowland, and the writer, of Kansas. There was a choice held for deacons, and the lot fell on brethren M. D. Watson and Joseph Ruble.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all milk, and we could not insert verses with all.

In Dunkirk, O., on the 21st inst., MERRA BELL, infant daughter of Bro. S. and E. Mueser, aged 18 days. Funeral discourse by the writer, from "The child is not, and I, whither shall I go." Gen. xxxviii: 30.

S. T. BOSSERMAN.

On the 16th of Aug., 1876, in upper Deercreek church, Cass Co., Ind., Bro. EMANUEL MILLER, aged 62 years. He was a member of the church for many years. Disease, inflammation of the bowels. Funeral services by Abraham Rinehart and Jacob Cripe, from 1st Cor. xv. 49-53, to a very attentive congregation.

W. S. TONEY.

In the Sugar Creek church, Sangamon Co., Ill., Oct. 5th, 1876, of Diptheria, FANNY, daughter of Bro. Henry and sister Eliza Harney, formerly of Lancaster Co., Pa., aged 3 years 9 months 19 days. Funeral occasion improved on the 7th by Bro. John Brubaker and others, from Matth. xviii. 3. A. L. BOWMAN.

In the Bango district, Elkhart County, Ind., July 13th, brother MARTIN STAUFFER (formerly from Chippewa Church, Wayne County, Ohio), aged 74 years 4 months and 26 days. Services by Joel Shively and J. Burkholder, from Numbers xxiii. 10.

Al. o, August 9th, our old friend, ELI JOHNSON, aged 77 years. Services by Joel Shively and the writer, from Isaiah xxviii. 1.

Also, August 24th, brother ELIAS EHRET, aged 68 years and 8 days. He was a consistent member of the Church about seventeen years. He was ready to go at the Master's call, but at the same time he had a desire to do what he could so long as he was with us; he was anointed; he also had a little communion meeting a few days before he closed his eyes in death which was refreshing to his soul. We trust our loss is his eternal gain. Services by Andrew Bigler, Joel Shively and the writer, from 1 John xi. 25. J6 JOHN METZLER

THE LUNGS!

CONSUMPTION!

This distressing and dangerous complaint and its precocious symptoms, neglected cough, night sweats, hoarseness, wasting flesh—permanently cured by DR. SWAYNE'S COMPOUND SYRUP OF WILD CHERRY.

Bronchitis—a precursor of Pulmonary Consumption, is characterized by catarrh, or inflammation of the mucous membrane of the air passages, with cough and expectoration, short breath, hoarseness, pains in the chest. For all bronchial affections, sore throat, loss of voice, coughs,

DR SWAYNE'S COMPOUND SYRUP OF WILD CHERRY IS A SOVEREIGN REMEDY.

Hemorrhage or Spitting of Blood, may proceed from the larynx, trachea, bronchia or lungs, and arises from various causes, as undue physical exertion, plethora or fullness of the vessels, weak lungs, overstraining of the voice, suppressed evacuation, obstruction of the spleen or liver, &c.

Dr. Swayne's Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry strikes at the root of disease by purifying the blood, restoring the liver and kidneys to a healthy action, invigorating the aëreous system.

The only standard remedy for hemorrhage, bronchial and all pulmonary complaints. Consumptives and those predisposed to weak lungs should not fail to use this great vegetable remedy.

Its marvelous power, not only over consumption, but over every chronic disease where a gradual alterative action is needed. Under its use the cough is loosened, the night sweats diminished, the pain subsides, the pulse returns to its natural standard, the stomach is improved in its power to digest and assimilate food, and every organ has a purer and better quality of blood supplied to it out of which new recreative and plastic material is made. Price one dollar. Six bottles $5. If your druggist or storekeeper has not got it, we will forward half dozen to any address on receipt of price, freight pre paid.

Should the bowels be costive, or headache accompany your disease, the patient should procure a box of

DR. SWAYNE'S TAR PILLS.

Take first a few doses of pills and follow with Swayne's Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry. The Pills will eradicate the bowels, which is of the first importance, relieve the congested liver, purify the blood, strengthen the nerves, improve the appetite and remove all biliousness. They are purely vegetable and act specifically on the liver as Blue Mass or Calomel, without any bad results from taking. Price 25 cents 5 boxes $1. Sent by mail on receipt of price.

Prepared only by DR. SWAYNE & SON, 330 N. Sixth Street, Philadelphia. SOLD BY ALL PROMINENT DRUGGISTS.

ITCHING PILES! PILES, PILES, ITCHING PILES! Positively cured by the use of SWAYNE'S OINTMENT.

HOME TESTIMONY. I was sorely afflicted with one of the most distressing of all diseases, Puritus or Purigo, or more commonly known as itching Piles. The itching at times was almost intolerable, increased by scratching and not unfrequently becoming quite sore. I bought a box of Swayne's Ointment; its use gave quick relief, and in a short time made a perfect cure. I can now sleep undisturbed, and I would advise all who are suffering with this distressing complaint to procure Swayne's Ointment at once. I had tried prescriptions almost innumerable, without finding any permanent relief.

OCTOBER.

Through golden gates of leaves, through columns gray
Of elms and maples old, whose bows enlance
In bright cathedral branches overhead, Enwreathed with scarlet vines, through bosky tufts
Of underbrush, and willows still so green
Along the hidden brooks, they seem to hold
The summer snared, nor heed the threat'ning frost,
The calm October days pass one by one,
Smiling in rosy sunsets, ere they flit
Forever from the earth. How silently
They march, timed to the cricket's ceaseless chirp
Through the still noon, while tall flowers
mark their path,
Blue encory, purple asters, golden rod,
Wild yellow stars and lovely cardinal flowers,
Whose crimson petals cheer the sluggish streams.
A clear and wholesome spirit in the air
Touches the earth and all earth's greenest robes
With change so gradual we feel no loss
Of life, but only mellow, richer hues,
And music more pathetic, as the wind
Harps through the woods, and red and yellow leaves
Flutter to earth and whirl in huddled heaps.
So may our lives—their sap withdrawn—
After their long, still summers, tossed, perchance,
At times, by thunder-gusts or drenched-in rains
Of tears, pass peacefully, complete in years,
And in that wisdom years alone can bring;
And, having well fulfilled their allotted work,
Sink to their rest—or to their life beyond!

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Who are the Weak and Who the Strong?

BY J. S. FLOYD.

Suicides are becoming of such common occurrence that we are inclined to make the inquiry, Why is it that so many, even in apparent good circumstances, will yield to this growing weakness of mind? for we cannot believe it other than a want of moral strength and fortitude that impels the suicidal victim to plunge so abruptly into the presence of his God as he is in the realms of futurity. A want of moral courage to battle with the cares of life or disappointments that are so common, induces many to long for death, and often their longings culminate in inviting death in a form horrid or painful.

And this want of courage, he claims, is often the result of having no hope only in the things of this life. When sane individuals seek pleasures and pastimes in the idol mockeries of worldly society and the realities of this life in general, they come eventually to long for something more, and having faith only in things of time and sense; a weariness often overcomes them; and should a reverse of fortune take place, they are too weak to meet the disappointments, or too proud to condescend to a more lowly walk in life. It is weakness in any one to yield to the fascination of a proud and sinful world; to follow in the train of a pleasure-seeking community or be led by them in things that often the conscience revolts at, is an evidence of great weakness. That man is weak who yields to the influence of strong drink and suffers himself to be dragged down to a level with the brute creation. So with the man who indulges in profane words, or is enticed to sacrifice his character and manhood at the shrine of sin and iniquity. Their weakness consists in this: They have no other means of strength only that derived from self, or the arm of flesh. This being the case, it is no marvel why so many tire of life; why so many grow weak and "throw themselves away." Now, who are the strong? Where in all the wide world can such marvels of strength be found as is found in Christians? They are strong because in God they "live and have their being," and God is strength. See the poor, world-despised, oppressed, down-trodden child of God stand up as a monument of strength, that should ever put to shame the veriest infidel on earth. Come what may,—temptations the most enticing, troubles the most vexing, or sorrows the most trying, and in strength the Christian sustains the pressure and is ready to give words of comfort to the weak, to uphold the drooping spirits, and bid them fight on. The Christian can overcome the monster lion Alcohol—the morbid appetite for all things sinful and debasing—and become a greater conqueror than he "that taketh a city," by overcoming his own besetting sins; all which he does through the strength acquired from God.

Nowhere else do we find such revelations of God's strength as are found in the trials of the weak,—that is, the weak in our judgment; yet they are strong in faith, and this is the strength that overcomes all trials, losses, and crosses. The most heroic deeds are those that are marvels of strength in the poor pilgrim who is seeking a better country. This manifest strength of God in the trials of a Christian are evidences in favor of Christianity and the Bible, sufficient to outweigh a thousand times all the arguments in favor of infidelity or opposition to the Bible that have ever been produced. In fact the strength and achievements of the believer in Christ fully show that all opposition to the Bible is sheer nonsense and is weak, very weak.

The man of God stands like the rock in the ocean, firm and immovable, while the billows of life dash all around; and even in death stands on the verge of the grave a monument of strength, ready and prepared to launch away for the other shore.

But alas! how different the unbelieving! There comes a trial, and like the weak child he has not courage to endure the slightest push, so down he goes to fume and fret, or perchance to drown his sorrows in infamy and crime, and thus in his weakness add fuel to the flame that is consuming him. We have heard men boast of their strength, of their knowledge and superior wisdom, so well as to laugh at the Bible and Christians, at their first great trouble toter like a child just beginning to walk,—perfectly crazed at their bereavement, or maddened at their loss, while a Christian called to bear the same trouble would stand strong and firm like a tree shaken in the wind. With the latter in sorrow there is a Comforter not to be found by the former; hence the weakness of him whose strength is self is of false science.

To sum up the whole: The weak are those who are carnally minded, and whose hopes are circumscribed by the confines of this world; while the strong are those who trust in the Lord, and whose aspirations anchor far out in the depths of Eternity!

DARKNESS.

BY DANIEL BRIGHT.

Darkness is the opposite to light; and since "God is Light," all intelligences that are in darkness must consequently, oppose or disobey the great "Father of Light." Darkness is of a dual nature; one a physical darkness or the impenetrability to our natural eyes, and the other, a moral and religious darkness and the obscurity of the future, to our spiritual eyes. God dwelleth in light, that is perfect in holiness and purity, and which is therefore inapproachable to man in his fallen and degraded state. In God there is no "darkness nor shadow of turning." His all-seeing eye, strikes through the shades of night, and should the sun, the moon, and the stars discontinue to send their dazzling rays to our distant earth, and could man sink to the center of this mighty globe, trying to hide from the face of his Maker. Yet would the almighty, with his eyes like a flaming fire, penetrate through this immense bulk of opaque matter, and would try the reins and hearts of the transgressor; and discern the thoughts and interests of the guilty, intended runaway. Since God is the "Father of light," all the light to our natural eyes as well as all the divinely illuminations in our minds and understanding, must necessarily originate in Him; and in God there is no darkness, therefore darkness must originate from some other source. The devil is called the "prince of darkness." Our Savior has said, (John 12: 31), now shall the prince of this world be cast out. i. e. Through the sufferings and death of Jesus, he was conquered, and cast out and banished from heaven, the residence of the holy angels; which glorious victory afterward caused the heavens to be filled with anthems of praise, and songs of gratitude: Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ; for the accuser of our brethren which accused them before God day and night, is cast down. Therefore rejoice, ye heavens and all ye that dwell in them! Wo to the inhabitants of the earth, and of the sea, for the devil comes down unto you, having great wrath, because he knows that he has but a short time. (Rev. 12: 10). And in Luke 22: 53, the Savior tells us that the "prince" with whom he was to go in so deadly a conflict was, "the power of darkness," which proves that the devil is the "prince of darkness," and therefore all the shadows and glooms to our natural eyes, as well as the gross moral and religious darkness, that covers the people, must naturally originate in him. There was a time when there was no darkness in God's vast and mighty empire. The time when the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy. Though millions of worlds were wheeling in their regular orbits, through the immensity of space, causing eclipses; and revolving in their diurnal motions, causing shadows and light, yet all the holy intelligences that then existed have eyes far superior to those of puny man. It is not the least extravagant to affirm that the eyes of seraphs, cherubs, archangels, principalities, thrones, dominions, and powers, are so perfectly holy and pure, that they can pierce through the ecliptic shadow, and penetrate the thickest darkness of a tempestuous midnight's gloom, though they are situated at a distance of millions of miles away from our earth. Man's guardian angel does not only behold him when he is tossed to and fro, on the impetuous ocean in the midst of a tempest in the blackest darkness; or when he, in gloomy and dreary nights, sympathetically watches beside the sick bed of his nearest and dearest friend to him on earth; or when he himself is chained down on the bed of affliction by excruciating pain and weakening disease; or when he is grooping in the gross darkness of immortality and unholiness; but they at all times behold the face of the Almighty Creator of the heavens and the earth. The impregnation of darkness in the prince of darkness, when he was a holy angel, was caused by the creation of man. God said, "let us make man in our image, after our likeness, and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth." This projection of the Almighty, the devil, as a holy angel, could not penetrate. He could not see what the object of the Almighty was, in creating man in His own image. A being holy, pure, and religious, and so highly exalted as to be invested with plenipotentiary authority on this earth—a minute province of the unbounded empire of the Lord omnipotent. He looked upon man and beheld him good, yea very good, to be the God or supreme ruler of this earth, the Almighty is the God and Supreme Ruler of the heaven of heavens; and because he could not patiently wait to behold the salvation of the Lord, darkness seized upon him and darkened the eyes of his understanding. This caused in him a decrease of his love to the Creator and envy and hatred to the newly created intelligence—man.

Being overshadowed by the darkness of envy, he devised a plan to destroy the happiness of man; and by mixing truth with falsehood he finally succeeded in leading man astray, whereupon not only the earth was covered with darkness, and the people with gross darkness, but the devil with all his adherents, was "delivered unto CHAINS of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment." Thus we have traced the origin of darkness, in that angel, who in his fallen state is called the "devil," satan, dragon, and that "old serpent." But of whom Isaiah the prophet figuratively spoke as "Lucifer," which is, "a morning star" the "bright morning star." Thus when the morning stars (indicating more than one) sang together, and the sons of God shouted for joy, he was one or perhaps the chief or prince among them. But we have found, as stated before, that all darkness, both physical and moral, originates in him. For man's eyes, in his primeval state, were surely in a far superior condition to what they are in his fallen state, for he was created in the "light of God," and knew nothing of darkness until satan, through temptation, cast a gloomy shadow upon him. There was no such a thing as physical darkness to him prior to his fall. He could see just as well in the absence of the sun as when he shone. The sun was not made, or caused to emit his illuminating rays on this distant earth, merely to cause man to see. For he is not only the light-giver, but the life-sustainer, and health-invigorator of both the animal and vegetable kingdoms.

According to the authority of the physiologists, man's eyes in our present condition is dark of itself. It can see only, when the light from some other object, reflects its rays upon its retina. And though man's eyes as they were in our present state, is a most wonderful mechanism and a marvelous exquisition of the wisdom and goodness of God, yet, man in his primary state, bearing the image of God, and being ruler of the whole earth, had eyes to a far superior adaptation to what they now are. When he was clothed with the glory of the Lord, there is no doubt but that he was "bright shining as the sun," and consequently was able to see by his own light. But after the transgression, [the "glory of the Lord," the robes of innocence, happiness and beatific bliss, fled from him and vanished out of sight, and lo! darkness in its dual nature seized upon him. And instead of his eyes being illuminated by the holiness of the Lord, they were now opened into a different scene.

By the reflection of the sun's rays, he beheld his nakedness. He saw his vile and mortal body. He knew what he had lost. His robes had fled. He tried to replace it by sewing fig-leaves together and make him an apron. The day began to be cool. The sun sank in the western horizon, and all was dark. Dark without, and gloomy within. O how glad, what joy it must have been to them when the day dawned and the sun rose upon them the first time in their lost and happiness-ruined condition! But days passed by, and night came on, both morally and physically, and darkness grew thicker and thicker until it reached the Epyptian dye, even that it could be felt, and from physical darkness we are not to be delivered until our bodies crumble in the dust, and we are raised in changed immortal and incorruptible bodies, fashioned after Christ's glorious body. But to be redeemed from moral and religious darkness, is not only the blessed prerogative of every human intelligence, but it is also the incumbent duty. It is a privilege, which to neglect to make use of, the merciful Extender will hold every rational being accountable for. The promissory injunction is, "Seek and ye shall find; ask and ye shall receive." As the kind Creator "maketh his sun to rise on the evil as on the good, and sendeth his rain on the unjust as on the just; so in like manner, commandeth he, the Son of righteousness to enlighten the atrocious sinner as well as the yernal moralist, and showers his blessings of forgiveness on all, so much so that when their sins are like scarlet, that they shall be washed white as snow, and though they are like crimson that they are washed white as virgin wool. But this is the condemnation that light came into the world and men still love darkness rather than light. But unto all those who turn from darkness in the fear of God seek divine illuminations, the Son of righteousness has risen, not only to redeem them from darkness, "but with healings under his wings," to heal them of their deadly wounds, received by their falls while groping in the dark, and to save them from the leprous epidemic diseases, infected by its pestilential atmosphere.

Paul, the ambassador of Christ, the Son of righteousness, was sent to open the eyes of the blind, and to convert them from darkness unto God's marvelous light, and from the power of satan unto God. And to be converted from darkness and be brought into the glorious light of the gospel is to be saved indeed. If we are in the light we are in communion with the Holy Trinity, and with all the holy intelligences who dwell in the light, and when we walk in the light, as God is in the light, we have fellowship one with another and the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son cleanseth us from all sin.

If to be saved from darkness, then, is of so vast importance, it becomes each and every one to ask him or herself, am I in the light? And am I completely caved from darkness? Where can I yet be in the dark? And by turning to 1st John 2: 9 we find that he or she who hateth his or her brother is in darkness even until now. But he who loveth his brethren abideth in the light, and is none occasion of stumbling in him. From this we learn that to abide in love is to be in the light, but he that loveth not is in darkness. Love is the first fruit of the spirit, and from love generates joy in the Holy Ghost; peace in God, which is above all understanding; longsuffering under all trials and tribulations; gentleness in all words and action; goodness, universally, faith and assurance in the faith and assurance in our being adopted as children of God; meekness, and temperance; none of these casts a shadow on man's countenance, for they are light. But envy, hatred, and uncleanness from which outgrow all the atrocities which the human family is guilty, overshadow the countenance with a fierce look and a heart-felt gloom. Look at the man whose breast is filled with envy and hatred and behold what a ferocious, dark look is on his face. To be saved from darkness, is to be freed from everything and anything that is inconsistent with love. Love is the fulfillment of the law of God, and the bond of perfection which brings us out of darkness unto God's marvelous light.

SANCTIFICATION.

To say that because one feels joyous and happy, he is sanctified, is like saying that because a street-vender has plenty of apples on his cart, he has an orchard. The happiness and the joy and the legitimate outgrowth of God's will is a thorough submission to him in all things. The fountain of the great question of sanctification has its beginning in John 17: 17—"Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." And all through the law, the prophets and the apostles, we hear the clarion notes ringing out "Obedience is better than sacrifice!"

"If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you," should be the peculiar treasure of every sanctified believer in Christ Jesus. But who possess these soul-charming promises? Where are the justified or even sanctified ones that can claim the promises of Jesus? Few and far between. And why? Because they disregard John 17: 17, and are not sanctified through the truth, neither do they obey his whole gospel. "If by any means that I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead," (Phil. 3: 11), was Paul?

constant and never-ceasing cry to the saints of the first century; and while that cry is echoing upon his lips, we hear him continue to "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Yet who is "thus united"? Who with Paul, and with Peter, and with thousands of ancient worthies, is looking for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body? We are fast approaching the crisis. The Lord's anointed shall descend "with ten thousand of his saints to execute judgment upon all," yet the professed sanctified ones are not looking for the Lord in this age, nor in the next, nor possibly for ten thousand years. "The earth is just in its infancy," say they, "at present, and the Lord would not think of putting a stop to the demonstration of the sciences (falsely so called); and the mighty progress of the race in the development of the arts." No! no! They are going to heaven when they die, and have no particular need of a resurrection, or for the Lord to come.

Vain delusion! The best part of the modern church is asleep on this question. "But ye brethren, are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief. Therefore let us not sleep as do others; but let us watch and be sober; for they that sleep, sleep in the night." The church is fast disintegrating, and sanctification, as a theory, has its admirers and its opposers. The Lord is allowing satan to sift the church as wheat, that the chaff may be thoroughly expunged, and that work is being well done. But what is this blessing; what are its fruits? "That every one should know how to possess his vessel in sanctification * * * * * that no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter." (1 Thess. 4: 4-6) Do we deal honestly with those around us? Are our measures even and our weights fair? Then we are on the road. "Study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your own hands," is another step to this much-prized goal, "that you may walk honestly toward them that are without."

If we lose our friends by death we should not sorrow as those who have no hope. Why? Why, the living shall not go in before the dead, "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive shall be caught up, together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Comforting words. Be sanctified through the truth is my prayer. Amen. L. T. MORRIS.

THE GOLDEN SIDE.

There is many a rest on this road of life,
If we only would stop to take it;
And many a tone from the better land,
If the querulous heart would wake it.

To the sunny soul that is full of hope,
And whose beautiful trust ne'er faileth,
The grass is green and the flowers are bright,
Though the wintry storm prevaileth.

Better to hope, though the clouds hang low,
And to keep the eyes still lifted;
For the sweet blue sky will soon peep through,

When the ominous clouds are rifted.

There was never a night without a day,
Nor an evening without a morning,
And the darkest hour, the proverb goes,
Is the hour before the dawning.

There is many a gem in the path of life,
Which we pass in our idle pleasure,
That is richer far than the jeweled crown,
Or the miser's hoarded treasure.

It may be the love of a little child,
Or a mother's prayer to heaven,
Or only a beggar's grateful thanks
For a cup of water given.

Better to weave in the web of life
A bright and golden filling,
And to do God's will with a ready heart,
And hands that are swift and willing;
Than to snap the delicate eliver threads
Of our curious lves asunder;
And then blame Heaven for the tangled ends,
And sit to grieve and wonder.

—Selected.

For the Primitive Christian,
Christ the Good Shepherd.

BY S. T. BOSSERMAN.

"And I will set up one shepherd over them, and he shall feed them, even my servant David; he shall feed them, and he shall be their shepherd." Ezekiel xxxiv. 23.

If a person should approach us with a message or law and request that we should live in accordance with that law, we would at once ask from whence he had his authority,—from whom have you your commission; and unless we could become fully satisfied of the authenticity of the message we would be loth to obey the mandates of that law. But if we are fully acquainted with the authority or power that issued the message, and learning that there is a penalty attached for the violation of said law, or a reward offered for obedience to the same, there would be a constraint or strong binding force upon us to yield obedience.

Again if the message or law presented would be known to be spurious,—issued by illegal authority,—there could be no restraint resting upon us to pay any attention to it. Thus it would be in all the avocations in life. Were there no legality attached to all laws issued, there would be no obedience of servants to masters, of children to parents, and of citizens to the legislations of their respective states. How soon do the citizens of a country rally in defence of their country when in danger of an invading army. How soon do the people of any country stand firm to its laws and defend the same until they are penniless, or perhaps deprived of life, all from the fact that the prime law making power was properly commissioned and clothed by the proper authority.

Man thus yielding obedience to the civil laws of his country upon those premises, and which only pertain to things of this world, we are at a loss to answer why it is that he is so loth to yield obedience to the laws of the great Shepherd, who came clothed with legal authority from heaven. He was commissioned for the great work by the Lord of lords and King of kings. "I will set up one shepherd over them," says God, in his providence over his flock. The authority, then, for this divine law dates back from all eternity. No need of contesting its validity; it is pure; it is powerful; and it will finally be executed in justice to humanity, with all the force of its law-making head. This good shepherd came with the Spirit of the Lord resting upon him, and was authorized by anointing, to preach the gospel of glad tidings, or the deliverance of his law or message, to fallen humanity. Luke iv. 18.

The evidence of the goodness of our Shepherd is; that with him there is no respecting of persons, and that he will feed his flock and none shall go uncared for, but all shall of the rich provision taste.

There is danger of the shepherds or ministers not feeding their flocks, not placing the food within reach of all, that both old and young alike may be benefited, and under those circumstances there is condemnation resting upon them, and consequently a woe pronounced against them: "Woe be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves! Should not the shepherds feed the flocks?" Ezek. xxxiv. 2. Then as ministers of the gospel, watchmen upon the walls of Zion, let us be careful that we watch with due diligence over the flock that they faint not, on account of undue attention upon our part.

2. His goodness is manifested in the freeness of his grace and in breaking down the middle wall of partition between Jew and Gentile, that all could share in the propitiation offered, irrespective of lineage or nationality; and when the proper time arrived in which the whole race could have access to the Christian religion, the Lord God took the children of Israel from among the heathen and made them (Jew and Gentile) one nation in the land, so they shall be no more two nations but one, and notwithstanding they have sinned, they shall be cleansed; "They shall be my people, and I will be their God." Ezek. xxxvii. 16—25. This shepherd that is "set up,"—that has authority from heaven,—abounds in love, mercy, and goodness, and will feed them and will be to all one common shepherd.

3. The goodness of our shepherd is exemplified in his strength, or power to save. He could do what none else could and was directed in this matter by none, but could measure the waters in the hollow of his hand and mete out heaven with the span, and comprehend the dust of the earth in a measure, weigh mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance. Isa. 40: 10—15. None directed the Spirit; none gave him counsel; but upon acting after God's will he came down from heaven, not to do his own will, but the will of his Father, (John 6: 38, 39) and offered terms of salvation to fallen man,—offered his services as shepherd of the flock, and food for all, that they may partake thereof and grow in the riches of his grace. Oh, the goodness of our shepherd! the mercy of God, in showing his love to sinful man. Though God cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance; though he hates sin, yet he loves the sinner and bids the wanderer to return to the fold of Christ. Our great Shepherd being of the root and the offspring of David (Rev. 22: 16), offers great care for his sheep, so much so, that he declares that his love for his flock is so extensive that he would give his life for them. John 10: 11.

The main advantages the human family receives by heeding the voice of this shepherd is, that in every condition in life they will be cared for, and their wants well provided, and he that "feareth God and worketh righteousness in his heart, will be accepted of him." If we hear his voice and follow him he will give us eternal life, and we shall never perish. John 10: 27, 28. We then shall be safe upon the rock, and "none shall be able to pluck us out of the Father's hand." Oh, the security we have by obeying the voice of our kind Shepherd!

Another advantage we have, who trust in Christ, is, that we shall be made more "honorable than we were despicable," notwithstanding we have dishonored God and have wandered in the paths of sin and filthiness, we shall be exalted, and where we have been put to shame we shall get praise and fame in every land. Zeph. 3: 19, 20.

Again, by heeding the Shepherd's voice, and returning unto him, though we have offended him, he will not cause his anger to fall upon us, for "I am merciful saith the Lord, and I will not keep anger forever." Jer. 3: 12.

Then in view of those advantages, being so much exalted, and free from sin, why not heed his voice? why not follow him in all his divine appointments? why not accept Christ and his doctrine? why be ashamed to own him? for if we are, he will be ashamed of us before his Father which is in heaven. Kind reader, are you out of Christ? are you unreconciled to your great Shepherd? Oh, come to him, for he is the true light, and has his authority from the proper source. Hence no need of enviling; his word is true, and what he has said will come to pass, and whether you believe his word or not, you at one time shall stand before your great Shepherd in judgment. "For we must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." 2 Cor. 5: 10. Paul says, "Knowing the terror of the Lord, we persuade men." Yea, we persuade. Oh, kind reader! we beg you to come and go with us to fight the battles of the Lord. Oh, be reconciled to God, that when "the times of refreshing shall come you may be received into everlasting habitations." May God enable you to acknowledge Christ your shepherd, obey his law that when you come to die you may be received of him in the mansions of eternal felicity.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Insurance.

About twenty years ago there was a young woman under conviction, and wearied in her mind with the burden of her sins. She felt that her condition was not a good one; so she sent for a neighbor who, by the way, was also a preacher of the sprinkling persuasion. In conversation with him about the salvation of her soul, she thought he ought to know what she ought to do, since he was a preacher. And he soon gave her to understand what he wanted her to do—namely; to join his church. Whereupon she told him she feared his sprinkling instead of baptism would not hold out in the end. "O, yes," said he, "it will." He was sure it would. But as she was very reluctant to submit to his sprinkling and join his church, he told her, he would insure sprinkling to hold out. He said he would stand good for all the loss. She then surrendered herself to be sprinkled, and became a member of his church. She is still living, and still dependant on his insurance; but he, the insurer, has gone to judgment, with all that load of responsibility on his shoulders. How could he insure what God does not approve? A momentous undertaking! How will he bear her loss or restore her equivalent? If he falls into condemnation in that great day, what power will he have to help her? It appears that when people will persist in doing wrong, they receive strong delusions, because they love not the truth, but take pleasure in unrighteousness. We are also told that deceivers shall wax worse in deceiving and being deceived. And if it were possible they would deceive the very elect. Listen to the testimony of Shakspeare.

"Oh, but man, proud man,
Most ignorant of what he's most assured,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven,
As make the angels weep."

The Pew System.

Bishop Potter, in a sermon delivered in New York lately, animadverted in severe terms on the pew system so much in vogue in our churches, and claimed that by it religion was degraded and its influence weakened. It is undoubtedly true that the system produces class distinctions, which, in the very nature of Christianity, ought not to exist, and which are provocative of cynicism and indifference on the part of the poor, and heart-burnings and jealousies even amongst those who are able to avail themselves of its advantages. The theoretical equality of humanity, so much extolled, the Bishop seemed to think, was rendered nugatory by this practice, and fashion usurped the place of piety. The system, which is increasing in this country, is gradually disappearing in England, having been ill-advised and inexpedient. True it is that free churches and chapels have been established, but even this does not compensate for the thought which will naturally force itself upon the minds of the working classes that their society is not wanted by those occupying a higher social grade. The result is that the rich and poor do not meet together, and that the very object for which ministers of religion should labor is to a large extent frustrated.

It is apparent that our social system, which in many parts of the country is passing through a state of transition, is responsible for much of the evil complained of. The introduction of foreign customs into metropolitan society, the rapidly acquired wealth which can command every luxury in the East, and the restless fever which urges on the people of the West, emulation in fashion and display are the primary causes. In our own city this system probably does not prevail to any very large extent, and yet there is a tendency, exhibited to follow it out. In some places yearly auction of pews takes place, often conducted by clergymen themselves. Fancy prices are offered, the spirit of rivalry takes hold of the bidders, and the droppings of the sanctuary which would reach them from a position near the vestibule, are forgotten in the prospect of the rich shower of grace which would fall on the envied occupant of a seat near the pulpit. Social prominence is found to follow this just as naturally as the possession of a carriage or a country villa, and we cannot blame human nature if it takes advantage of such a method of gaining distinction. The feeling might be pardonable were it not that it nullifies the precepts taught, and does not prepare the mind for the reception of the truth.

The advocates of the system tell us that it is a legitimate means of making money, and of helping on church schemes and purposes. But we fail to see why churches should be established simply for the purpose of making money. Besides, the revenue derived from pew rents and auction sales is almost completely absorbed in the current expenses of the church, and the support of other schemes is obtained by separate and independent means. Simplicity and beauty of architecture are sacrificed to ornate display. Salaries are paid to pastors high in proportion to those received by men who perform secular duties equally as onerous, and requiring as elevated a grade of intelligence, while an extravagantly paid choir and the interest on the church's debt swallows up what might with propriety be used in deeds of benevolence. Retrenchment and reform are as necessary in religious as in social and political life. Divested of its outward trappings, and advocating a Spartan simplicity in its surroundings, religion might not prove so attractive to many of its fashionable devotees, but it would undoubtedly receive a quickening impulse from the increased power which would be brought into being, and better serve the object claimed for it. Coming, as this statement has done, from a divine occupying the position which Bishop Potter does in the Episcopal Church, it has already provoked a considerable comment, and the soundness of the arguments which he uses cannot be called into question.—Scl.

SUNSHINE FOR THE SORROWING.

Among the readers of this paper there must be many who "wear mourning." Every minister, as he runs his eyes over his congregation, sees the black badge of sorrow in every part of the house. Yet many of the deepest and sorest griefs of the heart do not hoist any outward signal of distress. For who ever puts on crape for a family disgrace, or secret headache, or loss of character, or an acute contrition for sin, or a back-sliding from Christ? Set it down as a fact that God sees ten-fold more sorrow than the human eye ever detects.

What a clear streak of sunshine our Lord let into this legion of sorrowing hearts when he pronounced that wonderful benediction: "Blessed are they that mourn!" Perhaps some poor Galilean mother who came up that day to hear Jesus of Nazareth, with her eyes red from weeping over a lost child, whispered to herself: "That is for me; I am a mourner." "Ah!" thought some penitent sinner who felt the plague of his guilty heart, "that means me; I am in trouble to-day." It did mean them. Christ's religion is the first and only religion ever known in this world which recognizes human sorrow, and has any sunshine of consolation for broken hearts. Do cold-blooded infidels realize that fact when they attempt to destroy men's faith in the Gospel of Calvary?

We are apt to limit this benediction of Jesus to one class of sufferers. We take this sweet little text into sick rooms, or to funerals, or into the lonely group which gather around a mother's deserted chair or a little empty crib. It was meant for them. It has fallen into such stricken hearts like the gentle rain upon the new-mown grass. Many of us know full well how good the balm felt when it touched our bruised and bleeding hearts. I remember how, when one of my own "bairns" was lying in his fresh-made grave, and another one was so low that his crib seemed to touch against a tomb, I used to keep murmuring over to myself Wesley's matchless lines:

"Leave, oh leave me not alone,
Still support and comfort me!"

In those days I was learning (what we pastors have to learn) just how the arrow feels when it enters, and just how to sympathize with our people in their bereavements. Somehow a minister is never fully ready to emit the fragrance of sympathy for others until he has been bruised himself. There is a great lack about all christians who have never suffered. Paul abounded in consolation because he had known sharp tribulations in his own experience. What precious spilling of his great sympathetic heart that was when he overflowed into that sublime passage which ends the fourth and begins the fifth chapter of his Epistle to the Corinthians. The outward man perishing—the inward man renewed day by day. The affliction growing "light in proportion to the transcendent weight of the eternal glory! The old tent dropping to pieces and the heavenly mansion looming up so gloriously that his homesick soul longed to quit the fluttering tent, and to "be present with the Lord. These are indeed mighty consolations to bear with us into our houses of mourning. They are the foretaste which make us long for the full feast and the seraphic joys of the marriage-supper of the Lamb. We experience what the old godly negro, "Uncle Johnson," did when he said: "Oh, yes, massa, I feel very lonesome since my Ellen died, but den de Lord comes around ebery day and gibs me a taste of de kingdom, jus' as a nus would wid de spoon; but oh, how I wants to get hold ob de whole dish."

For all this innumerable company of sorrowers, Christ pronounced the benediction we are speaking of. But we must not limit it to them. "Blessed are they that mourn, over sin." Not over its final penalty of perdition, but over the hateful and Christ-wondering thing itself. Genuine sorrow over sin is probably the one heart-grief which commands the tenderest sympathy of Jesus. How tenderly he always treated the penitent—from that weeping woman who bathed his feet, clear on to that dying ruffian who prayed to him from the adjoining cross! There is no heart in the universe that so sympathizes with us when we cry out in contrition as the heart of Calvary's Redeemer. No pain does Jesus look upon so kindly as the pain felt by the conscience over sin committed and the spirit grieved.

Selfishness says: "Cover sin," and the sin thus covered up kills like a cancer. Jesus says: Confess sin and I will have mercy. Abandon sin and flee unto me!" And never do we draw so close to Jesus as when our inmost souls have been wounded by the arrow of conviction, and we have felt what an abominable thing it is to wound our Master in the house of his friends. The only way to obtain peace of mind is to fling ourselves into the arms of Jesus. He never loves us so tenderly as when we lie thus on his bosom—as a child hushes its last sobs on the bosom of its mother. And when we look up into Christ's countenance, and say: "Dear Master, forgive me!" His answer is: "Blessed are they that mourn for sin; they shall be comforted." He is faithful and just to forgive us of our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

Blessed are they that mourn; for he who never mourns never mends. Compunction, if it is of a godly sort, tends to grow in grace. There are too many dry-eyed christians in this world. There ought to be more tears of penitence over our neglects of Christ, more tears of sympathy with the afflicted, and more tears of joy over the infinite good things which Jesus brings to us. They that sow in the tears of contrition shall reap in the joys of pardon, and the Saviour's smile. Such tears water the roots of our piety. Blessed are they that mourn—and mend! The ladder to the higher christian life starts from the dust of self-abasement, but every round in it is a new grasp on Christ.

"Pining soul draw nearer Jesus.
Come—but not doubting thus;
Come, with faith that trusts more freely
His great tenderness for us.

If our love were but more simple
We should take him at his word,
And our lives would be all sunshine
In the sweetness of our Lord."

A DELIGHTFUL LEGEND.

There is a beautiful tradition connected with the site on which the temple of Solomon was erected. It is said to have been occupied in common by two brothers, one of whom had a family, the other none. On the spot was a field of wheat. On the evening succeeding the harvest, the wheat having been gathered in shocks, the elder brother said to his wife, "My younger brother is unable to bear the burden and heat of the day; I will arise, take of my shocks, and place them with his without his knowledge." The brother being actuated by the same benevolent motives, said within himself, "My elder brother has a family, and I have none; I will contribute to their support; I will arise, take off my shocks, and place them with his without his knowledge."

Judge of their natural astonishment when on the following morning they found their respective shocks diminished. This source of events transpired for several nights, when each resolved in his own mind to stand guard and solve the mystery. They did so on the following night they met each other halfway between their respective shocks with their arms full.

Upon ground hallowed by such associations as this was the temple of King Solomon erected—so spacious, so magnificent, the wonder and admiration of the world. Alas! in these days how many would sooner steal their brother's whole shock than add to it a single sheaf.—Selects.

CATHOLICS—OLD CATHOLICS AND LIBERAL CATHOLICS.

Letter from Geneva, Switzerland, to Central Christian Advocate :

In the whole of Germany there are about 15, 710 "reported" members of Alt-Catholic societies, they are estimated as representing about 50,000 souls, and have sixty priests.

It must be borne in mind, however, that these 50,000 souls include only such as are represented by their less than 16, 000 reported members of Alt-Catholic societies. The Ultramontane or rather non-seceding Catholics are not required to report themselves to the government, but every Catholic who wishes to be recognized and protected as an adherent of the reform movement, must report himself. Fifty thousand of the population, then are represented in the German ranks as the "Alt-Catholics," by the actually or legally reported members of the new communion. But it is probable that this number does not approximate the real numerical force of the revolt produced by the Roman Council. Thousands on thousands of former Catholics have ceased to accredit their church, or take any interest in it, since the late dogmatic declarations, and yet have not reported themselves to the government for recognition as "Alt-Catholics." Were the Ultramontanes required to report themselves like the seceders, the Catholic force of Germany would be surprisingly reduced, for it is the sad, but undeniable, fact that religion, in any form, is so decayed in Germany that the personal interest in it, of a large proportion of the people, is not sufficient to induce them to be at the trouble of reporting themselves, or of doing anything else for it. This sort of "infidelity" is more characteristic of Protestantism than of Popery; but it prevails largely among Catholics also, and even among Jews.

The Papal Dogmatic declarations have, then, not only led to the "Alt-Catholic" organization, but to a vastly larger Catholic disorganization.—Catholicism has in Central Europe been struck and shivered through its very foundations.

This is especially true in respect to Switzerland, where popular opinion has no official restraint. For example in this Canton of Geneva there was in 1870, a Catholic majority of 5,000; in the city of Geneva, itself, there are now about 20, 000 Catholics to 25,000 Protestants. In the Canton, then, the Catholics might readily carry the day; in the city they might prove formidable if they chose to be so. But here where the laws allow them to vote into effect their opinions about their own church affairs, they refuse to receive Mermillod, the Bishop appointed over them by the Pope, and he is compelled to retire into France. Here their splendid new Cathedral is voted into the hands of the "Alt Catholics," or the party answering to them in Switzerland. So has it been with Romanish Churches also, not only in this city, but in many places throughout the Confederation, The Ultramontane priests, knowing their weakness, enjoin "Gestation" on their adherents at the elections; but the Catholic votes (for all others are excluded in Catholic Church affairs), elected Father Hyacinth, and his "Reform" colleagues, unanously, and with such an aggregate as to show that the Catholic citizens have, to a great extent, become alienated from the Church. Of course it would be wrong to infer that the tens of thousands of the former Catholic population of the Canton, the twenty thousand of the city, belong to the "reform movement"—thousands are indifferent, thousands have become "radicals" which usually means "infidels"—but it is obvious enough that the old church is broken from capstone to foundation stone. And so it may said of scores of Swiss parishes in which "Alt-Catholic societies" have been organized, especially of the Canton of Berne, in which the government has had its hands full of the business, ousting sixty-nine priests for insubordination to the laws; of the old Catholic Canton of Soleure, where the eminent and devoted Professor Herzog led the revolt, and where, at a late Synod, he has been elected Bishop for the "reform movement" throughout the Republic. He will have a considerably larger host of followers than Bishop Reinkens, of Germany, for the enrolled Alt-Catholics of Switzerland are reported to number 78,380 souls, aside from an immense scattered population of alienated Catholics, who have become disaffected toward all religion and rank as "liberalists," "radicals," or "infidels." There are more than 22,000 Alt-Catholics in the Canton of Berne alone. Geneva is said to have at least 12,000. Basle has a single parish of 4,000; Zurich another of 8,000. In Geneva three rectors and four curates have churches and were chosen to them by the Catholic votes. A majority of these have followed Hyacinth's example and become good citizens by marrying. Their new Bishop followed it also, just before his late election. Public opinion, in Switzerland especially, demands the marriage of the reformed priests. It is believed that if they have families of their own they will be identified with the public interest, be more faithful to the State and not less devoted to their churches.

I have thus presented figures and other facts enough to enable you to form some estimate of this Catholic "reform movement" generally. You see that it is not insignificant even numerically. It is led by important men. It commands the favorable attention and protection of the German and Swiss governments. But it is, after all, only an indication of the profound and widespread disaffections which prevails among the Catholic population north of Italy. The host of the unorganized disaffected, is immensely greater than that of the organized; and notwithstanding the intensified priestly zeal for Ultramontanism, the popular tenacity for the old faith has been generally impaired by the policy of Rome;

PRAY WITHOUT CEASING.

To present a petition is one thing; to prosecute a suit is another. Most prayers answer to the former. But successful prayers corresponds to the latter. God's people frequently lodge their petition in the court of heaven, and there they let it lie. They do not press their suit. They do not employ other means of furthering it beyond the presenting of it. The whole does not consist in taking hold of God main matter is holding on. How many are induced by the slightest appearance of repulse to let go, as Jacob did not! I have often been struck with the manner in which petitions to the Legislature are usually concluded, "And your petitioners will EVER PRAY." So men ought always pray to God and never faint. Payson says, "The promise of God is not to the act, but to the habit of prayer."

THE light in some faces is like a benediction of peace. Nothing but the purest piety makes it to glow there; it blesses you as by a holy influence; it tells of devotion never failing, of untroubled faith, of perfect hope, of undivided love.

For The Young.

For the Primitive Christian.
Natural History.

BY HOWARD MILLER.

Didelphys Virginianus, the scientific name of a very common quadruped, is found all over the U. S., and is almost our only Marsupial. About the size of a common cat, with fur of a whitish gray color, it is nocturnal in its habits, and lives mainly on animal food. It can climb like a cat, only far better, and robs bird's nests every chance, eating the eggs and the old one, too, if it can catch her. In the winter Didelphys likes nothing better than to construct his winter home in the interior of a dead animal, a cow or a horse, and the longer he occupies his quarters the larger they get. For all this some people eat this animal and seem to like it.

But by far the queerest feature about this curious animal is the young, and the way they are managed by the mother. When they are born, and there is a pile of them, sometimes fourteen, they have no hind legs, only their fore legs are developed, and they are as innocent of any covering as the palm of your hand. The mother takes them and puts them where they can suck and their mouths grow shut, fast on the milk, to stick there till they are able to take care of themselves. When they are born they are about half an inch long and always reminded me of a bull pup, with their big heads and pin tails. After they have hung on and their hind legs grown out they must let go for the next crop of baby Virginianus.

I have seen an old one with a whole family with their tails twined around her tail while she was holding on a limb and swinging to and fro, giving the children a little moonlight fun.

So far as I am acquainted with the animal in question, it is harmless; and although it has jaws and teeth like a steel trap, I never knew one to bite, preferring to play off, now and then. In winter it is said to hibernate or sleep, by most of the brooks; but in Pennsylvania it does not sleep its days away. Every one ever I dug out had its eyes wide open. The strange features are the littleness of the babies, their lack of hind legs, their mouths growing shut, and their cunning. I even believe some of the old boys who will read this never knew how the young were at first, as an old one might be killed and unless the little fellows were looked up they would easily escape ordinary observation. I have twelve of them in alcohol and they make a bulk, all together, about the size of a walnut and they were two weeks old. Considering that they are as large as a cat when full grown, the children are very little. Think of two weeks old kittens, put into the space occupied by a walnut till twelve were packed away!

The animal in question is very common and I believe that they are commoner than cats, yet they are seldom seen, being, as stated nocturnal and harmless.

Now boys, come to the front, promptly, with the common name, and the first from each state will get his name in print. And see here, boys, if you notice any important feature in the habits of the animal described, that has been omitted, just put it into your letter. A quick, sharp, bright boy who knows what D. Virginianus is and comes on the rostrum when he is called, will in all probability be in front when he gets to be a man and more momentous questions are asked.

Little Willie's Trouble.

"O mamma!" said Little Willie Morrison, as he rushed into the sitting-room one bright sunshiny afternoon in July, with tears streaming down his cheeks, and eyes all swollen. "I have got into such trouble in school this afternoon, I don't know what to do." And putting his arms around her neck said, "Dear mamma, if you will only help me out of this trouble, I shall think you are the best mamma that ever lived."

She said, "Now, my dear little boy, come here, sit upon my lap while I listen to what has caused my darling so much pain."

"Mamma, Bertie Cary and I thought we would have a real good time, so we whispered all the afternoon, and when school was done the teacher asked who had whispered. Bertie raised his hand, but I did not, for I thought he would not find it out; but he did, and made me stay after school, scolded me and told me if I ever told him another story he should whip me very hard. It frightened me so that I cried. O mamma, to think I should have told a lie; and my Sunday-school teacher, whom I love very much, says God will not love us if we tell lies."

"Yes, Willie, your Sunday-school teacher is right, and it makes your mamma feel very badly to think that her little boy should have been guilty of telling a falsehood; but I hope he will never, no, never, tell any more. Now I know that your teacher will forgive you, if you go and ask him to do so, and, mamma will, also; but you have done very wrong, and you must pray to Jesus to forgive you."

All little children have troubles, and the best way is, to carry them in prayer to Jesus who is their best Friend.—Zion's Herald.

"My Father's Day."

"I can't have you come on Tuesday, William; but you can come any Sabbath you like, and we'll go up the river in a boat, but not on Tuesday."

"Why are you so particular about Tuesday?"

"Because on that day I go to see my father. You know he lives with my married brother; and I've a friend who drives over there to market, and gives me a lift there and back on Tuesdays. I would not let anything prevent my going to see my father on that day."

"Well, it is quite right of you, James, to go to see your father; but I suppose it hinders you very much?"

"Oh, I don't mind that. My master lets me make up the time at over-hours on other days."

"Well, but why don't you go on a Sabbath?"

"Oh, because my brother is very strict. He disapproves of Sabbath travelling; and as he keeps my poor sick father, I don't want to offend him. But, as I said, you can come and see me any Sabbath for a row on the river."

A sudden thought came into William's mind; he said,—

"Sabbath is my Father's day. I go to see him in his house on that day. I wouldn't miss it on any account; and so never ask me to go pleasure taking on that day. I'm willing to work extra hours on other days, that I may have the day that I go to see my Father."

"Dear me, how you put it!" said James, looking very much confused. "I never thought before about what you say; but I see you are right; Sabbath is our heavenly Father's day."

"Yes; and as he gives us all our days, we may surely give him our homage and public worship one day in seven."—Sol.

Seven Minds.

1. Mind your tongue! Don't let it speak hasty, cruel, unkind, or wicked words.
2. Mind your eyes! Don't permit them to look on wicked books, pictures, or objects.
3. Mind your ears! Don't suffer them to listen to wicked speeches, songs, or words.
4. Mind your lips! Don't let tobacco foul them. Don't let strong drink pass them. Don't let the food of the glutton pass between them.
5. Mind your hands! Don't let them steal or fight; or write any evil words.
6. Mind your feet! Don't let them walk in the steps of the wicked.
7. Mind your heart! Don't let the love of sin dwell in it. Don't give it to Satan but ask Jesus to make it his throne.—Sol.

Some men take pleasure in earning their money as well as in using it—a sure way of getting it, and getting the good of it.

Miscellaneous.

Died on Their Knees.

Alexander Cruden, author of that invaluable book, the Concordance, died on his knees while praying. He was a man of remarkable industry and fervent piety. His heart beat warmly for the poor and suffering. He consecrated the entire profits of the second and third editions of his book to relieve the poor. It was his soul's delight to minister to their wants. He was a fine illustration of the Gospel precept: "Diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord."

The first copy of the Concordance he presented to Queen Caroline, wife of George II., in 1737. The queen was so well pleased with it, she promised to reward him; but sixty days after she finished her brief life. Poor Cruden's hopes were disappointed. He kept on in his back store, in London, in the Royal Exchange. When nearly seventy years old, he was missed. Search was made in his lodgings and the man of God was found kneeling by his chair, with open Bible before him—his face calm and peaceful. Thus he died alone! Yet not alone. He who says: "Lo I am with you always," was with him. How blessed thus to fall asleep in Jesus.

"Asleep in Jesus, oh for me
May such a blissful refuge be."

David Livingstone, the beloved missionary and explorer of Africa, also died on his knees. Future generations will be benefited by his life-work. Like Cruden he died poor and alone, and while at the act of prayer. His long and weary marches over a wild and untraversed country, exposed to hostile tribes of savages, to malaria and other diseases, he at last had to rest. He could be carried no farther. His faithful men built him a hut beneath a large tree, and here the weary traveler rested. After giving him food, and preparing his rude couch, his faithful servants left him, hoping sleep would relieve him. After some hours they drew aside the curtain—Livingstone was on his knees. They listened—there was no voice; they touched him—he was cold in death! Thus died this wonderful man. His attendants embalmed his body and bore it hundreds of miles to the coast. It now rests in Westminster Abby, where repose kings, poets, divines, and philosophers. Blessed ending of a busy life. His life is one of prayer, as well as untiring industry.

"His watchword at the gate of death;
He enters heaven with prayer."

A medical student in New York recently died on his knees, while in prayer and alone with God. The day before his death he complained of a pain in his head. Nothing specially alarming in so common an occurrence, he retired to his room, hoping sleep would relieve the pain. Next morning as the breakfast bell rang there was no response from him. Another voice had called him away. After all had breakfasted, his room was entered. The bed was not disturbed. The young man was kneeling by the bed, with his hands outspread, as in the act of prayer. Thus he passed away. A calm, serene smile was on his face.

"Life's labor done; as sinks the clay,
Light from its lead the spirit flies,

While heaven and earth combine to say,
How blest the righteous when he dies!"

Is there anything sad in those and many other similar deaths? Is it proper for us to pray: "From sudden death deliver us?" Surely not. Let us leave the time and manner of our death with our heavenly Father. Let us ever be true to Christ and consecrate our lives to his service, and then it will matter little whether we die suddenly or by slow disease. May it be ours to say: "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain."—Christian Press.

Bishop Gilmore, in addressing the Irish Catholic Benevolent Union of the United States, recently in session at Cleveland, urged them "especially to clear whatever there seemed to be of misunderstanding in regard to their previous utterance upon the school question as it related to Catholics." We do not remember what those utterances were, but the attitude of the Roman Catholics of this country upon the school question does certainly need clearing up. We should not, however, so far delude ourselves as to expect that it will ever be done in genuine good faith, at least before the Romanists are strong enough to have things their own way.

Father Beex.

Of late there has been much talk in reference to a successor to the Papal chair. There was a time when the election of a Pope was a matter of the highest political importance of Europe. It is not a matter of absolute indifference now, but it is a matter of far less consequence than it was a century, or even half a century, ago. The political conditions of Europe have so greatly changed within that period, that the near prospect of a new Pope does not make much of a ripple in the general politics. It is as much less prominent question in the discussions of leading journals that the Turkish question, or the standing army of Russia. This comes about very naturally; for although the Pope sustains, since the promulgation of the infallibility absurdity, closer relations than ever to the Romish populations of Europe, his power to disturb public tranquility is no longer an important factor in history. Unfortunately for the future of the Papacy, he has tried the experiment to the utmost, of what he could do in that direction. He has summoned all his forces, exhausted all his resources, and in full panoply has measured strength with the Christianity of modern civilization, and has been ruinously defeated. He has been ridiculed by some, insulted by others; his speeches criticised, his convents and other properties appropriated; his kingdom taken from him; and regarded with general indifference, he is left to occupy his time in making allocutions to the college boys, or to receive delegations of adventurous young ladies from England; or New England as the case may be.

There never was a less prosperous outlook for the Papacy. Since moral revolutions go not backward, the distance which the last quarter of a century has created between modern thought and the middle ages, is an impassable gulf.

In this great emergency, behold Father Beex!

Now, who is Father Beex! He is the General of the Order of the Jesuits. It is said he is now to be made Cardinal, in order that by and by he may be made Pope. The General of the Jesuits has to reside in Rome. By all accounts, Father Beex has resided there to good purpose. The present Pope is regarded as little more than a tool in the hands of the Jesuits. The irreverent in that city are accustomed to say, "There are too Popes—the white Pope and the black Pope"—Father Beex being the black one. This expresses their meaning well enough, though it might have been put a little more respectfully.—S. W. Presbyterian.

Congress of Geographers.

The Standard of the Cross notes the following: A Congress of Geographers has just been held in Belgium at the call of King Leopold III., for the purpose of devising a plan of African exploration that will complete our knowledge of the interior of the Continent. Among those in attendance were Rawlinson, Barde Frere, Cameron, Grant, Lesseps, and Schweinfurth. It is proposed that bases of operation be established on the coast of Zanzibar, and near the mouth of the Congo, and that routes be opened into the interior, and that stations be established for the purpose of relief and supply, and for promoting the interests of science and humanity, and for maintaining friendly intercourse with the native tribes. A proposition to form an International Center Committee to superintend the execution of these plans was discussed. The unexplored interior of Central Africa covers about twenty degrees of latitude and fifteen of longitude, or about 1, 820, 600 square miles.

LOST WOMEN.—Has it ever occurred to you what a commentary upon our civilization are these lost women, and the attitude of society toward them? A little child strays from the home inclosure, and the whole community is on the alert to find the wanderer and restore it to its mother. What rejoicing when it is found! what a tearful sympathy, what heartiness of congratulation. There are no harsh comments upon the poor, tired feet, be they ever so mirey, no reprimand for the soiled and torn garment, no lack of kisses for the tear-stained face. But let the child be grown to womanhood, let her be led from it by the scourge of woe—what happens then?

Do Christian men and women go in quest of her? Do they provide all possible help for her return, or if she returns of her own notion, do they receive her with such kindness and delicacy as to secure her against wandering? Far from it. At the first step she is denounced as lost—lost! echo friends and relatives—we disown you; don't ever come to us to disgrace us. Lost, says society, indifferently. How bad these girls are! And lost—irretrievably lost—is the prompt verdict of conventional morality, while one and all unite in bolting every door between her and respectability. Ah, will not these lost ones be required at our hands hereafter.

RASHNESS generally makes work for repentance.

REPROOFS are most profitable when least provoking.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

- I. The Editor does not hold himself responsible for the opinions of correspondents.
- II. A free and fraternal interchange of thought will be allowed on all important subjects; but the Editor reserves to himself the right to determine the time for admitting controverted questions, and the time for discontinuing the discussions.
- III. Personal character must be respected; personal quarrels will not be admitted; and bitter and unkind words must not be used.
- IV. Articles should be short and pointed, and written only on one side of the paper; and if the paper is closely ruled, only on every alternate rule. Manuscript paper should be about 4 or 5 inches wide.
- V. Important Bible and Historical quotations should be accompanied with references to chapter and verse, book and page.
- VI. Every article should have for its object the glory of God and the edification of the readers.
- VII. Every article for publication must be accompanied by the name of the author as a guarantee of good faith. An assumed name, however, is allowable in print.
- VIII. Unaccepted manuscripts will not be returned unless their writers make request accordingly, and enclose stamps for postage, at the time they submit them.

RULES FOR AGENTS.

1. At the head of every letter give the name of your own post-office, county and State; and the date on which it is written.
2. Write the name and give the full address of every subscriber you send, as legibly as you can.
3. Write "New" before the names of all new subscribers.
4. In ordering a change of address, give the post-office, county, and State, to which the paper is sent, as well as the post-office, county, and State to which it is to be sent.
5. Do not mix up different items of business; but take up and finish one item before you take up another.
6. Write items intended for publication on a separate slip.
7. Make every lawful effort to obtain subscribers, and to do good in whatever way you can.
8. Send money by drafts, post-office money orders, or registered letters.
9. Observe the above rules, and you will expedite business, save us from much trouble, and yourselves and our subscribers from disappointments and vexation.

"THEY HAVE THEIR REWARD."

Such is the purity of the Christian law, and such is the strictness of its requirements, that its demands are not answered, nor its entire advantages secured merely by an outward observance of its rules and precepts. Under the dispensation introduced by the great Christian Law-giver, God is to be worshiped in spirit and in truth, if we would render him acceptable service. It is not enough there be a proper action, but that action must proceed from a proper feeling, if God accepts the action as a fulfillment of the commandment enjoining it, and if he rewards it.

When the Savior makes the declaration at the head of our article, he is reproving the hypocrites and cautioning his disciples against hypocrisy. "When thou doest thy alms," said he "do not sound a trumpet before thee, as the hypocrites do in the synagogues and in the streets, that they may have glory of men. Verily I say unto you, they have their reward. And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are: for they love to pray standing in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Verily I say unto you they have their reward." Matth. 6: 2-5. There are many motives from which men act, or many springs from which their actions flow. In the above cases referred to by the Savior, the people in praying and in giving alms, seem to have been prompted by a desire to obtain the honor and praise of men, or to be thought very religious by them. If this simply was their object, then in securing this, they obtained the reward, and this was the extent of their reward. It is to be feared that the object of the Christianity of many is no higher than to secure a favorable position in society, since at this time, in our own country, at least, a christian profession is rather honorable than degrading, and avowed and even implied infidelity unpopular than popular. If then our Christianity is only to obtain a name among men in the world, or to shield us from the reproach associated with infidelity, then however imperfect our Christianity may be, in either vitality, consistency or form, yet if it secures the object sought, it answers its end, and we have our reward. As Christianity of some kind is honorable and popular, its public ministers are particularly so. And if any men who take upon themselves the holy profession of the Christian ministry, and so far lose sight of its dignity and responsibility as to degrade it to a mere passport to honor and popularity, and succeeding in making it subservient to these ends, then, they have their reward. Again, if men choose this sacred calling with a view to the pecuniary gain, or salary obtained, as there is danger of doing, since the temptation to this is sometimes very strong—too strong to be resisted by poor human nature when destitute of divine grace, then, when the salary is obtained they have received their reward, and they need not look for any other. Contributions may be made, to charitable purposes and institutions, not so much to benefit God's poor, or because the subjects of charity are Christ's brethren and by doing it to them it is done to him, but because it would be thought illiberal and penurious to withhold contributions from such objects. If then they are saved from the charge of penuriousness and selfishness among their fellow men, they have their reward. So many works which relate to man's personal or social advantages, may be performed to advance the reputation of those who perform them, or from some other motive of a selfish kind. Such works may be practiced from motives relating altogether to the present world, and may have as little to do with God by those who perform them as if there was no God, no divine law that required them, and as if there were no other law, than public opinion regulating the manner in which our actions are to be performed. They who perform their moral actions in this way, have their reward, such as it is.

But there is, "a more excellent way," and that is to perform all our moral actions as laws of God's divine government, and whatever we do, "do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men." Knowing that of the Lord we shall receive the reward of the inheritance. Mark, we shall receive—a reference to the future. In the other cases it is "they have their reward"—all they are to have, is received in the present world.

We see here the difference between those who perform moral actions or good works from correct principles, and such as perform them from improper principles. The latter HAVE their reward, and that reward is from men. And as it is from men, it cannot be perfect. It is likewise temporary for it extends not into the future world. Hence it is poorly adapted to our real wants, for our wants will be coeval with our eternal existence.

The condition of those who "do whatsoever they do as unto the Lord is very different. It is true, they receive a reward immediately upon the performance of every duty. For in keeping the judgments of God, there is a great reward." But a greater reward yet awaits the faithful. Paul said, "there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." And the Savior says, "behold I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." Let us then not only be careful to do all the Lord has commanded to do, and to do it in the way he, has commanded it, but likewise we must do it "as unto the Lord." "As the eyes of servants look unto the hand of their masters, and as the eyes of a maiden unto the hand of her mistress: so our eyes wait upon the Lord." We must do all we do to please and honor God, if we would obtain a "full reward"

TO OUR PATRONS.

This week our patrons will be greeted with a visitor bearing a new name, but we hope this will make it none the less welcome or beneficial. We have for some time desired to bring about a union of our papers, not because our own paper was not succeeding, or that any special pecuniary benefit would result from a union, but it has been apparent to our mind that it would be better for the church and that our united efforts might be made a more efficient means for the furtherance and advancement of the cause of our Redeemer. With this object in view we have now united our papers and we hope our readers will all appreciate our efforts to accomplish that which we think will be for the benefit of our readers and to the cause which we all so earnestly desire to promote.

As already stated, we expect to enlarge our paper and make improvements in its general appearance, but this will not be done until the close of the present volume. Our readers will please bear in mind that the paper they now receive is not a specimen of what the consolidated paper is to be. We have in view many improvements and we hope to have, by the close of the year, the necessary arrangements made to publish a first-class paper. This we expect to do without enlarging the price, and we hope our agents and friends will make a special effort to increase our subscription list this year. We enlarge without increasing the price with the expectation of retaining the subscribers of both papers and gaining others. If we are disappointed in this we will be obliged to raise the price or suffer loss. Let us then have your united support. As long as the patronage of our papers is so divided they must be small and high in price, but by uniting we can publish a sizable paper and at a figure that will be within the reach of all our brethren and sisters. Our agents and friends will please get to work at once and make a special effort to secure new subscribers. We met one of our agents the other day that said he would get to work right away, and he was determined to secure at least fifteen subscribers that had not heretofore been taking either of the papers. This is the proper spirit, and we hope many of our agents will do likewise.

AN EXPLANATION.

Our absence in attending to the duties of the committee to Southern Ohio, and in preparing to move, have prevented us from furnishing our readers with the usual amount of editorial reading. We hope to be settled down soon in our new location, and prepared to resume our work in all its departments.

OUR MAIL.

Our correspondents, and all writing to us, will please address us hereafter at Huntingdon, Huntingdon, Co. Pa.

JAMES QUINTER.

THE CONSOLIDATED PAPER.

As before announced, we publish but one paper this week instead of the two, supplying the readers of both papers, to the end of the year, with the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, the first side of which was set at Meyersdale but printed at this office. This side is being set here and will continue to be published here until the close of the volume, when the enlarged paper will commence. Many of our readers are expressing their pleasure in our project of uniting our papers, and we fondly hope that all will not only be pleased, but benefitted by the move, and we will therefore expect all the readers of both papers to renew their subscription and share the benefits of consolidation, in getting an enlarged paper or in reality, two papers for the price of one. No matter how many other papers you may wish to get, you cannot afford to do without the leading Church paper.

Bro. Quinter and his office force have not moved yet, therefore we are necessitated to conduct the paper this week ourselves. By next week we expect to be all together when we will unite our labors by which we hope to be able to publish a paper worthy of universal patronage.

PLEASE NOTICE.

On account of entering into a partnership business it is especially desirable that all old accounts on both papers be settled as soon as it can be done. The amounts due each office must be kept separate and sent to the respective firms as before.

All dues to the PILGRIM office address to H. B. Brumbaugh & Bro., Box 50, Huntingdon, Pa.

All dues to the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN office, address James Quinter Box 50, Huntingdon, Pa.

All businos to be hereafter transacted, in connection with the consolidated paper, address to Quinter & Brumbaugh Bros. Box 50, Huntingdon, Pa. tf.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

—Bro. S. H. Bashor's address will be Scalplevel, Cambria Co., Pa.

—On account of moving and an unusual amount of labor the papers will be a few days behind time. Please exercise a little patience and we will soon be up to time again.

—Brethren's Almanacs can now be ordered at the following rates: Single copy 10 cents; 6 copies 55 cents; 12 copies $1.00; 50 copies $4.00; 100 copies $7.50; all postpaid. Address Quinter & Brumbaugh Bros. Box 50, Huntingdon, Pa.

—We are now prepared to do anything and everything in the publishing line. Brethren wishing to publish tracts, books &c., will find it to their advantage to consult us. We have a number of works of our own that we expect to put to press during the coming Winter. We have the means and material to do all the publishing that the wants of the Church will demand.

—An English bishop finds his diocese too large and advocates a division. He is willing to share half of it with some one else and $7,500 of his salary retaining his mansion & 32,000 for his own use. What a liberal bishop! Considering the panic time, he might push through with a little less. If the good Shepherd had not where to lay his head, under shepherd's ought to live on $30,000 a year, but such men are lords and not shepherds.

—From a report of the Philadelphia Presa Committee we glean the following weekly average mortality of the leading cities as below named: London 53,40; Philadelphia, 23,43, Chicago, 24,27; Boston, 24,48; Baltimore, 24,80; Paris, 25,16; New York, 30,73. It will be seen by the above that notwithstanding the immense floating population of Philadelphia during the Summer and Fall, the average mortality is less than most of the other leading cities.

"On Marriage."

After carefully reading the article under this heading, in No. 38 of this paper, we beg leave to differ from the views of the writer on one point. He seems to hold all parties separated from the marriage contract for all causes under the same obligations. He refers to Romans vii. 2, 3, and says: "From this apostolic exposition of the law of God upon the subject of matrimony we are fully sustained in asserting that nothing short of the death of the husband can so exonerate the wife from her marriage obligations as to leave her at liberty to marry another man." And further on he says: "From the plain testimony of the Scriptures, as referred to above, we give it as our decided conviction that no married wife can, under any circumstances whatever, marry another man while her husband is living, without involving herself in the crime of adultery, nor can a man marry again while his wife lives without involving himself in the same sin."

We read in Matthew xix. 9, "And I say unto you, whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and shall marry another committeth adultery; and who marryeth her which is put away, doth commit adultery. Now if a man were to put away his wife for the cause of fornication and would marry another, how could he be termed an adulterer from this text? Dear brethren and fellow-Christians, allow the words of Christ to have their place. In our opinion it must follow that if a man were to put away his wife for the cause of fornication and marry another he doth not commit adultery; neither would a man who would marry a woman who had put away her husband for the same cause, commit adultery, but would be free from the law, and under no obligations whatever to the separated partner so far as matrimony is concerned.

Christ makes the exception clear and positive himself, and his words must be considered, yea and amen. If there be any sin in an action of this kind, where do we find it recorded? We cannot comprehend it in the passages quoted by the writer, or any others, and cannot otherwise than conclude that the passages referred to in the article have no bearing on cases of fornication whatever. We know there are many persons who draw the inference from Paul's writings, that nothing short of death can exonerate a man from his marriage obligations, and they say that he makes no exception in the case of fornication. We ask, Why should he? Is not the exception in the text enough? We answer, Yes; or else we must either annul the words of Christ or conclude that Paul did not heed them. But we have no reason to think, nor can we believe that Paul would include in his doctrine a case so explicitly set aside by Christ himself. We are well aware that there are those who view this matter differently. Yet we have thus far failed to find a cause to think otherwise than we do. If any one would inform us if we are in error, we would rejoice to be corrected; but above all things, allow the words of the Savior to have their true meaning.

We also read in the history of the early Christian churches that it was so understood by them, and they even included in their articles of faith, that for no cause, except fornication and death, could the marriage contract be so severed as to allow them to marry again.

Our Communion in Kentucky.

As I promised to write some for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, I can think of nothing better than to give you a condensed report of our communion, which came off on Saturday, Sept. 23rd.

Brethren G. V. Siler, of Darke county, Ohio, and George Garver, of Dayton, Ohio, ministering brethren, accompanied by brethren Frantz and wife, and Geo. Morningstar and wife, arrived here on Saturday, the 16th, and preached at Bro. W. L. Bond's on Saturday night, and on Sunday at 10 o'clock, after which the brethren and sisters of Ohio, accompanied by myself and wife and Sister Charlotte Bond, made their way to Owen county. Same evening there was preaching at Bro. James Bond's new house. Here the time was divided between three different points, as follows: Bro. James Bond's, Cane Fork meeting-house, and a new house, just erected and called the Tunker meeting-house, built expressly for the Brethren to preach in. These meetings were tolerably well attended, and quite an interest was manifested. There were two accessions by baptism. We were well cared for in a temporal way, for which our thanks are due to the many friends who ministered to our necessities.

We returned from Owen to Scott on Thursday, Sept. 21st, in order to prepare for the lovefeast. Here we were joined by brethren Abraham Flory and Isaac Studebaker and wife. The communion came off in due order. It was well attended, and seemed to have a salutary effect, both upon the young members and the spectators, and we think there was a lesson learned that will not soon be forgotten. The cause was ably defended, and well may the brethren of the Southern District of Ohio be proud of the day when they first planted the gospel in Kentucky. They have united us together in the bonds of gospel love, and the good seed that has been sowed, if it is only rightly cultivated, will be likened unto leaven in meal. So, brethren, press forward in the good work. Never tire in well doing. The cause which you have espoused demands your zeal.

JOHN W. FITZGERALD,
Great Crossings, Ky.

MARYVILLE, Tenn., Oct. 11, 1876.

Dear Editors:—On the night of the 30th of Sept. we held our lovefeast, and it was truly a feast of love. Shortly before, Bro. Geo. Bowman paid us a visit and awakened many a soul to inquire what must be done to be saved, and three precious souls were made willing to comply with "all things whatsoever is commanded." Bro. Collins and Bro. Abram Mals had preached the word with great power during the communion meeting. The members were greatly revived, and love and harmony were restored where it had become cold, and many a heart was almost given up to the Savior, and we trust will, ere long, yield to the influence of the Holy Ghost. A few, also, who had not lived so close to the Savior as they once did, seemed to have been drawn toward him, and will ere long, we trust, give him their whole heart again. The non-professors seemed to enjoy these meetings greatly, as indicated by the rapt attention given. No truly converted person can participate in these lovefeasts without being greatly benefited.

MODESTO, CAL., Oct. 3, 1876.

Brother Quinter:—I send you the following church news from this (Stanislaus) congregation.

We held our lovefeast last Saturday, Sept. 30th, and continued meetings till last night. We had truly a happy meeting; saints rejoiced and sinners came home to God. Two were received into the church by baptism. Quite a number assembled at the river side to witness the administration of the ordinance of baptism. The scene was impressive, as many tears evidenced. We have reason to believe that more are "almost persuaded." Brethren every where, pray the good Lord for us in California.

PETER S. GARMAN.

NEW ENTERPRISE, PENN'A., }
Oct. 9th, 1876.

Bro. Quinter:—For the satisfaction of the readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, I will drop you a few lines from the Yellow Creek church. Our lovefeast, which was appointed on the 5th of Oct., is now past, and we can say we truly had a feast of love. Everything passed off well.—We would just say here that we had the best of order we ever saw where there were so many people together on such an occasion. We hope that the good Lord will bless our young sisters in our community and elsewhere where they conduct themselves properly at such places.—Ministers from a distance were brethren Daniel D. Sell, Brice Sell, Eld. Daniel Holsinger, from Clover Creek, and others from adjoining Districts. Brother Daniel Sell is from the State of Missouri. One soul was added by baptism. I will also state that the brethren of our district at a council meeting decided to divide our district in two. Our church here seems to move along in the good cause.

D. S. REFLORE.

NEWBY, PA., Oct. 10, 1876.

Bro. James:—I hasten this evening to drop a few thoughts for your paper, inasmuch as you invite brethren enjoying the lovefeasts to write out their thoughts and send them on. It is in relation to this that I write.

Our lovefeast was appointed in the Duncansville branch on the 7th and 8th of October. At the time appointed the brethren and friends collected together, and we truly enjoyed one of the largest and most solemn meetings we have ever held in our church. There were quite a number of brethren and sisters from a distance present with us. There were also at this meeting five more added to the church by the holy ordinance of baptism. Four of the above named were young, just in the springtime of life, while the other was quite an aged woman. Oh! what joy it affords the children of God when the sons and daughters of Adam's family come flocking home to God; and not only so, but the Savior said himself that there was joy in heaven when sinners turn to God.

The ministering brethren present were John W. Brumbaugh, Geo. W. Brumbaugh, W. H. Quinn, Jacob Koons, and Daniel D. Sell, the latter of whom has been among us for some time, laboring among us. There was meeting on Sunday evening. Services conducted by Daniel D. Sell and Geo. W. Brumbaugh. Also meeting on Monday evening. This was the last meeting, at which time Bro. D. D. Sell preached his last sermon. The occasion was evidently a very solemn and impressive one. Sinners were made to weep over their condition, and the children of God were caused to shed tears of sympathy, and the thought of separating with dear brethren and sisters was painful.

Brethren and sisters, allow me to say a few words to us: We meet together on earth and enjoy each others' society, and we feel loth to part. But take courage; we have a hope to meet over yonder, beyond the withering blasts of time, where no separation is known and where no tears are shed, but where we can enjoy each others' society through the ceaseless ages of a never ending eternity, there to sing the song of Moses and the Lamb, and

"When we've been there ten thousand years,
Bright shining as the sun,
We've no less days to sing God's praise,
Than when we first begun."

DAVID D. SELL.

A Testimony.

To a very dear Friend outside of the Fraternity:

Grace and peace be multiplied. God knows how to multiply, and is always ready to multiply, but we are such worthless cyphers that both multiplied and product are nothing but 000. But thanks be to God, he is able to convert a cypher into one, or nine, and then multiplying counts. Again I say, "Grace and peace be multiplied," for this means, "Christ and him crucified." He is God's multiplication-table, and in him alone do we learn the arithmetic that attains to the wisdom of "Six hundred three score and six," Rev. xiii. 18; and the glorious, everlasting Seven, Rev. i. 4, 12, 13.

You seem to think my life is an insupportable desolation, as though Col. iii. 3, and i. 19, Eph. iii. 19, were a mere flourish of rhetoric. I tell you nay, The Christian is the only person on earth who has a right to wear a sunny countenance. Even when the eye is glazed with unspeakable agony, and the features ghastly and rigid with suffering, "the peace of God passing all understanding, keeping the heart and mind," cannot fail to be mirrored on its surface, and testify the "exceeding grace of God in us." My history is written in tears and groans and agonies and weariness and sin and self-reproach and struggles that make every fibre of body and soul crack. If this were all, it would be a dark record.—Whose record is not dark, if written only from data furnished by himself? What is the clear sky and thorough path of the ungodly, but a delusive screen shutting out the hideousness of sin, and the wrath of God, and the "blackness of darkness?" The darker the cloud in the believer's firmament, the brighter the bow that spans it, the sweeter and more thrilling the sense of the Divine presence. That which wrecks the sinner's all, lifts the faith-built ark nearer Heaven. The pillar-cloud that overshadows the impenitent with the midnight of wee and despair, is resplendent with the glory of salvation to the Christian.

The divine Sculptor is putting his chisel into my marrow, so that I quiver with agony and say, "If it be possible, let this cup pass from me;" and yet I would rather be under his mallet than "fire sumptuously every day, and be clothed in purple and fine linen," and drink the concentrated cup of all earth's pleasure since Eve sucked the luscious fruit of evil. Let me be stripped as naked as the Patriarch of Uz, "if need be," only so the wonderful Jesus remain. With his pulse in my bosom, and his smile in my eye, and his inheritance in reversion, I am both rich and happy, even if I be covered with ulcers, and keep company with dogs at Dives' door step. Give me the Christian's sorrows. His tears are sweeter than the world's honey, and his weeping more musical than the world's laughter. Give me the beatitude that death crowns, not destroys. Your joy is a bubble which must burst in anguish, either unto life, or endless torment. Happiness out of God is the passport to be hell. To glad as God is glad, this is "joy unspeakable and full of glory," and that forever.

C. H. BALSBAUGH.

MAJENICA, Huntington Co., Ind.

Bro. Quinter.—On the 23th of September I attended a communion meeting in the squirrel Creek District in Wabash County, Ind. A great many members communed at this meeting. The order throughout the entire meeting was good, and the members were much refreshed. May the Lord still bless them and bind them together in love. Here our dear young brother, Dorsey Hodgden, joined me, and has been with me ever since. We have preached daily except twice since the 28th of September, but not more than twice at one place; hence no additions. He expects to be with me perhaps a month.

On the 4th of October we attended a church meeting in the Huntington district. Business went off pleasantly.

On the 6th we attended a communion in the Deer Creek district, Huntington Co. Attendance not very large, but very good order. We were much built up in the cause of Christ.

On the 6th we attended a communion at Antioch, Huntington Co. Not a very large congregation here, on account of sickness, but the best of order. We think the members were much refreshed.

On the 14th of October our communion closed in the Eight Mile district. We all feel much refreshed. Here we had a choice for two ministers and two visiting brethren. The lot fell on brethren Geo. Holler and Geo. Watson for ministers, and on Anthony Crimere and Samuel Cline for visiting brethren. May the Lord bless and make them useful in their callings is my prayer. We truly had a refreshing meeting here.

SAMUEL MURRAY.

A Few Items.

I left Somerset Co., Pa., on the 7th of September, and came to Washington, Tazewell Co., Ill., on the 8th and paid a visit to my friends. I found all well, enjoyed myself, and liked the country much. Stayed there two weeks; then went to Hudson, McLean county, and found myself right among the brethren and sisters. I am enjoying myself well here. Thank the Lord for his mercy.

On the 23rd I attended their council meeting. The members were all in love and harmony, and the brethren and sisters were all uniformed in a plain dress, young and old. The sisters are not ashamed to have their caps on.

On the 6th I attended their communion meeting. We had a good meeting, and preaching on the 7th and 8th. There came out on the Lord's side and were baptized in the Mackinaw River. We had good order throughout the meeting. Bro. Thomas D. Lyon is the Elder of this church. Bro. John Metzger does the preaching mainly. He labored hard to gain souls. We had four preachers from Woodford county, Illinois,—Jacob Kindig, Rufus Gish, Geo. Gish, and Christian Barnhart. Brethren and sisters, let us all be faithful. May God bless and save us, is my prayer.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONVENTION.

According to announcement in the Pilgrim, a Sunday School Convention, by the Brethren for the Middle District of Penn'a, was held at James Creek, Huntingdon Co., Pa., October 21st, 1876.

Meeting was called to order by Bro. Geo. Brumbaugh, after which Bro John Spanogle was appointed Moderator, Bro. H. B. Brumbaugh, clerk; and Bro. J. M. Mohler, Secretary.

Bro. John Spanogle then addressed the meeting, and explained the object of a Sunday School convention.

The Clerk then read a list of Sunday School Districts and their delegates, as follows:

Lewistown, J. M. Mohler, Albert Steinberger.

Spring Run, M. F. H. Kinsel, R. T. Myers.

Aughwick, John Spanogle, James Lane.

James Creek, Robert Mason.

Bethel, Benjamin Brumbaugh.

Manor Hill, Archy Van Dyke.

The delegates then reported as follows:

Lewistown School was under the Brethren eight years, and conducted at present as follows: Opened and closed by singing and prayer, after which teachers took charge of their classes. Time for recitation forty minutes. Music on canvass, selected from various books, papers, etc. Also use the Union Hymn Book. For recitation, use American Sunday School Lesson Papers. Remarks by Supt., Asst., and others.

PROGRAMME OF SCHOOL.

Time in Lesson,	1½ hours
Opening,	15 minutes
Recitation,	40 min.
Singing,	20 min.
Remarks,	5 min.
Closing,	10 min.

Use the Young Disciple and with good success. Hope all the Sunday Schools will do the same.

Infant department conducted by Albert Steinberger in the basement. Total average for 1875, between 115 and 120. Brethren J. M. Mohler and A. Steinberger Superintendents.

Spring Run reported as follows: School opened in 1866. Missed 1870. In operation nine years. Open by reading a portion of Scripture, singing and prayer. Music printed on canvass. For recitation, the International Lesson Leaves are used. Number enrolled 125, average 90.

Report of James Creek school. Organized May 14th, 1876. Average attendance, 36. Five teachers and three officers. International Lesson papers are used in recitation, and for singing, the Gospel Hymns.

Bethel school. Forty scholars and five teachers. Interest seemingly good. Opened and closed as usual.

Manor Hill Class, was organized 1866. Comprises 20 or 30 members, consisting of Brethrens children and friends in general.

New Enterprise. Organized 1866. School has been in successful operation since. A constitution and By-Laws govern the school. In 1868 there were nine classes of male pupils, 53 in all, who committed 3657 verses of scripture. Eleven classes, containing 54 female pupils, who committed 3314 verses. Total by the school, 6,971. In 1870 there were eight classes, containing 50 pupils, committed 1581 verses. Eight classes of females, verses committed by 36 female pupils, 7,672. Total number of verses, 9,253. Total number of scholars, 104. For 1876, Jacob B. Furry Supt. Total attendance 122. No. of classes reading in the Old Testament, 2. German, 1. School is opened with singing and prayer and reading a chapter of scripture. After which the scholars ask such questions as present themselves. Close by singing and prayer. Take no part in pic-nics.

Waterside school was organized May 14, 1876. Conducted in the usual manner. Sing from Gospel Hymns (Bliss and Sankey). Use Young Disciple. Well pleased with it.

Altoona school reported by letter as follows:

The first Sabbath school was organized by the Brethren, July 5th, 1874, by choosing the following officers: Supt., Alexander Rath; Sec'y., Andrew J. Murray; Treas., Robert McPharlan.

The school is opened by singing and prayer; classes are then arranged, using the Bible, Testament and Spellers. A chapter is also selected and read in the hearing of the school; and also encourage the committing of scripture to memory. Average number of attendance in 1864, 62.

Officers for 1875 were as follows: Supt., A. J. Murray; Sec'y., John C. Eller; Treas., Robert McPharlan; Average attendance for 1875, 50.

Officers for the year 1876: Supt., A. J. Murray; Sec'y., Jos. F. Emmert; Treas., Robert McPharlan; Librarian, Daniel McPharlan. Average attendance up to date, 86.

We have now adopted the Gospel Hymns; first, because they are very cheap; second, because the children from other schools are familiar with them and join us heartily in singing. At present we have no Library for distribution.

We use tickets, cards, &c., for attendance, good lessons, memorizing, &c.

The Brethren Bible-Class of Huntingdon was organized May 1876. Attendance about 20. During part of the summer used Lesson Leaves, but of late thought it not so good. Now take Bible and commit such portions as seem proper. Write essays on Scriptural subjects, &c. Prospects very encouraging. Open and close as usual. Conducted by the Brethren. Meet every Sabbath afternoon and in session 1½ hours.

Hill Valley school number from 50 to 70. Average about 60. Open and close in the usual way. Use no lesson papers. Sing from Union Hymn books. Not in favor of pic-nics. Has been in operation two years.

It was moved that a committee be appointed to draft a form of resolutions and queries to be subject to the adoption, amendment, or disapproval of the convention. Brethren Daniel Snowberger, J. M. Zuck, H. B. Brumbaugh and J. M. Mohler, were appointed. Meeting then adjourned for refreshments, by singing a hymn.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The meeting was called to order by the Moderator. Hymn was sung. Report of Committee called for. Read by the Clerk. Subject to amendment, adoption, or disapproval by the convention.

Resolutions passed for the government of the Brethren Sabbath-School:

1st. Resolved, That we, as teachers, qualify ourselves so as to be able to defend the doctrine of the Bible in its purity, against all opposition.

2d. That we, as members of the Brethren Church, take no part in pic-nics, celebrations, church festivals, nor anything of that nature.

3d. That we teach, when called in question, the characteristics of the christian, viz.: humility, non-resistance, gentleness of spirit, innocency and plainness of character both in manners and dress.

4th. That we instruct our delegates to use their influence to have our Sunday-Schools conducted by members of the German Baptist Church as far as possible; if not members enough for teachers, others who are friendly to the doctrine of Christ.

5th. That we instruct our delegates to use their influence against libraries.

6th. That inasmuch as the lesson leaves published by the different denominations do not fully meet our views and wants,

Therefore, This meeting agrees to appoint one or more brethren to prepare lessons for the Sunday School, to be published in the Young Disciple, or separately if the demand will justify it.

The convention then appointed the following named as a committee: Brethren H. B. Brumbaugh, James Quinter, J. M. Zuck, and J. B. Brumbaugh.

QUERY.—Is it considered expedient to give liberty to persons not members of the church of the Brethren to deliver an address to the school.

ANS.—We think it should be left to the discretion of the Superintendent in charge.

QUERY 2.—Are the lesson leaves now in use in the Sabbath schools beneficial?

Tabled.

QUERY 3.—Would it be best to adopt a uniform or fixed plan for conducting our Sunday schools?

ANS.—We think it would as far as circumstances will admit.

QUERY 4.—What kind of hymns should be used by the Brethren in the Sunday school?

Bro. A. B. Brumbaugh recommended the Centennial edition of the Service of Song.

Bro. Henry Harshbarger opposed the introduction of any songster; favors the use of the Brethren's Hymn Book.

Bro. John Spanogle thinks our Hymn Book not suitable for Sabbath schools, but advised the brethren to get up a collection of music.

Brethren Daniel Snowberger, Abraham Myers, Michael Kinsel, James R. Lane, J. M. Zuck, and H. B. Brumbaugh thought it good to make a selection of music.

Convention then agreed to defer the matter for the present, with a view of getting up a book of our own.

QUERY 5. How can we best secure the attendance of parents and scholars to the Sabbath school?

This subject was quite freely discussed by the following named brethren: Albert Steinberger, J. M. Zuck, John Spanogle, Daniel Snowberger, Archy VanDyke, James Lane, and J. B. Brumbaugh.

Query answered in the following manner:

1st. Ministers should feel deeply interested in the youth, believing that the future good of the church very greatly rests upon them. Hence the necessity of being well prepared.

2d. That parents, as well as ministers, take an active part in the Sunday school, by gathering their children together and taking them to place of meeting.

3d. That the brethren and sisters pay special visits to families in the community in which the Sabbath school is held, and all children who absent themselves on account of poverty, said brethren and sisters are to supply all that is necessary for their admittance, &c.

Resolved, That the proceedings of this meeting be sent for publication in our periodicals.

Having no more business the Convention adjourned by singing and prayer.

H. B. BRUMBAGH, Clerk.
JOHN M. MOHLER, Secretary.

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

Not a Dye; makes harsh hair soft and silky cleanses the scalp from all impurities, causing the hair to grow where it has fallen off or become thin.

Can be applied by the hand as it does not stain the hand or soil the finest linen. As a Hair Dressing it is the most perfect the world has ever produced. The hair is renovated and strengthened, and natural color restored without the application of mineral substances.

Since the introduction of this truly valuable preparation into this country, it has been the wonder and admiration of all classes, as it has proved to be the only article that will absolutely without deception, restore gray hair to its original color, health, softness, lustre and beauty, and produce hair on bald heads of its original growth and color.

This beautiful and fragrantly perfumed article is complete within itself, no washing or preparation before or after its use, or accompaniment of any kind being required to obtain these desirable results.

HERE IS THE PROOF
OF ITS

SUPERIOR EXCELLENCE.

Read this Home Certificate, testified to by Edward B. Garrigue, one of the most competent Druggists and Chemists of Philadelphia, a man whose veracity none can doubt.

I am happy to add my testimony to the great value of the "London Hair Color Restorer," which restored my hair to its original color, and the hue appears to be permanent. I am satisfied that this preparation is nothing like a dye, but operates upon the secretions. It is also a beautiful hair dressing and promotes the growth. I purchased the first bottle from Edward B. Garrigue, druggist, Tenth and Coates streets, who can also testify my hair was quite gray when I commenced its use.

MRS. MILLER,

No. 730 North Ninth St., Phila.

Dr. Swaney & Son—Respected friends: I have the pleasure to inform you that a lady of my acquaintance, Mrs. Miller, is delighted with the success of your "London Hair Color Restorer." Her hair was falling rapidly and quite gray. The color has been restored, the falling off entirely stopped, and a new growth of hair is the result. E. B. GARRIGUES,
Druggist, cor. Tenth and Coates, Phila.

BOSTON TESTIMONY.

July 22d, 1871.—Dr. Swaney & Son: Last winter, while in Trenton, N. J., I procured six bottles of London Hair Color Restorer, which I like very much, in fact better than anything I have used in the last nine years. If you please, send me one dozen bottles C. O. D., care of W. S. Fogler & Son, druggists, No. 723 Tremont street, Boston.

Respectfully yours,

ADA BAKER,

The Primitive Christian.

is published every Tuesday at $1.00 a year, postage included.

This Christian journal is devoted to the defense and promotion of Primitive Christianity, as held and practiced by the Church of the Brethren, or German Baptists.

They accept the New Testament as the only proper rule of faith and practice, and hold to the observance of all its commandments and doctrines; among which are Faith, Repentance, Baptism by Trine Immersion, Prayer, the Washing of the Feet, the Lord's Supper, the Communion, Non-Resistance, Non-Conformity to the world, and the Perfecting of Holiness in the fear of the Lord.

As space will permit, some attention will be given to such secular matters as may be judged instructive to our readers.

TRUST.

I cannot see with my small human sight,
Why God should lead this way or that for me;
I only know he saith, "Child, follow me,"
But I can trust

I know not why my path should be at times
So straitly hedged, so strangely barred
before;
I only know God could keep wide the door.
But I can trust.

I find no answer, often, when beset,
With questions fierce and subtle on my way,
And often have but strength to faintly
pray.
But I can trust.

I often wonder, as with trembling hand
I cast the seed along the furrowed ground
If ripened fruit for God will there be found!
But I can trust.

I cannot know why suddenly the storm
Should rage so fiercely round me in its
wrath;
But this I know, God watches all my path,
And I can trust.

I may not draw aside the mystic veil
That hides the unknown future from my
sight;
Nor know if for me waits the dark or light;
But I can trust.

I have no power to look across the tide,
To know, while here, the land across the
river;
But this I know, I shall be God's servant;
So I can trust.

SERVANTS AND CITIZENS.

BY GEORGE BUCHER.

Servant and Master are correlatives. The one cannot exist without the other. A servant—a faithful servant—is obedient to his master in all things. Christ, as the servant of the Father, was obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Phil. 2 : 7, 8. If we are the servants—faithful servants of Jesus, we do all that he has commanded us. Even so they who are the servants of Satan do Satan's will. "Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin." John 8 : 34. "Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?" Rom. 6 : 16.

All servants, however, are not faithful servants. Some are merely pretenders.

Our betters tell us they are our humble servants, but understand us to be their slaves. There are such pretending servants of Jesus too; They say to him, "we are your humble servants;" but, in fact, they hold Jesus as a slave. For our present purpose we include all the professors of Jesus under the name of servant, whether faithful or not.

In a parable recorded in the nineteenth chapter of Luke the word servant is so used. The parable begins thus: "A certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return. And he called his ten servants, and delivered them ten pounds, and said unto them, 'Occupy till I come.'" From the verse preceding this parable we learn that Jesus spake this parable because he was nigh Jerusalem, and because "they thought that the kingdom of God should immediately appear." I believe this parable cannot be understood except these two 'causes' are kept in view. They had an idea that Jesus would found a worldly kingdom. But, no. Already soon after his baptism the devil took him up into an exceeding high mountain, and offered him all the kingdoms of the world provided he would fall down and worship him. But the offer was refused. Matt. 4. At another time when Jesus had fed about five thousand men with five barley loaves and two small fishes, and leaving twelve baskets full yet, he departed into a mountain himself alone because he perceived that they would come and take him by force to make him a king. John 6.

The nobleman in this parable is Jesus. He went into a far country. Hereafter shall the son of man sit on the right hand of the power of God. Luke 22:29 "I go to prepare a place for you." John 14 : 2.

And he will return. This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven. Acts 1 : 11. I will come again and receive you unto myself. John 14 : 3. Behold he cometh with the cloud. Rev. 1 : 7.

And he called his ten servants. By these I understand all who have vowed allegiance to king Jesus.

And delivered them ten pounds. The gospel of our salvation. Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. And there are differences of administration, but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all. But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal. For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another, the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; to another, faith by the same Spirit; to another, the gifts of healing by the same Spirit, to another, the working of miracles; to another, prophecy; to another, discerning of spirits; to another, divers kinds of tongues; to another, interpretation of tongues: but all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will." 1 Cor. 12 : 4-11. From the above quotation we learn how the pounds are differently distributed.

Occupy till I come. Occupy—trade—do business. That is the way we are to understand it. Here is work for every one—jointly and severally. Work for the brethren, and work for the sisters. Work for the weakest lay member, and work for the strongest elder. The one was not baptized, nor the other ordained to be idle. It will not do to say, "I cannot write and preach, sing and pray like some others, therefore I will wrap my pound in my napkin and do nothing." If we are faithful servants we improve our pound. "Neglect not the gift that is in thee." 1 Tim. 5 : 14. "Wherefore I put thee in remembrance, that thou stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands." 2 Tim. 1 : 6. "As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God." 1 Peter 4 : 10.

We receive this pound not to be spend-thrifts with, but faithful stewards. Not to be "busy-bodies in other men's matters," but to mind our own. "Peter seeing him" (John) saith to Jesus, Lord, and what shall this man do? Jesus saith unto him, (Peter) If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me." John 21 : 21, 22. We are further taught in this parable that after the King's return "he commanded the servants to be called unto him" "that he might know how much every man had gained by trading." The first said, "Lord, thy pound hath gained ten pounds." And the king recompensed "the good servant" for being "faithful in a little" by giving him "authority over ten cities." The second had gained five pounds and received authority over five cities. "And another came, saying, Lord, behold here is thy pound which I have kept laid up in a napkin: for I feared thee, because thou art an austere man; thou takest up that thou laydest not down, and reapest that thou didst not sow." And the king answered, "Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked servant." * * * Take from him the pound, and give it to him that hath ten pounds. * * * For I say unto you, that unto every one which hath, shall be given; and from him that hath not, even that he hath shall be taken away from him." This servant neglected to improve his pound, reasoning that if the king should have all, the principal and interest, therefore he took that which he had not laid down, and reaped that he did not sow. Foolish servant! Had he not the principal from the king? Without this he could not start business. Should not the increase come from this principal? Therefore he owed all to the king. "So then, neither is he that planneth any thing, neither he that watereth! but God that giveth the increase." 1 Cor. 3 : 7. The reader will please notice that these servants were all servants, (no distinction in the name)—that they were all under the same king,—that the faithful servants received just rewards,—and that the drone lost even what he had. This, dear reader, teaches us the eternal woe or wo of the servants of Jesus. And, though not all were faithful, yet salvation was among the servants of the king. But our subject, as also the parable, has not only servants, but also citizens. Citizens in the parable I understand to mean all who have not vowed allegiance to king Jesus.

"How then," will the reader ask, "are they his citizens? do we not read 'Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints?'" Eph. 2 : 19. Yes, the servants of Jesus are "fellow-citizens with the saints," but, the children of this world are only citizens of Jesus. Here is the distinction between "the kingdom of this world" and "the kingdom of heaven." In this kingdom are the servants (of the parable), in that the citizens.

The citizens are the subjects of "the powers that be." And from the fact that "the powers that be are ordained of God," (Rom. 13) and from the fact that Christ is set at God's right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come : and hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church," (Eph. 1 : 20—22. From these facts we can see how the subjects of "the powers that be" are the citizens of Jesus. And how, on the other hand, the servants of Jesus are not subjects of "the powers that be," but only subject to that power. Rom. 13 : 1. "Put them in mind to be subject to principalities and powers." Titus 3 : 1.

The parable says of the citizens : "But his citizens hated him, and sent a message after him, saying, We will not have this man to reign over us." This expresses the spirit of the king's citizens. This is the spirit of all who belong to the kingdom of this world. They will not have this man to reign over them. The citizens feel able to govern themselves. They see no necessity in applying the whole gospel plan of salvation. The servants, in contrast, are independent of all the citizens' laws. Celsus, the first writer against Christianity, wrote of the Christians : "They oulve the law." Christians have no need for the law. The laws are not made for Christians; but, they are "a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil." "Not a terror to good works, but to the evil." Rom. 13. The notes, and bonds, and deeds, and mortgages, &c., are not on account of Christians. A Christian's word is better than a writing. These writings are all on account of evil doers. All citizens that repent, and will that Jesus should "reign over them," lose their citizenship.

But we are not done yet with the parable. What became of the citizens? This is what the record says : "But those mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me." The citizens are called enemies. All who will not have Jesus to reign over them are enemies to Jesus. We remarked before that though the servants were not all promoted, yet salvation was among them ;

but, what do we find among the citizens? Nothing but dark despair! O sinner why will you die?

"O turn ye, O turn ye, for why will ye die,
When God in great mercy is coming so nigh?
Now Jesus invites you, the Spirit says,
Come,
And angels are waiting to welcome you home."

For the Primitive Christian.
CHRISTIAN WEDLOCK.

BY C. F. DETWEILER.

"Only in the Lord."

On entering into this subject I will first ask christian forbearance and prayerful deliberation of any reader who may be concerned in it, or in any part entertain a different view of the subject. The text at the head of this article expresses my position on the subject as plainly as any language that I could employ.

In the earliest history of the human family, before the people began to multiply, we find no command concerning the selection of a companion, but as soon as God chose a select people to serve him, we find that their first recorded offense against him was a mingling with the children of men in the bonds of wedlock.

In every divine institution there is a design; and the design of the family constitution, as set forth in the word of God, is, and has been through every period of the world's history, to preserve a seed to be consecrated to his service. As it is written in Malachi, "And did he not make one? Yet had he not the residue of the Spirit. And wherefore one? That he might seek a godly seed." Again in Psalms 23 : 30, "A seed shall serve him; it shall be accounted to the Lord for a generation."

As this is God's prime object in the family constitution; it must be the prime object of every soul that is thoroughly converted to God in every requisite step or consideration on becoming a member of the head of a family.

After the incontinence of the antediluvians had led to their destruction from the face of the earth, God called Abraham to go out from his kindred and country and promised him in his old age, while he was yet without descent, that in his seed the nations of the earth should be blessed. In order that his son Isaac should not have a wife of the daughters of the land of Canaan, Abraham required his eldest servant to take a wife for his son Isaac from his own country and kindred. The first law among his descendants was to prohibit a mingling with those outside the covenant, and we find the line of demarcation between the Christian church and the world, to be equally definite and fixed.

"Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness, and what communion hath light with darkness, and what concord hath Christ with Belial, or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? . . . Wherefore come out from among them and be separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean things, and I will receive you." This language is positive and plain, and too comprehensive to allow any middle ground between faith and infidelity, and yet thousands who claim unreserved allegiance to Christ, will reason themselves out of its import. In the earliest period of history of the Christian church the chasm between Christ and Belial, was so well recognized by both sides that there was very little if any tendency to mingle.

"The church and the world walk wide apart

On the changing shores of time."

But when the unmasked power of darkness began to crumble before the persevering of the saints, Satan executed his infernal schemes under the mask. To-day he is a masked dealer in counterfeit theories which beguile men from the simplicity of primitive Christianity, and a smuggler of innovation of wood, hay and stubble, in many forms. He assumes the form of an angel of light, and brands narrow-mindedness, sectarianism, and superstition, upon the faith that is complete in Christ. His whole aim is to bring the whole Christian church into a state like that of the church of Sardis of which the spirit said "Thou hast a name that thou livest and art dead."

When we see the church and the world walking with arms hooked, when church affairs are displayed to a pleasure-seeking world to raise funds to pay for bells, organs, &c., when leagues monopolies, secretism, bazaars of fashion, and with all the yoke of wedlock, have mingled the church and the world in one conglomeration, it must certainly have lost much of the purity that is implied in the 6th chapter of 2d Cor. "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." We will try to consider some of the pretexs upon which this command is violated.

A rather absurd, though by no means uncommon theory, is that the person who above all others fascinates or calls forth a man's affections is the proper mate. But this theory will not hold out. In many cases instead of their affections being reciprocal those of the second person are entered in another person. The "true love" or affection of several persons are sometimes concentrated to one person and extreme jealous in the result. God is not the authority of such confusion. It is also claimed that souls may be won to the church in this way. The work of winning souls to Christ by lawful measures is very laudable; but Jesus said "No one can come unto me except the Father which sent me draw him." John 6: 44. Therefore no one can be any more than the instrument in God's hands to win souls to Christ, and when you venture on forbidden grounds you incur responsibility, and your missionary enterprise becomes a perilous lottery, and a snare.

In the days of the apostles there were cases in which one member of the head of a gentile family became a believer and the other did not. The Corinthian church had at one time written to Paul about some things of this kind, and in the sixth chapter of his first epistle to that church, he gives them instruction concerning these things. After straightly warning them against the great sin of breaking their marriage vows, and the obligations of their marriage relations, he comes to the cases in which believers were related to unbelievers in marriages that were contracted before they had ever heard the preaching of the Christian faith. Of these he disposes in these words: "But to the rest speak I not the Lord If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and she be pleased to dwell with him, let him not put her away." 1 Cor. 7: 12. This language Paul wrote as the counsel of his own discretion, and not of the Lord. It had reference only to those who were placed in the relation of unequal companionship with unbelievers, by circumstances under which they had no control. They were in circumstances from which they could not be released without severing their marriage relations, which under all ordinary circumstances would be a great sin. There is no fellowship between righteousness and unrighteousness, no communion between light and darkness, and no concord between Christ and Belial, but on the other hand, a Christian must be long-suffering, hopeful and gentle. Therefore to those Corinthians who had received sufficient grace to break the chains of darkness, opposition and unbelief, in the strongest ties of earthly relationship, Paul very reasonably attributes a sufficient degree of sanctification and stability by the grace of God to sanctify in a certain degree the unbelieving companion. If Daniel had been penned up in the temple of Nebuchadnezzar, he would nevertheless have been Daniel the man of God; and if these Christians by fate were placed in the position of unequal wedlock with Belial, they were Christians still, and hence the very reasonable counsel to abide in the state in which they were called, with the hope of being instrumental in bringing their companions to Christ.

When Daniel was at liberty he did not set his affection upon the courts of the king of Persia, and the Christian who is by the providence of God set at liberty, is not to go back to the fellowship of darkness and disobedience.

The wife is bound by the law as long as her husband liveth; but if her husband be dead, she is at liberty to be married to whom she will; only in the Lord. That is a restriction that cannot be encroached upon without sin. Every faithful Christian desires to teach his family to pray, by precept and example. He tries to inculcate into the minds of his children the principles of a saving faith. To the extent that we neglect this, we neglect our most sacred trust, next to that which relates directly to our own souls. If this then is to be the primary object of our life, how can we reconcile the idea of voluntarily choosing a companion whose life and actions promise no co-operation or interest in this most sacred word? The question must arise at every thought of religious exercises in the family, "What communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial." The day when your affections go out after one who makes light of the demands of true religion, the evil one is working on the strings of your heart with all the impudence and subtlety by which he tempted Eve. The demands of the word of God for a clean separation from a world of disobedience are as plain as language can make it.

To the extent that they fail to be carried out in the discipline of the church, the apostolic discipline fails to be carried out. Every form of contamination with the world is an innovation of combustible material. When the great Architect will appear to try every man's work with fire, there will be a fearful reckoning with the builders of wood hay and stubble. When "a fire shall devour before him and it shall be very tempestuous round him," there shall be a fearful cracking among the beams of nominal membership. Therefore let us heed the words of Jesus, "What I say unto you I say unto you all, watch."

WHAT DISCONTENT DOES.

This is a monster that is creating terrible devastation with human happiness. Being invisible, its advances are unperceived until it has affected so firm a lodgment that all efforts to exorcise it are unavailing.

Its field of operation is large, embracing nearly every condition of life. It enters the cottage of the laborer and embitters his toil. It is found in the home of the wealthy, where it renders unenjoyable the blessings of wealth. Under its influence the kind husband becomes morose and irritable; the loving wife peevish and complaining. Wealth loses its desirableness and poverty becomes unendurable. Single life is dull, and matrimony galling and intolerable. Labor is irksome and idleness is purgatory. Young man, do you feel a certain vague dissatisfaction with yourself—your position—your finances? Are you envious of some one who has surpassed you in some particular? Beware! These are unmistakable symptoms of discontent. Alter your circumstances if you will but do not sit down and brood over supposed ill usage at the hands of fortune.

Husband, shut, bolt and bar every avenue by which the terrible monster may enter your thoughts; for if discontent get possession of the remotest corner of your heart, he will not rest until he is routed every vestige of domestic felicity. If you are poor, energetic effort will remedy the evil. Discontent will add nothing to your bank account, but will make your poverty doubly burdensome.

And you, young wife, allow me to suggest the importance of your giving no place in your heart to this foe to your peace of mind. Is your position an humble one? Adorn it. Are your burdens heavy? Discontent will add to their weight an hundred fold. Is your husband depressed and inattentive to you? You will agree with me that discontent affords no remedy. Try a little kindly, cheerful conversation. Remember that a smile has far greater power to dispel gloom than many words of chiding or complaint.—Selected.

INWARD PEACE.

Many say they have no peace nor rest, but so many crosses and trials, afflictions and sorrows that they know not how they shall ever get through them. Now he who will perceive and take note, perceiveth clearly that true peace and rest lie not in outward things; for if it were so the evil spirit also would have peace when things go according to his will, which is nowise the case. Therefore we must consider and see what is that peace which Christ left to his disciples when he said, "My peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you." Christ meant that inward peace which can break through all assaults and crosses of oppression, suffering, misery, humiliation, and what more there may be of the like, so that a man may be joyful and patient therein; and what was bitter to him before shall become sweet, and his heart shall remain unmoved under all changes, at all times.

WATER FROM THE WELLS OF ABRAHAM.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To Sister Catharine R. Suptee,
of Philadelphia, Pa.:

There is only one way of digging so as to get a draught of the "Upper Springs," and that is with Abraham's spade and mattock. It is not every one that hits the Fountain of Life in the heart of Jehovah-Jesus. "Al-most" and "Altogether" make the difference between Paul and Agrippa—between Abraham and Abimelech—between fealty and rebellion—between Heaven and Hell: Abraham is a faith-name, and wherever he sinks his mattock a "river of living water" will gush out. Abram can "provaricate and falsify, but Abraham never. Gen. 20: 2. We may "have a name to live, and be dead." Abraham by name, Abram by conduct. Peter confessed Christ: Simon denied Him. If Abram digs to the centre of the earth, he will find no water: but for Abraham the Chrystal River out of the Eternal Throne will roll through the desert. Although "the Philistines stop the wells and fill them with earth," Isaac, the seed of faith, will open them again, and "call their names after the names by which his father had called them." Gen. 26: 15, 18. Faith will not cease digging, no matter how powerful and persistent the counterworking. The first well may be called Esek, the second SITNAH: but the third will bear the glorious Gospel name, REHOBOTH. The first is strife, the second HATRED, and the third ROOM—room for the whole world—the Rehoboth of God, Jesus the Christ. Here we must slake in Christ, or miss the coveted drop on the tip of Lazarus' finger forever. He that drinks from Jacob's well "shall thirst again:" but whosoever drinketh of the well of Abraham "shall never thirst;" but it shall "be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." One is Sychar—falsehood—and the other is Beersheba—the well of the oath—the inviolable oath of the I AM. Heb. 6: 16, 18. Israel is better than Jacob, and the muddy Jordan of God better than the transparent, sparkling Abana and Parpar of Damascus. Faith draws water with joy out of the wells of salvation. Is. 12: 3. Unbelief dies of thirst on the brink of the fountain. Abraham and his seed "turn the valley of Baca into a well," and "fill the the pools" with "rain" from the "white cloud" of the Shekinah. Ps. 84: 6, Matth. 17: 5. Faith melts the rock into angel beverage, and

"turns the wilderness into a standing water, and dry ground into water-springs." Ps. 107: 35! Hungry and thirsty, God's pilgrims faint in the "solitary way"; but they "cry unto God in their trouble, and he delivers them out of their distresses." Ps. 107: 4—6. They dig the well Rehoboth, they dig unto John 4: 14, and lose themselves with "all the fulness of God." Abraham saw the day of Christ, and was glad. John 8: 56. To shake hands with Abraham is to make acquaintance with God. Who drinks out of his well, drinks life and peace and superlative bliss out of the heart of Trinity. "Abraham believed God, and it was accounted to him for righteousness." Gal. 3: 6. Here is a well without a bottom—deep as the Infinite, Unfathomable God, always full and overflowing, and the voice and heart of Everlasting Love ever crying, "if any man thirst, let him come unto me, and drink." John 7: 47. "Be not afraid, only believe." Mark 5: 36. "If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth." Mark 6: 23. "All things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive." Matth. 21: 22. A great well-digger was father Abraham. Beersheba and Rehoboth are still open, gushing with the surges of "the river of God, which is full of water." No matter how often the Philistines fill them with earth, and seal them with Esek and Sitnah, Isaac will come with his father's digging instruments and strike them into the very bosom of Deity, and flood the thirsty soul from the Fount of Infinite Love.

God has smitten you; but the love-stroke has in it all the tenderness of His heart. Heaven alone can mediate the wound that Heaven inflicts. The All-Love never breaks an earthly cistern without opening a faucet out of his own eternal fulness. He never dries up the rill without offering the River. He never breaks a link out of a golden circle without Himself clasping the breach. He never weans but to a higher good: never winnows but for his garner. He has sent the rider of the Pale Horse across your threshold, and the pillar of your house fell. Blessed is the fall that exalts: the death that ushers into a purer, diviner life. Could there be tears in Heaven, more cause would your husband have to weep over you, than you over him. But he knows too much to mourn where God smiles. This side the sombre lattice weep we must. Let this be your warrant, "Jesus weep." He will not chide your tears. When standing at the sepulchre of buried love with the bereaved sisters of Bethany, He felt the pangs that rend you now. Weep. But let the rainbow glisten in your tears. The hope that gilds the tomb paints every drop of sorrow with the emerald hues around the Throne. Rev. 4: 3. There is a sacred luxury in giving vent to pent up grief which none but lacerated bosoms know. Weep. But forget not to put the soft, sweet treble of Heaven's laugh into your sobs. Let your tears fall into Abraham's well, and drink them. Oh! the sweet, soul-relieving, soul-nourishing tears of faith. They are the XXX of the Christian life. A husband in glory! The companion of your bosom now in the bosom of Jesus and the embrace of angels! The lips on which you hung for many years, now drinking draughts of bliss from the mouth altogether lovely. Sol. Song 1: 2, and 5: 16. Weep, because he is gone: dry your tears because of his "joy unspeakable and full of glory." Well dead is better than any life the world can give. Fortune never had a Dives that fared as sumptuously as Lazarus. Abraham's bosom is but an eternal libation from Abraham's well. Your husband will no more need to dig the stones and earth of the Philistines out of the "nether springs." He will no more need to "feed his kids beside the shepherd's tents," or "turn the valley of Baca into a well." He has reached the Fountain-Head, and shall thirst no more. He has "inherited all things"—rich in God, rich as God. He will no more sojourn in Mesekh, or dwell in the tents of Kedar." He is inside the pearly gates and Jasper walls, under the "rafters of fir," and enclosed with the beams of Eternity's cedar. Sol. Song 1: 17. While you are humming your song in the "valley of Achor," he is swelling the Alleluia of the Celestial chorus, and sweeping the golden harp to the praise of the Wonderful Jesus Seed back the echo out of the glad, filial heart of faith.

Has Cherith become dry? 1 Kings 17: 7 Zarephath has water still, verse 10. That "little water in a vessel" which the parched Tishbite received from the famished widow's hand, was dipped from Abraham's well. It was faith-water. If the heavens are sealed, and the earth is baked with drought, faith sits by an open Fountain. The "many exceeding great and precious promises" given us in the "seed of Abraham," are all "wells of salvation." "Whosoever will, let him come and drink." Bring your vessel with confidence and draw out to your hearts content. "The well is deep," but the chain of faith reaches to the bottom, although it be bottomless. John 4: 11. "Drink abundantly, O beloved." Sol. Song 5: 1. In the wells of Abraham all common water is transmitted into wine, which "goeth down sweetly, causing the lips of those that are asleep to speak." Sol. Song 7: 9. Daughter of Abraham, open thy mouth wide that God may fill it, and divinely intoxicate you with the "spiced wine of the juice of Heaven's pomegranite." 2 Cor. 6: 11, Sol Song 8: 2. While the wilderness has but one Marah, Elin has twelve fountains. You are on the border of a sinless, sorrowless, deathless Forever—a shoreless, bottomless, unbeginning, unending ocean of bliss. Blessed are they that thirst, for they shall be filled with all the unmingled rapture of the Eternal Thee.

DIVINE PROVIDENCE.

BY REBECCA POLCK.

The supposition that God exercises a general government or general providence over the affairs of the world without condescending to minutia, is poor consolation to the struggling Christian who needs an object of confiding trust while encountering the trials and ills of life. Such religion is of little worth. Paganism itself could give a better theory of the supposed overruling care of the gods; and leaving out of the inspired record, a better faith is hinted at in the profane pages of Shakespeare who says, "There's a divinity that shapes our ends." Verily God is everywhere. He is observant everywhere; with him the night shineth as the day, the darkness and the light are both alike to him. Thou hast searched me, thou knowest my down-sitting and mine up-rising, thou understandest even my thoughts afar off, thou art acquainted with all my ways, there is not a word on my tongue but thou knowest it altogether. God is everywhere cognizant of all persons and of the affairs of his people to protect them and do them good. He invites them to seek his face evermore, and if they suffer trials he bids them call upon him promising that he will deliver them, that he will hear their cry and will save them.

"Should troubles assail,
And dangers affright,
If friends should all fail
And foes all unite,

then the Lord will show himself strong to deliver those who call upon him and who trust in him, causing all things to work together for good to them that love him. Then God is everywhere observant of the course of the wicked that he may render to all the retributions due and they can not escape his eye nor his hand. Though they dig to hell thence shall his hand take them; though they limb to heaven thence will he bring them down; though they call for rocks and mountains to cover and hide them, they will find that there is no escaping. Touching the Christian's privilege of trusting in the care of Divine providence, it is enjoined in everything. By prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. Certainly this includes temporal as well as spiritual things. Should we cite a tithe of the known instances in which God has answered prayer for temporal as well as spiritual things, it would occupy much time and much space. We may name an instance or two from the sacred record. In the early patriarchal day it is stated that Abimelech was afflicted with a providential visitation. His very life was in forfeiture but God instructed him in his trouble to make application to Abraham his friend who was a man of faith and prayer. He shall pray for thee, said he, and thou shalt live. This was complied with. Abraham prayed unto God in behalf of Abimelech and in answer to his prayer, God healed him and the members of his household. But should it be thought that in his case God heard Abraham because he was a prince offering prayer in behalf of another prince, we have at hand on the very same page another instance of providential interposition in answer to a prayer. A poor boy, son of a bond woman, was lying under a shrub, far out in a desert place famishing and near perishing with thirst. It is evident that the child would have died had human help alone been invoked, but he cried out unto the Lord, and God was not so occupied with his infinite care as to miss hearing the cry even of a perishing child. The angel of God responded out of heaven, bidding his mother fear not, for God hath heard the voice of the lad. He forgetteth not the cry of the humble. Of course relief and deliverance were immediately brought and who dare say that this was not a special interposition of Providence? We might multiply Scriptural instances but we will only refer to the remarkable deliverance of Peter. Herod had taken the life of St. James with the sword and had cast Peter into prison where it is likely he awaited a similar fate, but prayer was made without ceasing by the church in behalf of Peter. Prayer prevailed. The circumstances of his deliverance are doubtless familiar to all. Being set free he proceeded straightway to the house of an old sister where prayer was going on. We may presume that the faith of the saints was confirmed and that prayers were turned to thanksgiving.

SKY ROCKETS.

Nothing ascends with more brilliance, or descends with less, than a sky rocket. And "up like a rocket, and down with a stick," is a fair illustration of the pompous display and sudden ruin of many persons. An old man, toiling through a long series of years, by patient endeavor secures a modest competence, or even attains to wealth. His upstart son says, "Give me the portion of goods that belongs to me;" and straightway he enters into business for himself. His story is a brief one: pride, pomp, luxury, display, splurge; ending in embarrassment, villainy, and ruin. The rocket blazed magnificently, but the stick is not worth picking up.

As a rule, no person is fit to use money until he has first earned it. A man who has gained a dollar by hard work, knows what it costs and what it is worth; a man who has neither earned his living nor his wealth, is fitted for a spendthrift, and in business his ruin may be confidently predicted. Doubtless it would have been better for the sons of many a rich man, had they been kicked out of doors without a penny, and sent to saw wood and earn their living until they had gained money enough to stock a peanut stand, and beginning at the bottom of the ladder thus ascending to prosperity, than to enter into the possession of unearned wealth which only proves a curse and a snare and the source of ruin to them.

Pride goeth before a fall. Rockets are sure to come down unsightly sticks and there are religious sky rockets which are no exception to the rule. They shine, but they do not burn; they give light, but they have no heat. They blaze for a while like a star of the first magnitude, but the dragon's tail always pulls them down at last. They are wandering stars to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever and ever. Far better is it for any man to fill a humble position if he may be one of the stars held in the right hand of Him that walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks. Their place is secure; and though their light be not so brilliant as present, yet by-and-by they shall shine at the brightness of the firmament, and as the stars forever and ever.

I have had always two fixed ideas about young men: First, that they should be substantially educated in the country where they are probably to live; and second, that not a small part of the value of a university or public school education consists in adjusting a young man, during the most flexible period of life, to his place among the associates who can best help him onward. To these two considerations I should always be willing to sacrifice a good deal."

ly our fears are vain, and if our re-proofs are disregarded there is still some satisfaction. The man of God who rose from his bed to reprove a blasphemer, and only received in return scoffs and taunts, when asked what he got for his pains, answered, "A soft pillow." And when in the fear of God and in the spirit and love of Christ we have done our duty to persons who have gone astray, we win for ourselves a quiet heart, a soft pillow, a conscience void of offence toward God and man.

But often the seed that is sown in these private conversations becomes fruitful beyond all our expectations; since it does not depend upon our own power or standing to give force to what we say. The child may sow seed which shall bud and blossom and bring forth plentiful fruit. A little hand may place in the soil the seed which shall spring up and reach gigantic stature, and live when we are dead. Thus the word which we speak with trembling may be made powerful by the blessing of the Lord, and our prayers may be answered and our tears rewarded by the turning of sinners from the error of their ways, and the joy that is in heaven when they come home to God.

KEEP IN THE RUTS.

An article recently appeared headed "Keep Out of the Ruts." The author commences his excellent remarks by a reference to the ruts worn in the rocky mountain roads on the island of Cuba. When one of the wheels of a vehicle descending the mountain, get into these ruts, they must be kept there until the foot is reached, as there would be danger of upsetting in the attempt to "pull out." The writer uses illustrations to warn Christians and Christian ministers against the danger of falling into a mixed and formal way of doing things, and he makes some good points.

In thinking of this illustration and of the remarks in connection with it, the fact was suggested to my mind that ruts are not always to be avoided.

On some roads our only safety is to keep the wheels of our vehicle in them; and doubtless on those Cuban mountain roads, as well as on some other hills we have travelled over, many unfortunate travellers in trying to keep out of the ruts have gone over the bank. So, we thought, there are some theological and religious ruts which are not to be avoided but which we should be glad to get into and to stay in. The danger does not threaten "so much" those who are in the ruts, as those who pride themselves on having "pulled out" of them.

Hence the religious prejudices and practices of many Christians of the present day are such that they need the warning—"Keep in the Ruts."

There is for example the rut of sound doctrine, which it is dangerous to avoid. The tendency of the times is to turn from the "old paths"—to abandon the established and time-honored creeds and confessions, because forsooth they are "old." The way the apostles and martyrs went—the way marked by the prayers, and toils and tears and blood of the confessors and reformers—the old highway of unchangeable, evangelical truth, is not adapted to the wants of the present "progressive" age. It has come to be considered by some a terrible thing for a man to be a firm, uncompromising believer in the doctrines of the divine Word, as taught by the worthies of the church in past ages; and because one can not conscientiously go in with every movement of the "liberal christians" of the day, he is set down as a hide-bound, exclusive bigot. He is in a dreadful rut. And yet, is it not strange that so many confessedly good and great men have traveled in these ruts all their lives? and is it not a significant fact that many who have heedlessly "pulled out" of them have been carried heedlessly into the wildest fanaticism. Let men pity us for keeping in these doctrinal ruts, and call us "old fogies" if they will, experience and observation have proven them good and safe places to be. Keep in the rut.

Again, there is the rut of faithful preaching. It is well enough to warn ministers against falling into a formal routine of expressions, illustrations, etc.; but too many are disposed to "pull out" of what we may call the rut (the old, tried and spiritual way) of preaching the Word. The way in which the faithful and fearless preachers of the gospel in past ages walked, who preached not themselves, but Christ and Him crucified—who were concerned not so much for their own temporal welfare as for the welfare of souls and the glory of God—this old way is not agreeable to modern ideas. It is a rut to be avoided by many for the sake of popularity, and at the sacrifice of the truth.

Once more, we may say there is the rut of practical piety, one which is made by those who follow in the footsteps of Him who went about doing good. Would that there were more Christians in this rut; would that it were worn so deep that they could not "pull out" of it if they would, till they get to the foot of the hill—the end of life's journey. Blessed is the man that gets into the well-worn ruts of good, religious principles and practices. Blessed is the man who has established the habit of reading the Word of God, of secret and family prayer, of regular attendance upon the services of God's house, of the diligent use of his time and means in promoting the good of his fellow men and the glory of God. Such habits are good ruts to go in. The avoiding of them or the "pulling out" of them by those who were once in, has been the fatal mistake of many a traveler in the journey of life. Keep in the rut. #### Educational Department.

EDITED BY J. M. ZUCK.

—We note the arrival of a lady student from Blair Co., Pa. A few more of the same class would be most welcome, as the school is almost too exclusively made up of representatives of the male sex. We prefer to have both sexes, as we think the influence of each upon the other is beneficial. The idea of the co-education of the sexes is endorsed by most of the Normal Schools of the country and is gaining ground in some of the leading colleges and universities. How long will it take our young sisters to catch a little of the educational spirit which characterizes the young women found in many of the schools of the country? Echo answers, "How long?" Quite a number of our young men are availing themselves of the educational advantages within their reach, and it seems to me that if our young women were wise they would exert themselves a little in the same direction.

HUNTINGDON NORMAL SCHOOL.

This school is now in session in the Pilgrim and PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN building, West Huntingdon, Pa. Students can enter at any time. Those now in attendance are from Maryland, Virginia, Colorado and the different counties of this State. The field also embraces Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, and other states, and it is hoped that some of these sections will soon be represented.

The expenses are as low as we can make them, and, when rightly understood, will be found much lower than most schools of the same grade. Tuition only 70 cents per week, payable one term (ten weeks) in advance. Boarding $3.00 per week, including light, fuel and furnished room. At present all the students are in the families of Brethren and we are making arrangements to extend our boarding accommodations so that we may have a suitable place for all the young brethren, sisters and friends who may favor us with their presence and patronage.

The studies this term are mathematics, including arithmetic, both written and mental, algebra and geometry; language, including orthography, English grammar, Latin translation, sentence making, essay writing, declamation, &c. Physiology is the branch of natural science on the programme this term, and is taught by both the text-book and the lecture method. Penmanship and drawing receive due attention. The physiology class are making some fine diagrams, and the geography class promise good work in map-drawing before the study is completed. Students in the English branches are especially solicited. Those in other branches will also be accommodated when practicable and when not inconsistent with the good of the school as a whole. It would be well, however, for such students to communicate with me before coming, in order that they may learn whether we can suit them. It is my desire to adapt the school to the wants of the great majority of the young people who are connected with the church, either by birth or adoption, not forgetting the old rhyme that "He that undertakes to please all and himself too, Undertakes what none can do."

We are having a very pleasant little school this term, and the prospects for next term are quite encouraging. Most of those now in attendance are members of the church,—just the class for whom it affords me the greatest pleasure to labor. Two of those have joined the church since they came here to school, and we trust that others will also soon come out on the Lord's side and thus show that with all their gettings they are resolved to get wisdom. The chorus,

"Who'll be the next?"

was sung at the baptismal waters when the young brother and sister above alluded to were received, and let me say that that question is still ringing in my ears and I trust it will by and by be answered in such a way as to cause the angels to rejoice and the sons of men to be glad.

Brothers who have children to educate should not forget the religious and social influences and advantages which may be found at this place. We have religious services every Sabbath, and once during the week we expect to see these services attended regularly by all the students, especially by those from abroad. Then, too, we have social and literary meetings in which the students mingle with the brethren and sisters connected with the Pilgrim and Primitive Christian establishment. We believe these associations are mutually pleasant and we trust they will prove mutually beneficial. To give the readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN an idea of some of the outside influences and advantages I will submit a brief report of the last meetings of the Bible-class and the literary society.

BIBLE CLASS.

Our Bible class meets in the Pilgrim chapel every Sabbath afternoon. At the last meeting sister Clara Miller read an essay on "Hope" and brother E. D. Kendig one on the "Hebrews." The first ten verses of the 12th chapter of Romans were committed and recited by nearly all the members of the class. Quite a number of referred questions were handed in and assigned to different members to be answered next Sabbath. In addition to the above exercises we have singing and prayer at the usual times.

LITERARY SOCIETY.

At the last meeting the "teacher's talk" was an outline of Force. The subject of brother J. B. B's "impromptu speech" was, Air. By an impromptu speech we mean one made without knowing the subject until the speaker is on his feet and ready to talk. The chairman of the society appoints some one in the audience to assign the subject, which is not done until the speaker is upon the floor waiting for his theme. The next exercise was the recitation of a poem by sister Phebe Norris. The poem selected was the one which according to report, President Lincoln used to rehearse many times every year. There are fourteen stanzas. The first and the last are as follows:

Oh, why should the spirit of mortal
be proud?
Like a swift, fleeting meteor, a fast
flying cloud,
A flash of the lightning, a break of the wave,
Man passeth from life to his rest in the grave.
'Tis the wink of an eye, 'tis the draught of a breath,
From the blossom of health to the
paleness of death,
From the gilded saloon to the tier and the shroud—
Oh, why should the spirit of mortal
be proud?

After the recitation the following question was debated: Resolved, That the late civil war did more harm than good. The affirmative was argued by brethren E. D. Kendig, Eliab Zuck and Gaius Brumbaugh; the negative, by brother Howard Flory, Mr. J. P. Martin and Dr. Brumbaugh. The affirmative called our attention to the losses of life, limb and property occasioned by the war, to the suffering of bereaved ones and also to the sad effects of the war upon the morals of the country. The negative dwelt more especially upon the extinction of slavery and the preservation of the union. In regard to slavery the affirmative maintained that many of the free blacks are worse off now than when in bondage. To this the negative replied that the degradation of the blacks follows as one of the evils of slavery rather than as a consequence of freedom. Had the blacks been allowed the blessings of freedom and the advantages of education they would not now be the helpless and dependent creatures that we find them to be in many sections of the South.

Sister Wealthy A. Clark, the critic for the evening, next made her report, after which the sentiment roll was called and some eighteen or twenty short extracts or selections were given by the different members of the society. The programme for the next meeting was then read, as follows:

1. Lecture on the Lungs, Dr. Brumbaugh; 2. Select Reading, A. D. Beachy; 3. Recite the Rules of Syntax, J. P. Martin; 4. Give seven choice similes from the Bible, sister Phebe R. Norris; 5. Name the countries of Europe and give the capital of each, N. P. Castle; 6. What kind of weather is indicated by a gray sunset, and why? E. A. Wharton; 7. In what poem are these words found:

"And when the restless day,
Expiring, lays the warbling world asleep,
Sweetest of birds! sweet Philomela, charm
The listening shades, and teach the night His praise."

also give a sketch of the author, brother Howard Flory; 8. Read and translate chapter 32, Book 1, Cæsar, brother Gaius Brumbaugh; 9. What does "of the rest" mean in Acts 5: 13? brother J. B. Brumbaugh; 10. An essay, The Reformation, brother E. D. Kendig. Essay two weeks hence, S. B. Shoop, Subject, The Feudal System.

After the reading of the above programme the Society adjourned to meet again next Saturday evening, Nov. 4th.

WINTER TERM.

The winter term of the Huntingdon Normal School opens Nov. 21st. Those who contemplate attending during the winter should enter at that time rather than wait until the term has partly expired.

AWAKE, THOU THAT SLEEP-EST.

BY JOHN CALVIN BRIGHT.

"Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light," Eph. 5: 14.

Paul in writing to the faithful saints in Christ Jesus at Ephesus, had for the warp and woof of his epistle the thought, that they who were "dead in trespasses and sins," were saved by grace through faith, and created unto good works in Christ, and thus become "fellow-citizens with the saints and the household of faith, built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone." And the further thought that the eternal purpose of God in Christ Jesus in redeeming the human race, was to break down the middle wall of partition between Jew and Gentile, and to unite in one grand and glorious unity and headship, with, and in, Christ all things in heaven and earth.

And in describing their condition when "children of disobedience," "having no hope and without God in the world"; "having fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," he introduces the sublime and universal call of grace in the language of our text. In examining this scripture we will first describe the class to which it applies.

As intimated above it applies to the unconverted. The whole human family are sinners by nature. "Among whom also we had our conversation in times past in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind; and were by nature the children of wrath even as others." Eph. 2: 3. "Behold I was shapen in iniquity; and in sin did my mother conceive me." Ps. 51: 5. The prophet Isaiah gives us a graphic description of the fallen condition of our race in the following words: "From the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in it; but wounds and bruises and putrefying sores; they have not been closed, neither bound up, neither mollified by ointment." Isa. 1: 6.

Says Paul to the Roman brethren, "There is none righteous, no not one." "For all have sinned and come short of the glory of God." Rom. 3: 10, 23. "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered the world and death by sin; and death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned. For by one man many were made sinners." Rom. 5: 12, 15.

Our foreparents were created in the image of God, upright and pure and pronounced very good; but they polluted themselves by disobedience. And consequently their posterity inherited their disobedient and sinful natures. For as Job has it, "Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Not one." Job 14: 4.

This being established it follows, as a natural consequence, that all who are not conscious of having "passed from death unto life," are yet in their sins. John 3: 14. All who cherish evil desires; Matth. 5: 28, 3 John 2: 16, or evil thoughts; Mark 7: 21, Prov. 24: 9, who neglect any known duty; James 4: 17, who disregard any of the commandments of the word of God; Matth. 5: 19, Gal. 3: 10, who are not born of the water and of the Spirit; John 8: 5, who are not transformed by the renewing of their minds; Rom. 12: 2, who have not wholly consecrated themselves to God; Luke 14: 33, and whose affections and aspirations are not supremely set on Christ and heavenly things, are yet in their sins—sinners—carnally-minded enemies to God and themselves, and in a state of spiritual death. Mark 12: 50, Col. 3: 1, 2, Rom. 8: 6, 7.

Such characters are "without Christ, aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, strangers to the covenants of promise, having no hope and without God in the world." Eph. 2: 12. Full of all subtlety, enemies of all righteousness, children of the devil, perverters of the right ways of the Lord"; Acts 8: 23. "Dead in trespasses and sins." Eph. 2: 1.

And for such characters there remaineth "a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation," Heb. 10: 27, in "everlasting burnings." Isa. 33: 14. In "everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels." Matth. 25: 41. In "the fire that shall never be quenched." Mark 9: 43. An everlasting destruction and banishment from the glory and power of the Lord, and an eternal baptism of fire in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, from which the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever. 2 Thess. 1: 9.

Well might the Savior ask the boasting Pharisee, "How can you escape the damnation of hell?" And the apostle Peter, "Where shall the ungodly and sinner appear?"

The ransom has been paid. Christ died "the just for the unjust." 1 Peter 3: 18. "Though he was rich yet for our sakes he became poor that we through his poverty might become rich." 2 Cor. 8: 9. Christ died for all; He invites all; "And whosoever will let him take of the water of life freely." Rev. 22: 17. "The Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come," and Christ says: "Come, for all things are now ready." Luke 14: 17.

"My yoke is easy and my burden is light." "Repent ye, and believe the gospel." "Repent and be baptized every one of you in my name, for he that repents, believes and is baptized shall be saved," have his sins remitted, and receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. "Observe all things,"—all the commandments, all the sayings found in my everlasting word, "and lo, I am with you even unto the end of the world." And when time shall be no longer, I will give thee a crown of life, robes of righteousness, and give thee a title to a "mansion" in "the kingdom prepared for you before the foundation of the world," where joy is unseparable and full of glory; where you can walk the golden streets of the New Jerusalem, drink of the water of the river of life, eat of the twelve manner of immortal fruit, revel in ambrosial sweets, and join in the everlasting songs of Zion.

On the other hand, if you repent not, you shall perish. If you believe not you shall be damned—are damned already. If you are not baptized in the names of the Holy Trinity, you reject the counsel of God against yourselves. If you take any of the words or sayings from my revelation you shall not see life. If you will not awake from your carnal sleep in midnight darkness; if you will not arise from your death in sin, you shall not only not receive my light, but shall be cast out into outer darkness where there shall be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth.

Dear reader, choose this day whom ye will serve. Now is the accepted time. To-day is the day of salvation. "To-day if you hear his voice harden not your hearts"; but "walk in the light as he is in the light, and the blood of Jesus Christ will cleanse you from all sin."

"Doing right to-day
Is the very best way;
Putting it off 'til to-morrow,
May bring you to sorrow.

"Will you go to heaven or hell?
One you must and there to dwell;
Christ will come and quickly too,
I must meet him, so must you.

"The white throne will soon appear,
You and I must both be there;
Saints will wear the starry crown."
New Lebanon, Ohio.

Recompense to no man evil for evil. Provide things honest in the sight of all men. If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men.

THE GOOD WAY.

BY J. W. SMOUSE

"Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see and ask for the old paths where is the good way and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, We will not walk therein, Jer. 6: 16.

The above language was spoken by the prophet to the Jews at Jerusalem, for we understand by the words of the prophet that Israel had backslidden from their former faith, and worshipped false gods, idols made out of gold, stone, etc., and bowed themselves to those images instead of the only true and living God, the Almighty Father of us all. Still the Lord was merciful toward them, for he exhorted them through the prophet to repent of their idolatry; for he says: "If thou wilt return, O Israel, saith the Lord, return unto me, and if thou wilt put away thine abominations out of my sight, then shalt thou return," Jer. 4: 1. But it appears they did not heed the prophet when he was sent to call for true repentance, for they said, "We will not walk therein." Now Israel were the chosen people of God by promise, but by their disobedience in the wilderness they were not permitted to enter into Canaan, save Caleb and Joshua who walked in the old paths.

My dear readers, how many are willing to-day to stand and see and ask for the old paths, the paths the prophets, the patriarchs and the apostles walked? How many of our brethren and sisters are leaving the old paths and are going back into the world of fashion and idolatry! They say they cannot see any harm in fine and stylish clothes, in silks or satins. I have no pride. I am just as humble as that old brother or sister at heart. Then what is the use of me dressing so plainly, and be so odd-looking as they are? My rings, jewels, ribbons, flosses, ruffles and jockey hat, they are nothing if I am not proud; they will not hinder me. Just so my heart is right I will gain heaven when I die. But I would say, "be not deceived, God is not mocked"; for where our treasure is there our hearts are also. Well, says one, where is the sin in dress? Dearly beloved, let me say as one that loves your souls, that your treasure consists of your rings, flosses, ruffles and all such foolish fashions, or else you would deny yourselves of the same, and be meek and humble, and walk in the old paths which is the good way, then you shall find rest for your souls.

Let us all walk humbly before God, that we may not be like the Israelites and perish in the wilderness, but when we are called to leave this world of sin and fleshly lusts, we can meet our Lord and Master with joy, and hear that grand and welcome applaudit, "Well done thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord."

But unless we walk in the old paths, and be humble, meek, self-denying, and forsake all the fashions and worldly lusts, we are not the children of God; although we bear the name of Christians. We must be cleansed from all self and pride, or else when that great and notable day of the Lord comes we will be heard to exclaim: "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and I am not saved." Then how important it is to stand in the ways, and see and walk in the old paths, and find rest for our souls—the rest that remains for the true children of God. Then we shall see our blessed and glorified Redeemer, and walk the golden streets of the New Jerusalem, be clothed with white robes, and God will wipe away all tears from our eyes.

Dearly beloved, let us not leave the old paths, but let us be a light to the world. And let us show by our walk and conversation that we are walking in the old paths; that we are on the narrow way which leads to life and glory. Let us come out from among the world and be a separate people, forsaking all the sinful lusts of this world, and lay up treasures in heaven where moth doth not corrupt nor thieves break through and steal.

Young brother, young sister, let us be obedient unto our elder brethren and sisters, and do the commandments laid down for us in the Holy Scriptures.

I have written this in brotherly love, hoping it may do some little good in the cause of Christ. As I am young in years, and but a babe in the church, I hope the brethren will pray for me. Sisters pray for me, so I may live a life devoted to the Lord, and may God bless us as a church and a people, is the prayer of your unworthy brother.

Smicksburg, Pa.

THOU ART THE MAN.

One of the hardest things in the ministry of the word of God, is to bring it home to the conscience of the individual. And in speaking to a large assembly of people, those portions of truth which are adapted to one particular class are almost sure to be appropriated by another, while those for whom the admonitions are specially intended, pass them by without consideration. If we preach against covetousness, and enjoin liberality, old Deacon Hunks, who sits in the corner, wraps himself up in his long robe and says to himself, "Well, that doesn't mean me, I'm sure;" while the next day, perhaps, we shall find that some dear, earnest, generous soul, who has been for years habitually casting all her living into the treasury of the Lord, is roused and alarmed by the thought of being covetous, and so proceeds at once to make some fresh sacrifice for the sake of benefiting others around her, who, perhaps, are better able to aid her than she is to assist them.

If we rebuke levity and vanity, instead of our words reaching the hearts of the gay, and high-headed, and light-hearted, they fall with chilling weight upon the tender conscience of some poor soul, whose smile on emerging from regions of darkness is fresh and fragrant as a May-flower creeping out from among departing snows, but who is now chilled and discouraged, and sinks back again into despondency and gloom. If we rebuke worldly and excessive care for the things of time and sense, the thrifty worldling at whom we aim our shaft passes it unnoticed, while his neighbor who is shiftless and thriftless, and who never was busy enough to earn an honest living for himself and his family, picks up words, and uses them to excuse himself in continued idleness and indifference, under pretence of trusting in the Lord.

There seems to be only one way of meeting this universal tendency of fallen nature to evade and disregard the divine precepts, and that is by direct personal appeal to the parties concerned. David would have listened approvingly to any number of homilies treating of justice, mercy, purity, morality, and the fear of God, and gone away neither better nor worse for the instruction which he received, but when the prophet Nathan laid hold upon his conscience with the grip of honest faithfulness, and said to him, "Thou art the man!" he quailed before the servant of God, and reverently accepted the message which he brought.

I taught you publicly and from house to house," said the apostle: his method of labor was "warning every man, and entreating every man, that he might present every man perfect in Christ Jesus. It is difficult to remedy personal faults by public exhortations. Sometimes we may attain our end, but often it will be much more easily accomplished by direct personal endeavor. We need to take men by the hand, to speak to them face to face, kindly, but faithfully pointing out their errors, showing them their wrongs, and entreating them to turn from every false way. We may fear rebuff, but usual-

OUR VISIT TO SOUTHERN OHIO.

Having felt a desire for some time to visit the churches in Southern Ohio, in Ross, Highland, Adams, and Clermont counties, as we formerly lived in that part of the state, and were somewhat acquainted with the brethren there, when at the Annual Meeting last spring we were requested to accompany the committee to the Brush Creek Church, in Adams county, to assist in settling difficulties existing in said church, the thought immediately occurred to our mind that should we be permitted to visit the Brush Creek church we would also visit the adjoining churches. We accordingly made arrangements in the summer with the committee to make our visit to the Brush Creek church in September, designating at the same time to visit other churches. But as the brethren of the Brush Creek church were building a new house for worship, and desired to have it completed before the committee would visit it, and as they could not get it finished as early in the season as we first proposed to make our visit, it was found necessary for us to defer our visit until October. This arrangement prevented us from spending as much time with our brethren in Southern Ohio as we had hoped to do, and we could not visit all the churches that we had at first designed to do, and we are very sorry that we could not. We make this explanation, that the brethren in Southern Ohio, may know that we thought of them, and desired to visit them, and at one time had made our arrangements to do so.

The council meeting at Brush Creek, at which the committee was to be present to confer with the church in regard to the existing difficulties, was appointed on the 19th of October. And although we could not, because of the circumstances under which we were placed, visit as many churches as we desired to do, we visited the Paint Creek church in Ross county, and the Fall Creek church in Highland county. These churches had appointed their communion meetings to suit the time of our visit, and we were with them at those meetings, which proved to be very pleasant seasons of Christian fellowship and devotion. In the Fall Creek church reside our brother and sister Major, who are extensively known in our brotherhood. They have retired from business, and have a very pleasant home in the town of Greenfield. Sister Major still labors some in the ministry, but her health is not very good, and age is showing its effects upon her. Having long enjoyed an acquaintance with this family, our interview was very pleasant. In the Paint Creek church is the home of Joseph Kelse, once a prominent and efficient minister in our fraternity, but at this time he is not with us. We met him, and our meeting was both pleasant and painful. We had a long and intimate acquaintance, and labored considerably together in the ministry, and hence we were pleased to meet him. But it was painful to us, to think that we could not still be together as Christian brethren.

When we reached the Brush Creek church we were considerably surprised to find none of the committee there but brother R. H. Miller. Brethren Davy and Wise were not with us. Brother Wise was prevented from attending on account of sickness among some of his friends. We did not learn the cause why brother Davy did not attend. We met the Brush Creek church on the morning of the 19th of October, the day appointed for the meeting of the council, and entered upon our labors with a great weight of concern and responsibility upon our minds. But the great Head of the church was with us, according to his precious promise, and our labor in the Lord, apparently was not in vain. We had a solemn and tender council meeting. It continued two days. A very good feeling pervaded the meeting. We found the brethren generally, kind, respectful and tender, but strongly attached to their practices. We heard their statements and arguments and sympathized with them in their troubles as they seemed very sincere, but we endeavored to show them the propriety of a uniformity of practice with the general brotherhood, in regard to those things wherein a difference had obtained.

Brother Mills Calvert, the oldest minister of the congregation, on account of his affliction, was not able to attend our council. We had an interview with him before the council commenced, and on the morning of the second day of the council, at our request, all the official members of the congregation met at the house of brother Calvert. Our interviews with him were very satisfactory. He is a brother of kind and tender feelings, and his labors in the ministry have been successful, and generally acceptable. His father, brother Robert Calvert, was an elder in the church, and labored extensively and successfully in the same community, that his son Mills has since labored in. Brother Robert Calvert, living at one side of our brotherhood in Ohio, and not having the frequent intercourse with the brethren through the A. M. or in any other way that some of the brethren have, and that it is desirable brethren should have, practiced some things in the congregations over which he presided a little differently to what the brethren generally do. And his son Mills, and other ministering brethren following him, have continued to practice in the same way, and hence the want of uniformity in the practice of the Brush Creek congregation and the general brotherhood in some few things. And the committee believing that the Brush Creek brethren could yield to the general order of the church without violating any gospel principles, decided in its report that they should do so. And after a free expression of their views, and a due consideration of the subject, they unanimously accepted our report and yielded to all they were asked to yield, concluding they had better do so, and thus strengthen the cords of fraternal feeling which bind them to the general church, and labor in harmony with the church to promote the cause of our Divine Master.

The spirit manifested by the Brush Creek brethren, was, upon the whole, commendable. And by the course they pursued, and the desire, or rather the determination which they showed to remain in union with the general brotherhood, greatly endeared them to the committee. The council closed, apparently with an excellent feeling. And we think there was a very general feeling of thankfulness to God, that the labors of the meeting terminated as they did in removing causes which it was feared by some, might sever the Brush Creek church from the brotherhood.

The churches in Southern Ohio have passed through severe trials, but we hope there is a brighter day before them. We commend them to the prayers and attention of the brethren, and hope they will receive the sympathy and encouragement the circumstances under which they are placed, call for.

THE SPRING RUN MEETING.

On Friday and Saturday of last week we had the pleasure of associating with our brethren and sisters of Spring Run, Mifflin Co., Pa., in a communion season. Public service opened on Friday at 2 o'clock, and as usual at this place, there was a large attendance. The congregation is large and there were also a number of brethren and sisters from adjoining congregations present. The following ministers besides those of their own congregation were in attendance; Joseph Sherfy from Gettysburg, Pa.; J. W. Brumbaugh and Jos. Snowberger of Glover Creek Pa.; Daniel Snowberger of New Enterprise Pa. ; J. L. Beaver, George Myers and a brother Landis from Buffalo congregation, Union Co Pa. Brother S. H. Bashor was also present during the afternoon and evening services and then went on to Cambria Co., Pa., where he intends holding a series of meetings. These brethren all made an effort, during the meeting, to impart the Bread of Life to a large and attentive congregation and we believe if any failed to receive at least a crumb it was their own fault.

This congregation seems to be in a prosperous condition. Forty were added to the number during the Summer, thirty-four by baptism and six by letter and certificate. Eld. Joseph Hanawalt has the oversight, and, by his untiring zeal and good counsel, has ever been successful in keeping the church in a good, healthy condition. At present he is in delicate health and seems to think his work in the ministry is abated. We hope however he may be restored so as to labor awhile longer with us in the Master's vineyard, but the Lord's will be done. We feel that when the Lord calls him from this world of trials and afflictions he will have, if faithful to the end, some golden sheaves to reap.

The meeting throughout was a good one. The number of communicants was so large that all could not participate in the communion services, yet there was no doubt with such the spirit of communion, and hence, in a degree at least, a realization of its sweetness. The strong exhortations to faithfulness on the part of God's people, and the stirring appeals to the sinner made it a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. At this meeting Samuel Musser and Geo. H. Swigart were advanced to the second degree of the ministry. J. B. B.

THE YOUNG DISCIPLE.

The Young Disciple will now be published in connection with the consolidated paper, the Primitive Christian and Pilgrim. It will be published monthly as heretofore, in four parts, one for each week, making really, four separate papers for each month thus making it more convenient for distribution and adapting it to the use of our Sunday schools.

The design of the paper is to give our young a paper especially adapted to their wants. Its pages will be filled with such reading as will be in harmony with the truth as taught in the scriptures and believed and practiced by the church.

Its pages will be bountifully illustrated with such cuts as will both please and instruct, in short, we hope to make if just such a paper as all our brethren and sisters will desire to have their children read.

So far it has given very good satisfaction and we hope that all of our dear brethren and sisters who are interested in the spiritual and good of their children will give it that encouragement it so justly demands to make it a success.

In order that our agents may help it along, we have clubbed the two together at $2,20 allowing the usual percentage to agents. We kindly solicit our agents to make mention of the Young Disciple while gathering subscribers for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN and try to get as many subscribers for it as you can. Sample copies will be sent free, to all who will work for it.

If any of our young friends will be kind enough to accept the agency for it, we will furnish them with subscription list and sample copies, on application.

Terms. Single copy one year, 75 cents 11 copies (The Eleventh to get up of club.) $7.25. All over this number, 65 cents each.

TO OUR AGENTS.

—Some of our agents are wishing to know whether the cash must accompany the names or whether it will do to send the names now and send the money about the first of the year. This matter we submit to the judgment of our agents. We expect them to be responsible for all the names sent and we have learned that for them to be successful they must arrange the pay to the circumstances of the subscriber. Those that have the money at the time of subscribing and wish to do so can pay it but it should be the understanding that all, or as many as can, should pay by the first of the year. Beyond this, our agents will use their own discretion. There are a great many brethren and sisters who would be pleased to read the paper but for the time, have not the money to pay for it. Such, and all others that will pay during the year, our agents should accept providing they feel safe in trusting them. We wish to be as liberal as we possibly can with both our agents and subscribers, yet we are compelled to use some care or our expenses would exceed the profits therefore we hope that our agents will do for us, the very best they can.

AN APOLOGY.

The removal of our office has greatly deranged our business, and we find it impossible to give the attention to our correspondents that we would like to give them. Our brethren will please exercise patience and forbearance with us, and their orders for books, and other business will be attended to as soon as possible. We are now getting things settled again, and we hope our business will soon assume its regular order, when we shall be able to attend to the requests of our patrons with punctuality.

ALMANAC FOR 1877.

Some of our friends are ordering Almanacs with the request to have them sent at once. This we cannot do as they are not ready for distribution, but they will be completed in good time so that all can receive them before the close of the present year. We are printing an edition sufficiently large to supply all that may wish them and therefore we hope that our readers will wait until we get them completed, when all orders will be filled, Orders for them should be sent in at once so that we can fill them as soon as they are completed.

CORRESPONDENCE.

HUNTINGDON PA. Nov. 6th 1876.

Dear Parents and Sister:—

I received no letter from you last week, but suppose it will be here soon. I am well and enjoying, myself as well as could be expected of a school-boy, who has to study hard, with but little genius to help him. I spent a pleasant Sabbath yesterday, in the different capacities of worship.

We were able, and warmly addressed in the morning by Bro. Quinter on the subject of "Jacob's Vision" and at night by Bro. Beer on the subject "Remember Lot's wife." In company with others I attended the Presbyterian Sabbath school at 2, P. M. which we very much enjoyed. As soon as dismissed we returned to our Bible class which is held at half-past three, P. M. They, as an evidence of their appreciation of our visit, attended our class, with which they expressed themselves well pleased, and caught a new idea which they thought they could adopt with profit.

Hoping you are all well. Your devoted son and brother, DAVE.

P. S. Dear sister: Your lengthy letter just at hand, and read with much pleasure. Will answer soon. D.

PLATTSBURG, Mo.,)
October 23rd, 1876. }

Bro. Brumbaugh:—

I now by your permission, will write a little for the PILGRIM as it was the request of the brethren when I got home, I should drop a few lines for publication. I left my home in Clinton county, Mo., on the 23rd of August last, in company with my wife and two little daughters, to visit my old home in Pennsylvania. It has been about eleven years since I left Pa., to make my home on Prairie soil. I boarded the train at this place on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific railroad, and was soon eastward bounding, over prairies diving through hills, skipping over rivers, at such a velocity, that if it had been told 150 years ago, it it would have been as an idle tale and they would not have believed it. But our age has brought many things to light. We were soon rolled over 500 miles and landed in the city of Chicago. As soon as the transfer could be made we were on our way to the city of Pittsburg. Did not learn much by the way as during most of this time I was unconscious of anything that was going on around. Nature said sleep, and sleep it did. Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago railroad is a very pleasant road to travel on, and the gentleman conductor did everything to make us comfortable. Pretty nearly worn out, we landed in the "smoky city," took a little refreshment and then took Penn's Central across the great Alleghany mountains. Here there were great sights to be seen by the passengers. Many never saw a mountain before, and my wife was one of that number. They all seemed to enjoy the sight much, but to me it was nothing new, as in my boyhood days I used to stand on the lofty heights, like Moss and view the landscape o'er. Not over Jordan, but the Juniata. Soon after we left Pittsburg we came to what is called Braddock field. Most all school-boys know of Braddock's defeat. I saw the very place where he fell along side a very high hill. I know not what was there then, but now there are some trees and bushes. But on the train went, and soon left all out of sight. Deep yawning canyons were below us, everlasting hills and mountains above, and the lofty places still towering higher with their evergreen robes, bespeaking praise to Him who lifts their heads out of the flint rocks. Reaching the great summit of this mighty range, I informed some of the passengers that I was familiar with the places, and many took a very deep interest in hearing me tell what we would come to before we arrived, and how it would be and what the name, &c. I was fully paid for all my trouble by hearing the many

"thank you for your kindness." The tunnel, the great horse-shoe bend, Allegripes, and other places, and now comes the city of Altoona. Here we bid adieu to all our traveling companions, some with whom we traveled eleven hundred miles. During this time we got very intimate with one another, and now could take one another by the hand and give an affectionate farewell. Here we left the main stem of the road, and took a branch that led south to the home of my childhood. Was soon there enjoying home, society, and kindred ties. Being absent many years and now meeting loved ones again, on the same ground in the same room, where many happy hours were spent in my childhood, boyhood and manhood days, my feeling on that occasion may be a little better imagined than described. Here is home with all its hallowed associations. Many things began to loom up before the mind, many of joy and gladness and many of sorrow and sadness. Here are father and mother, brothers and sisters, and kind friends, with whom we used to spend many happy hours. Once more did we bow around the old family altar. Next day be Sunday, there was meeting. I went, but was almost a stranger, a few familiar faces, but many were grown out of my recollection and many gone to the eternal world. Here on the 27th of August I preached in the meeting house at Lamersville. Here is the home of brother James A. Sell, who has the charge of this arm of the church, known as the Duncansville church. Here I preached a number of times to our old neighbors and friends, what few were left. Preached at night and visited friends by day. On the 14th of September brother James and I went on a visit to the city of Philadelphia and to attend some meetings. We were with the brethren some days, tended meeting on Marshall street in the Brethren's meeting house. Here we had the pleasure of meeting brother Stephen Bashor. He is from Missouri but left over a year ago on a preaching tour. We had quite a pleasant interview. We visited quite a number of places of note in the city; among them was Girard college. Here is a gorgeous pile of granite reared up to perpetuate the name and memory of Stephen Girard. While standing on the lofty heights of this building and seeing the great flock of boys around the yard, all seeming as merry as larks, no father to care for them, no mother to smooth their hair around their temple, in a low tone I said, "Heaven bless this institution, the home of the homeless." One of the rooms of this building is furnished with all the furniture of this famous man as it was in his day, chairs, tables, bed, bureau and everything even to his carriage, everything of the most common kind. We left the place feeling that we were amply paid for going there.

Tuesday the 19th, James being unwell, we left the city for home, contemplating visiting the PILGRIM family, but learned that they were not at home. We were sorry for this, but as neither could avoid it, we will have to go on and make the best of it as we have learned long since we cannot always do as we would. Landed home on the 20th, visited friends and old neighbors up to 23th. Then was taken to a lovefeast in Bedford county, Pa., known as the Clear meeting house. Had a very pleasant love feast there. Here we met some of the old brethren who were old, when we were quite young. It made me feel sad and solemn to hear those old brethren talk to us once more and tell their hopes and fears. From this place we went to what is called Yellow Creek congregation. Here we had several meetings at different points. Then was taken to Clover Creek to a lovefeast on the 3rd. This church is under the care of John W. Brumbaugh. It is a very large church and what made it more enjoyable to me, was to see so many young members and many more near the kingdom. Good speed the day when they too shall realize that it is no vain thing to serve the Lord. The meeting was well conducted and all seemed to enjoy it well. 4th left again for Yellow Creek where there was a lovefeast on the evening of the 5th. This is also a very large church under the oversight of Bro. Jacob Miller. On the way to this meeting I met one of my brothers in the flesh Joseph D. Sell, of Northern Ill. We did not see each other for nearly eleven years. "Joseph knew all his brethren" but not so in this case. He knew me not, neither did I him. We had to be introduced. It was a very unexpected but happy meeting. When I was told it was Joseph, my brother I with him "sought where to weep."

Considering the rainy evening there was a large turnout of members and others. Everything passed off very pleasantly and we hope profitably. From this place we came back home again to attend a lovefeast, once more in the old mother church, where I first learned to love the Lord. The meeting was on the 7th of October in the Carson Valley meeting house. When the time arrived many members came from all parts of the country. The house was filled to overflowing. Soul cheering exhortations were given us by the ministry present. This was truly a feast to the soul. Many times in the days of yore we bowed around this altar. Here we were made to feel our first religious impressions. Here it was we felt our first love and to me it was a holy solemn sacred place. The meeting passed of pleasantly and I trust profitable to all. The next day we had a meeting long to be remembered, as we had to say farewell to many until we meet in the eternal world. We had a meeting in the evening, also Monday evening. This was our last meeting in the valley, and I must say this was the most solemn meeting I ever attended and I want to say to those that gave me their hand, sorrowing in that we should see each other no more, live to do the will of God and the time will come when we all walk the golden land of Paradise, eat of the tree that bears twelve manners of fruit; drink of life's cool crystal fountain that flows hard by the throne of God, where no farewell tear is shed. On the whole, our visit was a pleasant one. We had a meeting in the Lamersville meeting house on the evening of the 14th. This was our last sermon in the State. I was standing on the ground I spent many hours in childhood with my schoolmates. Now the scene is reversed; we are all grown, and mingling in the busy hive of life. Let me say to all among whom I went preaching, pray for us, for when we would do good evil is present.

We left on the 17th of October for Missouri and reached home on the 19th. Thank the Lord for his kind care. Our health is not so very good having contracted deep seated colds. We landed here in the morning train, and in the evening at 4 o'clock there was a terrible accident took place with one of our members here. Bro. Abraham C. Miller was running a steam thrasher, and by some means it exploded, killing brother Miller and another boy, badly hurting his son and some others. The particulars we have not learned. Brother Miller leaves a wife and a large family of children to mourn his untimely fate. A large concourse of friends and neighbors assembled Sunday October 23rd, at the Walnut Grove cemetery, one and a half miles north of Plattsburg, where the funeral was conducted by the Brethren. It truly was a heart rending and sorrowful sight. All we could do was to lay his remains away in deep sadness, but not without hope. And now may the God of all peace be with us all.

DANIEL D. SELL.

Dear Pilgrim:—

As you have requested some one in each congregation to report to you, I will give a short report of our communion meeting, which was held the 21st of Oct. The weather was nice and warm.

We were visited by Elder Joseph Hutchison, and Bro. George Crouse of Fayette county, and Bro. W. H. Baily of Raleigh Co. We had preaching by brother Hutchison on Saturday evening. As the members are scattered over four counties, there were not more than half present, though the few which met, had a feast indeed, as everything seemed to smile on and around us. We were earnestly admonished on self examination by the brethren present and all seemed to perform and partake of the ordinances and emblems of our Lord and Savior, with such composure and solemnity, that it was amazing to the world, so much so that they looked with such surprise, that, with but few exceptions, there was the best of behavior, and apparently most of the spectators seemed to be interested in what was going on.

After the night services closed, the most of the congregation left the place of meeting for the night, but on Sunday morning there was a large congregation assembled, and was addressed by brother W. A. Baily. It was a funeral discourse and very interesting. After services the church assembled for business, which resulted the restoration of a brother to the ministry, and the election of Bro. J. C. Wright to the office of Deacon. In the evening brother Crouse preached at a school house one and a half mile from the place of first meeting which resulted in the receiving of one by baptism. On Monday at 10 o'clock we met for preaching again and was addressed by brother Hutchison who showed the reason why we practiced trine immersion, which he made so plain that many were almost ready to say, that they were satisfied that it was the right way to baptize. After preaching the people repaired to the stream to see the brother do what he had so earnestly contended to be right, after which the brethren took their leave of us.

EPISTOLARY.

To the brethren and my numerous friends in Ill., greeting:

I take this method of speaking to you all, and I hope it will be satisfactory.

I would have written sooner had a favorable opportunity presented itself, out having been from home about a month work had accumulated, and of course called for my first attention.

I left home the 10th of August, in company with Bro. Samuel Small, arrived at Huntington in the evening of the same day, where I spent a few hours with my brother J. M. Zuch, and Pilgrim family. And a pleasant, (and I hope profitable) waiting before the Lord together, was quite glad to see them all, and enjoy their company, wish I could have staid longer, Examined their facilities for business, and think they are excellent, may God bless them in their noble work and reward them bountifully for their hospitalities.

Left on the next train for the west, I enjoyed much of the scenery along our route of travel, and much no doubt would have been interesting had it not been secluded by the darkness, as we traveled over a vast space of territory during the night.

We arrived safely at Mt. Morris, Ogle co., Ill. about 3 o'clock on Saturday afternoon, and was met by a number of brethren and friends awaiting our arrival, we were kindly received and taken care of by our brethren of the Silver Creek Congregation. Next day was taken to the West Branch congregation, where we had two very pleasant meetings. Think they have delightful country, and their hearts team with love.

Returned to Silver Creek Church and enjoyed five meetings, visiting through the day and preaching at night, meetings were held at Silver Creek church, and Salem, in the vicinity of Mt. Morris, during this time I renewed many former associations, and made many acquaintances, which I love to remember.

Next I was taken to Carroll Co., Ill. where most of my relatives reside. Had meetings at Cherry Grove with the dear brethren of the Cherry Grove congregation, a strong and active church is located here. Was taken care of by kind and loving hearts, and through their kindness, visited many a pleasant home, which I shall long remember, I did not succeed in seeing all, and accepting your numerous invitations, please excuse and pardon; my time was so short in which I had to make the trip. I also was taken to Shannonswhere I met dear brethren.

Visited Lanark and was well pleased with my reception by the "Brethren at Work." Here is where the new paper is being started, made the acquaintance the acquaintance of the brethren who are conducting the same, who are active and promise good things to the church and the Lord's cause in general. They are quite earnest in the missionary cause, may God bless their efforts to the saving of precious souls.

I next left Carroll co. in company with a dear brother for Iowa; passing through Whiteside county, Ill., and Clinton county, Iowa. We traveled by private conveyance, saw some beautiful country, and considerable that was otherwise—some that had a very proper name—"Barrens. Crossed the great lather of waters at Fulton, was landed safely by the steam ferry boat at Lyons, Iowa. We passed on hurriedly, night coming on, we put up in an Iowa barn, passed a very unpleasant night, still it might have been worse, next day about noon reached our point of destination, which was in the vicinity of Clarence, Cedar Co, Iowa. This county particularly attracted my attention, and has been remarkably successful in holding it thus far, I would much desire to make that county my home. I now returned to Lanark by rail, passing through many villages and towns. As I had now reached my furthest point, and commenced retracing my steps, my pulse quickened, and I became more sensitive in regard to the dear ones at home. A day then, seemed almost as a week before. I remained but one night in Carroll Co., Was taken next day to Mt. Morris, Ogle Co, my first point as above stated. I there again had several meetings with the brethren. With tears I left them. Oh how hard it was to part with these we love so dearly! But we would not wish it otherwise, as this is one of the grand evidences, that we are born of God, when we love the brethren, for God is love. I arrived home on the 6th, of September, found all well, and glad to see me, for which I was thankful indeed. And now dear brethren and sisters and friends, pardon the absence of your names and your special acts of kindness, but rest assured they are all treasured up, not soon to be lost or forgotten. Remember me in your prayers.

May the grace of God, the fellowship of Jesus, and the communion of the Holy Spirit, be with you all. Amen.

LAST CALL.

In response to a call made through the Pilgrim a few weeks ago, to the churches of the Middle District of Pa., the delegates of the following churches met at the Dry Valley meeting house, on the 30th of Oct., for the purpose named in the call referred to above. Yellow Creek, Clover Creek, James Creek, Aughwick, Spring Run, Dry Valley, Buffalo, Lower Cumberland and Marsh Creek. But as the notice was very short, it was thought by those present, not to be sufficient to give opportunity to all the churches to represent. The meeting therefore concluded not to close the business in hand, but decided to retain the nominated committee with the addition of one more name, which we will give in connection with the others below, and to call another meeting in the Dry Valley church, on the 21st of Nov., at which the nominated committee will be elected, confirmed, or changed, subject to the meeting of delegates, and letters present at that time. Those churches which are satisfied with the nominated committee, may vote by letter, otherwise they should represent by person. It will be remembered that there is no time to be lost in this matter. The churches will therefore please act promptly. In the mean time they are all further solicited for proposals to take the Annual Meeting, so that the committee (whose duty mainly will be to locate the same) will be able to discharge their duty promptly and satisfactorily. All letters should be directed to the undersigned a few days previous to the time of the meeting. The following members of the committee named are especially invited to be present: Elder Moses Miller, George Brumbaugh, Solomon Seiber, Daniel Eckerman, William Howe, and Daniel Keller. Those coming should be at Lewistown by 10 o'clock, so as to meet connection with the L. & S. R. R. which will take them to the place of meeting, stopping off at Martland. Time of meeting, 1 o'clock of the above named day and date.

While it was decided almost unanimously at our late District Meeting of Middle Pa. to take the A. M. of 1877, and granted by the A. M. of 1876, it will therefore be the duty of the churches of this District to take some steps preparatory for that event at once, and all unite in the effort to procure a suitable place as well as the necessary means to carry out the work.

GEO. BRUMBAUGH, Sec.

Grafton, Pa.

PLYMOUTH, IND.

Dear Editors:

Our lovefeast is in the past, and we are glad that we have a favorable report to give. The meeting was as good as we ever had. We have had larger ones but not better. Our laboring brethren were Peter Wrightsman and Jesse Calvert. The last time I wrote I told the readers of the Pilgrim that we had received fifteen by baptism since last spring, and I am glad to say again that we have received twelve more; and among the twelve were eight Sabbath-school scholars. We had Sabbath-school all summer, and the Scriptures were taught. Those eight are under seventeen years old. So much for the Sabbath-school.

Dear brethren, let us teach our children the Scriptures that they may become wise unto salvation. I have lately heard that some said, that they would as soon have their children go fishing on the Sabbath day as to have them go to Sabbath school. I hate to hear such talk from any, for I think such persons do not read the Bible themselves, and would rather not have their children read it. I do think such would better send them to Sabbath-school where they will be taught the Scriptures. We have some who go to church that, I think, never read one chapter in the Testament until they come to our Sabbath school.

I do hope all our brethren and sisters will subscribe for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, as we hope it will be a good paper. It always has been a good paper, but after the consolidation we will get more reading matter. The Young Disciple also is a very good paper, and does very well for our Sabbath-school scholars to read between times. Let us all do the best we can for one another as we all belong to one family.

JOHN KNISLEY.

CLARKSVILLE, IND., }
October 30th, 1876. }

Brethren Editors:—

By request of elder John Cayler I will try to give a brief sketch of information concerning our communion meeting of the 27th inst, held in the Brethren's meeting-house known as the Stony Creek arm of the church. The meeting opened at 10 o'clock; introductory sermon by elder John Metzker of Clinton county, Ind. The ministry was well represented by young ministers from Wayne, Madison, and Montgomery counties. In the observance of the ordinances Eld J. Metzker officiated. The meeting was well attended by the brethren and sisters, except those prevented by sickness. God bless them in their affliction. The address on the scriptural authority for observing the ordinances was delivered by brother Martin McClure. The house was crowded with spectators. Preaching continued Saturday and Sunday. The ministers were respected with profound silence while admonishing us. The substance of their admonitions was "Live consistently with your profession; and do religion if you want to feel religion;" and I will add, do not encourage infidelity by not living consistently with your profession, of which many non-professors are capable of judging. On Sunday Eld. J. Metzker gave us a heart-felt sermon, which caused many tears to flow, after which he preached in the German language, of which I understood nothing, but I doubt not that it was of equal force and utility to those who understood that tongue. During preaching many souls were made to rejoice, and three precious souls were made willing to renounce the devil, in the presence of God and witnesses, and covenant to serve their Maker, and were received into the church through the ordinance of baptism, administered by Eld. J. Metzker. May they, together with myself and all of thy children, receive grace sufficient to withstand temptation and live acceptably in thy service; also, through the influence of thy word, O God, cause all sinners, in due time, to flee the wrath to come, and accept thy offered mercies.

JOHN S. SAUNDERS.

Announcement.

If the Lord will, there will be a communion meeting in the Brethren's new meeting-house at Beaver Run, Mineral county, W. Va., on the 25th and 26th of November, commencing on Saturday at ten o'clock.

OBITUARIES.

At Buckley, Ill., August, 26th, 1876, sister MARY, wife of brother John H. Stager, aged 49 years 8 months and 26 days. Both joined the church of the Brethren at Coventry, Pa., in 1858 and moved to this place five years ago. The funeral services were held in the M. E. church in Buckley. The solemn occasion was improved to a large congregation by friend Brown, from Isaiah 55:1, "Set thy house in order: for thou shalt die and not live." The remains were temporarily interred in the Buckley cemetery with a view of being removed and buried beside her child ren in the East. The deceased was confined to her bed for almost a year—her physical suffering for a part of the time being extreme. Her affliction was ever marked by a patient submission to her heavenly Father's will. During intervals of pain she was cheerful and grateful in spirit, and through all her trials manifested an unwavering faith in the atoning merits of her Savior, and an assurance of divine acceptance and favor which made its impression upon the many sympathizing friends who called to see her in her illness. Her humility, obedience, loving trust, her parting smile as the spirit took its final flight, comfort the hearts of her mourning companion and loved ones that "she has washed her robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb," and that if faithful they will one day meet her in that better land where parting is no more.

A. M. TITLOW.

Near Roanoke, Ind., on the 26th of August, 1876, HALLIE C., son of Kyle and Alice A. Gaskill, aged 10 months and 28 days. Funeral services on the 26th at 3 p. m., at the Beach Grove meeting-house, by the writer, from 1 Peter 1: 24, 25, to a large and intelligent congregation. Friend Gaskill and wife, I am informed, have never made any profession of Christianity. We trust this event, in the providence of God, may be instrumental in causing solemn reflections, and that the question may arise in their hearts, "Are we prepared to meet dear little Hallie on the other side of the cold grave, when Jesus comes to collect all the dear little children, with all those who have washed their robes in his blood?"

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

Not a Dye; makes harsh hair soft and cleanses the scalp from all impurities, causing the hair to grow where it has fallen off or become thin.

Can be applied by the hand as it does not stain the hand or soil the finest linen. As a Hair Dressing it is the most perfect the world has ever produced. The hair is renovated and strengthened, and natural color restored without the application of mineral substances.

Since the introduction of this truly valuable preparation into this country, it has been the wonder and admiration of all classes, as it has proved to be the only article that will absolutely without discoloration, restore gray hair to its original color, health, softness, lustre and beauty, and produces hair on bald heads of its original growth and color.

This beautiful and fragrant perfumed article is complete within itself, no washing or preparation before or after its use, or accompaniment of any kind being required to obtain these desirable results.

HERE IS THE PROOF OF ITS

SUPERIOR EXCELLENCE.

Read this Home Certificate, testified to by Edward B. Garrigue, one of the most competent Druggists and Chemists of Philadelphia, a man whose veracity none can doubt.

I am happy to add my testimony to the great value of the 'London Hair Color Restorer,' which restored my hair to its original color, and the hue appears to be permanent. I am satisfied that this preparation is nothing like a dye, but operates upon the secretions. It is also a beautiful hair dressing and promotes the growth. I purchased the first bottle from Edward B. Garrigue, druggist, Tenth and Coates streets, who can also testify my hair was quite gray when I commenced its use.

MRS. MILLER.

No. 730 North Ninth St., Phila.

Dr. Swayne & Son—Respected friends: I have the pleasure to inform you that a lady of my acquaintance, Mrs. Miller, is delighted with the success of your "London Hair Color Restorer." Her hair was falling rapidly and quite gray. The color has been restored, the falling entirely stopped, and a new growth of hair is the result. B. B. GARRIGUES, Druggist, cor. Tenth and Coates, Phila.

BOSTON TESTIMONY.

July 22d, 1871.—Dr. Swayne & Son: Last winter, while in Trenton, N. J., I procured six bottles of London Hair Color Restorer, which I like very much, in fact better than anything I have used in the last nine years. If you please, send me one dozen bottles, C. O. D., care of W. S. Fogler & Son, druggists, No. 723 Tremont street, Boston. Respectfully yours,

AA BAKBR,

No. 59 Rutland Square.

"London Hair Color Restorer and Dressing" has completely restored my hair to its original color and youthful beauty, and caused a rapid and luxuriant growth.

MRS. ANNIE MORRIS,

No. 616 North Seventh street, Phila.

Dr. Dalton of Philadelphia, says of it: The London Hair Color Restorer is used very extensively among my patients and friends, as well as by myself. I therefore speak from experience.

75 CENTS PER BOTTLE. SIX BOTTLES $4.

If not sold by your druggist or storekeeper, we will forward by express, to any address, on receipt of price.

Address orders to Dr. SWAYNE & SON, 320 North Sixth street, Philadelphia, Pa., sole Proprietors.

The Peace of God.

Philippians iv, 7.

The peace of God!—Ah that my spirit craveth
With an intense desire!
'Tis like a stream in which the way-worn laveth,
Whom desert heat doth tire.

I know 'tis that alone the soul which keepeth,
And heart and mind at rest;
More precious than the tears alone one weepeth
Upon a loving breast.

The peace of God, like water pure upwelling,
Pollution cannot stain,
For love eternal is its source and dwelling,
Healer of every pain.

I know that understanding it defieeth
Its power to comprehend;
An anchor sure, on which the soul relieth,
Cast by the sinner's Friend.

The peace of God! Ah! that the soul upbreath,
That groaneth 'neath its woe;
It tells us, to the uttermost, One careth
For all we undergo.

The peace of God! Dear Savior, this possessing,
I know Thou'lt be my Guide;
If rich in this, the Spirit's greatest blessing,
I'm safe, what'er betide.

The Auditors of the Sermon on the Mount

BY JNO. CALVIN BRIGHT.

This subject seems to be unsettled in the minds of some and settled wrong in the minds of others, and though it is not a subject of very great moment, yet, nevertheless, we feel like touching it with the nib of our pen, and make some general remarks as a sort of a roundabout introduction to several articles we contemplate writing on the memorable Sermon.

The erroneous idea hinted at above, is that it was only spoken to his disciples—that they only had the privilege of hearing him. We hear this again and again from the pulpit. And artists transfer the same thought to canvas, as their engravings generally represent Christ speaking to a few hearers only, seated near him.

This remarkable Sermon is found in the fifth, sixth, and seventh chapters of St Matthew. All the words contained in these chapters were spoken by Jesus with the exception of the first two verses of the fifth chapter and the last two verses of the seventh chapter. The words in these verses are the language of St. Matthew himself.

As an introductory to the sermon St. Matthew says; "And seeing the multitudes, he went up into a mountain; and when he was set his disciples came unto him; And he opened his mouth and taught them, "Here the pretending grammarian will say, that the pronoun them refers to "disciples" as its antecedent, and consequently, they, only had the benefit of his heavenly discourse. This may be, and it may not be. The pronoun them may refer to "multitudes" as its antecedent. Instances might be adduced to show that pronouns do not invariably refer to the nearest noun, but may refer to one more remote. But we will not waste time here. Let us turn a leaf and look at the statement at the conclusion of the sermon. "And it came to pass when Jesus had ended these sayings, the people were astonished at his doctrine; For he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes." Here we have the pronoun them again and there can be no parleying as to its antecedent. "The people were astonished at his doctrine; For he taught them." If the pronoun them in the first place refers to his disciples, it here refers to the people, and consequently He taught both classes—all that had ears to hear, heard him; all that had eyes to see, saw him; and all that had hearts to understand were benefited by his pure, holy, sublime, and heavenly doctrine.

It has been said that the expressions "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute," "Ye are the light of the world," "Ye are the salt of the earth," favor the idea that it was only spoken to his disciples. The following will illustrate this. A minister rises to read his text. A listless congregation generally, lends an attentive ear then. And too often this is the way they listen: If the text inculcates the duties of Christians to each other, to the world, and to their God, the unconverted will perhaps conclude that it does not concern them very much; Again if the text is read that contains a call to the unconverted to forsake the error of his way and fall in with the overtures of mercy, the other class peradventure (I say it to their shame) are inattention (Can not the sinner be benefited while the man of God treats on the peaceful and holy traits that form a Christian character? Or should not the professor "take heed" while the faithful minister is laying down the terms of salvation as I see whether he has made the right steps in the renunciation of the fleshy kingdom and taking the oath of allegiance to the spiritual? Compare this with the idea in the beginning of this paragraph while I proceed to make a hurried review of the early part of Christ's public ministry.

I love to lose myself in thought and imagine myself walking up and down the pathways of the Holy land in company with Jesus in his incarnation. See Him come to the river Jordan to be baptized by John in the flowing stream. And when He comes back from the wilderness hear Him proclaim the glad tidings of salvation. Go along with Him and His disciples to Canan and hear the surprise and view the astonishment of that festive scene when the best wine was brought in "out of season." Accompany Him to Jerusalem at the time of the Feast of the Passover and see Him make a scourge of small cords and convert the house of merchandise back to a house of prayer for the time being. Then shortly after hear Him instruct, by night, a ruler of the Jews on the nature of the new birth. Run over to Accon to John and hear his remarkable testimony concerning Him. And when John is imprisoned accompany him and His disciples to the well of Samaria and hear Him converse with the Samaritan woman about the living water, and when His disciples arrive, of the living bread of heaven. Follow in their footsteps to Galilee and hear Him teach in the synagogues and preach the gospel of the kingdom and see Him cure all manner of disease and sickness among the people. And then lift up our eyes and see the multitudes swarming in from all parts of Galilee and from Decapolis and from Jerusalem, and from Judea, and from beyond Jordan. Jesus, new in the acme of His popularity, moves toward the mountain followed by the vast multitudes. When He arrives at the suitable place so that all could hear and see and be benefited by His teaching, He seats Himself and opens His mouth and "spake as never man spake." He commences with the very text that is the closest to all hearts—to the heart of the innocent babe and to the aged father tottering on the verge of the grave.

Odds and Ends.

BY S. H. SPROGLE.

The rain drops are rattling against the window, the wind is whistling around the corner of the house and through the leafless tree-tops. All is dark and drear without. My mind reverts to my school-boy days. I have this evening been thinking of the students of the school in the town of Y. in the Fall of 18—. What were their fond anticipations and how far they realized what they then expected, who can tell? There were those who were preparing for the ministry, others for the professions of law and medicine, and still others for whatever station in life they might be called to fill. That Fall was one long to be remembered, as sickness and death visited many families, and day after day the slow and solemn tread of a funeral procession, passing through the streets to the "city of the dead" would bring to mind "Death's Gathering."

"I gather them in,
Man and boy, rich and poor
Great and small, all, all,
I gather them in."

Well do I recollect a few years later an occasion on which were expressed the hopes and anticipations of a number, and still later when my time came to part with those with whom I had associated. Then was youth hopeful and many and large were the castles that were built in the imagination. True, many of that class, as far as I know, attained to what they had any right to expect. Some have graced the legislative halls, others have filled places of note and have been an honor to their profession. But where are they to-night? That is the question. Alas, alas, many of them have been gathered in by death; they have gone to reap the reward of their labor while here, be it good or evil. What trials, what vexations, what labor and grief, what hope, what joy and happiness have they experienced since those school-boy days. Those of us who still live might perhaps tell much of what we have passed through and how far or near we have come of discharging our duty to our God and fellow-men. Years have passed away and have we, in any way, been a benefit to our fellow beings? This is a question that interests every one; it is what each one of us should ask himself. What am I living for? God has created us for a purpose, and are we fulfilling that purpose? There is one thing that I regret more than all others, and that is I put off turning to God, and trying to live a christian life so long; but I thank God, I have been trying for the last few years to lead a life in accordance to the Master's word. And now my dear brethren and sisters, I ask an interest in your prayers that the few days that I may yet be spared may be devoted to faithfully discharging every duty that I may be called upon to perform. We all have a work to do, and time is passing very rapidly, and soon we shall be called to try the realities of another world; then how sad it would be if we should not have that work done.

Thoughts and incidents crowd themselves upon my mind but I dare not occupy space that should be used by those better qualified.

Though a few months ago there were dark and heavy clouds banging over our little church at Shannon, thank God light is again shining on the horizon and we have the hope that all will move along and be well. In the last few weeks we have had the joy to receive a few young lambs into the fold, for which I feel to ask the prayers of the faithful that they may be protected by Him who is able to take care of the lambs, and let us all ever try to lend them a helping hand when we can.

Our love-feast is now past, was the first held in the Shannon meeting-house. The first day the weather was quite stormy with rain, yet there was a large congregation. The order was very good, and as some feared that we could not hold a lovefeast, we felt much pleased and think good has been done.

I clip a piece from an old paper that might not be amiss to give to your readers.

"Words should be seasoned. Some season with pepper, or vinegar, or wormwood. Paul says, 'Season with salt.' Salt cools passion, prevents severity, imparts sweetness and self-control. Words ferment like yeast, and explode like naphtha. Salt prevents this. Some ministers are badly seasoned. Their words are hasty, sometimes bitter, often foolish. Jesus spoke gracious words, so should His ministers. Jesus opened not his mouth when provoked, neither should his ministers. Jesus is an example for all His saints. When we speak as He spoke, and are silent as He was silent, we give evidence of grace and the seasoning of salt. The spirit of Christ will impart the blessings."

I wonder if many of us ever think of what it is to live a christian life. There is danger of overlooking small things and wanting to do some great or big sounding thing that we may place much stress upon, when perhaps we could do much more good by watching the little things, and profit by attending to them aright. In this place let us hear something about how small things may assist us in making up a holy life.

A holy life is made up of a number of small things. Little words, not eloquent speeches or sermons; little deeds, not miracles, nor battle, nor one great heroic act, nor mighty martyrdom, make up the true Christian life. The little, constant sunbeam, not the lightning; the waters of Siloam, "that go softly" in their meek mission of refreshment, not the waters of the river, great and many, rushing down in torrent noise and force, are the true symbols of a holy life. The avoidance of little evils, little sins, little inconsistencies, little weaknesses, little follies, little indiscretions, little imprudences, little foibles, little indulgences of self and of the flesh—the avoidance of such little things as these goes far to make up, at least, the negative beauty of life.

Perhaps it would not be out of place at this time, when Darwinism is being spread broadcast over the land to give to your readers part of a treatise published a few years ago, but as it contains much truth it will not lose anything by appearing again. I do not know who the author is. I take it from one of my old papers.

"Using the term knowable as synonymous with demonstrable, a very large department of human thought must be dissociated from it. Neither the affections, the judgments, the tastes, the beliefs, the ambitions nor the morals of men wait for the knowable. These include so much of the inspiration and energy of our daily life that, compared with the realm they cover, it is marvelous how seldom "the knowable" in any way touches or effects us. Science is as inadequate to trace a moral law, however crude, as it is to define why certain colors or tones harmonize and others do not. Science can only compare average facts, and from them deduce its law, that, as these things average so and so, therefore they ought to. If wars, slaveries, crimes and diseases decimate the race, science embodies them all in her law of man's development, side by side with peace, freedom, order and health, and avers that "All partial ill is universal good;

All discord, harmony not understood."

What are called the laws of science are only the classification of facts under their appropriate heads for convenient reference,—whether they fall under gravitation, cohesion, affinity, electricity, magnetism, or other head,—and the scientific demonstration that a thing ought to be is the fact that it has been. Obviously, therefore, science can furnish no theory of morals, of benevolence, or inspiration or beauty, or reform; for all these impel the inverse theory, that, though certain things have been and are, they ought not to be. When a man is poisoned science will demonstrate the effect of the poison upon the tissues, and point out the steps of organic change by which it produces death. This is within the domain of the knowable. But here it stops. With the morality of the act of poisoning it has nothing to do. The statistician will show that in a given population a pre-ty certain average of poisoning cases appears every year, and will infer therefrom a law of social science, viz: that a given percentage of mankind shall die by poison. But this law of social science, if regarded as anything more than a classification of facts, becomes a law of universal necessity, or of God, and thus science ultimates in justifying murder by poisoning, and all evil.

Our theological teachers make as great a mistake when they deny that there is an inherent conflict between science and religion, as our scientific teachers make when they predict that all faiths which do not harmonize with science may disappear. It may well be doubted whether any strictly religious faith ever can or ought to harmonize with any strictly scientific deduction. For by religious faith should be meant a belief relative to those matters only which are not demonstrable by science,—i. e., by the classification of known facts; while, by scientific deduction, we must mean only those conclusions which are free from mystery. The mysterious can never harmonize with the evident. If it did, it would no longer be mysterious. Nor is it necessary that the facts of the universe should harmonize any more than its forces. Good and evil do not harmonize, but both are facts. Truth and error do not harmonize, but they exist. The truth of Divine sovereignty, and the other truth of conscious freedom of the will, do not harmonize, but the two facts are as indisputable as the centripetal and centrifugal forces. Heat and cold do not harmonize, but all actual temperature is a blending of the two opposites. So with religion and science, art and asceticism, economy and benevolence, government and freedom, and all the great conflicting opposites of truth, between whose extremes we daily steer. Each is a truth, but each antagonizes some opposing truth.

To the end of time, the source of life, the nature of death, the cause of thought, of affection, passion, hope, are all incomprehensible to science. There is, indeed, no science of the soul, any more than there is a prayer in mathematics. All the functions of the soul are too ethereal and mysterious to come within the analysis or comprehension of science, as all the facts of science are too materialistic and sensual to give birth to a religion. The mistake of both theologians and "scientists" is in the attempt of either to furnish a standard by which to judge of the other's conclusions. The test of the scientist is, "Does it confirm the facts?" if so, it is true to the scientific standard. The test of religion is, "Does it promote man's spiritual welfare and make men better?" if so, it is religiously sustained as true to the Divine standard. The two standards are as distinct as that of mathematics, viz.: "Can it be proved?"

is from that of art, viz.: "Does it please?" or, "Is it beautiful?"

Hope the consolidation of the Primitive Christian and Pilgrim will meet with much favor, as it is a good move, at least so thought by many. May the new paper do much good in its visits and build up the Master's cause wherever it goes.

Christianity as it was.

BY M. HADY.

There was a time when Christian religion was not as popular as now, when christians had to endure some self-sacrifice. When our Lord began the preaching of his Father's will, opposition to the cause arose. Scribes and Pharisees with their blind adherent, did not appreciate the godly privilege to the extent they might have done. Jesus was persecuted and crucified; no doubt these blind zealots rejoice, when Christ was hanging on the cross. Now our views will not be opposed nor our peace disturbed. We have accomplished our object, we will have no trouble hereafter with this imposture. But hark, Christ has been dead fifty days; we imagined his cause swept from the land; what is this we hear? In place of the one we put to death, we now hear that twelve of his followers are standing in the temple teaching the people the doctrine of the Nazarine. Well we must keep them down, perhaps to-morrow, we will be able to accomplish our aim. But on the morrow, we have three thousand more. What a warning already. In a few days five thousand more, and the good work continued and has continued until this day. Men and women have been converted, the christian preacher honored, and the professor respected. Oh what a glorious state, every one a christian, every one serving God. We have many who profess this, but is it really so? Can we know that an object which glittereth is gold? Certainly we can. Let us examine. What is the best test? Let us have a good and true test of the matter, so we may not be mistaken. Christ shall be judge, the gospel is our detector, not only to learn to know ourselves, but all that pertains to the christian religion. We have in the early Christian Church, one Lord, one faith, one baptism. This could be claimed by them. Look for one instance at the first love'cast in that upper room in the city of Jerusalem. Do you suppose there was danger of formality there? If you think there was, read the conversation in which they were engaged. From that much quoted passage, "Greet ye one another with the holy kiss," I infer, that they must be holy men, otherwise it would have been an unholy kiss, and if they were holy men, do you think their conversation was unholy? Nay verily not. Again as christians they were to follow Christ their Master, and those who were faithful to their calling, certainly would be obedient in all things. Think of the lives of the apostles and martyrs, and then come down to what Christianity now is, and what is it? Are the christians of the present age united as they were in those days? How many different creeds of faith are taught, how many different kinds of baptism performed, yet with all these opinions of ours, which shows we have not one Lord, but many, yet we lay claim to that holy name christian.

But does any one suppose that we, the Church, the Brethren, are pure, holy, and Christ-like? Does any one think that our title to the Church of God is clear? Oh I wish it could be the case. Is our conversation pure, holy, and virtuous! Oh brethren it is not so! Only a few days ago, I heard a brother engage in the ugliest kind of talk. We meet our brethren, we have that boldness to salute those who are good virtuous members, and then go from their presence, a few steps, and out of their hearing, to give vent to the vilest feelings of our heart, yet just because we conduct ourselves in the presence of those whom we fear, as christians should do, therefore we believe, nay, nay, we cannot believe this, but we lead others into the delusion that we are all right. Oh my God pity such poor christians! Then too, the love'cast comes; we attend; we are counted by the hundred around the tables in God's house, but will our counterfeit religion always pass? Should not the very thought make us tremble? It makes me fear the justice of God while I write; "How will God allow us to go on in our iniquities?" How long will he allow us to deceive man in such a simple way? He only in his goodness knows.

Every sermon we hear, we think, oh that does not concern me; others look at me as a christian, and if I only can keep myself in their estimation, as I am now, I am alright. Deluded beings we are, profess to believe in a God, who knoweth all things, yet we do not think, that he sees us. I feel like calling; this worse than infidelity. The Hypocrite is certain y worse than the Infidel. Men always show where their desires are. If our wishes and desires are for the welfare of the church of God, if we are truly converted men and women, we will not engage in unbecoming talk like the sinner, neither will we enjoy ourselves at other's expense. Our round coats, plain apparel, plain furniture in our houses, our long faces at meeting, smooth talk in the presence of the Bishop or preacher, will not make us christians. It will do to get along with while we are healthy, but death may come on too soon. The judgment may not be far off, Christ may make his appearance while our tongues are engaged in serving satan. Can we have the painted idea, that in this condition we can be admitted with Christ and his holy saints?

For the Primitive Christian.
Dark Questions.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

A young and influential saint in Ohio, writes to me for instruction on points which God has wrapped in mystery. The revelation of facts may be in a form that completely hides the signification of the facts. And even when the particulars are clearly unfolded, and the meaning specified, we are left utterly in the dark as to the philosophy of what is revealed. Salvation being of faith, and not a comprehension of the contents of faith, the Gospel must necessarily be in a form adapted to this end.

Here is our Beloved Sister's letter. "I am young in years, and young in the fold of Christ. My desire is to learn all I can and practice all I know. What will become of the wicked when the Millennium takes place? Will the righteous dead be resurrected, and will they be mortal beings, limited in their existence by the millennial term? Is the second death the death which the wicked will experience in the world of woe? Who is the Bride, the Lamb's wife?"

These are themes in the exposition of which we are not permitted to be oracular. In the simple knowledge of these truths, without attempting to unravel their profundities, we already know more than we will be likely to practice. What we anticipate a Millennium and a Resurrection, and that there is a Second Death, and that the Lamb has a Bride, wooed and won from among aliens and enemies,—however inscrutable these announcements may be, they lie at the foundation of all our hopes, stimulate all our energies, shape all our endeavors, and are as intensely practical as the petition, "Give us this day our daily bread."

So far, then, as this remarkable portion of Holy Scripture is concerned, it is easy "to learn all we can," but not easy "to practice all we know." If I were able to lift the curtain from all the queries propounded by our sister, and write fully the mind of God in relation to the millennial state of the wicked, the Second Death, and the Lamb's wife, it would perhaps have less power over the life than to leave the curtain down, and stand in filial faith before it, awed and molded by the unrevealable mysteries and majesties that lie beyond. Too much revelation would be a bane to holiness. Mystery in revelation is an absolute necessity to the authentication of Divinity. Without this, faith has no footing. The apocalypse is brief and startling, but its evolution and realization stretch through the ages of Eternity. It is not a revelation respecting Himself, but of Himself. A part is past, and even history gives no such clear endorsement as we could desire. How much less can conjecture fill up the outline of that which is yet to be unrolled in the seven-sealed scroll. The Revelation needs another Revelation, and will in due time have it. The prefiguration on Patmos of the august advent of Jesus Christ, is but the announcement of the Apocalypse proper. "Behold, He cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see Him:" this is the revelation to which our faith looks, our love clings, and our energies bend. If to this sublime, fast-approaching consummation we can give our longing, cordial "Even so, Amen," all questions not having a personal termination on ourselves may well remain wrapped in the "badger's skin," till "the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in Heaven is opened." Num. 4: 6. Rev. 15: 5. Let us, however, look through the rifts in the cloud and see the glory that is permitted us.

That the millennial period is not the endless represented by a definite term, as some maintain, is so self-evident as to require no argumentative support. Whether it will be a thousand literal years, or a thousand multiplied by the number of days in a year, it is still a distinct dispensation, to be followed by the permanent and eternal course of things. This fact alone demonstrates that the apocalyptic representation of the wicked in that period is not the final one: and not being final, our conception of the Divine Goodness warrants the inference that the emerald rainbow is not yet removed from the Great White Throne. Rev. 4: 3, and 20: 11. As long as that rainbow spans the Seat of Jehovah, the door of hope is not barred. That human generation will continue among those outside the circle of immortality is simply a matter of necessity, or else a fund of vitality and a physical organization communicated that will carry the "nations" through and beyond the millennial dispensation. If this alternative be rejected, the word "till" in Rev. 20: 3 is a sad impeachment of the grammar of God. Satanic deception is at an end "till the thousand years be fulfilled." The innate corruption of human nature will be left to work in its own bitterness without infernal instigations. After the "great chain" is "loosed a little season," Satan shall burst from "his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them to battle." It is probable that the mental culture and calibre of the wicked attained in the thousand years in the absence of satanic agency, will render them only fitter instruments for the occupancy and purpose of the Red Dragon in his malignant advent. A continuance of the existing laws of propagation, would yield a large access to the church triumphant in the death of children. A renovation of our natural constitution, lifting it so far above "the law of sin and death" as to give it a lease out-reaching the millennial reign, would involve the principle of the resurrection, in thing nowhere intimated in relation to the wicked before the expiration of the thousand years. The wicked will remain the wicked, with such mitigations as the incarceration of the Dragon and the mundane supremacy of righteousness will confer. 2 Peter 3: 12. Whether conversion is possible may be a question; but as to admission into the commonwealth of Christ's personal administration the Scriptures afford no clue. This would require all the physical changes referred to by the Apostle in 1 Cor. 15: 51, and 1 Thess. 4: 17. That the "nations," distinct from the kingdom of righteousness, will still exist, and be the dupes and vassals of the Devil after his release, admits of no doubt. Of their privileges in relation to the benefits of the Cross, the Bible is silent. So let us also be.

The second question is so distinctly answered by inspiration that no more is necessary than reference to the testimony of the Holy Ghost. "THE REST OF THE DEAD lived not again UNTIL." This language gets all its meaning from the fact that the other dead did live. "THIS IS THE FIRST RESURRECTION." Blessed and holy is he that hath part in it. "On such the second death hath no power." Mark: no power. This indicates the finality of their bliss. "They shall reign with Christ a thousand years—a triumphant prelude to the full, eternal, ever-brightening apocalypse of the Everlasting Dispensation. "Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more." Rom. 6: 9. "We know that WHEN HE SHALL APPEAR, we shall be LIKE HIM." 1 John 3: 2. "Our conversation is in Heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be FASHIONED LIKE UNTO HIS GLORIOUS BODY." Phil. 3: 20, 21. "As touching the resurrection of the dead, have ye not read that which was spoken by God—God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." Matth. 22: 31, 32. "Neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, BEING THE CHILDREN OF THE RESURRECTION." Luke 20: 36. Here is no room for doubt. The participants of millennial bliss are recovered from the domain of "the last enemy," and are immortal. "Blessed and holy are they." Will we be among that glorified, palm-bearing, jubilant multitude?

To the third question the answer of the holy oracles is equally explicit so far as it goes. When the "great White Throne" is revealed, minus its emerald arch, and the dead, small and great, stand before God, and the books are opened, and judgment rendered according to the works written therein, and the sea and death and hell deliver up their victims—then it is that "death and hell are cast into the lake of fire." THIS IS THE SECOND DEATH." What is more specifically indicated by the terms "death and hell," is set forth with startling distinctness in these words: "And whosoever was not found written in the Book of Life was cast into the LAKE OF FIRE," Rev. 20: 14, 15. This includes every soul that misses heaven. The "second death" is the consummation of the Divine sentence against sin in Eden. That sentence had in it all that belongs to sin, just as the promise of the serpent-Conqueror had in it all of salvation. Sin has eternal consequences, as the counterpart of its redemption has eternal beatitudes. If humanity is finite as to the to be, and sin necessarily runs to extinction of being, the "second death," as a direct judicial infliction, puts a large discount on the Divine honor. "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." In the day, not "nine hundred and thirty years" hence. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die"—die as Adam died, on the day of transgression. "The wages of sin is death"—soul death immediate, body-death prospective, the "second death," as the aggregate of all that sin is and can develop, forever and ever. Every soul that sins, dies, is cut off so completely from the Fount of Life as to render eternal death absolute unless the Author of Life avert the dread catastrophe. "Whosoever is not found written in the Book of Life," will be found in the "lake of fire." "This is the second death," the "everlasting punishment of the wicked," "the worm that never dies," the "flame that is never extinguished."

Unconverted reader, would that I had power to peal this awful truth to your conscience with "the voice of seven thunders." O the wrath of the Lamb—the consummation of horror, the hell of hell. To-day secure the "great salvation," lest to-morrow be forever—an undone Eternity. Prostration is the robber of God, and the abettor of the devil. It cheats the soul out of Heaven, and pays in the currency of "fire and brimstone," "wailing and gnashing of teeth." O the damnation of hell! Despair without hope, woe without limit, an ever-deepening agony, an ever-darkening abyss, an ever-intensifying flame, an ever-widening rupture with God and Heaven, and an ever-increasing assimilation to the devil and his angels. O "the wrath to come"—the wrath of God, ever present, ever to come, "the second death"—death without death—"the blackness of darkness forever." Is there a reader who can contemplate such a destiny without shuddering. If your name is not in the Book of Life, this fate is yours—"the lake of fire," the second death," the torment of damnation while the Throne of Eternal Righteousness endures. May the love of Jesus avert it. The least mitigation would be "a drop of water" on the tip of the finger of Mercy. It is "wrath to the uttermost"—"the fullness of God" "pours without mixture into the cup of His indignation," the "SECOND DEATH." O "flee from the wrath to come."

Who is the Lamb's Wife? God's ideals, and figures, and symbols, and institutions, admit of no improvement. Nothing can be more exclusive than a true marriage. God formed one woman and one man, and this is His own picture of the nuptials of His Son with "the elect lady," the Bride of Heaven, the "woman clothed with the sun, the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars." A Bride worthy of the Lamb, robbed out of His "ivory palaces," perfumed with His merits, beautified with His glory, and adorned with all the graces of the Holy Ghost. "Hail thou that art highly favored, blessed art thou among women." The "Beloved" has but one "Spouse." "My dove, my undefiled is but one." Sol Song 6: 9. The Eternal Lover has no concubines. He needs none. The Lamb has but one Bride, the purchase of His blood. The Lamb's wife engrosses His whole heart, as related to the issues of the Cross. No redeemed souls outside the Divine-human marriage relation. The Trinity of God, the duality of of man, the unity of God and man, forbid it. "There is One Body," and all the members in it. "One Spirit," and all life and grace and salvation in it. "One hope," "One Lord, One Faith, One Baptism, One God and Father," One Son, and One Bride for His eternal companionship. The 144,000 are no more the Bride than an arm or leg is the body. They are a part, but not the whole. In Eph. 5: 22—32 the whole church is emphatically in a conjugal relation to Christ. In Rom. 7: 4, Paul leaves not the shadow of a hope of salvation outside the marriage contract with "Him who is raised from the dead." All that was taken out of the first Adam was moulded into Eve. All that derives their second life out of the Second Adam constitute His Bride. All that are born of God are born into the conjugal alliance. The rib contained no more than was needed to build a fellow nature. God wastes no life in drawing upon Himself for an Everlasting Bride for His only begotten Son. When the Undefiled One is ushered to the Marriage-supper, and pressed to the bosom of the "altogether lovely" with deific rapture, not a blood-washed soul will be left out. In Matth. 25th, the Bride, as such, does not enter the point of elucidation at all, but only helps to fill out the parable. The five wise virgins embrace the whole church; and the Bride, under another figure, does the same. We must all be "espoused to one Husband, and be presented as a chaste virgin to Christ." 2 Cor. 11: 2. The Bride alone enters through the doors of pearl into the marriage chamber of the Eternal Bridegroom.

Profanity.

BY H. SMITH MYERS.

Whilst so much has been said and written upon the subject of Intemperance, by many eminent men and women, and a vast amount of time, labor and money expended for the organization and maintenance of Temperance Societies, and for the publication and distribution of tracts, papers and various other means for the suppression of this great evil, we scarcely ever see an article published, or hear a lecture given upon an evil which comes under our notice daily; a habit and practice of which, at least, one half of the young men of this present time are engaged in, and which really seems to be upon the increase. We allude to profanity. Upon this subject, we wish to pen a few thoughts. Although intemperance has been the cause of a great deal of trouble and misery, throughout the land, and brought sickness and sorrow, pain and suffering to the homes of thousands of families; disgraced and degraded some of the noblest of men, and consigned them to a drunkard's grave, and an everlasting punishment, yet we claim, to-day, that profanity is doing as much towards corrupting society, and sending men's souls to perdition as intemperance. Although the penalty for indulging in the use of profane language is mild, under the existing laws of our government, compared with that of murder, theft, &c., nevertheless it is a violation of one of God's commands, for He says, "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain; for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain, Ex. 20: 7. Indeed profanity seems to be a stepping sin, to those of a more horrible nature. A person who is profane shows, by his language, an open disregard for God's laws, and it is through this violation and regardlessness, that men are sent to regions of outer darkness. Trace the history of a great many of these poor wretches, who have paid the penalty of the law with their lives, and you will find that, first they began to swear, then to lie, next to steal, and from one sin to another, until there was no crime too horrible for them to commit. Oh, how sad it makes us feel to hear the lad who is scarcely out of his infancy, using the name of his Creator so carelessly; the old man, whose feet are tottering on the verge of the grave, calling upon the Almighty to damn him, if the narrative he was relating was not true. Sinner, did you ever think what your condition would be, should God take you at your word? Pause for a moment and consider. What a terrible doom awaits you, should the Lord strike you down. Lost! Lost! Lost! Sent to the regions of "eternal damnation" there to reap the rewards of a mispent life, and to dwell with Satan and his angels forever and ever. A terrible sentence of a just and an avenging God. Those who have the care and supervision of children entrusted to them, cannot be too careful as regards this evil, as such habits are generally acquired in youth; they should use every effort to impress upon their youthful minds the great sin they commit, and the terrible punishment that will follow, if they still adhere to this sinful practice. Children are great imitators in words and actions, and it should be the aim of every parent to fill the minds of his children with religious truths, showing them the necessity of living a Godly life, and the many blessings that are to be enjoyed, both in this world and the world to come, by those who follow the Lord's commands. Also to teach them the folly of engaging in those sinful practices, and the terrible ends which they lead to. Christians should use all the means in their power to eradicate this great sin which is so prevalent among the youth of our land. Convince them, that every oath they utter, is a direct violation of one of the Ten Commandments that was given to Moses amidst the thunderings and lightnings of Sinai. Let us all then, work and pray for the downfall of this sin, and for the upbuilding and establishment of that "faith that was once delivered to the saints" that when we are called upon to give an account of our stewardship, the Lord shall say unto us, "Well done thou good and faithful servant, enter into the joys prepared for thee from the foundation of the world."

The Ministration of Angels.

BY JOHN THOMAS.

That the Lord sends an angel to watch over his adopted children, seems to be the teaching of the Bible. The fact is thus stated by the Psalmist: "For he (the Lord) shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways." Psalm 91: 11. In all our conflicts with the power of darkness, we have the promise of a Savior, to be with us to the end. The saint has likewise the promise of a guardian angel, to guard him in dangers seen and unseen. Satan is well aware of this, and having this knowledge said to the Lord: "Doth Job fear God for naught? hast thou not made a hedge about him, and about his house, and all that he hath on every side?" Job 1: 9, 10. Let David tell us how it is that the Lord makes a hedge about his servants. "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them." Ps. 34: 7. God's angel constantly watched over Job, and all that he had, so that the devil could not touch him. What is true in Job's case is true of every child of God, yet we are often slow to think of the care God has for his children, and rely upon him. "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, That in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven." Matth. 18: 10. The phrase "their angels" shows that there are angels so closely connected with every servant of Christ that they are called their angels. Paul, in Hebrews 1: 14, says, "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation?" From the above quotations, and many more that we might name, it seems that angels are much interested in our salvation, ministering to our wants in various ways.

When our Savior had the conflict in the wilderness with the adversary of souls, and overcame him, and had fasted forty days and nights, then angels ministered unto him. Thus we think when we are upon the line of duty that angels will minister to our wants. Jacob's case as recorded in Gen. 28: 10-22, is an illustration of this point. He fled from his brother Esau, and when he slept that night "he dreamed, and behold, a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven; and behold, the angels of God ascending and descending on it, and behold, the Lord stood above it, and he talked with Jacob. And Jacob awaked out of his sleep, and he said, surely the Lord is in this place; and I knew it not." The angels of God were all around him, and the eyes of the Lord were over him. Could we only always realize facts, we would often feel as Jacob did. What a comfort to the weary pilgrim to know that those heavenly messengers are hovering around him, and keeping up a communication from the lower world of sin and sorrow, and the Throne where God resides.

And while angels have been sent on many missions, they have at least one grand mission to fill yet, and that is to gather his elect from one end of heaven to the other. That is part of their mission. When Lazarus died he was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom. What a contrast between him and the rich man! He also died and was buried, and in hell he lifted up his eyes! No angels to convey him to the bosom of father Abraham.

Oh! sinner will you accept salvation, that you may have the assistance of these heavenly messengers, who are so much interested in your behalf? Oh, what joy there is among the angels when one sinner turns to Jesus! Then, brethren, let us try to so live that we may ever have these heavenly messengers, though invisible, for our companions, and finally be gathered by them to meet around the Throne of God without the loss of one, is our prayer.

NOBLY DARE, BRAVELY DO.

We are living at a time when great events make history rapidly, and only the very indifferent fail to see God in the movement of the troubled waters. The age is full of activity, and the Christian must be firm, and with faith in God, press on to victory. The world wants men who are earnestly devoted to the right, regardless of fear, of favor, or patronage of men; preachers who forget mere niceties in the pulpit, and pour out the soul in burning words to the people; men who outleap dry manuscripts and preach Christ until the people tremble, believe and are saved; men who are keenly alive to the fact that this world is only a "valley of death," and thousands, yea, hundreds of thousands are pleading for help and no help comes. The Valley of Death, as many of our readers may know, is a spot almost as terrible as the prophet's Valley of Dry Bones. This valley lies just north of the old Mormon road to California, a region thirty miles long by thirty broad, and surrounded, except at two points, by inaccessible mountains. It is totally devoid of water and vegetation, and the shadow of a bird or wild beast never darkens its white glaring sands. In 1850 an emigrant train, not knowing the existence of such a place, descended into the valley, whose treacherous mirage promised water. They reached the center, but only the white sand bounded by scorching peaks, met their gaze. Around the valley they wandered, and one by one the men died, and the panting flocks stretched themselves in death under the hot sun. The children, crying for water, died at their mother's breasts, and with swollen tongues and turning vitals the helpless mothers followed. Wagon after wagon was abandoned, and strong men tottered and died. After a week's wandering, a dozen survivors found some water in the hollow of a rock in the mountain. It lasted but a short time when all died but two, who escaped out of the valley and followed the trail of their former companions. Eighty-seven families, with hundreds of animals, perished here. It must have been a heart-rending scene to hear those helpless people crying for water, and none to help. Behold the world is crying for the Bread of Life. Who will draw from the wells of salvation to supply the thirst of human souls? It is not a time to stop to debate about this expediency or that, but the voice of willing obedience, "Here am I, send me," should be heard on every band. It is true here and there is a man or a woman who is o' tiling beyond their strength, but where there is one there should be a thousand. We want men who count not their lives dear unto themselves, but who are willing to go from house to house, to visit the sick, to administer to the needy, to pour the oil of gladness into sin-sick souls; we want professors who are living epistles, read and known of all men; who walk together in all honesty and sincerity; who walk and speak for Jesus every day, and who are careful to maintain good works profitable to men; men to wrestle for great truth against armies of opposition; valiant for truth and justice, wrestling with an angel, or like Luther, with devils—men who will prevail in the end.

When Rev. Dr. Seudder, of Brooklyn, was returning from India, he saw, one evening, a dark, unlovely cloud blackening the western horizon and shadowing the sea. As he gazed upon it, the sun sank into the cloud. It at once softened, mellowed, and finally blazed with light. Pierced with ten thousand beams, it poured forth cata-bolts of liquid splendor that bathed the pavement of the great deep as with a flood of molten gold. That which before cast a sullen shadow, now hung in the heavens transfigured with celestial light. The change was wrought simply by the entrance of the sun. So of Christians it may be said, "Ye were sometimes darkness, but now are light in the Lord." The indwelling Christ changes that which is by nature dark and unlovely into a glory and a joy. Softened and mellowed by his presence, we are changed from glory to glory till we are finally melted and merged into the brightness and bliss of the heavenly world. Men and women filled with heavenly illumination, with Holy Ghost power, will be as that cloud after the sun had catered it. This heavenly light cannot be put under a bushel—it must shine out. And as the sun shone through the cloud until it finally played with light, so will we if we let the Sun of Righteousness enter those hearts so long shut up. The world needs just such lives to convince them of the reality of Christianity. More good people in heart and life are wanted, rather than people whom the giddy call smart. The world wants hard, trusty, diligent workers, those who never falter, but hold out to the end; men who may die but cannot surrender. In a word, the world wants men and women of pure hearts, and lives who are ministering angels, under all circumstances, to mortals in want and misery—good exemplars, guide-boards, way-marks always pointing to heaven.—Golden Censor.

From First to Last.

There are unwritten histories, which, if related in all their minutia, would be more thrilling than a romance, and would teach lessons which, alas, too many are slow to learn.

To the young and inexperienced life is full of promise. The world opens wide the door of hope and enterprise; fame allures, gain beckons, pleasure charms, and the pent up energies of ardent youth long for wider spheres and greater opportunities for exercise and development.

Thus the young man, just entering upon active life, bids adieu to the scenes of home, and goes forth to battle with the world,—to test his powers in the struggle of life, and win if possible some prize in the race that opens before him. A mother's prayers have followed him from the cradle up; and now with a mother's blessing and her parting admonitions and instructions, he goes forth saying: "Good bye mother, don't worry about me, I can take care of myself; I shall come back in my carriage some day, and see you all again."

The scene changes; the city with its ten thousand sights and sounds has stirred his pulses and awakened his dormant energies; he has made new friends, very unlike the staid and tender mother whom he has left behind, or the honest rustics whom he knew before, and in the excitements and enjoyments of city life, he finds something quite different from the tedious humdrum of a country home. He stands within the gilded saloon; the obsequious bar tender extends the decanter, and his city friend overcomes his hesitation with: "Just one glass, you know; oh, don't be squeamish,—you can take care of yourself, and so can I."

"The first glass!" will the results of that glass ever be unfolded? What dire phantoms of darkness hover over that first cup,—what misery sleeps within its sparkling depths,—what ruin waits on those who look upon the wine when it is red!

We trace our young friend a little farther; he is fast learning the lessons of the city. The card table, the convivial bowl, the glittering decanter and the clinking glasses, cigars, scenes of mirth and jollity, wine and wassail, all tell of a "high old time." Home is forgotten; the quiet joys and pleasures of early life are stale; gay, godless companions lead in the road to death; the tempter's spell is about the lated youth. Some cannot be described and associates that may not be named consume his substance and waste his precious life; nati at last exhausted, disgusted, shattered, wrecked, he awakes as from a horrible nightmare, and finds himself holden in the deadly serpent's coil. The desperate mania of the op is upon him; familiar forms have turned to horrid shapes of evil. Saakes write and twist themselves about his studdering form; horror takes hold upon him; vile, foul, loathsome things haunt him; and wicred and horrible fancies harass and rack his mind.

The end is not far off, but who can write it? Diseased, debauched, his nerves unstrung, his constitution broken, his bones rotted, his eyes bleared, horror and darkness settling about him, he sinks in the dire struggle, and his sm goes down at noon! Straggers look coldly on him in the dying hour, and rude unfriendly heads convey him to the Potter's Field. Ah! how many such graves there are! and no man that lives dars go to the old home where childhood's sunny hours were spent, and tell the whole honest truth about what carried the wandering boy to his grave. No man dares to break that mother's heart with the terrible narration of the sin, and vice, and ruin which the destroyer has wrought. Let her remain in ignorance,—her ignorance is bliss.

But in after years she comes, a worn and wearied pilgrim, gray-haired, with furrows on her care worn face, and by that neglected grave, where thorns and briars twine and tangle themselves above the sleeping dust, that mother kneels and cries out in the language of Israel's king: "My son! my son! would God I had died for thee!"

Many a mother may read in this simple outline the story of her wandering child, and many a young man, snatching the ties that bound him to home, and break, ing away from the restraints that have held him; strong, self-confident and courageous, is swiftly going to his doom along the terrible path. The end is not far off, his steps are in the broad way, he looks upon "the wine when it is read," his feet take hold upon the paths that lead to ruin, and in a little while his gaiety shall turn to gloom, his luxury shall be exchanged for poverty, the scenes of riotous mirth shall end in sorrow and despair, and the dark shadows of death and judgment shall hang themselves over the lost soul! Let those who have entered upon this downward path take warning; let those who are yet safe give heed to wise counsels and godly admonitions.

And oh, ye mothers whose little ones are within your arms, and whose children are growing up around you, as you desire to see them blessed of God and a blessing to all mankind,—as you would not rear them up to walk the earth a bloting curse, and sink at last into a drunkard's grave,—as you would not bring forth children for perdition, nor nourish them up to fight against the God that made them, I pray you, in every hour and at every opportunity, seek to train them early in the service of God, and warn them faithfully concerning the perils of a drunkard's path.

'On touch not the wine cup," though pleasures may swim

In the bubbles that float round its roseate brim;

For dark in the depths of the fountains below,
Are the sycens that lurk in the vortex of woe.'

Your Religion.

BY W. EISENRISE.

What becomes of your Religion? Simply profess it, or do you possess it? Does it make you more amiable or are you just as harsh, petulant, and irritable as the unregenerated? Does it make you more kindly, forgiving and generous with a spirit that wishes well to all mankind, or are you selfish, narrow-minded, unforgiving? Does it resign you to the inevitable? Is it comfort in times of affliction, a support when you meet with losses, reverses and calamities? Can you contemplate death with composure and equanimity? Do you believe in the promise that all will be well with the good? Are you resigned? Can you truly say, "Thy will be done"?

If you are a Christian you will do as you would be done by; seek the good of others rather than personal gratification; will be just, hopeful, forgiving, cheerful, trustful and charitable. A Christian will carefully regulate his propensities, guard against a sordid love of money, vain pride, or egotism, an acrimonious temper, fault-finding, unjust suspicion, jealousy, deception, double-dealing, or doing everything which the great Teacher himself would not have approved.

A truly vital religion elevates and improves, spurious religion corrupts and leads downward. A true christian worships God in sincerity and in truth, and looks more to the adornment of his mind than of his body. A contemporary says, "I have seen a woman professing to love Christ more than the world clad in a silk dress costing $75. Making up and trimming of some $35 or $40. Velvet mantle $150. Diamond rug $500. Watch chain, pin and other trappings $300. Total $1,100, all hung upon one frail mortal.

"I have seen her at a meeting in behalf of the homeless wanderers in New York City wipe her eyes on an embroidered handkerchief, costing $10 at the story of their suffering. And when the contribution box came round take from a well filled wallet of costly workmanship, twenty-five cents to aid the society formed to promote their welfare. Ah, thought I, dollars for ribbon and pennies for Christ's children. How is it with the men? What amount do they spend on their indulgence in costly dinners, wine, liquor, and tobacco, that should be used for good purposes? How much for mere pleasure excursions, visiting watering places, and in dissipation and flirtations? How much for fast horses, stylish equipages, and vain display? Are the clergymen themselves exempt from all these things? Are vestrymen deacons and other church officers all circumspect and consistent christians? Are all those who sing praise to him in sacred song actuated by an exalted christian spirit? Or are they ambitious for worldly honor, eager for wages or for praises of flattering tongues? How shocking to a devout mind is it to witness the utter want of reverence in a person approaching his Maker with a manner of independence as though he were an auctioneer about to harangue a body of tobacco buyers. Such scenes may be witnessed not a thousand miles from New York. True religion is not a cloak to cover up sin, though impostors so use it, nor is the means by which the purse-proud, the arrogant or haughty Pharisee, can secure happiness here or hereafter. True religion brings blessings to its possessor, let his worldly circumstances be what they may. Reader be not deceived. See to it that your religion is founded on the truth. With Christ for your guide, teacher, companion, you cannot remain in error nor go far wrong."

Non-Conformity;—What is it?

BY H. R. KING.

Methinks I hear some young brother or sister ask the above question, and I will try and do what I can towards answering it.

In the first place, our Savior tells us that his disciples are not of the world, though they are in the world. We see all around us, the world engaging in horse-racing, gambling, dancing, drinking, carousing, having pic-nics, festivals, &c., and we see them decking themselves in gay clothing to satisfy the "lust of the eyes and the pride of life;" and more than that, we hear them taking the name of God in vain. Yes, and we see them heaping up treasures on earth, refusing to lend their poor neighbors a farming tool, or a horse, &c., saying by their actions, go get such things as I did. Now the Holy Scriptures condemn all such things. The apostle Paul in the 12th chapter of Romans tells us to "be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind." Yes the mind must be renewed. If our minds have become renewed, we will shew it by our daily walk. We will hate the things we once loved, and love the things we once hated. We once loved to partake of nearly all the evils of the world, and especially to wear fine clothes; but now we believe it is sinful to do so, and our belief is founded on a rock; yes, on the rock Christ Jesus.

I will try and give you a few passages of scripture, bearing on the subject. John 15: 19. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you. John 17: 14-16. We must so conduct our lives and so dress our bodies that we may be "known of all men." 2 Cor. 3: 2. Same letter, 6: 17. We are commanded to come out from among them and be separate. In Eph. 4: 17, not to walk in the vanity of our minds. Same chap. 22, 23, to put off the old man which is corrupt, and be renewed in the spirit of our minds. Col. 2: 8. We are cautioned to beware lest any man spoil us through philosophy and vaindeceit, after the traditions of men and not after Christ. 3rd chapter 2d verse, we are admonished to set our affections on things above and not on things on the earth. 1 Tim. 2: 9, "In like manner also, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with braided hair, or gold or pearls, or costly array. 1 Peter 1: 14, Not to fashion ourselves according to our former lusts in our ignorance, and in the same chapter, tells us plainly that our adorning should not be that of plaiting the hair or wearing of gold, or of putting on costly apparel. That disciple whom Jesus loved, tells us in his first epistle 2: 15, not to love the world, neither the things in the world, and James 13: 27, unfolds this matter to us in a nut shell, and says, "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their afflictions, and to keep himself unspotted from the world. There is more contained in this verse than I will be able to show forth in this short article but may refer to it hereafter. From the scripture given above, we may learn what the world is. Then I would say if we brethren, wear the coats, vest, neck-tie, &c., of the world, is it not a spot on us, because we are commanded to "hate even the garment spotted by the flesh.

THE INFLUENCE OF EXAMPLE.

Fenelon, Archbishop of Cambray is said to have been a very amiable and exemplary man, though he was a Roman Catholic. Lord Peterborough was not a religious man and having lodged with the Arch-bishop, he was so impressed with the amiability of his spirit and excellency of his character that he said to him when he took leave of him, "If I stay here any longer, I shall become a Christian in spite of myself."

J. A. James, the author of "The Earnest Christian," and several other works, in one of his lectures, says,

"If the present lecturer has a right to consider himself a real Christian, —if he has been of any service to his fellow-creatures, and has attained to any usefulness in the Church of Christ, he owes it, in the way of means and instrumentality, to the sight of a companion, who slept in the same room with him, bending his knees in prayer, on retiring to rest. That scene, so unostentatious, and yet so unconcealed, aroused my slumbering conscience, and sent an arrow to my heart; for, though I had been religiously educated, I had restrained prayer, and cast off the fear of God. My conversion to God followed, and soon afterwards my entrance upon college studies for the ministry. Nearly half a century has rolled away since then, with all its multitudinous events; but that little chamber, that humble couch, that praying youth, are still present to my imagination, and will never be forgotten, even amidst the splendor of heaven, and through the ages of eternity."

The foregoing testimonies to the influence of pious example are very conclusive. Example will more or less influence those who are brought in contact with it. If the example is of a holy character, its tendency will be to produce a holy character in those brought within its influence; if it is of an unholy character, its tendency will be to produce the same in others as far as they are likely to be controlled by it. Society is governed by such laws, and the different parts of it so related to each other, that there is no human being that does not exert some influence upon his companions or those with whom he associates. Whatever the apostle designed to convey by the following language, the idea of reciprocal influence seems to be taught: "For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself," Rom. 14: 7. The conduct of A. may induce B. to do the same thing, and B. in turn may influence C., and in this way we may have a series of actions following each other, and related to each other as cause and effect. If it is true, as philosophy teaches, that not a particle of matter is ever destroyed, is it not equally true that not a single moral action will ever be entirely annihilated in its consequences, but continue to exist in some form and in some degree in its successors? And if this is the case, what a fearful degree of responsibility rests upon every moral being!

When our Lord said to his disciples, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven," Matth. 5: 16, his admonition or commandment was in meaning the same as if he had said, Let your example be such that others may admire the moral beauty of your Christian lives and be induced to imitate them, and in doing so they shall glorify God while they save themselves. Similar in meaning to the foregoing admonition of our Lord, is that of the apostle Peter contained in the following words: "Likewise, ye wives, be in subjection to your own husbands; that, if any obey not the word, they also may without the word be won by the conversation of the wives; while they behold your chaste conversation coupled with fear," 1 Peter 3: 1, 2.

In the English version of the New Testament as corrected by the American Bible Union, we have deportment instead of conversation. And in Macknight on the Epistles, we have behavior instead of conversation. Dr. Macknight's explanatory note on the apostle's language, they also may without the word, &c., is in such harmony with the character of our article, and so very appropriate that we shall give it. It is this: "Here Peter wisely intimated to the women, that the silent but powerful persuasion of a becoming behavior, would be more effectual in winning their unbelieving husbands to embrace the gospel, than many arguments, proposed perhaps with heat, for the purpose of convincing them. For when the husbands found what a happy influence the gospel had in making their wives sweet-tempered, and dutiful in every respect, they could not but entertain a good opinion of a religion which produced such excellent effects."

There is much truth in the following remarks upon example as an education: "What are the great educators of the world—those who insensibly mould us, or to which we resort for influence upon our own or others' lives? Are they moral maxims, wise sayings, proverbs, and saws? Is it not rather example? These axioms and maxims, proverbs and precepts, are but the instruments by which we clinch the truths example has driven into the mind. They are the labels which we affix to the illustrated lessons—the pictures and the models. At all events, we, none of us, begin to live by principles. These may come afterwards to be our sufficient instructors, but I must doubt whether one in a hundred men has adopted a principle of life, until some signal example of it has convinced him of its worth."

It is no doubt true that a good example is more effectual in imparting instruction than simply good precepts; since good example does not only express the same elements of Christian character that a good precept does, but it expresses it in a manner that is more likely to make it impressive and cause it to be remembered. Christian precepts are word pictures of Christianity; while Christian example is Christianity itself, in a living form and in action, displaying all its charms and graces in their real character, giving it a life-like form, which brings it into contact with our senses, thus enabling us to form a proper idea of it. And as we know a person better when we see him than when we read a description of him, or than when we even see his picture, so we can form a more correct idea of Christianity when we see it exemplified in the lives of its adherents than when we see it simply described in words, or when we study it in its precepts and principles. It is for these reasons probably that the sacred writers use the figure of personification so much, a figure which consists in ascribing life and action to inanimate objects and even to abstract ideas.

A mother relates the following occurrence which forcibly illustrates the influence of parental example, and shows the importance of watchfulness on the part of parents that their example may be such that it can be imitated with safety on the part of their children:

"As I was about to enter my nursery, to look after my little ones, I observed the youngest, a boy of three years of age, looking over a book, which he had taken from a shelf, resembling a family Bible used before morning and evening prayer.

"Struck with the unusual solemnity of his manner, I watched his movements. With great precision, and apparent devotion, he went through the exercises of reading and singing, and kneeling for prayer, in imitation of his father's daily example. And never was manner, voice, or gesture, more properly copied. Trifling as was this circumstance, so deep and solemn was the impression made upon my mind, that to this time I feel myself mentally exclaiming, 'What manner of persons ought we to be, in all holy conversation and holiness!'

"Never till that moment had my mind dwelt upon the momentous fact, though so oft repeated, that the future characters and eternal destinies of children are usually, at a very early period, stamped by parental example; and I now felt what an amazing influence must be exerted upon young children by the manner in which their parents conduct family prayer."

As example has the influence that it has, all Christians should appreciate their position, and the influence of their example, and let their example be such as will exemplify and recommend Christianity to all those with whom they associate in life. And while every Christian should use his utmost endeavors to set a good example, and to let the beauty and influence of his Christianity be seen and felt, such especially should ministers of the gospel do. They are admonished by the apostle Peter to be "examples to the flock," 1 Peter 5: 3. And the life and example of the minister will exert a great influence in moulding the Christian character of the people to whom he ministers and among whom he dwells. "And there shall be, like people, like priest," Hosea 4: 9. This principle is as applicable to the church now, as it was to the Jews in the time of Hosea.

Christian reader, let us remember the language of Lord Peterborough in regard to Fenelon's pious example: "If I stay here any longer, I shall become a Christian in spite of myself." And also the case of the praying youth in his chamber, which made such an impression upon the mind and life of J. A. James, the well known minister of Birmingham, England, and may our example be blessed by the Lord to the spiritual good of others

BORN OF THE SPIRIT.

Christ, when teaching Nicodemus the necessity of regeneration, demonstrated the spiritual birth by referring to the natural birth. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." Just previous to this expression, Nicodemus had inquired how it was possible for a man to be born again when he is old; and in allusion to this question he desires to teach him, that if it were even possible for such a thing to occur, it would be of no real benefit, as he would still have the same evil propensities and passions. Another change is therefore necessary. He must be born of the Spirit. And as children partake of the nature of their parents, so they that are born of the Spirit of God, or by the agency of the Holy Ghost, will be like him, holy and pure.

One point in this subject we wish to notice, and that is the effects of this birth. If we are born of the Spirit the effects will be such as can be seen and felt, not only by ourselves, but by those about us. Christ taught Nicodemus this truth by the following very apt and appropriate simile: "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit." We cannot see the wind, but we feel it and see its effects on surrounding objects. So it is with the Spirit; it is an unseen power, yet where it exists it can be felt and realized. When men and women are born of the Spirit it will manifest itself. Those by whom they are surrounded will see and feel it. If we have been sinners, we will become holy; if we have been hearts and thoughtless, we will become more serious and sober; if we have been wicked, we will become religious; if we have been prayerless, we will become prayerful; if we have been rebellious and obstinate, we will become meek, mild and gentle. These are the effects of the Spirit, and if we are truly born of the Spirit, these traits of character must and will be plainly manifest.

Christian reader, have we these evidences of conversion? Are you sober, pious, prayerful, meek, mild and gentle? It is certainly important that we consider this matter. Sometimes we fear the works of the flesh are too plainly manifest in those who claim to have undergone this birth. How fickle and thoughtless we sometimes are, and how angry we become amidst the most trifling annoyances! The apostle, in writing to the Ephesian brethren classes foolish talking and jesting among the unclean things, such as covetousness, fornication, and uncleanness, they are therefore the works of the flesh, and if we are truly born of the Spirit, that which belongs to the flesh will be subdued. This thoughtless and fickle talking and jesting which so many professors are so prone to engage in, is not in harmony with the spirit of Christianity, and is an evidence that our birth is not as complete as it should be.

Then again, we are so likely to become angry, and this the apostle in his letter to the Galatian brethren, in summing up the works of the flesh classes with idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, and a long catalogue of other heinous sins. It is true, as long as we are in the flesh we have the passions to combat, but if we are born of the Spirit we will try and can keep them within the proper bounds. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh," and it is certainly evident that when we give vent to our angry passions we are cantering to the flesh. Let us, Christian friends, endeavor to examine ourselves, and by comparing ourselves with the truly regenerated, many of us will, no doubt, feel that we have much room for improvement. We direct attention to the habit of idle talking and jesting, and that of becoming angry at everything that crosses our natures, because they are so prevalent amongst us as Christians, and it is certainly not a result of the spiritual birth. It is the result of the flesh, and Paul to the Galatians says, "And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts. If we are born of the Spirit, we will crucify all the evils of our natures, and endeavor to become more and more conformed to the principles of Christianity. Levery and anger are antagonistic to it and it is certainly time that we as a Christian people exhibit to the world more sobriety, steadfastness and devotedness to our blessed Master. Paul in his letter to Titus gives us some directions that we invite the reader to read and meditate upon. It exhibits what should be the true character of those who are born of the spirit.

PLEASE NOTICE.

On account of entering into a partnership business it is especially desirable that all old accounts on both papers be settled as soon as it can be done. The amounts due each office must be kept separate and sent to the respective firms as before.

All dues to the PILGRIM office address to H. B. Brumbaugh & Bro., Box 50, Huntingdon, Pa.

All dues to the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN office, address James Quinter Box 50, Huntingdon, Pa.

All business to be hereafter transacted, in connection with the consolidated paper, address to Quinter & Brumbaugh Bros. Box 50, Huntingdon, Pa. tf.

The following marriage notice was sent us by our esteemed brother and contributor, Cyrus Wallick, of Breedsville, Michigan. We are glad to know that the friends of the parties are pleased with the union, and hope that their most sanguine expectations may be realized. We made considerable sacrifice to have the union consummated, and therefore the kind words and good wishes of our friends have a very consoling effect:

October 31, 1876, at Huntingdon, Pa., by Quinter and Brumbaugh Brothers, the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, of Meyersdale, Pa., and THE PILGRIM, of Huntingdon, Pa. This union had long been hoped for by many friends of both parties, and it is hoped that peace, prosperity and long life may attend it.

Some of our agents are reporting very favorably for the consolidated paper, by way of sending in largely increased lists of names. We hope all will do this and thus show that they are favorable to a larger and better paper than has been published heretofore by the church. This was the leading object we had in view in uniting our offices and as it was we will expect the aid and encouragement of all. Let us have it by subscribing yourself and inducing as many of your neighbors to subscribe as possible.

Our location and mail facilities are such as really and practically obliterate distance, so far as the publication of a weekly paper is concerned, and therefore we know no east, west, north or south but desire the united aid and encouragement of the whole church, and as we know that all good and earnest workers in the church are laboring for a greater unanimity of sentiment we feel assured that we shall have it, as the concentrating of our publications greatly tends in that direction.

Any of our readers in want of a light steam power can be accommodated by applying to us. We have a two and a half horse power, Baxter Engine, which we will sell at a bargain. The engine is as good as new, only run about nine months, and cost $400, and will sell it for $225. Reason for selling: Replaced it by one of greater power. The Baxter is acknowledged to be among the best engines made, and if any of our readers are in want of a power of this kind, they will find in this offer a good bargain.

On account of adjusting our presses and engines our press room got so cold that our ink would not work and as a result, we are doing some bad printing. In a short time we hope to have things in proper shape, when our readers can expect better work as well as a better paper. We have not the time to devote to the general make-up of our paper that is desirable, but a little time and patience will put all things in shape.

From the Shade Creek church, Pa. we have the following:

"Brother S. M. Bashor was with us from the 28th of October to 2nd inst. Thirty-two were baptized and many others almost ready."

Brother S. M. Bashor's address, until further notice, will be New Enterprise, Bedford county, Pa., in care of Elder Leonard Fury.

CLIFTON MILLS, }
PRESTON CO., WEST VA. }

Dear Primitive Christian:—

For the satisfaction of the brethren, I will write a short article concerning my trip to Pa. I left home on the 29th of September, went to the George's Creek congregation, arrived at brother J. Mosier's late in the evening. Next day went to the Grove meeting house accompanied by brother J. A. Ridenour, where we met many of the brethren and sisters. Preaching at ten o'clock, also at the same place in the evening. Had a very good love-feast. Preaching next day at ten o'clock. I then returned to brother Mosier's, where I left my horse. Went to brother Johnson's in the evening, preached in a school house near brother Johnson's. Next morning went to Uniontown in company with brother Summy, the elder in the Jacob's Creek congregation. Took the cars in the morning, went to Oakdale station, where I met brother J. Galeton, who took me to his house, where I was treated with brotherly kindness. Went to the Brethren's church in the evening where I tried to preach to a small but very attentive congregation. Went home with old brother Galeton, where I was kindly treated. Meeting at the same place next evening. Went home with brother Strickler and wife. Next morning brother Strickler took me to Scottsdale station on the South Western R. R. Took the cars for Greensburg, and from there went to Mineral Point, Cambria Co., Pa., where I met brother Berkeley who lives at that place. He took me to his house where we met sister Berkeley and family who received me kindly. In the afternoon went to brother Stephen Hildebrand's, where I met brother D. Hildebrand for the first time, and found him to be a brother indeed. Meeting in the evening in the Brethren's meeting house. Met brother Snyder from the West, who was on a visit, and had been preaching several days. Next day met at the same place. Had preaching, and in the evening held a lovefeast. Many of the brethren and sisters communed here. I met many of the dear brethren and sisters whom I never met before. They came from all parts of the earth. I had to think of the great Supper of the Lord in the evening of this world when they will come from the four quarters of the earth. This was in the Conemaugh congregation. In the evening just before the feast there was one soul more added by baptism. Preaching next day at ten o'clock. Took dinner at the church, then went with brother Stutzman and wife and some other brethren to Johnstown, took the train and in the evening came to New Florence. Here we met brother S. L. Decker, who took us to a school house three miles distant. Here we met a large congregation of people. After meeting went to brother Decker's. Some of the brethren came there to talk on things pertaining to eternal life, among whom was a United Brother. After some considerable talk, he concluded that if it could be attended to he would be baptized. So we counseled the brethren and baptized him a little after twelve o'clock at night. This reminded me of the jailer and his house. They were baptized the same hour of the night. This was in Westmorland Co., Pa. Next day preparations were made for a feast, and in the evening the lovefeast was held in friend Decker's barn. Had a very good meeting. Preaching next day at the same place. In the evening there were two more precious souls led down into the flowing stream and were baptized. Three more were to be baptized the next morning, but as my time was up and as I had to start for home, I left brother Hanawalt to attend to it, which I hope he did. On Monday morning the 9th of October, I took the cars at New Florence and arrived at brother Johnson's at half past one o'clock, where I left my horse. In the afternoon I started for home, arrived home at twelve o'clock the same night and found all well. May the good Lord bless the weak efforts your unworthy brother has been putting forth for the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom.

SOLOMON BUCKLEW.

CORDELIA, CAL.

Dear Brethren:

I know that you solicit church news from every part of the brotherhood, therefore I will give you a brief report of our communion meeting which was held on the San Joaquin River. Our meeting commenced on Friday the 22nd of September, and ended October 2nd. It was held in a beautiful grove which Nature had arranged so nicely. It was but little trouble to put up the tents and make the necessary preparations for such an occasion. There was quite a number encamped during the meeting: not only the brethren and sisters, but a goodly number of strangers.

Our meetings were well conducted; and we had the very best order and attention. It was remarked by different ones that they never saw such good order as there was at these meetings. We had four ministering brethren: Elders George Wolf, Jonathan Myers, Stephen Broadhurst, of California, and brother Leedy, of Oregon. They labored faithfully and successfully. They worked hard but I think they were richly paid. The Lord blessed their labors by the conversion of six precious souls, and I think there were several more who were almost persuaded to do as the six did, come out and be baptized. There was quite an old lady who told me that she had been baptized forty years ago, by single immersion, but she came very near going forward at this meeting to be baptized again, but could not fully make up her mind to do so. I think she will soon be one of our number. She acknowledged that she never saw the commandments followed out so closely, and everything done so in accordance with the Bible, as at this meeting; she could not help enjoying the meeting, as it was carried on so quietly and so nicely, and with such good feeling towards one another.

How nice it is to see brethren and sisters thus dwell together in love! It is much better than always to be finding fault, and striving and contending about things that do not amount to anything in the end. I tell you, dear brethren and sisters, if we would all sweep before our own doors, or, in other words, watch, and keep our tongues and tempers under control, and keep our hearts right, and ourselves unspotted from the world, we would have enough to do. Indeed, I find it is more than I can do to watch and keep myself in the right way.

Our communion was on Saturday night. Before closing, and on Sunday night, there was a large crowd present. I believe there were upward of fifty communed, which I think is pretty good for our little California church. The church is in a thriving condition and we are gaining members rapidly. I believe there have been upward of forty additions in the last two years. We need more ministers. There is a wide field open here; but we feel encouraged. Brethren John Wolf and Walter Myers received their charge at this meeting to go forth and preach the gospel, and we hope soon to hear of their doing a good work. They are worthy members and zealous in the cause. May they always continue faithful and not faint by the way, for they will necessarily have many trials to endure.

My heart goes out in sympathy towards brother Hope in Denmark

He surely has many severe trials; and we ought to help and encourage him all we can. I think his cause a noble one; and he is trying to fulfil that glorious command given by Christ himself: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." I think we are too indifferent in heeding this great command. I was fortunate enough at the meeting, by adding our own little mites, to raise $12.75 for brother Hope, and after returning home my little girl added twenty-five cents more, which make $13.00. I exchange it for gold and it will still make a little more.

Now, brethren and sisters, let us all see what we can do. It only requires a little effort on our part. I raised the above amount in one afternoon only, and intended making another effort, but was sick and did not. Some who were not able felt willing, feeling it to be a glorious cause. May others follow their good example.

The Jewish Passover.

Dear Editor:

Will you please permit me to speak a few words through the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN to our dear brother P. H. Beaver of Buffalo Valley, not that I would like to get into a controversy with him, but being personally acquainted with him, I do the more cheerfully write, yet at the same time I know that we who believe otherwise than he does, are not responsible for his belief. But I merely want to ask him a few questions concerning an article written by him in the Primitive, No 42, page 669. Was it the Jewish Passover the Savior sent the disciples to make ready to eat? or was it a passover for the Savior's use in finishing the plan of salvation? You as much as say that it was the Jewish Passover that he sent them to prepare; and that the disciples did truly go and prepare in that large upper room for him and his disciples to eat the passover. And when the hour was come he sat down with the twelve, but not to that passover the disciples had prepared, but to a supper.

And further on you say, that when the Savior ate the last supper with his disciples, it does not appear that they occupied the large upper room or guest chamber, where the disciples had prepared the passover to eat it on the following night. This is something strange to me, that Jesus should send the disciples to prepare the Jewish Passover nearly a whole day and part of a night, before it was lawful for them to kill it. Passing strange, indeed! How could they prepare it before it was killed? This is beyond my comprehension. You know that the word "passover" means a lamb or a kid. The word passover, never was applied to an ox, nor to anything else that belonged to the passover, not even the unleavened bread. Jesus told the disciples that they should say to the good man of the house, "The Master saith unto thee, where is the guest chamber where I shall eat the Passover with my disciples, and he shall show you a large upper room furnished and prepared; there make ready for us to eat. And the disciples went and found it even as he had said, and they made ready the Passover."

The lamb was there among the things furnished, no matter who killed it, but most likely the good man of the house; at any rate it was there or they could not have made it ready for them to eat. Remember Jesus told them to ask the good man of the house where the guest chamber was, where I shall eat the Passover with my disciples. Now Jesus never said he would do a thing that he did not do.

Thus it is evident that he did eat a passover with his disciples in that large upper room where the disciples had made it ready, but not the Jewish Passover, for that was not killed until in the evening of the next day. It was a passover, or supper, for his own use in finishing the plan of salvation.

Now I don't believe they prepared it like Jews prepared their passover. The disciples prepared it as a common supper, or passover, from the law to the gospel, for the Savior's use in finishing the plan of salvation. It is remarkably strange that Jesus should send the disciples to prepare for the Jewish Passover in that upper room where there was not anything for them to prepare! The room was already furnished and prepared. There was nothing for them to do when they got there, but to make the lamb or passover ready for them to eat, which they did; but for them to make the Jewish Passover or lamb ready for them to eat, and then let it lie there until the next night before eating it, is too shallow for me to believe.

But now let us hear what Jesus said after he had set down to the table with the twelve disciples, and I think that you will see that he proves it himself, that he did sit down to that passover the disciples had made ready in that upper room, and that he also ate it. "And Jesus said unto them, With desire I have desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer, for I say unto you that I will not any more eat thereof until it is fulfilled in the kingdom of God." Remember what he said, that the passover which he desires to eat with them will only reach its fulfilment in the kingdom of God.

Now if you can prove that the Jewish Passover did not reach its fulfilment when Christ died on the cross, and that it is yet to be observed, then you will have some ground to stand upon. But if you can not prove that, then it sweeps away every inch of ground from under your feet.

Now, brother Peter, I have written this article, and I hope that you will read it with the same kind feelings in which it is written. You know that I always did love and respect you and your family ever since I became acquainted with you. I have no doubt but that you are honest and sincere in what you have written, but that don't prove it to be gospel facts. I will now close with brotherly love to you and family.

Our Communion Meeting.

Our communion meeting is in the past. On the 27th day of Oct., early in the morning, we could see the people flocking together, and by 10 o'clock the house was about full.

The laboring brethren present, were John W. Metzgar, jr., of the Wild Cat District, and Daniel Bock of the Howard District, Howard Co, Ind., and M. J. McClure, and others of the Lower Fall Creek District, and some from the Raceoon and Nettle Creek Districts. Bro. J. W. Metzgar took the lead, selecting for his subject the latter part of the 30th verse of the 16th chapter of Acts. "Sirs what must I do to be saved?" The subject was well handled. He was followed by D. Bock. Then prayer, after which the meeting was dismissed for dinner. After dinner we reassembled for preaching, and two young brethren, from the Nettle Creek District, namely: Lewis Teeter and Benjamin Whisler, occupying the time very profitably for one hour. Then we had one half hour recess, when we assembled again for evening services, and by the time it was dark the house was full. We had a joyous time together in the celebration of the death and suffering of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. We were disturbed some by rowdies, however the meeting was a profitable one. The saints were led and sinners called. There were three buried in the liquid grave and rose, we trust to newness of life. There were more that felt the need of a Savior, and we hope that they will make up their minds and go with us. This church, (Stony Creek District) is steadily increasing. This makes seven received this Summer.

The ministerial force is tolerably strong in the church, so far as numbers is concerned. There are six ministers, two elders, and four in the second degree, and six deacons. The church is in love and union as far as known, especially among the officers, and we hope to remain so, for there is where all our big troubles come from. If brethren would try and study their places, and not all try to be the highest, there would not be so much trouble in the church as there is. May the Lord help his children to live in peace, while here on earth. If Christians cannot agree below, what will they do above?

JOHN H. CAYLOR.

MISSISSINAWA CHURCH,
DELAWARE CO., IND.,
Oct., 30th, 1876.)

Dear Primitive Christian:—Our lovefeast is now among the things of the past, and we are glad to be able to say, it was a season of refreshing to our Father's children in this part of his vineyard.

Brethren David Bowman of Nettle Creek, and Hiram Branson of Killbrick churches, were with us. There were three additions by baptism; making eighteen since our last report or thirty in all by baptism, and five reclaimed, making a total since last Spring of thirty-five.

Others are counting the cost and are almost persuaded to be Christians. We have made no extra efforts to get up a revival; that is, we have held no series of meetings, but the members, all, the laity as well as the ministry, have been working for the Lord, by inviting their friends and neighbors, to come to the Lord. This is as it should be. "Let him that heareth say come." There has been much sickness here this fall, but the health is improving.

Fraternallly,

W. R. DEETER.

OSBORN, Mo }
October, 28th, 1876. }

Brother Quarter:

As you solicit church news, I thought it might be interesting to some of the brethren to hear from the Osborn church. After the announcement of our love-feast we changed the place of holding it, from brother John Oaks' to the house of the writer. The meeting was held the 7th and 8th of October. Brother S. C. Stump, of Nebraska, was with us and gave us four sermons. The best of all was, two came with their minds made up to join with us in the service of the Lord. We organized here last February with ten members. We have a large field to labor in, and heavy opposition by those who refuse to obey all the commandments.

I would say to the brethren, if there are any who desire to come west, we would be glad to have you come here. We have a good country here. Land is cheap yet, but is getting higher in price. I have been here now two years and have not yet regretted that I came here. If any of the ministering brethren are travelling over the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad, we would like very much if they would stop with us. We live in Osborn, a station on the above road, 28 miles east of St. Joseph. Brethren give us a call. We will use you the best we can, and give you plenty of preaching to do. All inquiries freely answered.

P. R. OAKS.

Bro. Brumbaugh:—

Inasmuch as church news is desired from all parts of the brotherhood, I thought a few lines from Nebraska might be of interest to the many readers of the Pilgrim. Brother John Holsinger lately from Luray, Ind., and the writer went on a mission of love to York Co., Neb. Found all well, preached Saturday evening to a good congregation, also Sunday at 11 o'clock a. m. The house was crowded and when we arrived, the windows on the north side of the school-house was let down and teams drove along side of the building, and the people sit on their wagons, and listened to the word preached. While all around the door was eager listeners. We were only sorry we could not preach the word with more power, but we pray God to add his blessing. Sunday evening had preaching at brother Funk's house. Here again the house was crowded, in fact a few too many for good order, but we have no reason to complain as I saw nothing out of the way. As there were two rooms in the house and we had our stand near the door, we only speak of what we heard.

Monday morning we bid these brethren and kind friends farewell, and started home. Stopped at the house of Albert Funk's, son of brother Funk's, who kindly showed us where brother Jacob Moore lived. Found brother Moore in a helpless condition. The Brethren in York county need some one to preach the word for them badly. Any one wishing to know more can write to brother Samuel Kingery, York Center, York Co., Neb. Will some one heed their cry or must they be left alone to live or die, and see their children grow up without having aright to the tree of Life? Dear brethren think of these things carefully and prayerfully and see if you are free from the blood of this people, if they die in their sins. May God help us to do right.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

BAKER.—Near Waynesboro, Franklin Co., Pa., June 8th, 1876, Goldie Ada Baker, infant daughter of brother Daniel M. and sister Catharine P. Baker. Funeral services in the Antietam meeting house, improved by elder Jacob Price. Text, "Suffer little children to come unto me." Though so young—6 weeks—Goldie has gone to join the angel band in glory. Rejoice ye that mourn.

D. B. M.

WAGONER.—Anna Elizabeth Wagoner, daughter of brother John and Susannah Wagoner, and grand-daughter of the writer, died September 3rd, 1876 aged 2 years, 8 months and 16 days. Funeral occasion improved by brother Menno Stauffer and others to a large and attentive audience. To the grief stricken parents we would say, weep not as those who have no hope. Little Anna has only gone before and perhaps is much better off than if she had been spared to battle with the sins of this unfriendly world. Be faithful and soon the Lord will pass you safely over the shores of everlasting deliverance, where you can again meet the objects of your love to part no more.

E. HENRICKS.

GALL.—March 20, 1876, in the Jonathan's Creek branch, Perry Co., Ohio, Mary Edith, daughter of friend Wm. and Rachel Gall, aged 15 years, 3 months and 3 days. She leaves an aged grandmother, a kind father and mother, one brother and one little sister to mourn their loss. She was a good girl and well respected by all who knew her. Many tears were shed over her by the young people who knew her. Funeral services by the writer.

SHRIEDER.—Also in the same place, Sept. 20th, 1876, Nora, third daughter of brother Adam and sister Lydia Shrieder, aged 1 year, 10 months and 2 days. She leaves a father, mother, two sisters and many friends to mourn her untimely death, which was caused by being scolded by pulling a coffee pot of hot coffee on her. Funeral services by the writer.

ROBERTS.—Also in the same place, the 9th day of Oct. 1876, from the effects of poison, our old sister Catharine Roberts, widow of our old esteemed brother John Roberts, who died in 1876, aged 70 years, 4 months and 2 days. She was out west, and while there a man told her she had the dropsy, and she should get a pint of whiskey and put as much Nitre (saltpetre) as would dissolve in the liquor, and take a teaspoonful at a time, and take it three times a day. She accordingly did so, but finally did not measure it, but would drink it out of the bottle and thus got too much, and it is believed that it caused her death. She leaves 10 children, a number of grandchildren, some great-grandchildren, and many friends to mourn their loss, but we believe their loss is her gain. Funeral services by the writer.

BINTZ.—Also in the same place, Sept. 14th, 1876, our much esteemed Mary Ann Bintz, aged 63 years, 10 months and 6 days, of dropsy of the heart.

She was the mother of twelve children, of which three preceded her in death. Nine are living of which only three are in the church. Just before she died she called her children to her bedside, and talked to them and requested them to join the church, and prepare for death. She selected a hymn and text to be used at her funeral. The 43rd hymn and the 6th verse of 55th Psalm, which we used as best we could. It was her request that I should preach her funeral sermon, but I could not at the time she was buried in consequence of an engagement to go to Belmont Co., to attend some appointments there.

She leaves a kind and sorrowful husband, a brother, and many friends besides her children to mourn their loss, but we have reason to believe their loss is her great gain.

HUFFERT.—Also in the Bush Creek branch of the church, Fairfield county, Ohio, Aug. 4th '76, our old and well known brother Solomon Huffert, Sr. of old age; aged 90 years, 1 month and 28 days.

He emigrated with his father Casper Huffert when he was about 15 years old, from Fairfield, Ohio, and remained there until his death. He leaves behind him nine children living. One preceded him in death; had 73 grandchildren, of which 15 are dead, 73 great-grandchildren, of which eight are dead, and many friends to mourn their loss, but we believe their loss is his gain. For some years before he died he was somewhat childish. Funeral services by the writer.

W. ARNOLD.

CRUPE.—In the St. Joseph Church, St. Joseph county, Ind., Sept., 5th, '76, Lilly May, only child of brother B. F., and Elizabeth Crupe, aged 2 years, 10 months and 14 days. Funeral on the 7th, by Thurston Miller, from the words, "She is not dead but sleeping," to a small but appreciative audience.

BATLIFF.—In the Prairie Creek church, Blackfoot Co., Ind., of brain fever, Oct. 30th, brother Alfred Batliff, aged 56 years, 6 months and 13 days.

Funeral by the writer, from 1 Cor. 15 : 57, to a large audience of sympathizing friends and neighbors. Bro. Batliff was much respected by his neighbors, and his loss will be felt, especially in the church where he resided. His desire was only to know his duty and do it.

W. R. DEETER.

SENSABAUGH.—In the Cedar Grove Church, Hawkins county, Tenn., Oct., 13th, '76; our much esteemed old sister Nancy Sensabaugh, of old age. She was 90 years and 8 months old.

She was a faithful member of the church for many years; lived so that when nearing the grave she often exclaimed that she had a home in glory, and often wished to be there. She was guided by the gospel and directed by the Spirit. Although she was confined to the house for several years, she would always send her love to the church through the visiting brethren. By her own request the writer preached the funeral sermon. Text, 1st Cor. 15 : 55.

MOLSBEER.—In the Cedar Grove church, Hawkins Co., Tenn., Oct. 15th, '76; of typhoid fever; Ida Tennessee, daughter of brother Samuel and Sarah Molsbee, aged 7 years and 4 months less one day.

The funeral sermon was preached by brother David Derricke, and Simon Isenberg, on the 16th, to a very large and sympathizing congregation, and then her body was conveyed to the Brethren's grave-yard to sleep beside her little brothers, until the morning of the blessed resurrection. Dear brother and sister, as you have so many ties in heaven to bind you there, and less on earth to keep you here, be faithful a few more days and you will meet them all again. And brothers and sisters, give your hearts to Jesus and your hands to the church, and live for God and soon you will all unite with loved ones in heaven.

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

Not a Dye; makes harsh hair soft and silky cleanses the scalp from all impurities, causing the hair to grow where it has fallen off or become thin.

Can be applied by the hand as it does not stain the hand or soil the finest linen. As a Hair Dressing it is the most perfect the world has ever produced. The hair is renovated and strengthened, and natural color restored without the application of mineral substances.

Since the introduction of this truly valuable preparation into this country, it has been the wonder and admiration of all classes, as it has proved to be the only article that will absolutely without deception, restore gray hair to its original color, health, softness, lustre and beauty, and produce hair on bald heads of its original growth and color.

This beautiful and fragrantly perfumed article is complete within itself, no washing or preparation before or after its use, or accompanying of any kind being required to obtain these desirable results.

HERE IS THE PROOF OF ITS

SUPERIOR EXCELLENCE.

Read this Home Certificate, testified to by Edward B. Garrigue, one of the most competent Druggists and Chemists of Philadelphia, a man whose veracity none can doubt.

I am happy to add my testimony to the great value of the "London Hair Color Restorer," which restored my hair to its original color, and the hue appears to be permanent. I am satisfied that this preparation is nothing like a dye, but operates upon the secretions. It is also a beautiful hair dressing and promotes the growth. I purchased the first bottle from Edward B. Garrigue, druggist, Tenth and Coates streets, who can also testify my hair was quite gray when I commenced its use.

WE REAP WHAT WE SOW.

For pleasure or pain, for weal or for woe—
'Tis the law of our being—we reap what we sow—

We may try to avail them—may do what we will—
But our acts, like our shadows, will follow us still.

The world is a wonderful chemist to be sure,
And detects in a moment the base or the pure,
We may boast of our claim to genius or birth,
But the world takes a man for just what he's worth.

We start in the race for fortune or fame,
And then, when we fall, the world bears the blame;
But nine times in ten, it is plain to be seen,
There's a 'screw somewhere loose' in the human machine.

Are you wearied and worn in this hard earthly strife?
Do you yearn for affection to sweeten your life?
Remember, this great truth has often been proved;
We must make ourselves lovable, would we be loved.

Though life may appear as a desolate track,
Yet the bread that two cast on the waters comes back.
This law was enacted by nature above;
That like attracts like, and love begets love.

We make ourselves heroes and martyrs for gold,
Till health becomes broken and youth becomes old;
Ah! did we the same for a beautiful love
Our lives might be music for angels above.

We reap what we sow. Oh! wonderful truth!
A truth hard to learn in the days of our youth.
But it shines out at last, "as the hand on the wall,"
For the world has its "debt" and its "credit" for all.

Sketches from the Frontier.—No. 3.—
The Shepherd and his Wife.

BY J. S. FLODY.

The following sketch of pastoral life on the wide and extended plains of Colorado, is not an imaginary one, but true life. Before we introduce our readers to the home of our hero and his wife, we will ask indulgence, while we go back to their former homes in the east. James W., was an honest youth, son of a farmer of moderate means who lived in the State of Ohio. He took a delight in attending to his father's stock, especially the sheep. When he became his own man, he became ambitious to venture out into new fields and make a start in life for himself. Being apt in learning, he had no little stock of knowledge of the world and its resources. He had learned of the advantages of stock raising upon the fertile plains of the west, where the tidal wave of emigration was flowing. He resolved to leave the home of his childhood with all its endearing ties, and seek an earthly inheritance he hardly knew where. There was one object of all others he knew not how to break away from, and that was the idol of his youthful affections, one he most dearly loved. Mary C., the daughter of a neighboring farmer, was that one, and she in return loved James W. To hurriedly pass over the conflict that for sometime was going on in the heart of James, we will say he finally told Mary his resolves; it was a severe struggle to her, to thus give him up, but faithful promises and buoyant hopes sealed their vows, and he went to look out and prepare a home where they might live in peace and happiness. After visiting different sections of the "far west" he finally chose to locate in a wild and uninhabited section of country on the Bijon, twenty miles from the city of Denver. Sheep raising was his preference, hence he chose a claim adapted to natural grass of sufficient growth to make abundant hay, and a range suitable for his flock. His first step was to secure the services of a hired hand, get a yoke of cattle, a wagon and a plow, with a few other necessities, and thus out fitted, he set out for the spot where he had stuck his stake. Having camped on the banks of the little sluggish stream, near the cluster of scrubby cotton-woods, it was not long until he was at work, turning over the rough sod and cutting the long strips into lengths of about two feet, hauling them to the spot selected for his corral. Day by day they worked until at length, strong and substantial walls, almost equal to brick, were reared about five feet high, and proof against wolves and bleak winds. Cotton wood posts, poles and brush, over which hay was thrown in due time, made a sheep corral far superior to one made of lumber. Having the corral in condition suitable for a safe fold, the next step was the sheep. With the few hundred dollars he had carefully husbanded, James W., purchased a flock of Mexican ewes, drove them to his "ranch" and became a shepherd and owner of "flocks." Though isolated from the busy hum of society, he felt as independent and free, as the many antelope that roamed around, looking on seemingly with astonishment, at this late invasion into their midst and trespass upon their rights. The next improvement was a neat sod house with board roof and floor, and by and by James W. and his hired man became "bachelor ranchmen, keeping their own house. Hunting, attending his flock of sheep, making improvements, putting up hay, and an occasional drive or ride to the city, made up the business of the long months that continued to roll away never more to return. As the time rolled on James's flock increased and from the sale of wool he was enabled to purchase the best improved breed of sheep, so that the quality of his sheep was also improving. About two years after the time mentioned in the opening of this narrative, James W. might have been seen in waiting at the Depot at Denver for the train from the east. Doubtless the whistle of the approaching train sent a thrill of joy through his soul; at all events, a few moments after, there was a happy meeting of friends, yea more than friends—and in less than two hours from the arrival of that train, James W. led Mary C. to the marriage altar in one of the churches in Denver and the two were made "one."

After a lapse of a few days the now no longer bachelor James, took to his home his wife. A neat additional room had been built to the former ranch. His wife made things look quite different to what they had ever looked before in that home far out on the plains. Mary had a passion for painting and with her other accomplishments, this had not been neglected. Painting of scenes in her early life, hung upon the neatly plastered walls, and by the art of her busy fingers and taste of putting things in order, her home looked cheerful and pleasant. Thus taken from the busy haunts of society and friends to an isolated home, where boundless space seemed to reign supreme, the query might arise in the minds of the readers, and doubtless does, can she enjoy such a life? We will let her answer that question herself. But recently while on a visit to Denver, our informant, asked her if she did not often feel lonely and sad. Oh no, said she, with my husband's love, my household affairs, books and papers, I enjoy life as much as I think it possible in this world. I have beautiful flowers and vines trained in bowers by my own hands. I often ride out over the plains with my husband, and enjoy the bracing air and wild scenery, and come back feeling a thousand times more happy than returning from those vain tiresome parties, so prevalent in the city. And in my times of painting, I have the most glorious field spread out before me, that poets ever dreamed of. Looking towards the mountains, Pike's peak looms up just to my left, James' and Long's peak to my right, and back of all the towering peaks of the snowy range, look grand with their white crusts; in front is the long line of the blue foot hills, and between me and them, the beautiful plains stretch out making a landscape beautiful indeed. I have, "continued she," painted the scene of our "ranch," showing our home and the sheep grazing. Another showing the flock coming to the fold, the lambs frisking in play, the shepherd and his dogs in the rear. I don't find time to be lonely with all those surroundings, and though it is eight miles to our nearest neighbor, we want none nearer, for you know the fewer our neighbors the better for our flocks and the less danger of quarreling!

Thus we see the shepherd and his wife seem to live happy and contented. With the few hundred dollars his wife brought with her, he has added more to his flock, and also has some milk cows and other cattle. His flock of sheep now number up in the thousands and all things seem to prosper with them.

The hired man helps to do much about the house and milk the cows, from which the purest and best butter is made.

From this sketch we may learn that true contentment does not come from mingling with a busy society or worshipping at the shrine of wealth, fashion and folly. But can oftener be found in the homes of the poor, or where the influences of society seldom reach. A heart true to the instincts of reciprocal affection and full of love to God, and willing to be governed by the dictates of what is right, can seldom fail to be happy and contented, let their dwelling place be where it may.

It is more laudible to cultivate a spirit of contentment in the lonely paths of life, than a spirit of pride, envy and dissatisfaction in the halls of the rich and noble. It is hard—very hard to keep unspotted from the world, mingling with the crowd that continues to kick up the mud and mire of a corrupt generation. It is natural for us while traveling along a dusty highway, to either keep far ahead or far behind the crowd to avoid the dust; just so we should avoid the dust of corrupt society by keeping aloof as far as possible. But if we are traveling in green pastures, Christ as our shepherd, we should keep close together—the closer the better. An undivided flock is beautiful to look upon, a flock in fragments shows discord or divided minds. In all our wanderings, dear readers, let us keep in the narrow way that at last we may rest in peace in heavenly mansions above.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
 Propheying by Females.

BY NOAH LONGENECKER.

The question has been asked, "does the gospel admit of female preaching?" I am of the belief it does, and as the Bible informs me to "be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you," and as a few desire me to give my reason in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, I will do so if the editors deem it prudent.

A prophet is "one who announces or pours forth the declaration of God;" or "one who speaks for another; especially one who speaks for a god, and interprets his will to man." And while the term prophecy means "to make declaration of events to come," it also means "to instruct in religious doctrines; to interpret or explain Scripture or religious subjects; to preach, to exhort." Many do not properly recognize the distinction between the terms prophecy, ministry and teaching, in Rom. 12: 6, 7. Teaching here means to instruct, to impart a knowledge of; and not preaching. Those who know what the office of a deacon was, know what ministry means. Prophecy means here the gift of expounding, or preaching the Scriptures. It is manifest that Paul gives instructions in 1 Cor. 11, how we are to conduct ourselves in the house of God; and he there instructs the females to cover their heads when they pray or prophesy. The connection in which this stands makes it plain that praying and prophesying have the same meaning when applied to females as when applied to males. Before Christ ascended to his Father he said to his disciples, "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high;" and of the one hundred and twenty that tarried, there were the women and Mary, the mother of Jesus. Luke informs us that "when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost and began to speak with other tongues as the spirit gave them utterance." Remember that they were all with one accord in one place, that they were all filled with the Holy Ghost and began to speak with other tongues. The multitude said, "We do hear them speak in our tongues the wonderful works of God." Well might the multitude ask, "what meaneth this?" Peter answered them, "This is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel; and it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions and your old men shall dream dreams; and on my servants, and on my hand-maidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy." This is now being fulfilled by the servants and hand-maidens of the Lord speaking in those different tongues the wonderful works of God, and that in the public assembly of the Lord. As these servants and hand-maidens had before all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, so they are now all filled with the Holy Ghost and speak with other tongues the wonderful works of God; and this they did where "devout men, out of every nation under heaven" could hear them. This agrees with the instructions given by Paul in 1 Cor. 11: 4, 6, and the remarks that we have made on these passages.

Having given the authority for woman preaching, we will yet note a few of the ensamples on record. The first sermon that ever was preached on the resurrection of Christ was preached by females, and that at the command of the Lord himself. Apollos was an eloquent man and mighty in the Scriptures, having been instructed in the way of the Lord; and although he was fervent in the spirit and spake and taught diligently the things of the Lord, yet he was ignorant of some things, and it was proper—and may we not say necessary—for Priscilla to aid her husband in expounding the way of God more perfectly. No wonder that Paul calls Aquilla and Priscilla his helpers in Christ Jesus; for Paul himself was a minister of the gospel. In writing to the Philippian Paul says, "Help those women which labored with me in the gospel." I know that it is said that "in the primitive age of the church they had females to labor among the females, as the females, especially among the Gen-files, were much secluded from the ordinary intercourse with the male sex." Admitting this to be true, it nevertheless does not follow that the prophecy of Joel was not fulfilled on the day of Pentecost, when the sons and daughters of God prophesied or spoke the wonderful works of the Lord in the public assembly of the Lord. The case of Priscilla and of these women who labored with Paul in the gospel,—without saying more of the Pentecostian women, does not permit us to confine the labor of females to females alone. Whether the four daughters of Philip the evangelist, which prophesied, did so in the public assembly of the Lord, I know not, but if they did they obeyed the prophecy of Joel by following the example of the Pentecostians only so they had their heads covered according to 1 Cor. 11.

But says one, does not your teaching conflict with Paul's when he says, "Let your women keep silence in the churches, for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law. But I suffer not the woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence?" I answer, No. All this is perfectly consistent with what we have said above, if properly understood. It is plain from the context of these passages that Paul does not forbid females to preach. It was permitted unto any man to ask questions, to dispute, to object or refute in the public assemblies, but not so unto the woman. So Paul teaches that it is a shame for a woman to be contending or disputing with a man in the public assembly on points of doctrine, matters of conscience, or things wherein reason should be consulted. If Paul had reference to preaching there would be no good sense in him saying, "if they will learn anything let them ask their husbands at home," for no one can preach that which he or she, as the case may be, does not know beforehand. Apply these passages to preaching and the female dare not go to the house of God to be taught, but must ask their husbands at home if they would learn anything. But it is contrary to all that is found in the Bible for a woman to set up her judgment against the man's, especially in matters of doctrine, conscience or reason.

How would it look for our sisters to help to dispose of matters that are brought to our District Meetings, not to mention those of A. M.? To such Paul would say, "I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man." Let a woman help to pass restrictions, or to frame decisions, and she is usurping authority over the man and this is wrong, from the fact that "Adam was first formed, then Eve. And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression." It has been the decree of God ever since the transgression in Eden, that the man should rule over the woman, (Gen. 3: 16.) but the gospel requires that this be done in love, even as Christ loved the Church and gave himself for it. Read the beautiful lesson in Eph. 5: 22-33. I submit this to the readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN with the firm belief that the truth will never lose anything through an honest investigation.

"She Hath Done What She Could."

SELECTED BY W. A. CLARKE.

The occasion which called forth this remark of our blessed Lord is an interesting one. The scene occurred just two days before the apprehension and death of Christ, in Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper. "As Jesus sat at meat in Simon's house, there came a woman having an alabaster box of precious ointment, and she brake the box and poured it on his head." It was she of whom Jesus had said, "she hath chosen that good part which shall not be taken away from her." Lazarus and Martha, too, were there, with many others, but Mary saw and heard nothing but her divine Lord. Not content with this expression of love and gratitude, she knelt down and anointed his feet, and wiped them with the hairs of her head, and the house was filled with the odor of this precious ointment.

There were some there which had indignation within themselves and said, "Why was this waste of ointment made?" pretending it might have been better applied by giving it to the poor, and murmured against Mary. But Jesus said, "Let her alone, why trouble ye her? she hath wrought a good work on me," looking with approbation upon an act which the Pharisees affected to despise and condemn.

True love counts nothing too dear or valuable to sacrifice for its object. Selfishness may demure, make calculations, count cost, look at expenses; but generous love scorns the very thought. She hath done what she could." Highest eulogy ever passed upon any human act, and this by the guileless lips of the Son of God himself. No doubt Mary felt grateful to her Savior, in that he had forgiven her sins, instructed her in the way of holiness, and had she not often sat at his feet and listened to his sweet and heavenly teachings, and had he not restored her dead brother to life and done many acts of kindness to call forth her gratitude and devotion? Mary wasted not her ointment; for her name endureth forever. Christ himself has said, "Verily, I say unto you, Wheresoever this Gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of, for a memorial of her."

There is no earthly honor to be compared to that of Mary of Bethany. Kings and princes raise their own mausoleums, and how soon they are in ruins and crumble to ashes. Grand and magnificent monuments are raised to mark the resting place of patriot and hero, but alas they endure but for a season. The philosopher and poet endeavor to spread their fame by writing books and poems, but these, too, are read and appreciated by a few only; but the memorial of this simple act of Christian gratitude is to endure forever. It is recorded in the Book of books, it is engraven in the heart of that history which is the hope and joy of the world. Christ will be glorified in his saints, and admired in all them who are truly his.

Brother, sister, have we not all, each one of us, just as much reason for gratitude and devotion as Mary of Bethany had? Christ shed his precious blood to redeem us from the curse of a broken law, imparts his spirit to instruct and lead us, has cleansed some of our friends from the leprosy of sin, restored a brother or a sister, father or mother, yea, perhaps, all from the death of sin to life everlasting and should not this make our hearts rejoice, and make us grateful indeed, and inspire us with greater zeal and earnestness in our devotions to the Savior? How many of us are doing all we can for Jesus? Mary of Bethany we met for Jesus? Mary of Bethany was not commended for being idle! but because she did what she could for the Savior.

There is work for every one of us to do for Jesus, none are exempt; if we cannot do much, we can do little—"the chores for Jesus." It is evident from the words of commendation which Christ bestowed upon Mary that he did not overlook the least act we do for him. Who cannot do as much as Mary did? Life is short and fleeting, let us do what we can for Jesus while time and opportunity is afforded us, let us not wait for the work to be brought to us, but let us look around us and see what we can do for our blessed Master, and as we see the great and varied work around us, let each one exclaim with sincere earnestness of soul, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do;" and when our work is assigned us by him let us do it heartily, cheerfully, as unto the Lord, not that our names may be lauded on earth, but rather that they may be inscribed in the Lamb's Book of Life, and that God may be glorified in and through us, and we thus fulfill the design of our creation, and finally hear the welcome applaud, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." "Well done thou good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

For the Primitive Christian.
Behind the Vail.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To Samuel, my dear Brother in the flesh, and in the faith.

The full privileges of faith are seldom realized in this life. Christ has His all-power, and He believes in all he is capable of doing. In this lies the power of Divine sonship. John 1: 12. It is affirmed by some, even in the public ministry, that faith and hope are two candles that will be extinguished at the grave's mouth, and love alone stretches across the gulf of death. I prefer the doctrine of Paul: he says, "and now abideth faith, hope, love, these three." Faith is as necessary in heaven as on earth. "We must believe that God is," irrespective of locality or time. Heb. 11: 6. Without this there is no Heaven. And so long as there is a future, there is hope, and that is forever. In hell there can be no hope, because there is no faith in the possibility of attainable good. Where one is the other must be. Love overtops both, for without this chief grace the others cannot exist. Faith, apart from character, is the essence of mind. God is the Omnipotent, all-embracing faith. "The devils believe, and tremble." Whether holy or unholy, there cannot be mind without faith. From the High Throne of the Universe down to the deepest dungeon of perdition, life is the exercise of faith in relation to righteousness: on the one side it is fealty and Heaven, and on the other secession and hell. The Christian's faith and the devil's faith refer to the same object, but are not in the same character. Faith in the Gospel sense can belong only to God and those begotten of Him.

On a certain occasion, when Christ revealed the very thoughts of his disciples, they were so surprised and satisfied that they exclaimed, "now we are sure that thou knowest all things; by this we believe that thou comest forth from God." "Jesus answered them," doubtless with a sorrowful countenance and plaintive tone, "do ye now believe?" John 16: 30, 31. He knew very well that they were deceiving themselves. He knew that they would all forsake Him when He most needed their presence and sympathy. Although they confidently, "now we are sure," "by this we believe," He had afterwards to rebuke them with the cutting words, "O fools, and slow of heart to believe." Luke 24: 25. We are no better than they. Would to God we were half as good. When God takes our Joseph's, and Simeon's, and Benjamin's, instead of saying,

"not as I will, but as thou wilt," we utter the plaint of the bereaved Patriarch, "all these things are against me." When the Righteous Judge plucks off our olive branches, and converts our dwelling into a charnel-house, we remonstrate, "that be far from thee to do after this manner." Gen. 18: 25. Nothing is more alien to faith than dictation. A perfect faith has no more sense of will or constraint than the clay in the hands of the potter; and yet in no state of the soul has the will more energy and liberty than in faith. A will in all the exercise of its power, is a will without constraint, so wholly swayed by the indwelling Golbead that we are no more conscious of willing than of the beating of our hearts. When "perfect love casteth out fear," faith staggers not at seeming impossibilities, and the will has all the compass and momentum of our immortality.

Christ has been a frequent visitor at your house. He does not always come to sit at our tables and eat bread. He comes also to train us for something higher and more ethereal than the joys of sense. So long as He came to Bethany to spend the nights in heaven-revealing instructions, Martha and Mary were in raptures. But when He came to break the prop of their house, they also broke. Then their sky was mantled in darkness, and "neither sun nor stars in many days appeared, and no small tempest lay on them." Acts 27: 20. When He reappeared, both the sisters greeted Him with a sorrowful, despairing "if," "if." John 11: 21, 32. This was unbelief. Faith has no "if"; although we may have little else. He no sooner intimated His purpose to repair their loss, than unbelief interposed with, "by this time he sinketh." But here is the sovereign balm for all woes: "Said I not unto thee, that, if thou wouldst believe, thou shouldst see the glory of God." Faith has eyes to see what none but God can see. To it the vail is rent, and the Holy of holies uncovered. Abraham believed God, and in that faith his whole future, and that of his seed, was wrapped up. He looked down the vista of two millenniums and saw the day of Christ, and was glad. John 8: 56. Faith offers up Isaac, and sees him spring up out of the ashes. Heb. 11: 19. It "confers not with flesh and blood," but goes without gainsaying into "the street which is called Straight," and waits further disclosures. It has the why and wherefore in itself without any interrogation. "It is the substance," already possessed, "of things hoped for."

"What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter." Here is a Divine guarantee. Faith responds, "as Thou wilt." In the confidence of this "hereafter" we already enjoy it. Had Abraham not belied his name, he would not have denied his wife. Had he believed, he would not have been afraid that Abimelech would steal his Sarah. Had Jacob trusted in the promise, and stretched his faith beyond the four hundred and thirty years of grinding discipline, he would have eaten the corn of Egypt before there was a famine. Could he have rent the vail of providence when the blood-dripping, many-colored coat of Joseph was banded him, faith would have discerned the royal robe of the future king. "God's way is perfect," and will advance Joseph to the throne, even if he must first cast him into a pit, then sell him into slavery, and finally incarcerate him two years in a dungeon. A rigorous college-course for the young hebrew, but it is necessary for his future position and mission. ALL THAT GOD ASKS OF US IS TO DO RIGHT AND TRUST. He will manage the rest. Much of our sorrow and perplexity worketh death because there is no faith in it, and "whatsoever is not of faith is sin." We see no open door into a brighter future, and we "hang our harp on the willows." The psalms of David are exchanged for the lamentations of Jeremiah. Faith says, "though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him." Job 13: 15. The Emir of Uz could not understand what it meant that the sheep and camels and asses, and sons and daughters must be swept away with sword and fire and whirlwind; but faith enabled him to say, "the Lord gave, the Lord hath taken away: blessed be the name of the Lord." No human mind can calculate the value to the church of Job's boils and potsherd. Job 2: 7, 8. Better scrape oneself than rasp the dispensation of unerring wisdom and goodness.

When Naomi returned desolate and childless from the land of Moab, she said, "call me not Naomi, call me Mara: for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me. I went out full, and the Lord hath brought me home again empty." Ruth 1: 20, 21. She did not know that the Lord had sent her to Moab to fetch David's Great-grandmother! Matth. 1: 5, 6. She did not imagine that she must suffer all this soul-harrowing desolation in order to bring to Bethlehem the "elect lady" through whom the Son of God and Savior of the world was to be born! She must be stripped to clothe the world. She said, "I went out full, and the Lord hath brought me back empty;" but it was the reverse; the Lord called her home fuller than when she went out. Behind the veil he all God's purposes, and faith rests in them, and keeps step with God in the unfolding of His gracious intentions.

Be of good cheer, beloved Brother, the God of Abraham, Jacob, Job, Naomi, and David, weaves the woof and web of your life, directs and moulds events for your good and His glory. He brings corn out of Egypt and salvation out of Moab in ways that may cut our marrow and crush our hearts. "Let the Lord do that which is good in his sight." 1 Chron. 19: 13. Under every shadow that falls on your home, lies a heavenful of light; and at the bottom of the cup of gall, is a fountain of eternal joy. Your sighs go into God's ear, your tears into his bottle, your sorrows into his heart, and your life of trial and bereavement into his eternal glory. God's school is perfect, his lessons wise and loving, and his rod is broken from the Tree of Life. Blessed are they who learn the Alpha and the Omega. "Now we see through a glass darkly." "THOU SHALT KNOW HEREAFTER." "They that wait upon the Lord, SHALL"—DO WONDERS. Is. 40: 31.

Patience.

BY C. D. SWEITZER.

Paul in closing his first epistle to the Thessalonians, says: "Now we exhort you, brethren, warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, be patient toward all men." There is probably no man living that does not, some way or other, in a greater or less degree, try the patience of those who have any kind of intimate relation with him. You yourself, dear reader, though you may never have thought of it, are a constant trial of the patience of those that are about you. You are a good man; we even suppose that you have taken Christ for your pattern, and are sincerely endeavoring to walk in his footsteps. But you are not perfect. There are points in your character that are not entirely agreeable to those that know you best and have most to do with you; and in ways that you do not think of, you try their patience and have need of their forbearance. And as for your patience, who is there among all those whom you most esteem and love, that does not try it? Even your wife, you think she is the best woman you ever knew, and have often boasted of her, but after all she is only human, and if she could but rid herself of two or three of her little peculiarities you know it would be a blessed thing, both for you and herself. To say that the children do not need to have patience exercised towards them, would be sheer nonsense.

But what shall we say of the weak who cannot take care of themselves, and have to be carried in the arms of the people; whose own inevitable burdens are quite enough for them? And what shall we say of the feeble-minded who are all the time fainting under the trials of life, and will not be content unless their sorrows are shared by all their neighbors? And what shall we say of all of the unruly? What shall we say of those who walk disorderly—the despisers of right; who those who injure us, and are injurious to society? What shall we say of those who seek unholy gain, that lie in wait to rob the poor, and to oppress the afflicted, who devour widow's houses, and if they could, would eat up God's people as they eat bread? What shall we say of those that vex our souls, as the soul of Lot was vexed with the filthy conversation of the Sodomites? But it is of no use to swell the catalogue. There is no end of disagreeable adjectiveness like mean, frivolous, foolish, narrow-mindedness, jealousies, highmindedness, which are so frequently used.

Every one of these is a trial of patience. Occasions often arise when it seems as if patience had ceased to be a virtue, and nothing less than an outbreaking fire of rage will answer in any degree the demands of a good conscience, even before God. And yet, there stands the commandment of the Lord by the mouth of his holy apostle "Be patient toward all men" And what is more; our Lord himself, whose patience was tried ten thousand times more than ours can be, has left us an example, that we should follow in his steps. Oh, the patience of Christ! He did indeed sometimes utter terrible words against transgressors, but when was there ever even a suffering of his patience under the personal trials that came upon him.

Certainly, christian, you are to warn the unruly. Christ did that; You must not forget, however, that Christ was patient. The charity of the Gospel is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in truth, beareth all things, endureth all things, and never faileth. Even if it is provoked, when it is provoked, when it feels the sharpest touch of trial, it does not fail. Its exasperations are merciful, and its rebuke and warnings, like those of Christ, are full of tenderness and compassion. It can put on severity but it is always the severity of love.

What is patience? It is a calm and merciful self-restraint under the provocations of displeasure and wrath. It is not weakness; it is strength. Solomon said, He that is slow to anger, is better than the mighty: and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city."

Are we then never to be angry? Is patience never to find a limit? Just as often, dear friends, as you are sure you can be angry and sin not, you may be angry, and just as often as you are sure you can better accomplish any good purpose by letting go your patience, than by holding on to it, you may let go. Of course there are evil doers everywhere that are not to be borne with. It is not safe to leave them at large, and if you are pestered with any of these, we advise you still to have the spirit of patience, remembering that God has said "Vengeance is mine, I will repay it. I therefore exhort you never to be angry or to lose your patience. You know that any attempt to correct other people's faults in a spirit of impatience is far more likely to do harm than good. Even with your own ministers, your brother in the church, your wife, your children, your next door neighbor, you can accomplish nothing by impatience.

A Gentle rebuke is always mighty, but fretful and angry fault-finding, is sure to defeat its end. Even your wife hardens towards you when you passionately upbraid her; and bitter reviling breaks down every natural sentiment of affection and respect in the hearts of your children. The simple truth is, that when you are out of patience, you are out of reason and all your power is gone. If you would be strong, you must be calm. If you would have influence over others, you must have command over yourself. Of all the wonderful works of God, patience has always seemed to us most wonderful.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Remarks on Romans 8: 38, 39.

BY HENRY GARBER.

"For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come. Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

In these two verses seems to be set forth the strength, the power, the faith, the patience, and the great love with which every true believer should be armed. Paul says angels shall not separate us from the love of God; nor shall any other creature be able to do so.

It is very true, Paul in many ways was tried, but all the whippings, imprisonments, threatenings and shipwrecks did not shatter the foundation, on which he was founded and grounded. In all that befell that true soldier of the cross, we do not hear that he ever murmured or complained against all the judgments brought upon him. Nay, he rather considered them as dung, so that he might gain that crown which, in the close of his warfare, he said was laid up for him, and not for him only, but for all valiant soldiers after him. The apostle seems to set forth the idea, that where that true love of God has got full possession of the heart of true believers, there is nothing will move them to forsake or deny their Christian principles which are founded upon Christ Jesus. Principalities shall not be able to do it; powers shall not be able to separate us from that love; and an angel even should not be able to persuade us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Dear brethren, how is our soundness to be compared with that of the apostle? We in the nineteenth century, have been blest with liberty, no persecutions to be compared with those of the early Christian era. The early Christians suffered death in many ways. Some were stoned to death, others sawed in two, others burned at the stake, some tore to pieces, and every kind of abuse was heaped upon those who had that true love of God. But nothing was able to separate them from that love.

The extreme wet weather, which threatened the destruction of our crops this season caused me to reflect upon the great wickedness of our world. It seemed as if heaven was displeased with us for some cause or other, and it may be for the want of that true love of which the apostle speaks. Some will tell us there are more Christians in the world now than centuries ago. We admit there are more professors, but there are perhaps less who are true possessors. Find me a professor who will lay down his life for his brethren, or one who will not be persuaded by an angel, or powers, or principalities, to serve almost any profession now made. We believe by the authority of holy Writ, that there are but few who would stand by fire that the holy apostle did. But dear brethren, none of these things should discourage us. Why in a land of liberty, where there is none to hinder or to make afraid, should we not be Christians, even such as were in the apostle's day, established in the truth, for we believe we have the same truth they had, and the same God to-day yesterday and forever. Then let us receive the judgments of God as they come without murmuring or complaining. We should be ready to say with Job of old, "The Lord has given and the Lord taketh away, and blessed be the name of the Lord." God made this world, and at some day will destroy it again. But such as the apostle Paul will suffer no loss; they will receive reward upon reward. "Eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, tongue hath not expressed the joys that God hath prepared for those that love him." Let us pray the good Lord for more of that true love, so that we may be able to bear up under all circumstances.

"Sirs, What Must I Do To Be Saved?"
ACTS 16: 30.

BY A BELIEVER.

I believe the above text to be one of the most important ones within the lids of the New Testament, and also one of the most simple and easy to be understood. My reason for saying so is this: If we know what to do to be saved, and do it with a sincere and honest heart, then will our eternal salvation be accomplished and we will have a clear title to that house that is not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. And one of my reasons for saying it is the most simple is because Holy Writ teaches me so. It declares the way to be so plain that the wayfaring man, though a fool, shall not err therein.—Isaiah 35: 8. I said one of my reasons, for there can be many given. Who will dare to say that God is inconsistent? Then I ask would it not be inconsistent for God to send his only begotten Son into the world to save mortal man, and make the plan of salvation so mysterious that we would not know what to do to be saved? Now then, I ask those who contend that the plan of salvation is hard to be understood, if they are not, in an indirect way, accusing God with inconsistency? Oh let us be more careful and ever remember that he came into this world, not as darkness, but as a light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world.—John, 1: 9 This brings to my mind another important text.

But before I give it I must here remark, I sometimes hear our ministers accused of not sticking close enough to their text. True, sometimes they may not, yet I have often said the Scripture might be compared to a chain. You cannot handle one link of a chain much without moving some of the rest.

Now the text. The Savior declares "I am the way, the truth and the life, and no man cometh unto the Father but by me."—John 14: 6. This text is a full answer to the question at the head of these lines, and harmonizes beautifully with the answer given by the apostle Paul and Silas, when asked, "What must I do to be saved?" Their answer was, believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved and thy house."—Acts 16: 31. Here some halt, contending that all we have to do is to believe, and we shall be saved. But mark what follows this answer; "And they spake unto him the word of the Lord and to all that were in his house."—Acts 16: 32. Now comes the occurrence, showing very plainly what the word of the Lord was. "And he took them the same hour of the night and washed their stripes and was baptized he and all his, straightway."—Acts 16: 33. I once heard a minister of the gospel, after he had gone through with his written sermon, make the following remarks: If the sinner was to ask me what to do to be saved, I would just point him to the life of Christ. Take it and hold it up before you for a pattern, asking yourself the following questions: If Christ did so, I must do so. If Christ did not do so I must not do so, and many other appeals to the sinner to walk as Christ walked. Then I ask, did he not walk down into the rolling stream and there was baptized by his forerunner John, leaving us an example that we should follow his steps? 1 Peter, 2: 21.

Now in conclusion I am going to ask a question, and it is this: Suppose a man honestly repents and asks pardon for his past offenses, and resolves with a sincere heart to live a new life, and with this determined resolve he follows his Savior down into the water and there is baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; after this he attends to all the ordinances, feet-washing, the Lord's Supper, the Communion, &c., and instead of being conformed to the world, he is transformed by having his mind renewed, living an honest life, doing to his fellow man as he wished to be done by, and after having lived this kind of a life he died, what will condemn him at the judgment bar of the great I Am? What answer others may give I know not, but my own answer is, nothing. But on the other hand suppose we willfully set aside any of his commands and say that this one or that one is not essential to salvation, may he not say I gave you commands and an example how to do them, and you did not comply with them, depart from me, I know you not? Now these lines have been penned by one who is yet outside the ark of safety, but not without hope that before long he may be within the ark, for it is written, "A bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax shall he not quench."—Isaiah 42: 3, and Matt. 12: 20.

I will close with a sincere hope that the Church may ever keep within the faith which was once delivered to the saints, and not be led away from the same by a sinful and a fashionable world; and may it be my heavenly Father's will that before I am called to leave this unfriendly world I may be one of your number and when called to die may be able to say with the poet:

"Jesus can make a dying bed
Feel soft as downy pillows are;
While on his breast I lean my head
And breathe my life out sweetly there."

Every true hero grows by patience
People who have always been prosperous are seldom the most worthy, and never in moral excellence the most strong. He who has not been compelled to suffer, has probably not begun to learn how to be magnanimous;
as it is only by patience and fortitude that we can know what it is to overcome evils, or feel the pleasure of forgiving them.

Educational Department.

EDITED BY J. M. ZUCK.

—A brother in Iowa says: "I have just finished reading your article in the P. C. as a report of your work in the Normal. I was very much pleased with it. I think education to be the one thing sadly neglected among our people. If we only had a school of this character in each of the States, where we could have the youth educated under that influence which alone belongs to the Christian, and have them made thorough and efficient teachers, we would then see harvest where all is now bare. The teacher has more opportunities of instilling truth than any other person of whom I now think."

Thank you, brother, but don't you think that the brethren should manifest their willingness to support one school before we begin to talk about a school in each of the States—especially if that one be favorably located and surrounded by the right kind of influences? It might be more agreeable to the Iowa brethren to keep their children near home, but then what is distance in these days of steam and fast lines? In one sense, civilization annihilates space. Iowa is hardly as far from Pennsylvania now as Baltimore was from Pittsburg half a century ago. The letter dated Cedar Rapids, Nov. 14th, and which perhaps did not start on its eastward flight until the 15th, was in my hands by noon on the 17th. The same mail brought a message from Colorado dated the 13th. It isn't long from Monday until Friday but that is all that separates Greely, Colorado from Huntingdon, Pa., according to the modern way of calculating. The message alluded to above was from brother J. S. Flory who will pardon the quoting of a few lines; "We are," says Bro. F., "indeed glad that we sent our son to your school and feel grateful to you for the interest you take in the welfare of your scholars. We shall do what we can to help on the undertaking in which you are engaged, believing it worthy of support and encouragement from the Brotherhood." Would that we could get more of our brethren to feel and believe as Bro. F. does and also to show their faith by their works as he is doing.

—A sister writes from Ohio that she is very much interested in the "Educational Department" of the P. C. and hopes it will be kept full every week. She also wants to hear frequent reports from the literary society. It is always gratifying to us to learn that our efforts are appreciated. The educational department is, however, not likely to appear every week. My business is teaching, not writing for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. Again, while some (and we believe there are many) are interested and edified by articles of this kind, we will not shut our eyes to the fact that others of the readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN would be just as well (and perhaps better) satisfied with the paper if it contained no educational department, nor anything on the subject of education. Here then we have two extremes; one, so to speak, interested in nothing so much as in education; the other interested in nothing so little as in education. It should be our desire to respect the feelings and preferences of both classes so far as it may be done without violence to our sense of right and duty. "Charity," says Paul, "never faileth," and this, it is hoped will bridge over the gulf and enable the white-winged messenger of peace to pass to and fro with none to molest nor make afraid.

—As to the literary society, let me suggest to the Ohio sister and all whom it may concern, that it would hardly be profitable or proper to make a report every week, but enough will be given from time to time, to suggest the nature and extent of our work in that direction. At the last meeting, Dr. Brumbaugh lectured on the subject of Food. Howard Flory gave a recitation on the map of South America, the maping having been drawn by him on the black-board previous to the meeting. Brother Howard had no practice in map-drawing of any consequence before he came here, and any one who knows what a good map is, would say that he has made rapid progress during the ten weeks that he has been with us. A. D. Beachy, of Somerset county, gave a declamation on "Knowledge," after which Mollie E. Kophart, of Blair county, read an essay on the subject, "Literary Work." As the Dr.'s lecture had occupied nearly an hour, it was thought prudent to dispense with part of the exercises. The sentiment roll was then called.

By the "sentiment roll" is meant a list of the members of the society and others who attend regularly and who signify their willingness to serve in this capacity—to arise when their names are called and read or repeat some short extract, original or selected, prose or poetry, scriptural or otherwise. This exercise strengthens the timid, gives some practice in memorizing, and helps to make us familiar with some of the best thoughts of the best writers, expressed in the best style and language.

—Things have now been worked up to about that point which enables me to promise the readers of the educational department an occasional essay, written by students of the school or by members of the Bible class. At the last meeting of the Bible class, sister Phebe Norris read a short essay on "Charity, the Chief of the Christian Graces," and brother Emerson Swane one in answer to the question, "Why is Charity greater than Faith or Hope?" The lesson was on the latter part of the chapter which ends thus: "And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity." 1 Cor. 13. Out of this chapter we made two interesting, and, we trust, profitable lessons, and now recommend it to all as well worthy of being studied, committed to memory, and treasured up as a part of that knowledge which is calculated to make us wise unto salvation.

—Our winter term begins November 21st. A few more students can be accommodated and now is the time they should enter. Among the studies are arithmetic, algebra, geometry, grammar, geography (Political and Physical), natural philosophy, orthography, elocution, rhetoric, debating, essay-writing, penmanship, drawing, etc. There will also be occasional lectures on topics connected with Physiology and the Laws of Health, Physics, Metaphysics, and kindred subjects. The study of the Bible and Bible literature receives our almost undivided attention on the Sabbath and is not wholly neglected during the week. Our Bible class is attended by brethren Quinter, Brumbaugh, Beer and others who are always willing to give us the benefit of their knowledge and experience in regard to the many interesting, instructive and sometimes difficult questions that come up before the class from Sabbath to Sabbath. We regard these brethren as a great help to us and trust they will ever be "ready to communicate," as the apostle recommends.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Our Influence.

BY JANE BROWN.

What is our influence? Where is it, and when shall it cease? In the first place, our influence is greater than we think. We are as monuments set here upon this earth to show that there is life and death on the earth. And as we are set here as a mark to show that there is life, may God grant that we may be so filled with the Holy Ghost, which God has promised to all those that repent, believe, and are baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; that we may show forth to the world that we are the monuments of life; and not show forth the resting-place of the dead, or a dead spirit within.

When this is accomplished, if we have the true spirit dwelling within, where is our influence then? On the Lord's side you will readily say. Then if on his side, and influenced by him, will we not work for him like good soldiers of Jesus Christ? Some say, how shall I know if I am influenced by him that I may lead others right? He has left us his influence so plainly in his will, the New Testament, that if we will read it, taking every word as it means, and believe that every word means what it expresses, we shall never be at a loss to know how to follow in the right direction. It ever brings to my mind forcibly a comparison that once came under my own observation. I wanted to go to a small town, a number of miles from my place, and I had never travelled the road, so I went to a neighbor that I knew was well acquainted with the road. I asked him if he could tell me the direct road to the town, that I might have no trouble in reaching it with safety? He replied that there was a straight line that would lead me there without a doubt, and when that led me straight forward I was to follow, and when that turned I must turn, or I should miss the town. That line was the telegraph wire, and as I rode along, following this line, I thought, blessed be the name of Jesus. He has left a straight line from earth to heaven for us to follow. May God help all his believing children to note the course of that line more minutely than I did the telegraph wire, lest we do not reach the city for which we started. And should we through the neglect of watchfulness stray off on the wrong,—and I may say the most frequented,—road, and fail to enter the city, there would be no turning back then to be placed on the right road. Our destiny would then be sealed through our own neglect.

Oh! dear brethren and sisters, now as we have this road so plainly pointed out to us by His ministering servants, through his all-sufficient wisdom and goodness, let us ever be watchful and prayerful, lest we imagine that there is something in that straight and narrow path that has brought us to a halt, and there is no way to go on. If you feel thus, only stop for one moment and think of the yawning gulf that is ready to swallow you up in despair and utter ruin, if you stand still or go back. Then after a moment's reflection look forward with an eye single to the glory of God, and you will plainly see that it is only Jesus in your path beckoning you on, ready to lead you, ever promising to be with you if you will only trust him; and can we not trust him when he has ever proved himself so true? Let us press forward, as he has promised us the crown only at the end of the race. That is good enough. If we cannot obtain a crown that has many stars, let us strive to gain one that is bright enough, that we may have an entrance to our Lord and Master.

I will again come back to my subject. Where shall our influence be known? Every where. First, in our own homes. There let it begin. God has given us our homes and children to educate, and bring up under a godly influence. Here is a great work to be done. All for God? No; for our own soul's sake and our children's, that we may all be his children, and brethren and sisters to our elder brother Jesus. What a great work to be done! Are we able for the task? Not in our own strength, but through the grace of God. Then let us go to work with that zeal that we do to maintain their bodies. I trust none of our brethren deck their children in the fashions of the day. If we would have our children meek, humble and lovely like Jesus, we must set before them the example like Jesus has before us. He exhibited love, goodness, long-suffering, patience and forbearance. Can we bear with our children through all the ups and downs of life with that same gentle and quiet spirit which he has so long borne with us in our waywardness? Oh, may God help us to ever bear in mind how willing he is to forgive us, and show mercy toward us when we violate his law. Then let us show the same willingness to forgive our children their faults. "Yes, but," says one, "it is written, 'Spare the rod and spoil the child.'" This is true, but do we not many times use the rod of correction when the rod of love would soothe instead of irritate? When the flame is at its height shall we add fuel, or will we use the best means to extinguish it? Kind words and gentle means I have never known to fail in bringing up my family, or in the school-room. When I had very unruly pupils I found that kind words could never die; the gentle spirit would tame the fiercest ones.

Dear brethren and sisters, or any one that may read this, will we not strive to have such influence before our families that they will wish to obey us through love as we do our Father in heaven, and not through fear? That is iksome which is not done in a pleasant spirit, and with a willing heart. Then if this is our influence in the family, how soon will the children catch that loving spirit and show that love one for another, dwelling together in peace and harmony, fit emblems for eternity. Then are we fitted for our post at home? If so, then when we sail out in the world under the banner of King Immanuel, we will have influence that will be to the honor and glory of God? And as we are sociable beings we must influence one another for good or evil whilst here on earth, and when done with time and timely things, and are laid in our graves, then will our influence cease? No; it must go on and on, from our children to their families, from our friends and neighbors that we have influenced to their associates, and so it will go on, and perhaps never cease altogether until time shall end.

Let us consider whether we shall ever be the means of causing any one, when they lie down to die, to have to say, as I have heard it said, "Oh! if my parents had not set such an ungodly example before me, I should have been different. I should have been prepared to meet my God in the resurrection. They professed to be his followers, but if their influence was that of a Christian I would have had no need to do better than I was doing, for I thought I was better than they were. Now it is too late. I have lived without Christ, and now I must die without him, be robed in a Christless robe, layed in a Christless coffin, buried in a Christless grave, and, at the final summing up of all things, raised in a Christless resurrection."

Let our influence be such, dear readers, as will help all who know us to be prepared to sleep in "Jesus, blessed sleep." Then will our lives, which we have spent here on earth, not be in vain; and our death will be our gain. Let us beautify our homes with the glowing spirit of Jesus, so that our children may look at their home as a home indeed and not as a mere place to stay.

DISTRUST is the death of the soul, belief is its life. The just shall live by faith. Infidelity is the abandonment of life; suicide of the spirit.

THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE SINS OF THE CHRISTIAN
AND THOSE OF THE WICKED.

Some unconverted persons excuse themselves for not giving themselves to Christ and becoming Christians by persuading themselves that they are as good as Christians. In their intercourse with Christians, and in noticing their conduct, they discover defects in their character; and they think that such Christians are no better than themselves. In this they may be greatly mistaken. It is to be regretted that the lives of Christians are not more free from evil, and that they too often become stumbling blocks to the unconverted. And we must admit, though it is with sorrow we do it, that there are professing Christians, and not a few, that are none the better of their Christian profession, and no better than their unconverted neighbors. But still, the unconverted may often do great injustice both to their Christian neighbors and to themselves by comparing their own characters with that of such neighbors, when upon such a comparison they conclude they are as good as their Christian neighbors.

Christians may, under circumstances of temptation, do wrong, but being done under the impulse of an unguarded feeling, and not deliberately, it does not destroy their general Christian character, though it may be a blot upon it, and consequently it does not destroy their general peace of mind, or sever their union with Christ. As between nations and their sovereigns there may be peace, though some of the subjects of the one may not treat with the respect they should those of the other; so between the Lord and some Christians, there is no rupture of the general union existing between them, though some of the thoughts of such Christians, and even some of their actions, are not as respectful and reverential towards divine things as they should be, but it is not done intentionally, or with the consent of the will, and hence God is not strict to mark it and resent it at once. But as in case of nations referred to in our illustration, if the sovereigns wink at the injustice of the subjects of the one nation practiced upon those of the other, the peace between them will eventually be broken, and war will follow; so if the Christian does not condemn every unholly thought and action, and does not strive to yield all his "members servants to righteousness, unto holiness," peace with God cannot be maintained.

And herein is the difference between the sins of the Christian and those of the wicked. Those of the former are not done deliberately or with approval, and when they are done they are looked upon with disgust, pain, and remorse, and are repented of; whereas the wicked are represented as regarding evil as "sweet in their mouth," and as "hiding it under their tongue," and as "having pleasure in unrighteousness." We thus perceive that though the Christian may occasionally do something that is wrong, nevertheless, there is a great difference between him and the unconverted person in regard to their feelings following the doing of evil. Peter denied his Lord with an oath. This surely was a great sin. But did he feel indifferent to it, or repeat it? No; he did not. After he committed the act, and recovered himself, and saw what he had done, he abhorred it, and "went out and wept bitterly." David, also, in an unguarded moment was overcome by temptation, and committed a great wrong. But the remorse and penitency that that wrong was followed by, we learn from his expressions in the Psalms, especially in the fifty first Psalm. He says, "I acknowledge my transgressions, and my sin is ever before me." He does not deny, excuse, or palliate his sin, but confesses it openly and honestly, with all its aggravations, and was so deeply impressed with its heinousness, that he declares was ever before him. And how earnestly and how appropriately does he pray for pardon: "Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean; wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow." But such feelings of remorse for, and such abhorrence to sin, the wicked do not feel. They do not weep bitterly as did Peter, or pray for pardon as did David. If the unconverted who sometimes are so ready to censure severely the professing Christian for his inconsistencies and improprieties, could follow the Christian that he has so severely censured, into retirement, and there behold him bemoaning his sins, and agonizing in deep contrition of soul before God for pardon, and hear his promises to do better in the future, his censures would be softened, and his judgment modified.

There is quite a difference between treating sins as thieves and robbers, and as guests and companions; the wicked treat sin as a guest or friend, but Christians treat it as an enemy; the former invite and welcome it as an old acquaintance, while the latter fear it as a traitor and robber. It is not so much a single evil act that makes a sinner, as it is the general feeling of a sinner towards sin—his attachment to it, and his refusing to abandon it. Neither is it a single good act that makes a Christian, but his love to that which is pure and good and holy. "Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good," is a divine precept, and a proper observance of this precept, affords very good proof of a Christian character.

"This is the hidden life I prize—
A life of pure and filial love,
When most my follies I despise,
And raise the highest thoughts above.
Thus would I live, till nature fail,
And all my former sins forsake;
Thou rise to God within the veil,
And of eternal joys partake."

OUR NEW HOME AND REMOVAL FROM THE OLD.

After a good deal of hard and unpleasant work consequent upon our removal, we find ourselves again pretty well settled in our new home, and in our study at our editorial labors. Feeling much interest in our editorial work, not only because duty requires us to labor in this field, having assumed the duties connected with the position, but because it affords us pleasure to labor in a calling which affords us such opportunities for doing good, we became anxious to resume our editorial chair and communicate with our many thousand readers. But work has so accumulated upon our hands in the time that has intervened since we commenced to prepare for moving, that we find a good deal to do. This is not only the case with ourselves, but also with our fellow laborers in the work in which we are engaged.

All the office fixtures with the household goods of our two families made considerable work to handle as much as it was necessary to do. But our families with our goods all arrived in safety. Upon our arrival, we were met by our friends who rendered us their assistance, which was much needed under the circumstances under which we were placed. We have obtained comfortable houses for our families convenient to our office, and we hope we shall feel ourselves at home among those whom our lots, for the present, are cast. Trusting it has been the providence of God that has so directed events as to bring us here, we shall try to adapt ourselves to our new position and new associations, and hope in the promises of God wherein he has said: "I am with thee in all places whither thou goest"; "as thy days, so shall thy strength be"; "and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper."

We find a little company of brethren and sisters here, who are not only endeavoring to be faithful, but who seem to be laboring to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. We trust this little church, the members of which frequently come together in a room in our office prepared for the purpose, to do as the faithful of old did—to speak "often one to another," about the Lord and the "things which concern salvation," will form a nucleus around which many will be drawn, and from the body thus formed a Christian influence go out that may be widely felt.

But while our thoughts are much engrossed with our pressing and numerous duties, and with our new surroundings and associations, we find our mind frequently reverting to the dear friends from whom we lately separated with much sorrow. It has been our lot to live in different localities, and in all these to form pleasant acquaintances and to add to our list of friends. And whenever circumstances called for a separation from those friends, the separation has been painful to our feelings. But never did we feel more sorrow at any such separation than when we left the friends of Meyersdale. When the time came for leaving them we felt much worse than we had anticipated. While our connection with the large congregation of the Elk Lick brethren was marked apparently by a reciprocal feeling of kindness between them and ourselves, there was a number of the members of the congregation that lived in and about the town, with whom we often met at our Sunday night meetings, and in the Bible class, and in the Sabbath-school, and on other occasions, between whom and ourselves a very tender and warm feeling of brotherly love existed. These dear friends were much grieved and were very reluctant to see us go when the time for leaving came. And their sorrow increased ours, and we confess our separation was to us a cause of much tender grief. The little social gathering in brother Beachly's parlor the night before we left, and the gathering at the depot of many Christian friends to show their Christian love and to bid us the affectionate farewell, are scenes so fresh in our memory that a reference to them starts the tears from the tender feelings that come over us when we think of those occasions characterized by so much love and tenderness. But such tears are not altogether tears of sorrow. There is joy mixed with them. They show the presence of love and union. Oh, we do not know how much we love one another until by death or removal we are called upon to separate!

"Hail, sweetest, dearest tie, that binds
Our glowing hearts in one;
Hail, sacred hope, that tunes our minds
To harmony divine."

We cherish a kind regard for the brethren and sisters and friends of Meyersdale, and must now regret in being separated from them, that our sojourn among them was not more to their profit, and that we did not labor more diligently and faithfully to do them good. And though circumstances seem to require us to leave them, we hope the Lord will be with them, and richly supply the ministering brethren with the gifts of the Holy Ghost, that they may feed the flock, and nurse the lambs, and so preach and labor that they may both save themselves and them that hear them. Oh! let us all so live, that we may enjoy the sweet hope of a blessed reunion of all we have loved in Christ, and worshiped with on earth.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

As the time for renewing the subscriptions to the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN is near at hand, we hope that all our present subscribers will renew their subscriptions without fail. And as THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN and The Pilgrim are now consolidated, we hope the present subscribers to The Pilgrim will also renew their subscriptions. We are making our arrangements to give them an enlarged and improved paper, and in doing this we shall be at additional expense, though we do not design to increase the price of our paper, hoping that our friends will appreciate our work, and give us a patronage which will justify us in publishing a larger paper at the present price. While we ask each subscriber to our two paper to renew his subscription to THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN which will take the place of both, we also ask him to use his endeavors to get others to subscribe.

TO OUR AGENTS.

We hope you are actively engaged, brethren and friends, in canvassing for subscribers to THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. We hope you will make an early, vigorous, and successful canvass. We desire to increase the subscription list of our paper, and we know much depends upon your efforts in doing this. And we hope you appreciate the importance of your judicious labors, and will not withhold them, as you want to see our enterprise a success. Endeavor to obtain the renewal of all old subscriptions, and obtain as many new ones as possible. Do not suffer any subscribers to be lost for want of exertion on your part. You know the character of our paper, and we think you can safely recommend it as a Christian journal.

A REQUEST.

Where there is a community in which there are some brethren living, or others, who might probably be obtained as subscribers, and no agent in such a community, will not some brother or friend volunteer to act as agent for us, and inform us of his willingness to do so, and we will forward him a prospectus, and be thankful to him for his services. Or, if any of our present agents or friends know of any such localities, will they name some person that would be likely to act as agent?

THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN AND THE POOR.

There is a class of members in the church that would like to read THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, but they are not able to pay for it. Heretofore this class has been remembered, and some funds have been sent us to pay for papers sent to the poor. We hope that many who are able to do so, will be moved to help supply the poor with our paper. We shall be thankful for contributions to such fund, and those who receive the paper will be thankful.

THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN AND THE FORNEY FUND.

We will still supply some persons with our paper out of the Forney fund. We shall therefore be pleased to receive the names of some persons who will be likely to read with profit THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, who are not members of church of the Brethren. As we are limited in the number we supply in this way, we think it best for one agent or friend not to send many names, in order that some in different parts of the brotherhood, or in different communities, may be supplied.

PLEASE NOTICE.

On account of entering into a partnership business it is especially desirable that all old accounts on both papers be settled as soon as it can be done. The amounts due each office must be kept separate and be sent to the respective firms as before.

All dues to the PILGRIM office address to H. B. Brumbaugh & Bro., Box 50, Huntingdon, Pa.

All dues to the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN office, address James Quinter Box 50, Huntingdon, Pa.

All business to be hereafter transacted, in connection with the consolidated paper, address to Quinter & Brumbaugh Bros. Box 50, Huntingdon, Pa. tf.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS IN ARREARS WITH US.

We are constrained from a want of funds to meet our expenses and obligations, to say to those who are owing us for papers and books, that we shall be much obliged to them if they remit without delay the amount due us. We have been at considerable expense in moving to this place, and in preparing for business here, and are in need of funds. And as we have a considerable amount standing out, we hope our friends that are owing us, will appreciate our situation, and use their utmost endeavors to comply with our request.

OUR MAIL.

Our correspondents will please remember our removal from Meyersdale, and hereafter address all mail matter designed for us to Box 50, Huntingdon, Huntingdon Co., Pa. Also please mark all letters designed for any individual member of the firm, and not being of a business character, as private.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Brother George Barnhart has changed his address from Centropolis, Kansas, to Newtonia, Newton county, Missouri. As the information was received too late to make the change in the Almanac for 1877, his correspondents will make a note of this.

The general conference of the Mennonite church met this year in Ekhardt county, Ind., on the 12th of October. Among the subjects before the conference were secret societies and voting. An earnest protest was entered against the former, and a decision made prohibiting the members of the church from taking part with them. It appears that it is contrary to the order of the Mennonites in the west to go to the elections, and it was decided at their late conference, that those who had gone to the election contrary to the counsel of the church should be admonished not to go again, and it was made the duty of every minister to present the subject to his church, and to labor to have the members to walk in accordance with the general order of the body in regard to voting.

—A minister of the Presbyterian church, and of the Lackawanna Presbytery, by the name of J. H. Clark, immersed one of his converts, and the Presbytery censured him for doing so. He appealed to the Synod of Philadelphia, and this body by a majority of only one vote sustained the Presbytery of Lackawanna. As may be inferred from the small majority given in favor of the decision of the Synod, a difference of opinion prevailed in the Synod. One of the speakers, Dr. Robert Adair is reported to have said, "The point was not as to the validity of immersion, but simply whether they were to countenance ministers going into the river to immerse members. The result will be to bring a discordant element into the church. If immersion is approved in one case, it will be in all." From what we have seen of the speeches made in the Synod, it appears the validity of immersion was not denied, and this being the case, the position the synod placed itself in seems to have been somewhat peculiar. It could not with propriety deny the validity of immersion, and yet censure Mr. Clark for doing it.

The New York Independent does not sustain the Synod in its action. It says: "We believe that the wisdom was with the minority. It is always safe to widen as far as possible the doors to church membership within the limits of Christian character. Even on strict constitutional grounds we see no reason in this rebuke. The Shorter and Longer Catechism do not think it important to specify by what mode baptism should be administered, except as a 'washing with water'; and the Confession of Faith merely says that 'dipping of the person into the water is not necessary, but baptism is rightly administered by pouring or sprinkling water upon the person.' Surely, if dipping is to be reprobated, the Westminster divines might have said something more than that it is not necessary." The Christian Standard says, in referring to the foregoing case, "It seems to us that Presbyterians are getting into deep water lately." This is true in more than one sense. While Mr. Clark immersed his convert in deep water, the Synod found itself also in deep water in disposing of the subject.

Cleanings and Settings.

Brother C. M. Garner, of Norris-town, November 2nd, says:

"We held our lovefeast on last Saturday, October 28th. We had a very pleasant meeting and very good preaching which, I think, had a tendency of stirring us up in the good cause. Some brethren from a distance spoke for us, which greatly assisted our Elder Henry Cassel. Prayed for us that we may continue to serve the Lord and that His work may be revived amongst us, and that sinners may be brought to the Lord and saved."

—Bro. John Zuck says: "I desire to sell my home in Shady Grove, Franklin Co. Pa., and go west. It is a desirable home, well equipped with buildings, and abundance of fruit and situated in a pleasant village—would suit those who wish to retire from farming, aged persons, or a school teacher."

If Bro. Zuck can be spared in the east he may do good service in the western field and we hope some one will buy his property and thus give him an opportunity of laboring in a larger field.

Brother J. B. Lair, of Antioch, Ind. October 1st, 1876, says:

At our church meeting yesterday one brother was disowned for improper conduct, and for not hearing the church. The weather is cool now, but there has been no killing frosts yet at this date.—Much sickness prevailing—nearly every female has some complaint,—in some families nearly all are sick. Ague and bilious fever are the prevailing diseases; but few cases have proved fatal as yet.—Wheat looks very nice. Corn will soon do to crib—Ere this reaches the many readers of the PILGRIM our lovefeast will be over, and then you will hear from us again.

Sister Beckie Stull, of Waynesboro, Pa., sends in a list of seventeen subscribers and says:

"On last Saturday evening I received a paper wishing me to be agent. I went to see how many I could get. I think I did pretty well for two days. The names are all from Waynesboro. I want to get three more in town and then I will go to the country and do the very best I can."

Elder John Wise, of Armstrong county, Pa., says:

"Our communion meeting is now past. We had a very pleasant meeting. As usual, we were again disappointed in the expected ministerial aid, but the good Lord blessed us. The brethren from abroad were brethren J. I. Cover and P. C. Johnson, of George's Creek, and Adam Wise, of Ryerson's Station congregation. They labored faithfully to teach the people the way to God. We had the pleasure of seeing three added to the church. All young men. May the good Lord help them to be faithful."

Brethren Editors:—

We are requested to send you the following in relation to the death and funeral of some of our deceased friends. While at harvest, July 1st, we received the call to attend to the funeral of Ellen Murphy, of Adams Co., Ohio, who had died of Palsy Nov. 18th, 1875, aged nearly 73 years. She and her husband, Jesse Murphy, had united with the Baptist church near fifty years ago, and it was their desire that the Baptist minister should visit the family during the sickness of the mother, and officiate at the funeral whenever it should come. This being prevented, we were called in, and in conversing with this aged mother upon the subject of death, learned that her only hope was fixed in the Savior of the race. Several of her children having united with our brethren, it was their desire that we should attend the funeral and thus the request came to us as above stated. In the time gone by, since the death of the mother, Jane Pertee, daughter of these aged people, and wife of William Pertee, had died of Consumption, (May 7th, 1876,) and the arrangements were made to have both funerals at the same place and on the same day. . . . We now give a few facts relative to the family, as they were told us by the father and sons. The father was born Feb. 22nd, 1792, and the mother Feb. 17th, 1803. They were married at Locust Grove, Adams Co., Ohio, by Curtius Cannon, Justice of the Peace, on the 20th day of April, 1820. They lived in one house over forty-two years, which they had built, and in it had reared to manhood and womanhood twelve children, (two others having died in infancy). And what may seem most strange, is the fact that this house and home was without windows or other places to admit light from without, save at the doors. This may be doubted, but most of the above facts were obtained within its walls. From the great respect shown to their aged parents, we conclude that a happy family was reared under this friendly roof, and that many of the influences for good, which were started there, will live when these parents and their home are no more.

The time set for the funerals of this mother and daughter was Sunday July the 30th, at Smalley's school house, Adams Co., Ohio. The heavy rain on the day before, and the distance many of the relations were obliged to come, delayed the morning services some more than an hour. But in this time seats were arranged in a grove beside the graveyard where the bodies of both mother and daughter were laid, and there a large and attentive audience assembled. The subject presented to this very quiet people was selected by the aged father from Rev. 14: 13, "Blessed are the dead" &c., and we think no better one could have been chosen. A "Basket Dinner" had been provided for all in order to save time for the services, and to give to the friends a longer time to remain together. We think the little time thus given, was duly relished by all, and especially by the more aged relatives and friends, who were thus permitted again to meet together.

The services were again resumed at 2 P. M., when the funeral address of the daughter, Jane Pertee, who was a member of the Christian church, was delivered by Wm. Tole a minister of that denomination, from Rev. 1: 18. The exercises were however interrupted by a heavy rain, and from which the congregation had to seek shelter as best they could. But it detained not long, and we were permitted to arrive safely home after a drive of twelve miles.

Readers of the Primitive Christian:—

October 3rd was a day set apart by the Brethren of Glade Run, Armstrong Co., Pa., for a lovefeast and several meetings. It was my lot to labor among them. The Lord seemed to overrule our health and travel to meet with them and to enjoy their feast and the order of it. The weather was somewhat unfavorable, but notwithstanding this, the Lord did seem to give his spiritual help, for many expressed themselves as being happy during the meetings. The lovefeast, like most of these meetings, was well attended and attention good. Brethren Kimmel of Plum Creek, Wampler, Wells and Wilt of Cowanshannoc, and Peter Beer of Montgomery Branch were the principle speakers from adjoining churches.

The next evening, the 4th, a joint company of the Glade Run congregation took us to the house of brother and sister Abraham Swigart, he being very ill with a painful emaciation of the chest. He desired to commune once more with the church and in this way only could his wants be gratified. So cheerfully did he endeavor to yield a feeble body to serve the Lord that to us it was a school of sympathy and tender love in a cause so noble. We hope his family will not fail to improve by the occasion. May the Lord sanctify the affliction for good. The meetings were conducted morning and evening until Saturday morning. Four souls were then instructed in the order and doctrine of the church, and by consent of all present were immersed in the name of the Lord, after which all left for home. Since then I am informed that one more soul was added by baptism. Since then, we in company with brother Jos. Wampler and Isaac Wilt went to the upper end of the District to the John's meeting house. Here a full house waited for the "preachers," as they called us as we entered the house late. During all the meetings the order and attention was commendable. The house being new, the meeting very naturally called out many to see and be seen. The house was so crowded that the brethren had but little room to perform the evening services. We could only pray God that all might be qualified to sit at the Lord's table and enjoy the feast with us. Here four were immersed and one reclaimed. "The Lord knoweth them that are his." What a seal! Who can break it? The "lion of the tribe of Juda"—the "Alpha and the Omega." Now dear brethren you have an imperfect statement of the doings of the Brethren in Western Pennsylvania. May the Lord of Mount Zion direct his watchman to pray for the peace and the glory of God, and fail not to exhort and teach with meekness of mind and long-suffering. Thanks to all with whom we were made an object of hospitality. With love and good will, I am truly yours.

An Appeal.

Having involved myself in debt, more than, I fear, I shall ever be able to pay, and fearing that I might lose all, and thinking that there are plenty of brethren that have the money and perhaps would like to buy my farm, and help me out, and also do a good thing for themselves, I appeal to some one to come and buy my farm. My farm consists of 120 acres of land, about 95 acres under cultivation, in a beautiful and healthy country, with good roads, good markets, a good society, and a number one farm. I would rather live here than any place I have ever been, but the debt is pressing me so, that I have concluded, on account of it, and other difficulties, which I do not wish here to mention, to stay at home and stop preaching until I can see my way clear. If I could sell, I think I could shape matters so as to attend my ministerial calling, or if some one would loan me the money until I could sell, or raise it on the farm, it would help me through. For further information, inquire of

M. T. BAER.

Flowerfield, St. Co., Mich.

N. B. I would sell at such figures, and such time as to make it an object for any one to buy, wishing a good farm.

EAST RIVER, W. VA. }
October 22nd, 1876. }

Dear Pilgrim :

I was delighted sometime last month in returning to my home and there meeting with the PILGRIM again. Its pages were eagerly perused until the contents were read. I here return my thanks to the kind sister for the PILGRIM.

The communion season is now past, and as no one has given you a report I will try to do so. Our lovefeast on East River was the 26th of August. The brethren, sisters and friends met at 11 o'clock. Brother James Hutchison, of Monroe county, preached as a short, but good, sermon. After taking some refreshments we met again at 5 o'clock, and our much esteemed brother E. P. Fleshman, of Monroe, addressed us on the important subject of examination, after which we performed the ordinances of the Lord's house as we believe the Savior did on the night he was betrayed. All things were done decently and in order, and I believe some good and lasting impressions were made upon some of the many spectators that looked on while the brethren and sisters humbly attended to the ordinances as exemplified by a once crucified, but now risen, Savior.

Meeting next day at 11 o'clock. Brother E. P. Fleshman, of Monroe, preached a very feeling discourse which brought many tears, not only from the members, but from many warm friends of the cause of Christ.

Our hearts were then made sad, for we had to part again with dear ones that had met with us from other arms of the church. But these partings occur while we are here on earth, but if we are faithful we can look forward to the time when we will meet to part no more.

I moved to this place five years ago, and there were only three members here. Now we number fourteen, and others are almost persuaded to be Christians. I was at a lovefeast in Monroe county, W. Va., September 30th. I met with our beloved brother Peter Crumpacker and his son Samuel, from Montgomery, Va. Preaching on Saturday by brother Samuel Crumpacker. On Saturday night we had a table fifty feet long, and it was crowded on both sides. Met next morning at nine o'clock to appoint an elder, a speaker and two deacons. The choice for elder was brother A. L. Fleshman, and brother George Hutchison for speaker. The two deacons were Samuel Fleshman and Thomas Thiers. We then repaired to the church where they were duly installed before quite a crowd of spectators. It was a very solemn time. Many tears were shed even by the spectators. Preaching at eleven o'clock by the writer. Brethren I desire your prayers.

R. HARRY.

MENGENS MILLS, YORK CO., PA. }
October 29th, 1876. }

We the brethren of the Upper Codoras church have just finished a new meeting-house at Black Rock station on the line of the Baughman Valley railroad. It is nicely located and very conveniently built. All seem to be very well pleased with the house except a few, but I suppose when the building is all paid, then all objections will disappear. To me it appears astonishing how our pocket books will sometimes try to take the wrong course. For instance we are called upon to give money for building meeting-houses or to give aid to the Danish Fund or to the poor fund, then perhaps our pocket books will say don't do it, but on the other hand the spirit of God will say yes do it, give willingly brethren, let us follow the spirit of God and not our pocket books. Our lovefeast was on the 26th and 27th inst. Ministers present from other congregations were brethren, Adam Brown, William Hertzler, J. Shambarger, J. Lerew, D. Longenecker, John Newcower, and others. The word was faithfully preached. At the close of the afternoon meeting on the first day one young man came forward and made application to be received into the church. On the whole our meeting was a pleasant one. Brother Aaron Baugher was forwarded to the second degree in the ministry. S. M. MUMBERT.

"Death of Mrs. S. T. Everett."

"A very large circle of relations and friends will be deeply pained to learn of the death of Mrs. Mary M., wife of Sylvester T. Everett, which occurred early Tuesday morning at the residence of the family, No. 333, Prospect street, Cleveland, Ohio. Her illness, which during a great portion of the time was exceedingly severe, was of seven weeks duration. For several days she had been almost wholly unconscious, except at brief intervals. And her death, though none the less a shock to her friends, was not altogether unexpected. Mrs. Everett was born September 14th 1840, and had just passed her thirty-sixth year. She was the daughter of the late Charles Everett of Phila., Pa., in which city she lived until her marriage, January 13th 1859. She was widely known in this city and was held in high esteem for her many private virtues and her social attractions. As wife, mother, daughter and sister her affections were absorbing, and none but the sorrowing family can fully appreciate the loss they have sustained. As a neighbor and friend she was universally beloved, and the shadow of bereavement will fall upon many hearts without the desolate home circle. She was exceptional in her charities, no applicant for aid being turned away empty-handed. Mrs. Everett leaves three daughters, the youngest eight years of age.

The funeral will take place at half past two o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, from 333 Prospect street. The interment will be at Lake View Cemetery."

The above has been copied from the Cleveland Herald of October 3d relative to the death and sterling worth of our deceased sister in Christ. All who knew her will bear testimony to the truth of the statements of the editor. Surrounded with all that affluence could bestow, she was amidst it all still unpretending, and when the Master called she willingly answered the summons. God grant that the sorrowing husband and daughters may be ready to meet her in the better land.

Epistolary.

TO SISTER K. L.

Dear Sister :

To me it is but a pleasant duty to write you a short epistle. I have often thought of you all and often wished we could enjoy each others' company as we were oft wont to do in by gone years, but as we are deprived of this now, what a great blessing it is that we can write to each other. In this world we have many perplexities and trials, but if we bear them it is all for our good, though it may seem grievous. With all the trials we are subjected to, how many blessings do we enjoy. But these are often overlooked. We rarely ever appreciate blessings as much as we lament misfortunes. This shows how ungrateful man is to the giver of all good. Ingratitude I think is a great sin. It is even so if we are ungrateful to man for kind acts bestowed, and much more so to God.

Dear sister, you have had your trials, crosses, and temptations, and perhaps, you think without number. Some of your friends have been called away, some loved ones have moved to distant States, besides this you have suffered many other things grievous to nature. Seasons have come and gone, have been swallowed up in years, and as years have multiplied those crosses have also increased, but then how good the great shepherd has been. He has also given you additional strength to bear up under them and like gold you have been purified making you "more fit for the master's use," bringing you nearer the great white throne, nearer the crystal sea, I know you have with all your trials also had your seasons of joy. These were like so many oases in a desert land. You met others who shared similar joys and sorrows with you, with tenderness you could greet each other as members of one faith, making you stronger in your pilgrimage to another and better world.

Dear sister I too have drunk out of the bitter cup of affliction since last we met. Near and dear relatives have been taken away, besides having endured many trials and troubles incident to christian life. But shall I murmur Nay, only for things wherein I have neglected my duty. In this I can see many mistakes which only can be improved by being more diligent in the future. May I have the grace to be so.

I will close. Please reply, and if we no more meet on earth may it be our happy lot to meet on the bright morn of the first resurrection, and if we have proven faithful, the promise is to us that we shall receive the crown of life, held in reserve for all the people of God. Your sister, LAMA C. F.

Important Announcement.

Owing to the fact that the incomplete condition of the endowment fund of the Plumcreek Normal school renders the professorship I hold unremunerative, I have resigned my position in the institution.

Three years professional and social intercourse with the friends and managers of the school, enables me to speak in terms of unqualified praise concerning all connected with the school, and especially so respecting the qualities of Prof. Lewis Kimmel as a scholar and Christian gentleman.

My retirement leaves me free to engage in any new locality in teaching a school of a Normal, High School or Academic character. Should any reader or community know of any location where such a school would be advantageous and successful, please confer at once with the undersigned, that prompt measures may be taken for an opening early next spring.

HOWARD MILLER.

Elderton, Pa.

Brother Quinter:—

The resignation of Prof. Howard Miller of Plum Creek Normal School, in this week's issue of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, will no doubt cause some inquiries. His abilities as a teacher of all the English branches taught in this grade of school is not questioned by any one acquainted with Mr. Miller. In Latin, the Sciences, and as a Naturalist he is well up the ladder himself, and can communicate his knowledge with a happy facility. There are places where persons desire a school who might do well to confer early with Prof. Miller, as his manner of business is to lay hold on what is tangible. I ought in justice to say to you, that this parting is amicable on all hands; there is nothing save a regret for the necessity at this time. But "All is well where God leads." Yours fraternally, LEWIS KIMMEL.

Errata.

Brother Brumbaugh:—

Please correct some errors in Pilgrim Vol. 7, No 43, page 686. Instead of George D. Dosey Hodgden, you say a choice was held in the Antioch congregation, but nothing about the communion meeting held in the Eight Mile District in Wells Co., Ind., on the 13th of October, where a choice was held for two ministers and two deacons. The lot fell on brethren Geo. Holler and George Watson for ministers, and Anthony Chrismore and Samuel Cline for visiting brethren. We had a very good meeting at this place.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

After the first of January next my address will be Burnetts Creek, White Co., Ind.

SAMUEL MURRAY.

In my short article in the last No. of the Pilgrim read "special" for "social," "from" for "for," "anecdote" for "an anecdote," "numbers" for "members," "cold" for "could." There are also several other errors.

EMMA A. MILLER.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

BROWN.—Matilda Brown, daughter of brother George in the flesh and sister Nancy Brown by adoption in the Spirit died October 28th, aged 7 years 7 mos., and 3 days.

Funeral occasion by J. B. Wampler to a large and much affected congregation. P. B.

BRUMBAUGH.—In the Union City church, August 10th, 1876, Samuel Brumbaugh, son of Jesse and Charlotte Brumbaugh, aged 1 year, 8 mo., and 17 days.

FLORY.—Also in the same church, Aug. 26th, 1876, sister Barbara Flory, aged 12 years 7 months and 15 days.

BROSIER.—Also in the same church, October 16th, 1876, grand-father Henry Brosier aged 86 years, 5 months and 10 days.

PETRY.—Also in the same church, Oct. 20th, 1876, brother George Petry a fellow laborer in the ministry, in the Union City church, aged 60 years, 9 months and 20 days. Funeral services by the brethren and the writer.

THOMAS B. WENRICK.

SNYDER.—On the 23d day of September, 1876, in Coshocton county, Ohio, — Snyder, aged about 2 years and 6 months. Funeral discourse by the writer.

WILLIAM JOHNSON

REIBER.—In the Upper Still Water church, Dark county, Ohio, brother Jacob Reiber aged 87 years, 10 months and 5 days.

He was born Nov., 5th 1788 in York county Pa., and emigrated to Perry Co., Pa., in 1835 For the last nine years he has had his home with me in Dark Co., Ohio. He was sick four weeks. Soon after he took sick, he seemed to think his days were nearly numbered, and he called for the elders of the church, and was anointed as the apostle James directs, and then his desire was to depart. He served as a visiting brother for some years. Funeral services by the brethren from the words, "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand." JOHN MOHLER.

WHITE.—Near Loudonville Ohio, Oct. 7t h, 1876, Mrs. Margaret White wife of Jackson White, aged 29 years, 7 months and 27 days. She was the mother of four children, wo of which are dead and two are living who with their father mourn the loss of a very kind mother. She was a member of the Lutheran church.

WHITE.—Also their son Newton W. White, Oct. 12th 1876, aged 8 years, 5 months and 11 days. Funeral services by M. Workman and W. P. Workman. W. P. WORKMAN.

NICKUM.—In the Somerset congregation, Oct., 6th, of our friend Joseph Nickum, deceased, after being confined to her bed nearly all the time for eight months. Aged 23 years 9 months 6 days. Funeral services by Dr. Fowler, of Wabash, Ind., from Rev. 6:8.

BASH.—Also in the same congregation, Oct., 9th the wife of our friend Phillip S. Bash, deceased, having been confined to her bed about five weeks. About one year ago, she was prostrated about three months by rheumatism. But now she has gone to the grave to be awakened when Gabriel sounds the last trumpet "to meet the Lord in the air." She leaves a husband and five small children to mourn her loss. To my knowledge she belonged to no christian denomination. Age about 35 years. Funeral services by the brethren, at the Mt. Vernon meeting house, from 1 Peter 1:24. H. R. WINNICK.

EBERLY.—In the Swan Creek church Fulton county Ohio, on the 16th of Sept. Our much esteemed sister Susan Eberly, deceased, aged 77 years lacking a few days.

This old mother in Israel lived in widowhood eight years and lately with her children, where all her necessities were attended to in order to make her comfortable. She was meek and indulgent and submissive in her sickness, called for the elders to comply with the anointing with oil in the name of the Lord. Being in a state of suffering, she called once more for a season of singing and prayer which was complied with. She said the pains had left. She fell asleep in Jesus' "blessed sleep." This ends the pilgrimage of our dear old sister whose maiden name was Deardorff, lived a consistent member for 40 years, was the mother of 10 children, 46 grand-children and 16 great-grand children. Funeral discourse by the writer from Rev. 14:12; 13.

LIFE, GROWTH, BEAUTY. LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER. LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

Not a Dye; makes harsh hair soft and silky cleanses the scalp from all impurities, causing the hair to grow where it has fallen off or become thin.

Can be applied by the hand as it does not stain the hand or soil the finest linen. As a Hair Dressing it is the most perfect the world has ever produced. The hair is renovated and strengthened, and natural color restored without the application of mineral substances.

Since the introduction of this truly valuable preparation into this country, it has been the wonder and admiration of all classes, as it has proved to be the only article that will absolutely without deception, restore gray hair to its original color, health, softness, lustre and beauty, and produce hair on bald heads of its original growth and color.

This beautiful and fragrantly perfumed article is complete within itself, no washing or preparation before or after its use, or accompaniment of any kind being required to obtain these desirable results.

HERE IS THE PROOF
OF ITS

SUPERIOR EXCELLENCE.

Read this Home Certificate, testified to by Edward L. Garrigue, one of the most competent Druggists and Chemists of Philadelphia, a man whose veracity none can doubt.

I am happy to add my testimony to the great value of the "London Hair Color Restorer," which restored my hair to its original color, and the hue appears to be permanent. I am satisfied that this preparation is nothing like a dye, but operates upon the secretions. It is also a beautiful hair dressing and promotes the growth. I purchased the first bottle from Edward B. Garrigue, druggist, Fifth and Coates streets, who can also testify my hair was quite gray when I commenced its use.

MRS. MILLER.

No. 730 North Ninth St., Phila.

Dr. Swaney & Son—Respected fathers: I have the pleasure to inform you that a lady of my acquaintance, Mrs. Miller, is delightfully with the success of your "London Hair Color Restorer." Her hair was falling rapidly and quite gray. The color has been restored, the falling off entirely stopped, and a new growth of hair is the result. E. B. GARRIGUES, Druggist, cor. Tenth and Coates, Phila.

BOSTON TESTIMONY.

July 22d, 1871.—Dr. Swaney & Son: Last winter, while in Trenton, N. J., I procured six bottles of London Hair Color Restorer, which I like very much, in fact better than anything I have used in the last nine years. If you please, send me one dozen bottles C. O. D., care of W. S. Fogler & Son Druggists, No. 723 Tremont street, Boston.

Respectfully yours,

ADA BAKER,
No. 59 North Ninth Square.

"London Hair Color Restorer and Dressing" has completely restored my hair to its original color and youthful beauty, and caused a rapid and luxuriant growth.

MRS. ANNIE MORRIS,

No. 616 North Seventh street, Phila.

Dr. Dalton of Philadelphia, says of it: The London Hair Color Restorer is used very extensively among my patients and friends, as well as by myself. I therefore speak from experience.

The Primitive Christian.

is published every Tuesday at $1.60 a year postage included.

This Christian journal is devoted to the defense and promotion of Primitive Christianity, as held and practiced by the Church of the Brethren, or German Baptists.

They accept the New Testament as the only proper rule of faith and practice, and hold to the observance of all its commandments and doctrines; among which are Faith, Repentance, Baptism by Trine Immersion, Prayer, the Washing of the Saints' Feet, the Lord's Supper, the Communion, Non-Resistance, Non-Conformity to the world, and the Perfecting of Holiness in the fear of the Lord.

As space will permit, some attention will be given to such secular matters as may be judged instructive to our readers.

Subscriptions may begin at any time. For further particulars send for a specimen number. Address,

THE POOR IN SPIRIT.

BY CAROLINE MAY.

"Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." Matth. 5:3.

How happy are the poor in spirit,
How cheerfully they dwell,
As if the kingdom they inherit,
Were heaven and earth as well!

If wealth is theirs, they are not troubled
To save it or enlarge;
But others' wants, with gifts redoubled,
They make their willing charge.

If low their lot, their heart is holy,
Fearing no hurtful fall;
Their highest aim is to be lowly,
And find in God their all.

His will they daily meet with gladness,
As guide to their own will;
Whether it bring them joy or sadness,
Good things or seeming ill.

If good, they sing aloud of mercies
To which they have no claim;
If ill, they reckon griefs no curses,
If free from sin and shame.

The poor in spirit do not stumble
When dangers round them close;
For brave and true, as well as humble,
They soon disarm their foes.

They bring no Pharisaic merit
To plead before God's eyes,
A contrite heart and broken spirit
Is their one sacrifice.

They were the first the Savior singled
From out the waiting throng,
Upon the lofty mountain mingled,
To hear of right and wrong.

They, in that sermon of the Savior,
The world still ponders o'er,
Were first assured of heavenly power,—
E'en life for ever more.

Humility, self-agnation,
Is Christ's most precious gem;
He gives it foremost exaltation
In His own diadem.

And they who have that, well-hidden,
Treasured with constant care,
Though poor on earth, shall soon be hidden
A heavenly throne to share.

Who would not wrestle with affliction,
And conquer every sin,
To gain the crown of benediction
The "poor in spirit" win?

—N. Y. Observer.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, Why Will we Doubt?

BY CHARLOTTE T. BOND.

Why is it when God tells us his word is truth, that we are sometimes filled with perplexities and fears? Is it the temptations of Satan, or because we fail in our duty? When we are filled with these doubts, we are certainly violating one of God's laws. We are commanded to trust him, and this feeling shows a lack of confidence in his promises; for he says, he will provide for us both temporally and spiritually, if we trust him. We have only to do our duty, and God is our friend, and if we fail through weakness, Christ is our propitiation with the Father. He is there ever interceding for us, and his love is such that he never forgets us, and though our hearts may become weak, and tremble with fear, there is a protecting providence that will safely take us through every trial. If we can just turn our thoughts heavenward, and put our trust entirely there, these doubts will all vanish. If we would look less at earthly things, and trust less in our own strength, and the deceptive things of this world, and by an eye of faith view God as he is, and feel that he knows us better than we can possibly know ourselves, then would our sorrow be turned to joy, our fears turned to confidence. Tough our burdens may seem so heavy, sometimes, that we are ready to despair, yet Jesus says, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." How we should treasure those words! "I will give you rest." Can we doubt his ability to do so? We cannot suppose they are words without meaning, or that they were lightly spoken. There is enough in these few words to inspire an exalted hope and confidence.

Let us consider by whom they were spoken. The one to whom all power on earth was given, one that cannot lie, and I verily believe that that rest is to be given both here and in eternity. If we have faith in his promises we rest from the harassing anxieties of this life, and when we are through with our work here, we pass into that eternal rest with the saints of God. If we would please our Maker, we have but to accept his mercies with grateful and loving hearts, and have full faith that all is intended for our good. When afflictions come, for they do come to all, we should see the hand of God in them, and we will not afflict more than we are able to bear, and these light afflictions which are but for a moment, are sent in mercy to try our faith, and the more patiently we endure them, the greater the reward. These should never bring doubts and fears as it is only a proof of God's love to us, for "whom he loveth he chasteneth." Great and good promise, in every case. We have but to rely on his promises and our souls will be lifted far above this lowly vale to that bright realm where we shall soon join in singing the song of Moses and the Lamb, where the golden gates will be thrown open to receive us as soon as the spirit leaves this tenement of clay.

In contemplating the blessed promises given us, we can but see how pre-eminent is the life of heaven above that of earth. We can see how the apostle glorified in his infirmities; how calmly and resignedly he could say he was ready to be offered. He had fought the good fight, he had baffled with all worldly doubts and fears, evils and temptations; he had conquered them all, and was ready to go. And why not we put away all doubts and fears, running with patience the race set before us. By innocence and purity, and a never-failing faith in God, we can acquire a complete deliverance over the world and the lusts of the flesh, its pains, its sorrows and pangs, which cannot affect us. There is a calm resignation to the varying changes of life. When we receive mercies at his hand they will be gratefully accepted, and when misfortunes come, they will be received with confiding faith that will be right.

Our Savior spoke of some of the simplest things of nature to prove to us that we were the objects of God's constant care, and that he was ever ready to give us what we needed. He introduces the sparrow that by God's bountiful hand was fed; the lilies of the field that Solomon in all his glory could not equal. And again he says, "If your earthly parents know how to give good gifts, how much more your Father in heaven will give good gifts to them that ask him." Should not these promises lift us above all doubts? Can we not confide in our best friend? He even promises to feed the ravens when they cry. It may take a mighty effort, and firm decision, to rise above all these doubts and fears, but God has promised to help us in this too, and if we will keep the world and its passions beneath us, and never permit them to overrule us, we are safe.

If we will set our affections on things above, and soar higher and higher in the attainments of a pure and blameless life, Satan may follow us with temptations in vain. God will be with us, and in every case make a way of escape. He has promised both to guide and protect all of his children. God would have us rise above every sect and creed, all opinions of men, and be guided by his word and the spirit of truth.

It is this listening to the opinions of men, and neglecting to search the Scriptures, that is leading so many poor souls astray, and we very much fear will drag many, very many, down to perdition. Oh! when will we seek the true and living God in the right way. We do not wonder that those who are seeking salvation through man's theories have perplexities, doubts and fears. They have great reason to fear. It is preached that God means in his word, that they can serve God and Mammon; that they can join the church, serve God and at the same time dress extravagantly and fashionably, go to races, fairs, theatres, and all such wicked and degrading places without getting the least contaminated, or a wicked thought entering their minds. We might just as well expect to roll in a hog wallow and get up neat and clean as to make a practice of going to such places and keep our hearts pure and ourselves unspotted from the world.

This plan of serving God and following the world may ease the conscience of some, but I would warn you by the fate of <sup>as are</sup> ~~remans~~ and Sapphira. ### Meditation and Prayer.

BY J. W. SMOUSE.

Meditation and prayer are the daily exercises and delight of a devout and pious soul. In meditation we converse with ourselves; in prayer we converse with God. Meditation is thought engaged and thought enflamed. We must set ourselves to meditate on that which is more proper for the confirming of our faith, and the kindling of pious and devout affections in us. Good thoughts should be oft in our minds and our souls should often breathe towards God in pious ejaculations. To meditate is not only to think seriously of divine things, but to think of them with concern and suitable affections. While we are thus musing the fire must burn. Psalm 39: 3. When the heart meditates terror. Isaiah 39: 18. The design of a solemn meditation is to improve our knowledge and affect ourselves with those things with which we have acquainted ourselves and that by beholding the glory of the Lord we may be changed into the same image. Then let us think of the sinfulness and misery of man's fallen state, that we may see the glorious value of our recovery and restoration by the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and let us take a correct view of our ruin by the sin of Adam. Let us see what desolation it hath made upon the earth and how it hath turned the world into a wilderness. "How is the gold become dim, and the most fine gold changed. What wretched work did sin make? Let us see how the nature of man is corrupted and degenerated from its primitive purity and rectitude; God's true image defaced and Satan's image stamped instead of it. The understanding became blind to the rays of divine light. The will became stubborn and would not comply with the dictates of divine law; our nature was by creation a little lower than that of angels, but become by sin much baser than that of brutes. It was like the Nazarites purer than snow, whiter than milk, more ruddy than rubies, and its polishing was of sapphire, but now its visage is blacker than a coal. Lam. 4: 7, 8. Never was beauty so deformed, never strength so weakened, never was a healthy constitution so spoiled, never was honor so laid in the dust. How is the faithful city become an harlot. Man's nature was planted a choice vine, a good seed, but alas, it is become the degenerated plant of a strange vine. Jer. 2: 21. By sad experience I find it in myself I am naturally prone to that which is evil and very slow to perform that which is good. Foolishness is daily in my heart, for these things I tremble and am afraid; for these things I weep, mine eye runs down with tears, Lam. 1: 16. Look then at the miserable state of fallen man; see him expelled from the garden of the Lord. See how odious he has become to God's holiness and obnoxious to his justice, and by nature a child of wrath. See him sentenced for sin, to utter darkness, to the devouring flames, to the everlasting burning and torment. What a deplorable condition! By nature we are of this guilty exposed condemned race, undone forever, as miserable as the curse of heaven and the flames of hell can make us.

Will not these thoughts then beget within us a hatred of sin? Will we not flee to Christ in whom alone help and salvation is to be had. Let us see in ourselves this sinfulness, and let us get out of this Sodom and escape for our lives and let us not look behind us, but escape to the mountain of holiness, lest we be consumed. Let us think of the glory of the divine attribute shining forth in the work of our redemption and salvation. Herein is love. Though God was happy from eternity before man had a being, and would have been happy through eternity, if man never had been; though by man's sinfulness and disobedience, he had forfeited the kindness of a friend, yet God in tender mercy and long forbearance, moved for our relief. Here is the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom which God ordained before the world for glory, Cor. 2: 7. Think of the measures God hath taken, the means He hath devised that the banished might not be expelled from him, 2 Sam. 14: 14.

Let us think of God as the former of everything that was made, and without whom was not anything made that was made. "Thrones or dominions, or principalities or powers, all things were created by him, and for him, and he is before all things and by him all things consist." Col. 1: 16, 17. Think of him as the Emmanuel, the word incarnate, God manifested in the flesh. Let us see him as John did in his vision, Rev. 1: 13-16. Let us think of him and admire him as one that in all things hath the pre-eminence, none like him or any to be compared with him.

Let us meditate on the honors and comforts of a state of grace. Are we the children of God by the Spirit of regeneration and adoption? Have we true fellowship with the Father and his Son Jesus Christ? Let us be heard to exclaim all is mine. "Whether Paul or Apollos or Cephas or the world, or life or death, or things present or things to come, all is mine, and ye are Christ's and Christ is God. 1 Cor. 3: 22, 23.

But we must not only meditate, but we must pray. When the apostle Paul had reckoned up all parts of the Christian armor, He says we shall pray always with all prayer Eph. 6: 18. When we read the word carefully we find even Jesus when he was fulfilling his mission, was spoken to from heaven at three different times and every time was he found in prayer. At his baptism. (Luke 3: 21) at his transfiguration, (Luke 9: 29,) and just before his passion, (John 12: 27, 28.) Saul of Tarsus prays and then sees a vision, (Acts 9: 11, 12,) and afterward (Acts 22: 17, 18) Cornelius had his vision while engaged in prayer. Let us pray that what is amiss within us, may be pardoned in the blood of Christ. This prayer king Hezekiah has put in our mouths, God put it in our hearts, 2 Chron. 30 : 18, 19.

Then let us pray for God's mercies and blessings to guard us while we live, so when we leave the shores of mortality we will be with Christ in the happy mansions above.

How can ye Believe?

BY SOLOMON GILBERT.

"How can ye believe, which receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?" John 6 : 44.

As this is a subject that is not often spoken from, I will offer a few thoughts on it. It appears that Christ was speaking to the Jews. The Jews claimed Abraham for their father, and Moses for their lawgiver. It was very honorable unto them to have such an honorable parentage. But Abraham received what he delivered unto his children from God, so God deserved the honor. He gave Moses the law; and it was God who gave them manna from heaven. So God was entitled to all the honor. God sent his son into the world to suffer and die. He did not bear witness of himself, but the Father. The Father at his baptism bore witness of him. "This is my beloved Son;" and all the prophets bore witness of him. But alas, for poor Christendom, if you wish to join the church of Christ, they who profess Christianity will talk beautifully of Christ, and recommend him as your only Savior, which is very true; but then it appears that the churches have deviated from Christ. They make a difference between Christ and his church. They have some men or brethren to stand between you and Christ. You must seek their honor first, and then the Father's honor through the Son. It is not necessary to mention all the creeds and disciplines of men, and orders of brethren: they are all the same, their creeds are just to be lived out; they are to be honored, and then the Father and the Son. But that was not what the Son desired. He was sent from heaven by the Father. The honor was due the Father and him. So, my dear Christian friends, do not set yourselves before the Father and Son. If you labor in the word and doctrine of the Father and Son, you are worthy of double honor, and I believe that God will give it you; but do not seek it of men. If you are faithful, men will honor you enough.

The Parable of the Virgins

BY J. K. HARLEY.

"Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom." Matth. 25 : 1.

I am well aware that there are different opinions on the above comparison. Some think the five foolish virgins are the non-professor; but I cannot understand it so. Our Savior tells us plainly that the ten virgins went forth to meet the bridegroom, not their bridegroom as some say. Now the question ariseth whose bridegroom was he? he was certainly not the bridegroom of all ten. We are told five of them will be disowned, because they were foolish, and had no oil in their lamps. Yes, very foolish to go forth without oil in their lamps, to meet a bridegroom that knows all things beforehand. The term virgin means simply, pure, undefiled, not polluted with the things of this world. But says my friend, they are all ten called virgins. So they are, but five were foolish. A vast difference. They certainly cannot be found with the non-professor; because they will not go forth to meet the bridegroom; they will call on the rocks and mountains to fall on them to hide them from the presence of the bridegroom that cometh to execute judgment on a guilty world. It appears they knew their doom, and are not disappointed, but afraid, because they are not ready. They have neither lamp nor oil.

Let us go right in the church of Christ, and see whether we can find them there. Let us not exempt any one, neither lay member nor minister. Let us examine the matter closely. There is a so-called religion which does well to live by; but meets with a great disappointment at the end. It is an easy matter to join a church, to get the lamp and be called a virgin, and make the outward appearance; go with the wise, sing and pray with them, preach the gospel if we have a talent to do so, and deceive many, and and have all the time self in view. It cannot be denied that there are many who, if we may judge by external signs, are mostly engaged in the hopeless task of serving two masters; they desire to stand well in the church, and do many things to promote its temporal interest and worldly popularity, yet they cling to the world, its maxims and allurements. With the one hand they are quite willing to aid in building up and adorning the exterior, while with the other they make sad havoc of all that is within; they look at their own works, and get a good opinion of themselves; they want to go to heaven when they die, but they desire to take their worldly pleasures with them; they think themselves wise and do not know that they are blind and are deceiving themselves; they boast of their lamp and are not aware that they have no oil in it. Great will be their disappointment at that day.

Others may have made a good beginning, commenced in the spirit, but ended in the flesh. Col. 3 : 3. They may have made a full surrender to the Lord and Savior, but by and by they were enticed by the allurements of this world; their narrow consciences were changed into an indiarubber conscience; they were allowed to lay down the cross and celebrate with the world, pick it up again to meet with the wise, worship with them, and are called wise, at least by some. John tells us, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." 1 John 2 : 15.

I think this passage clears up the matter at once. No love, no oil. All the same thing. Jeremiah says, "Cursed is the man that worketh the work of the Lord deceitfully." Jer. 48 : 10. This shows that it is possible to work deceitfully. Yes, deceive ourselves and be nothing; but foolish virgins when the bridegroom cometh. Alas! who can tell the remorse of such. Too late, no oil to be bought, the door is shut and we are not saved.

On the other hand the wise were rivited to the cross as their Savior was. They were pilgrims and strangers. Here on earth they followed the lamp with a pure motive, therefore they shall come forth at that day with their lamps trimmed and burning; their vessels filled with oil, and enter into everlasting joy and happiness. Reader to which of the three above named classes do you belong? certainly to one of the three. Now is the time to examine ourselves, now is the time to make our calling and election sure.

KIND WORDS are the bright flowers of earth's existence; they make a very paradise of the humblest home the world can show. Use them, and especially around the fireside circle. They are jewels beyond price, and make the weighed-down spirits more glad than all other blessings the earth can give.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Faithfulness Rewarded.

BY S. T. BOSSERMAN.

"Take heed unto thyself, and into the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee." 1 Tim. 4: 16.

During the early period of the life of our ancient christian fathers, they noticed the inclinations of the minds of men, that they were carnal, and though they dwelt in Christ's presence bodily, and had so recently seen and knew of the great struggle in establishing the Christian religion, and that to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, was to them the only means of salvation from sin, yet by the opposing element sin, with all its force, warring against them, it was necessary for them to give the "more earnest heed to the things which they had heard," lest by the wiles of the devil, they might again be entangled with the yoke of bondage and become unfruitful in the cause of their blessed Master. Hence the solemn charge, by the beloved apostle Paul the great veteran of the cross, to a young fellow laborer, whom he regards as his "own son in the faith," to take heed unto himself and to the doctrine, that he might receive the blessings promised. He implored this youthful minister not to neglect the gift, the talent that he possessed, and to give himself wholly to them that he might improve himself and those who were faithful ministers and followers of the Lord Jesus Christ implies great sacrifice, as the ministry is confirmed to the observation of many to be a mere trade by so much faithfulness to man and unfaithfulness to God, that to heed the injunctions of the eminent apostle, "study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth," (2 Tim. 2: 15) and preach the word; be instant in season, out of season, reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine" (2 Tim. 4: 2); will require great sacrifice and persecution, which are incident to none but the true and faithful christian.

The charge is given to the minister in order that the cause of Christ may grow, and if in the ministration of the word, the minister does not show himself approved and supplied with the thoughts pertaining to the plan of salvation, how can his "profiting appear to all" or to any? The apostle urges upon "his son" learn and follow that which is good, to acquaint himself with the doctrine, to not neglect his talent but improve it, to "meditate upon these things," the goodness of God, his mercy, his truth, his word, to learn "what the will of God is concerning us," to give himself wholly to them and supply his mind with rich truths from God's everlasting word, that his profiting may appear profitable to all, that he may be enabled to "feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind," (1 Peter 5: 2)—a willing mind supplied from the great store-house of God's grace that he might be more successful in winning souls to Christ, that he might be of a willing mind, ready to communicate the divine commands to a dying world and not be as one who "has need that one teach him again which be the first principles of the oracles of God." Heb. 5: 12.

Fellow laborers in the one cause, let us have an earnest desire and fervent purpose in the confirmation of the church in God's promises, and have an ardent desire for the establishment and perpetuation of the christian church, for the purity and holiness of the kingdom here on earth and be constrained to say "for Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth." Isaiah 62: 1. We are exhorted as watchmen upon the wall of Zion "never to hold our peace day nor night" to "make mention of the word and not keep silence;" hence to be faithful ministers of the word we must spend our whole lives in his services and thus obey the injunction, "Give thyself wholly to them."

In regard to the development of our qualification for the ministration of the word, the charge is to the minister that he acquaint himself with the doctrine that he may know the will of the testator and be prepared to teach "them (his auditors) to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Matt. 28: 20. Hence a vast responsibility is resting upon the watchman. He must possess that principle of constraint "or sweet violence" towards those who are his hearers that he may win souls, yet he is aware that he must "preach the word" in all its beauty and power withholding nothing that he may "show himself approved unto God." He must be firm and stand up for the truth, the rock of eternal ages, yet show forth the love of Christ by which he is constrained, to his flock that they may "count their own masters (ministers) worthy of all honor, (truth) that the name of God and his doctrine be not blasphemed." 1 Tim. 6: 1. "Take heed unto thyself and unto the doctrine," implies to regard our own bodies, that we be temperate in all things; labor, but not too hard; study, but not too much; sleep but not to become slothful; eat, but not to excess; to exercise great care for our bodies that we may live to carry out the purpose for which we were designed.

2nd. Implies "to the doctrine," that we take notice of the doctrine of Christ with care and so live, talk, and preach that we might be the means of saving precious souls. The blessings that follow the faithfulness of the ministers, first that he shall save himself; he shall be safely housed in that haven of rest far beyond all things mortal. "Nevertheless, if thou warn the wicked of his way to turn from it; if he do not turn from his way, he shall die in his iniquity, but thou hast delivered thy soul." Ez. 33: 2. A positive proof that there is saving grace to award the faithful. Another blessing that follows faithfulness is, that the hearers also shall be saved. Oh, what joy is this, that those who hear and do the will of God have the promise of eternal life! Oh! thou, Christian laborer in the one common cause, let us earnestly contend for the "faith once delivered to the saints," that we might be the means of constraining some poor soul to hear (do) what God commandeth. Let us earnestly solicit sinners to come to Christ—may we magnify our office. "If by any means I may provoke to emulation them which are my flesh, and might save some of them." Though our mingling in society be in contact with sinners, let our "meat and drink" be to do the will of God, "condescend to men of low estate," go out into the high-ways among the rich and poor and compel them to come in. To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak; I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some. 1 Cor. 9: 12. If we be the means of saving our fellow men, if we are faithful in this direction we shall be blessed, stars shall be added to our crown and greater enjoyment shall follow. "Let him know, that he which converteth the sinners from the error of his way shall save a soul from death and shall hide a multitude of sins." James 5: 20. May we then in view of the blessings that are consequent take heed to ourselves, and to the doctrine that the cause of Christ may be promulgated, sinners converted, that all may finally receive the blessings of God laid up for them from the foundation of the world.

For the Primitive Christian.
God our True Friend.

BY S. T. BOSSERMAN.

"He is faithful that has promised."—Heb. 10: 23.

Reflecting upon the unfaithfulness of man in the performance of duty, the fact that we often break our promise made to each other and those made to God, stands prominent before us, and while we are made to mourn over our inabilities and unfaithfulness toward God, we notice his faithfulness to his word which will encourage our faith in his promises that we may better rely upon him, and by associating ourselves with God, he gives us the soul-cheering promise that "He will never leave us nor forsake us," and further makes the pleasing declaration that "I will betroth thee unto me forever;" yea, I will betroth thee unto me in righteousness, and in judgment, and in loving-kindness, and in mercies. I will even betroth thee unto me in faithfulness; and thou shalt know the Lord." Hosea 2:19, 20. What a pleasing thought to the Christian, the humble follower of the Lord Jesus Christ, that we can have such an endearing association with God. May we not then feel encouraged to a more faithful performance of our Christian duties. Oh, let not the carnal reasonings of our flesh, and the contempt that may be brought upon us by wicked men, and cause us to stand and doubt when the "it is written," is presented to us by the adversary of souls, who is a liar from the beginning, and promises but never pays only when the compensation is worse than the debt.

When we fast he comes to us with an air of benevolence, "thou art hungry" eat, here is bread, why dost thou hunger? May we ever remember that the devil promises and does not pay, but lures us on to certain destruction, and that God is faithful and can perform. May we then under such trying circumstances, in the language of Christ the origin of the "it is written," say "man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." If the Christian uses the "it is written" in faith toward God it will be sufficient to repel any attack that the enemy of our souls may hurl upon us, and put to flight the foe that is seeking our destruction. Though the world and its children may prove false and untrue to God, and "concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is past," "Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure." 2 Tim. 2:19. Hitherto God has been faithful to his children, a fact to which all his followers can testify. How many dangers seen and unseen unto us has God led us through. Into many paths that were intricate to travel has he led us and delivered us, often has he turned our darkness into day and our mourning into rejoicing, and oft in the midst of our troubles like as "the eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings," so the Lord leadeth his children and helpeth them in times of trouble.

Again God is faithful and kind, that "while we were yet sinners Christ died for us", and while we were traveling in the path of disobedience, he was our true and unerring guide, and while we did not know how, or did not care for his instruction and counsel, we can with David say, "Good and upright is the Lord: therefore will he teach sinners in the way." Psalm 25:8. Doth not past experience teach us that God is true? Is he not a never-failing fountain of kindness, mercy and truth? How oft has he soothed our troubled breasts, and by the sweetest accents of divine love has allayed our fears. How faithful God has been then in the past. "The Lord hath appeared of old unto me, saying, yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love: therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee." Jer. 31:3. He has drawn us by his love and called us by his Spirit, and made us to have fellowship with the Lord Jesus Christ.

In this again has God been faithful toward us. "God is faithful, by whom ye were called unto the fellowship of his Son, Jesus Christ our Lord." 1 Cor. 1:9. During the many temptations that flesh is heir to, and that tends to destroy our love for God, he does not leave us comfortless, but assures the poor tempted Christian that he is able to give him relief in the midst of all his trials. "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that which ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it." 1 Cor. 10:13. Oh bless the God of our salvation for this promise, this solemn assurance of God's protection. Though our trials may be great, and we oft feel depressed, yet his providence for his children is such that we can be able to surmount all trials and temptations that may be cast before us while our pilgrimage lasts. God has said his word is firm as a rock, his foundation is sure and steadfast, and upon the rock of Jesus Christ his Son is the church, the pillar and ground of the truth, and is so permanent that though all the force that the enemy of souls can command, be brought against her, it shall avail nothing; though the gates of hell be opened wide, they shall not prevail against her, because it is established upon a rock. Thus we find that God is powerful, and that he is faithful, and he will perform, and in view of this, since God has been and is faithful to us, we ought to be faithful to him; faithful in our love toward him, and faithful in our duties to him, obey him in all his divine appointments, "for if we neglect so great salvation how shall we escape?"

While we recognize God as being faithful and merciful, yet we must not forget that he is also just, and that our disobedience to him cannot in justice to his divine law go unpunished. Oh then let us be faithful to him and pursue our Christian journey with greater zeal and renewed energy. Let us renew our covenant that is sealed with that blood that "speaketh better things than that of Abel," that when Jesus Christ shall appear to receive his ready bride (the church) "we may be found of him without spot and blameless."

The fact that God is faithful to us should be an encouragement to us to go on and make some progress in a divine life, knowing that he will withhold nothing that is needful from those who walk uprightly. Let us take his advice and "let our conversation be without covetousness, for he has said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." Oh what a constraint then there is compelling the humble follower of Christ to pursue his calling. May we then as the church "awake unto righteousness," put on the whole armor of God, that we may be enabled to fight the battles of our God more faithfully and with more zeal.

Friendly reader, do you realize that God is faithful toward you while yet in your sins? Do you question his mercy? Ah, no; you know that his love hath no bounds, but while he is merciful, remember that he is also just, and that sin cannot go unpunished. Oh come to Christ and flee the wrath to come for there is danger pending and the vial of his wrath will be poured out, and that perhaps soon, yea, very soon, and the door of mercy be forever closed. Oh may you also be initiated into his church, (the bride) that when the midnight cry will be made, "Behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him, that you with all the sanctified may be ready to enter into the marriage supper of the Lamb and there enjoy the faithfulness of Jesus to the fullest extent in that he has said, that he would seat his children around his table and come forth and serve them. May God grant us all this blessing. Amen.

Training up Children.

BY NOAH LONGENECKER.

Having read a number of articles on the Sunday School question, my zeal was stirred to write a few lines on the above subject. That training up the youth is a matter of vast importance, admits of no doubt in the mind of the Bible reader. The in junction of the wisest of men is, "Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it." To train up implies, "to educate: to teach; to form by instruction or practice; to bring up." There is nothing more prominent in the life of the faithful, than the training up of children. Permit us to refer to a few of the many examples left on record. God gave an exceeding great and precious promise to Abraham. And when afterwards referring to it He said, "Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do: seeing that Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation, and all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him?" Why, Lord? Ans. "For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment; that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him." Paul in speaking to Timothy, says, "from a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures." And no wonder, for the judgment and faith of his mother Eunice led her to teach her child those things. The just man Joseph, and Mary his wife, give us a bright example in the training up of the child Jesus. And why should they not? for it is written in the law, "these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shall talk of them when thou sitest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." The Psalmist says, "the Lord established a testimony in Jacob, and appointed a law in Israel, which he commanded our fathers, that they should make them known to their children: that the generation to come might know them, even the children which should be born; who should arise and declare them to their children; that they might set their hope in God, and not forget the works of God, but keep his commandments." This same law is in force now, for Paul writes to parents as follows: "Fathers, provoke not your children to wrath, but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Nurture implies, "education, instruction, food, diet." To nurture, therefore, implies, to educate; to train up. From what has been said we learn that the youth are to be educated, instructed, or trained up in the Lord. If Abraham instructed his children and household as the Lord declared he would, he must have taught considerable of a school, and as he taught them on the Sabbath as well as on other days he evidently taught, or kept Sabbath school. Some would confine this teaching to the family circle, but I cannot so understand it. I admit that we are to teach our children when we lie down,—that is, in the evening as we are about to retire,—and when we rise up,—that is, in the morning,—and thus "first seek the kingdom of God, and his righteousness,"—as well as when we sit in our house. But it does not end here. We are to do the same when we walk by the way; and by the way we walk in the way of the temple, synagogue, or house of God.

I might here notice how the good and faithful brought their children to the house of God, the "schools of the prophets," for a proper instruction, in the time of the Law and Prophets, but for fear of becoming tedious, I will pass on to the New Testament. Jesus is our great exemplar. When twelve years old we find him in the temple both hearing and asking questions. Our Sabbath school teachers and scholars are trying to observe this example. But, says the self-justifier, that was only yearly. Well then, he was brought up at Nazareth, and it was his custom to go into the synagogue on the Sabbath day. The synagogue was a place where the assembly, or school, convened to worship God, to read his word, and to be taught therefrom; and as Jesus attended this school on the Sabbath day, he attended Sabbath school. After Jesus was baptized "he went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom." The German reads, "teaching in their schools." The terms teaching and preaching, as above used, convey different things. It follows then that Jesus taught Sabbath schools, for he taught and merely preached on the Sabbath day in the schools above referred to. I know that the terms teaching and preaching are interchangeably used, but when used in connection as above, there can be no doubt as to their true meaning. I need not stop here to show that the apostles followed the steps of their Master in teaching and preaching. Jesus says, "Search the Scriptures." Luke says of the Bereans, "these were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the scriptures daily." Paul, in writing to Timothy, instructed him to "give attendance to reading." Reading the word of God in the public assembly should never be omitted by Christians. When I was a lad, an aged sister told me that when she was young the brethren and sisters would not spend their time on Lord's day, when they would visit each other, in talking of worldly matters, but would sing and pray, and then read the word of God and ask and answer questions. Although I was but a boy then, yet "I took knowledge that they had been with Jesus." What a blessing it would have been to me—and I believe to many more—had those Sunday schools not ceased. But—and I am sorry to say it—now many of the brethren and sisters condemn the Sunday schools. "Where no counsel is, the people fall; but in the multitude of counsellors there is safety." In A. D. 1857 a large multitude of brethren met and counselled on the propriety of having Sabbath schools, and they decided as follows: "Inasmuch as we are commanded to bring up our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, we know of no scripture which condemns Sabbath schools if conducted in gospel order, and if they are made the means of teaching scholars a knowledge of the scriptures." But some of our modern would be wise brethren inform us that Paul wrote the above admonition to fathers, and that when they fill the office of a Sabbath school teacher, they neglect to obey the injunction. Oh consistency! where is thy jewel? Suppose a father would send his children to a common every day school and aid the school with his means and ability to educate his children, would he not, as a father educate his children? Jesus says, "suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not." Paul says, "Let us consider one another, to provoke unto love, and to good works, not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is." Where two or three meet together in the name of Jesus, there Jesus will be; and if we teach that fathers should not take their children and assemble together in the house of God, to aid with their means and abilities to instruct their children in the way of the Lord, we forbid the children to come unto Jesus, and forbid the assembling of ourselves together. It is astonishing how the enemies of the Sunday schools gather up the abuses thereof and hurl them against the institution itself. The same rule, when applied, would undermine the family civil and church institutions. These institutions have all been abused by almost countless evils that have crept therein, and have been even tolerated there to a great extent. While I contend that the Sunday school is one of the means necessary to a proper training of the youth, I do not believe it to be the only one. Training up children commence before they are born into this world. The spirit and passions that possess their parents before their children are born are inherited by the children. Were it not so, how could we account for the vast difference in the children of the same family, although they receive the same training after their birth? The word of God is true, and it declared, "train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." How careful should we always live then! "Children are a heritage of the Lord." He has committed them to our trust. We are their keepers. But God will one day require them at our hands; yea, with usury. Why is it that some professors attend the Sunday school and yet take no active part in it? Why is it that some remain outside the house until school is closed, and preaching commences? Why do some never come near it? And above all, why do some so strenuously oppose it as being of modern origin, and yet pronounce it "the mother of harlots?" Oh consistency! where is thy jewel? I hope that when the hour of reckoning shall come, it can be said of such, they have done it ignorantly. "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man." As wise men, may we all hear and obey when the Lord says, "TEACH THEM DILIGENTLY TO THY CHILDREN."

A Sabbath-day in Philadelphia and Germantown.

Sabbath morning, Nov 5th, finds ourselves (my wife and I) at the St. Charles Hotel, on 3d street in the city of "Brotherly Love."

Desiring to attend services at the Brethren's Church we consulted the city Directory and learned that the church was on "Marshall above Poplar." Took the 3rd and 4th street cars north to Poplar west on Poplar to Marshall, &c. When we arrived at the church we found that the Sabbath school had been in session some time and that we had missed a part of what we desired to enjoy. Being late we did not see enough of the school to enable us to give an outline of the exercises.

Brother J. S. Thomas is the superintendent. The teachers are members of our church, and the scholars are Brethren's children and others who can be induced to attend the school. The Superintendent urgently solicited all the school to go out as missionaries for Jesus that God's house might be filled with seekers for his Kingdom, and if any were found who could not attend the school on account of a scarcity of clothing they would be provided for. Three hymns were sung and the music was led by a sister; it was good.

The Sabbath school meets in the basement; the audience room is above. The preaching service commenced soon after the close of the school. A brother from the West preached from these words, "For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers; but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil."—1st Peter 3: 12. The speaker spoke so rapidly that many of his words we could not understand. A brother Price from Ohio closed the services with a very appropriate and earnest prayer.

In the afternoon we took the steam cars for Germantown. On our arrival there we started in search of the Brethren's meeting-house in this city. The Directory had informed us that the church was on Main Avenue, Sharpnack. We soon found Main street but got very tired ascending the upward grade before we came to the church. Seeing no one in the grounds we asked a policeman if it would be an intrusion for us to enter the enclosure. A Brother who lives but a few steps from the church, and has the care of the church and grounds, seeing us, came near and bid us welcome. We were invited into the church and spent a few minutes very pleasantly conversing with our brother about the past and present of the old church. The church was built one hundred and thirty-one years ago, thirty-one years before the declaration of Independence was made. The repairs that were made upon it lately has, no doubt, greatly changed its appearance. The rostrum and isles are nicely carpeted. The seats are comfortable and the whole house presents a neat, tidy and comfortable appearance. Our kind brother led the way into the cemetery and pointed to a number of slabs that mark the resting-place of many who had proclaimed the glad tidings of salvation in the old church in the by-gone years. Among them we read the names of Alexander Mack and his companion. From the cemetery we went to Mr. Price's in search of brother Meyers, who is now the herald of salvation in the old church.

Mr. Price is not a member of the church but was a brother in courtesy and kindness to us. Mrs. Price is a sister in the Lord, also her aged and afflicted mother is a member of the kingdom of Christ. Her warm hand and resigned countenance says plainly, 'I have fought a good fight, I have almost finished my course, and there is a crown of life laid up for me.'

We called at the houses of two sisters after leaving the home of Mr. Price. The parlor of one of these houses looked very dazzling to us hoosiers, and our reception appeared very cold and formal. Now it may be that dazzling parlors do not produce kind hearts and warm hands; if so why look for them there? Hal to return to the city without seeing brother Meyers.

In the evening again attended the Brethren's church and heard a sermon from the brother who closed the morning services. Brother J. P. Hetric is the servant here who proclaims the Word of Life. He was in the country at the time of our visit preaching Christ.

When we remember that we have had an organized society of Brethren here for perhaps a century and a half, and that now the two churches number less than one hundred and fifty members in a population of eight or nine hundred thousand souls, we are made to ask why is our number here so very small. Why, ah, why? May God help the church there, here and elsewhere to answer this question and apply the remedy. S. M. MINKNER.

We are touching our fellow beings on both sides. They are affected for good or for evil by what we are, by what we say and do, even by what we think and feel. May flowers in the parlor breathe fragrance through the atmosphere. We are each of us as silently saturating the atmosphere about us with the subtle aroma of a character. In the family circle, in daily life of each parent and child mysteriously modifies the life of every person in the household. The same process on a wider scale is going on through the community. No man liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself. Others are built up and strengthened by our unconscious deeds, or may be wrenched out of their equilibrium and thrown down by our unconscious influence.

To an Invalid Sister.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

The world is a Bethesda—a physical and moral lazaretto. Sin comes out of free moral agency. A bad man comes out of sin, and then follow suffering, sick beds, coffins and sepulchres. But where there is a "tree of the knowledge of good and evil" there is also "The Tree of Life," where there is an Apollyon there is also a Restorer. Wherever the Red Dragon sets his fiery hoof, the Victor of Calvary plants the Cross. The devil gives pain, woe, shroud, death and corruption; while Emmanuel gives joy, peace, a stainless robe of holiness, eternal life and beauty.

You are enfeebled. The silver chard is untwisting, the golden bowl is breaking, and the mystic pitcher is crumbling. The pallor on your cheek, the lustreless eye, the attenuated form, are the begrimed finger-marks of the Arch-enemy of God's Throne. And yet, they are no less marks of God's righteousness and love. God is neither ignorant nor somnolent. There is in his nature essentially, a provision against sin. His deepest reason for the reproduction of his image hides eternally in himself. We know not why he created, but to some extent we know how. Responsible being must have sovereignty. A forced obedience is not fealty. An unchosen evil is not sin. Transgression without death admits of no remedy. Death must destroy death. God is wise, therefore sin is permitted, or rather its possibility. God is good, therefore sin must help to cure sin. The pain that sin begets is a gracious monitor as to its nature and consequence. The fruit of sin is designed as to the seed of a better life. Not of itself, not in the case of fallen angels, but in the arrangement of grace. Grace is not for devils, because they are constitutionally incapable of receiving it. Where death cannot supervene and blood be shed, redemption by substitution is impossible. "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift." "Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." The "gift" is only an aggravation of guilt and misery without the "victory." Where there is no gift there can be no victory. This is for our race only. This covers all sin, in its nature and results, without prescribed limits. God under the extreme penalty of law, turns all the merits of sin into means of grace. Your bed lies between your sin and the atonement. A "bed in hell" is another side of the sphere of redemption. Psalm 139: 8.

You have the sympathy of Jesus in all your afflictions as truly and much more deeply than that of your affectionate brothers and sisters. He bore the worst that we can do, not as a dilemma, but of the overpowering constraint of His loving Love. This sweetens life's bitterest cup. This turns March into March. This brims the chalice of wormwood with the nectar of Deity. The world has a hosanna for every fiery furnace, a psalm for every valley of Achor, and a heaven-scented palm-branch for every death-struggle. Only believe. This does with all that is contained in the overtures of the Eternal Thee. To believe is to hear "the sentence of death in ourselves," to "die daily," to live only "because he lives." You need not be gloomy and miserable, even in your sick chamber. The most glorious thing that can befall you is death. Be not terrified by the grisly invader. His lance is broken and his sting extracted. Look the ghastly, eyeless ghoul fair in the face, and you will see Jesus smiling out of the gaping orbites. "Be of good cheer; it is I." The love that died for the enemy, will not desert the friend." If you keep hold only of his little finger, you have the whole Christ. Hang out your "scarlet thread," and the celestial spies will find your window. Read Christ's love-letter often, and be much in prayer. When the table seems empty, hunt for a crumb on the floor. Faith gets water out of the rock, out of the jaw-bone of a dead ass, and out-digs all the Philistines of unbelief. Gen. 26: 15, 18. May the Holy Ghost put into your mouth the song of Psalms 103: 1-5.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

On Marriage.

BY JAMES SKELLEY.

I notice an article on Rom. 7: 2, 3, in Vol. 1, No. 38, of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, purporting to be the sentiments of A. H. Baltimore, "On Marriage." The question very naturally arises, "Who was Paul addressing in the letter? Believers or worldlings? Believers of course, for in first verse he says, "Know ye not brethren." It was the believing brethren at Rome, and no others. Worldlings were not taken into the number and cannot come under the rule, as given by the apostle to the church for the government of the brethren only. Christ says, "My kingdom is not of this world, else would my servants fight." Here we find that Christ recognizes two distinct kingdoms,—the kingdom of the world, and the kingdom of Christ. Now each kingdom has its subjects, its laws, and its law-giver or maker. Now Christ does not expect a worldling to be subject, or to obey his laws or commands, for he declares that the carnal mind is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. Can you expect a worldling or an unregenerated person to conform to the gospel rule as given by the apostle for the government of regenerated believers, when Christ does not.

Now the world is not in the kingdom of Christ; but the kingdom of Christ is in the world. So the worldling is under no obligation to have his marriage christianized; but the Christian is bound to have his legalized, lest the law might take hold of him. Now I deny that a worldling can commit adultery whilst in the world, so as to be called an adulteress or adulterer by the church. The worst thing that a worldling can be guilty of is sin and uncleanness, and uncleanness is sin. So sin embraces everything that a worldling can be guilty of. Hence who has a right to question his former acts (when he comes to the church for admition) by asking him how often have you been married, or how often divorced? For if there has been a marriage and a divorce, they were only legal arrangements, and are only sin at the most, therefore can be buried with the body of sin of which they form a part.

Now if all former sins are buried in the watery grave of baptism, who has a right to resurrect them? No one, for the baptized penitent begins a new life. To him old things have passed away and all things have become new—for the body of sin has been destroyed. He is now dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God, and is one of those very persons whom Paul addresses when he says, "Art thou bound to a wife, seek not to be loosed; art thou loosed from a wife, seek not a wife. But, and if thou marry thou hast not sinned, and if a virgin marry she hath not sinned. Nevertheless such shall have trouble in the flesh." Trouble is all the penalty that the apostle speaks of, and it is a necessary consequence in married life. No Brethren when the body of sin is dead and buried let it remain there, for he that is dead is freed from sin.

Admonition to Plainness.

BY DANIEL W. WAGNER.

Dear brethren, when I look over this wicked world and see so much vanity and extravagance, so many uselessly and unnecessary articles of apparel hung upon the human frame, simply for the lust of the eye and the pride of life. I am made to weep for their sins, I feel to pity those who have been blindly led through dishonesty. I desire that they search the scriptures for themselves and there find how to conduct themselves and what to do. Brethren, these with other evils are growing in the church, even some of our ministers are very fine, and are dressed in fashion with the world. This is encouraging pride and folly as the way shepherd leadeth, the flock will usually follow, now these things should not be so, for it can not be pleasing in the sight of God. Pride and fashion are highly esteemed among men and we read that whatsoever is highly esteemed among men is an abomination in the sight of God. Therefore brethren, and sisters too; let us put away, and keep away this evil for we see that in many ways it is ruining the human family. I beseech you young brethren and sisters with myself, let us all try to be more humble in all our ways that others seeing our good works may glorify our Father who is in heaven. All of us at the time we were received into the church, promised to renounce the sinful pleasures of this world and comply to the order of the church and live according to the laws of the New Testament. These are promises which if we regard or neglect will stand against us and by neglecting these promises, we are but deceiving ourselves. I long to see the time as it once was that we can know each other by our appearance. May the Lord bless us all.

"THE URIM AND THUMMIM."

Assuming the character attributed to God in the Bible to be his true character, we would infer that he is by no means indifferent either to the conduct or welfare of his creatures. He is represented as the Father and sovereign of the human family. He is also represented as the judge of the earth. And Abraham asks the suggestive question, "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" Gen. 18: 25. But while his tender mercies are over all his works, and while his nature is love itself, he holds his intelligent creatures accountable for their conduct, and their conduct is to be governed by his will. And when it is in harmony with his will, there is no sin or wrong, and no condemnation. But when it is in violation of his will there are both.

And as the will of God in all cases is the rule of right, and is to govern us, he has in all his dispensations and dealings with man, made his will and mind known as far as it was necessary for us to know them that we may know what is right, and what he would have us to do. But his methods of revealing his will have been various. "In a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon men, in slumberings upon the bed; then he openeth the ears of men, and sealeth instruction." Job 33: 15, 16. The great object of all God's revelations to man is to seal instruction as declared in the foregoing language, whatever the methods are by which his revelations to man are communicated. Among the methods used by the Lord for making known his will, is that of the Urim and Thummim. This method is somewhat mysterious, but interesting. These names first occur in Ex. 28: 30, and they are thus introduced: "And thou shalt put in the breastplate of judgment the Urim and the Thummim; and they shall be upon Aaron's heart, when he goeth in before the Lord; and Aaron shall bear the judgment of the children of Israel upon his heart before the Lord continually." This way the Urim and Thummim are introduced and spoken of, indicates that this was not the origin of them, but that they were something with which the Jews were familiar. The meaning of the words Urim and Thummim is light and truth, or light and perfection. What these were, whether they were different from the precious stones in the breastplate of the High Priest, or whether they were merely the result of these stones, or formed by them, does not seem clear. The probability however is that they were different from the twelve stones. We find various conjectures given by Biblical critics and Hebrew scholars in regard to what the Urim and Thummim were, but nothing very satisfactory, because the Scripture gives us no explanation. And even Josephus has but little to help us to understand the subject. It is evident however that this was a singular piece of divine workmanship, which the Lord directed to be worn by the High Priest upon solemn occasions as a means by which he obtained a knowledge of the will of God for the people. For whatever mystery may exist in regard to what the Urim and Thummim were, the design of them is plainly to be learned from the Scripture.

Though God had condescended to give unto the Jews the Law, wherein was contained the manner in which he was to be worshipped, or the law of worship, and all so the law that was to govern them in all the relations in which they stood to one another and to all men, nevertheless, emergencies would occur, and occasions would arise of a peculiar and special character, when divine direction was desirable and indeed necessary, to enable them to pursue the course which would best promote their own prosperity and well-being, and the glory of God. To meet this great want of the people, and to furnish them with a medium through which they could obtain an expression of the divine will when this was desirable or necessary, the Urim and Thummim were instituted, and through these God communicated a knowledge of his will to his people when this was necessary.

This oracle or means of communication from God was of great use to the Jews. When Moses before his death appointed Joshua to succeed him, he was directed by the Lord to put some of his honor upon Joshua. And as Moses had been honored greatly by the Lord in being admitted to converse freely with him, the honor which Moses was to give to Joshua seems to have consisted, in part at least, in the communication he was to hold with God through the Urim, as it is said, in reference to Joshua, "and he shall stand before Eleazar the priest, who shall ask counsel for him after the judgment of Urim before the Lord," Num. 27: 21. Here Joshua was promised the advantages of the Urim, in discharging the duties that devolved upon him.

Moses in blessing the tribes of Israel before his death when he came to Levi, said, "Let thy Thummim and thy Urim be with thy holy one, whom thou didst prove at Massah, and with whom thou didst strive at the waters of Meribah." Deut. 33: 8. Levi is here called the "holy one," because of the holy order of the priesthood which was of this tribe; And his prayer was that the Urim and Thummim, the special means of divine communication might remain with the priesthood, that they who would represent it, and perform the solemn work imposed upon them, might be qualified to do it effectually; especially the work of teaching, and hence the language of the prayer, "they shall teach Jacob thy judgments, and Israel thy law."

There is a diversity of opinion in regard to the manner in which the Lord answered by the Urim and Thummim as well as in regard to what they really were. When the mind of the Lord was sought by this curious and remarkable method, the high priest put on his robes, and presented himself before the Lord in the holy place. Then turning his face toward the ark of the covenant, where the divine presence was manifested, he presented the subject upon which an expression of the will of God was desired, and an answer was received. The manner in which the Lord answered is not given us; though it would be a satisfaction to know. Some have thought that the Lord answered in an audible voice; others that the stones in the breastplate of the high priest assumed an appearance indicative of the answer, which the high priest understood; while another idea is, that the question was put in a way that a simple answer yes or no, was sufficient to give the information desired.

This remarkable and interesting manner of divine communication with men, ceased when the Jewish nation departed from the ways of the Lord. When it showed a disregard to the will of the Lord, he no longer, through the medium of the Urim and Thummim, held intercourse with it. So it was with the unfortunate Saul, the king of Israel. After his unfaithfulness caused God to forsake him, and when he was in great trouble, he sought the Lord, but it is said, "when Saul inquired of the Lord, the Lord answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets," 1 Sam. 28: 6. Thus does God eventually withhold his blessing when abused, and cease to speak, when his word is disregarded.

We have already given the meaning of the words Urim and Thummim, as light and truth or light and perfection. This meaning is very suggestive. God himself is light and in him there is no darkness at all, 1 John 1: 5. But we are often in darkness and ignorance concerning the way in which we should go. It is true, as the Jews had the law to teach them their general duties, so we have the Gospel to teach us. And herein is wisdom to make us "wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." But in addition to the written law, the Jews had the Urim and Thummim, the further means of communicating light and truth, when these were needed. So we have all that was symbolized in the expressive symbol of the Urim and Thummim. These were connected with the dress of the Jewish High Priest. But the High Priest of our profession is Jesus the Savior. And he has in him and in his heavenly and complete character, all that was symbolized by the High Priest under the law, not excepting the Urim and Thummim. He is the "true light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world," John 1: 9, and "he that followeth him shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life," John 8: 12. "Ye have an unction," says John, "from the Holy One, and ye know all things," 1 John 2: 20. It was an interesting sight to see the high priest with his robes upon him, and with the Urim and Thummim upon his breast, communicating with God, and receiving answers from him. And it is a precious thought to indulge in, that all believers are priests, and that they all can go into the presence of God and plead with him as a man pleads for his neighbor. "If any of you lack wisdom," says the apostle James in addressing believers, "let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." James 1: 5. "This honor have all the saints." Ps. 149: 9.

THE FORCE IN THE VINE.

Christ said: "Herein is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit." What kind of fruit? The fruit of the Spirit. And what is the nature of this fruit? Paul, in writing to the Galatians, says it is "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith meekness, temperance." But how are we to bring forth fruit like this? Our depravities have dwarfed and maimed us, and is it possible for us to bring forth fruit? Is it possible for us to realize it? Not in our ostrangement from Christ, the vine. As long as we are away from Christ we are as dry and searless as the straw in a stubble field. But we can be engrafted into Christ, the true vine, and then we partake of the character of that vine. In him is life, and if we are properly engrafted into him, we will partake of that life, and it will be the light of men.

But when we are grafted into Christ our fruitfulness depends upon two things, first, the quantity of life or force in the vine; and second, the state of the faith or channel through which this life has access to the soul. This channel may be wide, yet obstructed by many things; it may be narrow and clogged by worldliness. We sometimes pipe water from springs to our houses, but we cannot be supplied with water, no matter how large the pipe is, if it is clogged with rubbish. So if we are engrafted into Christ we must not allow the source through which we receive life to be closed. This is the reason there is so little Christian vitality. Men and women are engrafted into Christ, and at first are lively, active workers, but after awhile they become weak and sickly. Why is it? The avenue through which they receive life from Christ, the vine, is clogged by the things of this world and the deceitfulness of riches.

Again, we have a grape vine of large dimensions and great fruitfulness. But a severe winter comes and it is killed to the ground. We then sever it from the stalk and cast it away. In the spring, however, three or four branches will come forth from the stump and grow with great rapidity. The next spring not only do other branches appear, but these three or four bear rich clusters of grapes. Now what is the secret of this fruitful affluence? Is it not in the amount of life or force stored in those roots and the stalk that had lost its former branches? There in the ground those roots extended far and wide in every direction, sucking in the rich juices of the earth, forcing sap, and passing it up through the stem into the branches, swelling the buds until they burst into clusters of grapes. Before it was killed the same quantity of sap was distributed through all the branches; now it is concentrated in the few branches.

In Christ is concentrated all the life of the God-head. He died, but he came forth again, and in him was garnered the life in all its fullness, so that if we are now, by regeneration, united to Christ we may all receive of his "fullness," and may bear much fruit.

Reader, are you in the vine, Christ? If not, you cannot bear fruit. You are dead. There is not a spark of life in you, Jesus is the source of life and as long as you are not connected to him by the process of regeneration, instead of fruit, you will bring forth briars and thorns. Those that have been engrafted into Christ should see that they abide in Christ. Jesus says, "Abide in me. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine, no more can ye, except ye abide in me. If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered." Then what is the result? They are gathered, cast into the fire and burned.

MINUTES OF ANNUAL MEETING IN BOOK FORM.

We have a supply of the Minutes of the Annual Meeting collected and bound in book form. The work contains 427 pages, is printed on good paper, and type sufficiently large to make the reading of it easy for the eyes. It contains all the Minutes of the Annual Meetings that could be obtained, from 1778 to 1876, and has a pretty full index by which the subjects can generally be readily found. The work seems to be giving very good satisfaction as far as we have heard. It is for sale at the office of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. Price $1.50 when sold at this office or sent by express. When it is sent by mail, the price is $1.60. Orders are solicited.

ALMANACS.

We are getting a large number of Almanacs printed, and think we shall have enough to supply all who may want them. We have them promised to us by the first of December, and will fill our orders as soon as we possibly can. We hoped to get them ready somewhat earlier, but failed to do so. We will, however, have them ready by the time that they shall be needed, and we hope that every family in the brotherhood will obtain one.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

See in another column the new advertisement of J. S. Flory. A reduction in price of Buffalo robes.

BROTHER R. A. Zook, now visiting in the west, will please give us his address, as we wish to correspond with him.

The advertisement referred to above came a little too late to take the place of the old one. We direct the attention of our readers to the one on the inside of this week's issue.

SOME person from Brinley's Station, Ohio, sends 55 cents for Report of Annual Meeting and Almanacs, but does not give the name. If this comes to the notice of the person, please send us your name and your order will be attended to.

Last week we had to send out some papers that were scarcely readable. It was the first issue printed on the P. C. press after it was set up, and it always requires some time to get things in good working order. Our patrons will please excuse. We hope to do good work shortly.

WE had the pleasure of a call from Elders William How, of Lewis' town congregation, and Solomon Sieber, of Lost Creek, Pa. They formed part of the committee chosen to locate Annual Meeting for 1877. They inform us that the Yellow Creek Church, Bedford county, Pa., will be the place. A report of the proceedings will be given.

THE YOUNG DISCIPLE for December will be delayed a week or more. It will, however, be on hands laden with good things for our young readers. We hope our agents and friends in soliciting subscribers for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN will not forget the DISCIPLE. Sister Clerk is much interested in her work, and will labor to make it just such a paper as we need.

From the Harper's Weekly we have the following: Among the sensations of the day, is the successful ascent of Mt. Ararat by an Englishman—Mr. Bryce, of Lincoln's Inn, London. The mountain is 17,212 feet high, and in making the last 4,000 feet Mr. Bryce had to go alone. The Armenians of the region about Ararat consider the mountain inaccessible, and believe that Noah's ark is still to be found on the summit.

The other day in the High School in Woonsocket, R. I., the Principal made an attempt to punish one of his scholars, when he drew a revolver and pointing it at the teacher's head, threatened to shoot him if he persisted in his attempts to punish him. The practice of carrying pocket fire-arms, so common in our country, is a very bad one, and it very likely to grow as boys will imitate men in this habit, as they do in the use of tobacco and intoxicating liquors. Men should appreciate the power of their example upon the young, and guard against setting a bad example, as they will be very likely to be imitated by the young.

We regret that in our issue of November 7th, there are two articles, "Thou art the Man," and "Sky Rockets," which are not properly credited. They were written for The Christian by its editor, H. L. Hastings, and should have been credited to that paper, which usually contains much excellent practical Christian reading. The selections were not made by us, and we presume the oversight in not giving due credit to the articles was occasioned by the state of things consequent upon the removal of our office. The selections were perhaps made in haste. We very willingly make the amende honorable.

A RECENT census of the city of Calcutta gives some interesting facts in relation to the religion professed by the population. The number of native Christians 2,636, against 2,466 in 1872. The total population is 409,036. Two-thirds of the whole are Hindoos, and of the Hindoos the Brahmas are the most numerous caste. As to intelligence, the Hindoos are far in advance of the Mohammedans. Of the Hindoo males 42 per cent. can read and write; of the Mohammedan males, only 16.5 per cent. Of the Hindoo females 35 per cent. can read and write; of the Mohammedan, only 1 per cent.

The Eldership or Conference of the Church of God, or Winebrennarians, in West Ohio, passed the following resolutions in regard to educational facilities within said Eldership:

Resolved, That in the estimation of the committee the church should take immediate measures to procure means wherewith either to build a school at some favorable place, or else to purchase one already built which could be procured on reasonable terms.

Resolved, That we further believe that in no other way can we so effectually build up the church and retain the children of our brotherhood than by establishing an educational institution to be owned and controlled by the church, where our young men and women seeking an education can obtain the same and still be under proper religious influence.

The following resolution relating to Secret Societies was before the Indiana Eldership of the same denomination, and was lost.

"Whereas Freemasonry seems to be causing so much dissatisfaction in the church; and inasmuch as some of the brethren look upon it as being a great evil, and seems to be the means of a fence; therefore,

Resolved, That the Indiana Eldership of the Church of God have no fellowship with any person or persons belonging to any secret society."

We are sorry that this resolution was lost, as it indicates that the Indiana Eldership is in favor of secret societies.

Cleanings and Jottings.

Brother J. S. Flory, of Colorado, October 24th, says:

"Have just returned from our regular appointment with the brethren in Boulder county. Had three meetings. Two more additions by baptism, and more are almost persuaded to be Christians.

"Weather continues most delightful, fine and pleasant. The news of the consolidation is "good news," as we have every reason to believe we shall have a live paper more fully up to the demands of the church, and the combined talent will exert a combined influence for good, and all things will work together for the better. So may it be."

—Bro. E. R. Fritz, says:—Time and tide waits on no one. As the seasons are continually coming and going, so are we ascending and descending the hill of life. It is a railroad. The morning train takes the infants, the noon train takes the youth or the middle aged, and the evening train the aged. So we are one and all hastening on to eternity as fast as the wheels of time move us on. The members of this church have lately fitted up their church house by seating and painting it. The church is still growing. Since the New Year begun there have been ten faithful soldiers enlisted under the blood-stained banner of Emanuel. The church number is forty-five. It has two ministers and three deacons. They are carrying a good work begun in the Sabbath school.

—Brother Joseph Rittenhouse, of Chatham, Ohio, Nov. 19, says: Please say to the readers of your paper that I was with a sorrowful heart that I left the Eastern shores of Md., and came back to Ohio to live. During the latter part of July my wife and I were both taken sick with bilious fever and with me it turned into typhoid fever. I laid very low for some time. My wife was home sick and would not be persuaded to stay there, but would go back to Ohio to live with our daughter. I still feel to recommend that country to any who had contemplated going there. Don't be discouraged because I came away as I would much rather live there than in Ohio. I never enjoyed better health than I did while there before I was taken with the fever. I feel to say to the brethren, don't be discouraged, but go there and help plant the church on the Eastern shore of Md. There are a few brethren and sisters there and they need a preacher. Who is willing to go?

CAMPBELL, JONIA CO., MICH., }
October 22nd, 1876. }

Dear Bro. Quinter:—

It may be of interest to some to hear from this church, Thornapple, the farthest north in this state. Cold as it is in winter, we are not froze out, either temporally or spiritually. According to previous appointments and arrangements. Our communion meeting came off pleasantly, in good order, with the members at least, and the order generally was good, considering the crowded house. There seemed to be much love among the communicants. The speakers from other districts present were brethren, J. Smith, Frifogle Flory, J. N. Miller, M. T. Baer, and J. Miller. The word spoken was listened to seemingly, with much interest. One was received by baptism. He made his vows faithfully before God and a number of witnesses to live faithful unto death. God bless you Bro.; live faithful till the crown is won. We have received eight by baptism since last year, reclaimed three and received a letter four, so you see the ark is moving on slowly in this part of God's heritage.

On Friday the 15th brother Geo. and myself started on a mission to VanBuren county, where we had a communion meeting at the residence of brother Maalon. The meeting was small, the weather being very inclement,—rain in the evening so that the people did not turn out, nevertheless we had a little meeting. On Saturday a member meeting. Brother D. Miller was promoted to the second degree in the ministry, and brother Lower restored to his (deacon) office. May God's blessings rest on you that you may be faithful in your high calling is my prayer. Here also we had the happy privilege to lead one precious soul into the flowing stream, to be baptized according to directions given in Matt. 28: 19. Brother live faithful in the vocation wherewith you are called. The crown is promised at the end of the race. We had five meetings at different places and the attendance generally was good. On Monday the 17th, early we started for the train to go to Grand Rapids, where we arrived at about 7 o'clock. Had to lay over till 11: 15, which time we spent in viewing the busy city. Grand Rapids is a place of about 32,000 inhabitants and the great business center of western Michigan, in point of water power and manufacturing establishments. It is second to none in the State. This is the place where the $3,000 and $6,000 bedsteads were constructed for the Centennial Exposition,—more costly I presume than "Oggs" which was made of iron. Deut. 3: 11.

Started at Grand Rapids at 11: 15 for Lowell, where brother Long got off, his team awaiting his arrival. I went on to Saranac; arrived home safely. Thanks to the giver of all good, who so kindly protected me through dangers seen and unseen.

CEDAR GROVE, TENN. }
October 30th, 1876. }

Brethren Editors:—

As our lovefeasts are among the things of the past, I thought I would give some account of them, as many who used to enjoy themselves with us on such occasions, are now scattered over the far west, and such an account may be interesting to them, while it may be quite dull to others, who are readers of your very worthy paper.

The lovefeasts that I was permitted, by the mercies of God, to attend, all commenced on Saturday and continued over Sunday, except one which commenced on Friday evening. Ours at Cedar Grove commenced at 3 o'clock Saturday Oct. 7th, and when the hour for preaching came our house was full. Bro. J. Brubaker preached for us, and he improved the time well. Bro. P. Beckner exhorted us to duty. Brother T. Berry was also present. These were all the ministering brethren from adjoining churches that were with us. The crowd being very large, before examination, the tables and all were moved into the yard. The 11th chapter of Cor. was read, and some very good remarks made from the same. Good order prevailed, until after dark, when some who did not come for the good of the meeting, were on the outskirts of the large crowd, making noise by talking, &c. Whiskey was the principal cause. O, what an evil! But amid the outside noise there were many who appeared very much interested, and we really had a good time while holding sweet communion with our Lord. On Sunday morning at ten o'clock there were about fifteen hundred people present. Brethren Brubaker and Davy Derrick preached to us. Brother Brubaker is not a classical scholar, but he is learning in the school of Christ. Meeting continued until Monday evening. We feel that we had a good meeting.

On Saturday at 10 o'clock A. M., we met with the Brethren at the White Horn church, Hawkins Co.

Here the Brethren have a large and commodious house. Brother F. W. Dove of Cherokee church preached. He ably defended the cause of our Master. Here there was a very good turnout of brethren and sisters. We were made glad to see the presence of the Lord with us. One soul was made willing to walk in newness of life. At night we had a feast together, that will long be remembered by us. Sabbath had been appointed as the time to preach brother Abraham Beckner's funeral discourse, and early the house was crowded. Brother Davy Derrick and I preached the funeral sermon of our much esteemed brother, who died the 20th of March last, from a hurt he received while fixing some part of his mill. He was a good brother and much beloved. The church has lost a good servant, the wife a good husband, the children a good parent, the neighbors a good friend, but he has gained a home in heaven. Here, in the evening, brother Dove spoke again, and we think that the cause of our Master lost nothing. One on Sabbath was reclaimed.

Our next was at Meadow Branch, Granger Co. on the following Saturday. Here meeting commenced at 10 o'clock A. M. Here there is no brother in the ministry. There were several, but they have moved West. This church is in a flourishing condition. The brethren from White Horn and from our place keep up regular meetings, and at the lovefeast we met, and we had a sweet communion one with another.

The next one I attended was the Oakland church, Blount Co. Here brother Sharp is the elder. Meeting commenced on Friday night. We were not in time for meeting. Early on Saturday morning, (Sept. 30th) brother Sharp conveyed us with part of the family, to their meeting house, some six miles from Maryville, brother Sharp's home. It was time for service to commence. Brother Collins from Jefferson Co. in the mean time had arrived. After services two souls were immersed in the name of the Holy Trinity. In the evening we met again, and brother Collins preached, after which the subject of examination was treated. Then the ordinances of the house of the Lord were attended to. Here the brethren practice the single mode of feet-washing, and for our part we have to say we were much pleased to see the quietness that existed while feet-washing was going on, for with us often we are perplexed with the pushing and crowding around by the members. All else the same as we all have it with the exception that the supper was cold and they had no soup. But we had a good supper, a full meal, a lovefeast altogether. Now some of us are prejudiced against these things, but let us have that "fervent charity that beareth all things, hopeth all things," that we may bear with one another, and I hope that we soon will lay down all of our notions and opinions. The Brethren in Blount Co. contend for feet-washing just the same as we do, and also for the supper, and if these or any other Brethren would say, let us not observe these things, I as one, in my feeble way, would not cease to cry against them. I can say we enjoyed ourself very well at the Oakland church lovefeast. Meeting Sabbath forenoon and also at night. We with the other brethren labored best we could for the cause of our Master. To him be all the praise, glory, and honor given.

Your brother,

ABRAM MOLSBBEE.

P. S. I attended one more lovefeast, but I wish to give an account of it in my next.

A. M.

NEW GERMANTOWN, PA. }
November 9th, 1876 }

Dear Editors:—

The brethren of the Perry church, Perry Co., Pa., according to announcement, held their lovefeast the 1st and 2nd of November, in their new meeting house. The day was very favorable for the season of the year. The forenoon and afternoon services were attended by a respectable and attentive congregation. In the evening the audience was very large and gave good attention.

The ministering brethren were D. F. Good from Franklin Co., J. K. Lane from Huntingdon Co., and C. Myers from Juniata Co. They discharged the duty of their office in demonstration and power of the spirit. They dealt out the word faithfully to saint and sinner. Bro. D. F. Good remained with us till Monday the 6th. He preached telling sermons every evening and on Sunday to attentive congregations, though in the heat of a political campaign, with political meetings day and evening in the surrounding towns. Some of our neighbors remarked to us that if there was more such plain practical preaching done generally, the world would be benefited.

Our little church here was much edified. No doubt some have been awakened to search whether these things are so. One sister was added during the meeting. Being afflicted she was not able to attend meeting. By her request a few brethren and sisters met at her home, where she was received by baptism into the church. As far as we know the church is in usual health naturally and spiritually.

ISAAC BEY.

SCALPLEVEL, PA. }
Nov. 13th, 1876. }

Editors of Primitive Christian:—

I will give you a little news from the Shade Creek church. According to former arrangements Bro. S. H. Bashor came to us and commenced a meeting on the 28th of October. He preached from that time on, each day, until the evening of Nov. 9th when he delivered his farewell sermon, which caused many tears to be shed by the congregation. In all, he preached twenty-one sermons with such power that sinners were made to tremble and cry out, "what shall I do to be saved?" During the meeting, thirty-two were made willing to follow Jesus into the water and rise again to walk in newness of life. Several other churches have changed from creeds to the Bible platform, and are now with us on the foundation of the apostles, and prophets, Christ being the chief corner stone. Many others were made to say they were ready if their companions would go with them. We pray God that they may not have rest until they are numbered with God's people.

HIRAM MUSSELMAN.

Scalplevel, Pa.

ROANN, WABASH CO., IND. }
November 1st, 1876. }

Brethren Editors:—

As church news is always interesting, I will give you a little from this part of God's moral vineyard. There has not been much news of importance from this congregation until recently.

We had our communion meeting on the 28th of September, had a general turnout and we hope that many went away refreshed with the manna from on high. Also some very good impressions were made. Two weeks ago the Brethren met on the river bank where prayer was want to be made, and nine followed the example of Philip and the Eunuch, and went down into the water to rise to walk in newness of life. Others we think are counting the cost.

Let us not be discouraged but ever press onward and upward toward the mark of the high calling as it is in Christ Jesus. What a pleasant thing it is to see young men and women flocking toward the kingdom of God.

What a sad sight it is to see an old man or woman, after they have sinned all along the uneven journey of life, and when they have done all for the devil they can, and served him until their span of life is nearly run, and then come to Jesus and ask him to take this old shattered broken-down frame and put one of thy sparkling crowns upon it. Don't understand me to say that such is not acceptable. "But come unto me all ye that labor and I will give you rest." Then why not come while young, that you may be the means of leading many to the cross of Christ and wear a bright crown in the city of God. Then brethren and sisters, encourage those that are young, in the cause of Christ. Many old brethren that have been contending long for the faith once delivered to the saints, must soon pass away, and then into whose hands will the church fall? Let us all labor to lay up treasures in heaven, and we will receive interest from the banker of Eternity.

DOSSEY HODGDEN.

Brother Quinter:—

We have been holding a series of meetings here in Coventry church. Bro Stephen Bashor from Missouri, has been leading among us for about ten days; his first appointment was on Saturday evening Oct. 14th, and he remained with us until the 25th, holding two evening and three day meetings. He labored faithfully and spoke the word with power as the spirit gave him utterance. Bro. J. P. Hetrick from Philadelphia was with us two evenings and assisted Bro. Bashor. We say that the seed sown will spring up in everlasting life. God grant that many and that many may come and say "must I do to be saved." Brethren, we pray for our young brother that he may be kept from the snares of sin, be a useful instrument in the hands of our God to call sinners home to God.

As a result of our meetings four young ladies have been baptized, and hope some more will follow.

J. L. EISENBERG

ELDRIGE, SEDGWICK CO., KAN. }
OCTOBER 16th., 1876. }

Dear Brother Quinter:—

I had intended to write to you for some time, but by some means neglected until the present. Brother Quinter I feel my isolation very much, I feel sometimes as though I am alone in the wilderness. I have been living here in Sedgwick Co, Kansas, for almost six years and have never heard a brother preach since living here, and have seen but one brother and sister. Not long ago I heard of a brother and sister living some twenty-five miles west of us in Reno county. I learned their names and wrote inquiring if there was any more brethren there and if they had any brethren preaching there. A few days ago they came to see us. They say there is eight members there and they are expecting some more to move there, but they have no speaker yet. The brother said he had been writing to some speakers to come and preach for them.

Dear brother, I rejoice to see that our church is taking some interest in the missionary cause, and I do pray that those brethren and sisters that are able will feel a deep sense of their duty, and lend a helping hand, to send out ministers that are able to preach the true gospel where it is not known. I have heard nothing preached for nearly six years but the faith alone doctrine, and Holy Ghost religion, and I sometimes think it is almost enough to deceive the very elect; but I do pray that the Lord will open the way that some minister will be sent here who is able and not ashamed to preach the whole word.

I expect to continue taking the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. It affords me great comfort to read its wholesome instructions and of the happy meetings of our brethren and sisters. If I cannot do with them it is a great pleasure to read from them. I would take more of our brethren's periodicals if I were able, and be in a new country and have many disadvantages to encounter so I cannot not at this time. I said I sometimes as if I was alone in the wilderness. My husband is not a member of any church, but is a believer in the doctrine of the Brethren, and I wish if we had preaching now, he would unite with the church. My oldest children are married and are members of the Methodist church. We have a goodly county here and I think if a brother would come in here he might do a great deal of good by begging an interest in the year. Your sister in the Lord, CHRISTENA IMBLER.

Home Again.

From the Editors of Primitive Christian:

Dear brethren, I was requested by different members of our beloved fraternity to give a short sketch of my late trip to the Manocacy and Middle Town Valley churches, Maryland. On the night of the 20th of October I left home to meet with the brethren in the Manocacy Branch, under D. P. Saylor's charge. I arrived at Double Pipe Creek Station on the Western Maryland Rail Road, at 4 o'clock P. M. on the 21st, was met by Bro. D. P. Saylor, who took charge of me for that night. Here I commenced my labors on the same evening in Pipe Creek. On Sunday morning the meeting opened at Rocky Ridge meeting house and continued daily until the third of November. On the fourth of November we opened the services again at Pipe Creek, and continued until Sunday evening. Preached for the brethren at Oak Hill school house on Sunday at 10 o'clock A. M. On Thursday the second of November the lovefeast came off at Rocky Ridge, commencing at 1 o'clock P. M. The attendance was very large; the membership unusually large. It was supposed to have been the largest representation of members ever known in the state. The ministerial aid was also very large, but notwithstanding the large multitude, the meeting was an unusual good one, in not only one respect, but in every respect. This church is not so large in membership, but is certainly a model one in upholding the general order of the brotherhood. I tried to labor for the general advancement of Christ's cause, and I had the pleasure of seeing that the Lord was working with us. Six precious souls took the cross upon them and vowed to follow Christ, and one reclaimed. The meetings were well attended, and good order prevailed in all our meetings. While I was much pleased with the care and attention that the members bestowed upon me while among them, I was gratified too, in the thought that they through my labors and the blessing of God, were much revived. Upon the whole, our meetings were pleasant, and the society and company of the members was to me exceedingly pleasant.

On the morning of the sixth in company with brother D. P. Saylor, we started for the Middletown Valley Branch. This branch is also under brother Saylor's charge. We arrived at this place the same day at about 3 o'clock P. M. There was to be preaching in the Grossnickle meeting house the same evening, but on account of the inclemency of the weather, the meeting was not opened until the morning of the seventh. Here we continued services every day until the evening of the fifteenth. On the ninth was the day fixed for their lovefeast. The attendance was very large and the order good. The membership was well represented. We had the assurance that the members here were much revived in the great work, while there was a general shaking among the dry bones. Here we had the pleasure of leading fourteen precious souls into the water, while others were seriously counting the cost. Here I wished I could have stayed a few days longer, but other engagements called me away. At this place I had never been before, but I must say to all my brethren and sisters and their children with whom I became acquainted, I was never treated more kindly. So much so, that I am looking forward with the hope of meeting with you again in your district, if spared. I did not mention you by name brethren and sisters, neither do I consider it prudent to do so. I know with whom I stopped, whose hospitalities I shared, and so do you, and that is sufficient; but would say to all of you, the Lord abundantly bless you for your kindness, and you with whom I did not tarry accept my thanks for your words of good cheer and comfort.

I also met with many of my co-laboring brethren with whom I had met before, and others with whom I had not met. While our meetings were pleasant, I have not forgotten any of you, neither your "GOD BLESS YOU." While I do not mention any of your names, you are nevertheless remembered by me. My labors on this trip were heavy, yet I enjoyed myself as much as on any former trip I ever made. And many a time I think, and perhaps I expressed it a few times, there is nothing that I would enjoy myself more in than in traveling and preaching for Jesus, if I had myself loose from everything that I now look upon as a hindrance to me in engaging in this kind of work. I am free to say that I always had considerable of a missionary spirit in me, but this trip revived it in me afresh again, and in addition to this impressed my mind stronger than ever, that we, as a body, are lacking this one great spirit of Jesus and the apostles.

On Thursday the 10th I bid farewell and started homeward, took dinner with sister Rohrer in company with D. P. Saylor and Sarah his wife, and others at 8 o'clock P. M. I took the train for Hagerstown where I remained all night. On the 17th at 9:30 A. M. I left Hagerstown for home, where I arrived the same day at 4:32 P. M., was met by my wife, father and mother, all well for which I am ever grateful to the Lord. Fraternally yours,

C. G. LINT.

Meyersdale, Pa., Nov. 21st, 1876.

MARRIED.

SAYLER—ROHRER.—At the house of the bride's mother, November 10th, 11:30 a. m., by Elder C. G. Lint, Elder D. P. Saylor, of the Manocacy branch, Md., to sister Sarah K. Rohrer, of the Antietam branch, Md.

CUSTER—LANDIS.—By the undersigned at the bride's parents, September 30th, Mr. William Custer to Miss Elvia Landis, both of Highland county, Ohio.
JOHN MOHLER.

OBITUARIES.

SELL.—In Bedford county, Pa., August 4th, 1876, Mary Sell, wife of Joseph Sell, aged 23 years 4 months and 2 days. Funeral services by Geo. W. Brumbagh and Leonard Furry to an attentive audience. They lived together a short season of 4 months and 9 days.

TRENT.—In the Berlin congregation, Somerset county, Pa., July 27th, 1876, Homer Nathan, son of brother William and sister Rebecca Trent, aged 10 mos. and 27 days. Funeral services by brethren Michael Weyand and Valentine Blough, from Math. 24:44.

RAYMAN.—Also in the same branch, July 31st, 1876, Nancy Jane, daughter of friend Jacob and sister Sarah Rayman, aged 13 years 8 months and 4 days. Funeral services by brethren John P. Cober, and Jacob Blough, from Philippians 1:21.

RAYMAN.—Also in the same church, and of the same parents, August 13th, 1876, Sadie Margaret Rayman, aged 1 year 10 months and 21 days. Funeral services by brethren M. Weyand and J. P. Cober, from Philippians 1:21.

RAYMAN.—Also in the same branch, and of the same parents, August 1st, 1876, Ephraim Rayman, aged 18 years 8 months and 5 days. Funeral preached by brethren Jno. P. Cober and D. P. Walker, from Isaiah 3:10-11.

RAYMAN.—Also in the same place, and of the same parents, August 18th, 1876, Harry Rayman, aged 3 months and 24 days. Funeral discourse by Jno P. Cober, from 1 Peter 1:25.

RAYMAN.—Also in the same place, August 21st, 1876, William Rayman, aged 5 years 8 months and 21 days. Funeral services by Jno. I. Cober, from 1 Cor. 15:35.

The above children, as far as known to the writer, died of sore throat, which is prostrating many in that vicinity. It will be noticed that in one family the parents have been bereft of five children in the short time of twenty-four days. Truly death is in our land, and let us all prepare to meet it and our Lord.

LIFE, GROWTH, BEAUTY.
LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.
LONDON HAIR COLOR RESTORER.

Not a Dye; makes harsh hair soft and silky cleanses the scalp from all impurities, causing the hair to grow where it has fallen out or become thin.

Can be applied by the hand as it does not stain the hand or soil the finest linen. As a Hair Dressing it is the most perfect the world has ever produced. The hair is renovated and strengthened, and natural color restored without the application of mineral substances.

Since the introduction of this truly valuable preparation into this country, it has been the wonder and admiration of all classes, as it has proved to be the only article that will absolutely without deception, restore gray hair to its original color, health, softness, lustre and beauty, and produce hair on bald heads of its original growth and color.

This beautiful and fragrant perfume article is complete within itself, no washing or preparation before or after its use, or accompaniment of any kind being required to obtain these desirable results.

HERE IS THE PROOF OF ITS

SUPERIOR EXCELLENCE.

Read this Home Certificate, testified to by Edward B. Garrigues, one of the most competent Druggists and Chemists of Philadelphia, a man whose veracity none can doubt.

I am happy to add my testimony to the great value of the "London Hair Color Restorer," which restored my hair to its original color, and the hue appears to be permanent. I am satisfied that this preparation is nothing like a dye, but operates upon the secretions. It is also a beautiful hair dressing and promotes the growth. I purchased the first bottle from Edward B. Garrigues, druggist, Tenth and Coates streets, who can also testify my hair was quite gray when I commenced its use.

MRS. MILLER,

No. 730 North Ninth St., Phila.

Dr. Swayne & Son—Respected friends: I have the pleasure to inform you that a lady of my acquaintance, Mrs. Miller, is delighted with the success of your "London Hair Color Restorer." Her hair was falling rapidly and quite gray. The color has been restored, the falling off entirely stopped, and a new growth of hair is the result. E. B. GARRIGUES, Druggist, cor. Tenth and Coates, Phila.

BOSTON TESTIMONY.

July 22d, 1871.—Dr. Swayne & Son: Last winter, while in Trenton, N. J., I procured six bottles of London Hair Color Restorer, which I like very much, in fact better than anything I have used in the last nine years. If you please, send me one dozen bottles. C. O. D., care of W. S. Fogler & Son druggists, No. 723 Tremont street, Boston.

Respectfully yours,

ADA BAKER,

No. 59 Rutland Square.

"London Hair Color Restorer and Dressing" has completely restored my hair to its original color and youthful beauty, and caused a rapid and luxuriant growth.

MRS. ANNIE MORRIS,

No. 616 North Seventh street, Phila.

Dr. Dalton of Philadelphia, says of it: The London Hair Color Restorer is used very extensively among my patients and friends, as well as by myself. I therefore speak from experience.

The Primitive Christian.

is published every Tuesday at $1.60 a year postage included.

This Christian journal is devoted to the defense and promotion of Primitive Christianity, as held and practiced by the Church of the Brethren, or German Baptists.

They accept the New Testament as the only proper rule of faith and practice, and hold to the observance of all its commandments and doctrines; among which are Faith, Repentance, Baptism by Trine Immersion, Prayer, the Washing of the Saints' Feet, the Lord's Supper, the Communion, Non-Resistance, Non-Conformity to the world, and the Perfecting of Holiness in the fear of the Lord.

As space will permit, some attention will be given to such secular matters as may be judged instructive to our readers.

Subscriptions may begin at any time. For further particulars send for a specimen number. Address,

MY FRIENDS.

Oh, they are precious to my heart,
My chosen friends: the few,
Who guard me with affection's eye,
Who blame and bless me too;
Whose hearts keep echoing fondly back,
In love's eternal tone,
The joys, the hopes, the thoughts, the tears,
That tremble in my own.

To meet the sweet confiding smiles,
Bright with affection's dew,
To feel that I am with the meek,
The pure in heart, the true!
To look into their earnest eyes,
Where thoughts the brightest dwell—
An angel's harp, an angel's tongue,
Alone such bliss can tell.

And oh, when absent, how I love
To call to mind the past.
To count o'er every word they spake
Before we parted lest,
To gather up each look or tone,
And number every smile,
'Till I am lost amid the gems,
That gleam on memory's aisle.

My friends, they are not many, yet
I know their hearts are true—
Ah, sweeter than the praise of all
Is FRIENDSHIP FROM THE FEW!
I'd rather live in kindred hearts,
To glory quite unknown,
Than hold a nation in command,
And fill a friendless throne.

And e'en if some should turn aside,
And change, as friends have done,
They should not perish from my heart,
Oh no, not one! not one!
Love is too mighty in my soul
To wear oblivion's pall;
And if I had a thousand hearts
I'd love, aye, with them all.

—Silenced.

For the Primitive Christian.

Self and Superself.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

Out of nothing God "made the worlds," and all that sin has wrought in our will and temper must be brought to naught before God can "create us anew in Christ Jesus." So far as man's constitution is concerned, he is like God; and so far as his character is concerned, he is like the devil:—a very nice devil, not unfrequently, but the offspring of Beelzebub for all that. John 8: 44. Sin did not annihilate a single psychology constituent. Man is immortal still. Christ came not to reorganize man, nor to make him simply better on the plane of his hereditary being; but to make him "partaker of the Divine nature." The Divine psychology he has, but not the harmonious working of the Perfect All-soul. Sin is the annihilation of primeval mental states, not of fundamental characteristics. It is not the nature of sin to annihilate the constitution of mind, any more than a blasphemous thought calcines the brain. Sin perverts. God in Christ restores. If we take a wild apple-tree, transplant it, graft and regraft, and give it the best culture for several years, the fruit will be so improved in size, color, and quality, that it is difficult to identify it with the original stock. And yet it is an apple still. No matter how carefully nurtured, and how conspicuous the improvement, it cannot be transformed into a pear or peach. This illustrates the difference between a moralist and a Christian. Concentrate into a single soul all the moralities and philosophies and wisdoms of the world, ancient and modern, and place it beside the poorest Christian that ever enshrined the Holy Ghost, and it is, in comparison, a revolting leper. The wisdom of the world is foolishness, and the beauty of world-made characters loathsomeness. The best the world could ever do without Christ, was to whitewash death. But it is death still. The fleshless skull, the eyeless orbits, the rattling joints, the putrescence and ghastliness, are there as of yore. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." No matter how much culture we bestow on our fallen nature, or to what heights of natural perfection we attain, we cannot, unaided, transform a sinner into a saint. What is flesh will remain flesh, even if we reach the years of Methusala in the school of Socrates, Plato, Seneca, and Aristotle. "The world by wisdom knew not God." 1 Cor. 1: 21. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." 1 Cor. 2: 14. "The natural man may know much about God, but he cannot know God. "The Spirit of Life" must enter, and bring in all the properties of the Deific disposition, and be our other and better Self, originating our desires and feelings and thoughts, and controlling our actions, and shaping our entire life, not only according to the Divine Model, but by a Divine impulse. This impulse and this shaping constitute the birth of God. The same power that originates this new life, must also direct and develop it. We can no more continue to be without God than we can begin to be without Him. It is selfishism that prevents regeneration, that hinders our growth in grace, turns us into dwarfs and backsliders, apostates and demons. Selfism inaugurated the angelic rebellion, allured man into sin, turned this beautiful world into an Aceldama, populates the territy of perdition, and makes the hell of Eternity. Selfism is the essence of sin, the core of devilism, the height and depth of damnation.

Self sacrifice is the principle which God embodied in Jesus Christ. It is this we are to learn under the Yoke of Incarnate Love. It is at this point that the kingdom of Heaven suffereth violence, and it is the violent only who win it, and that by force. It is a neck-breaking, heart-cleaving, marrow rending, body-and-soul-piercing matter to enter the kingdom of Righteousness. The anxious-bench is mere baby-play. It is soul-wrestling that is needed, till the blood presses through the pores, and mingles with the falling drops of the bleeding Godman. Every true convert has his Gethsemane. O the blessedness, the beauty, the power, the lividity of self-sacrifice! Selfish people miss the cream of life. The highest and sweetest and best in human nature, apart from this, is in the end no more than dross and chaff. This alone abides the final ordeal. There is nothing either noble or great if it be not made nobler and greater by the solemn crisis that turns all inferior joys into "the blackness of darkness forever." A spirit-taught word dropped into some soul's dark, scorching Marah, has more grandeur in it than the convulsion of a nation by the shock of victorious war, even if it is in the interest of humanity. A slice of bread cast by a nail-pierced hand upon the waters of affliction, counts more than the benefactions of Peabody and Stewart. One penny with the "image and superscription of Jesus," weighs more than "ten thousand talents" with the imprint of self. A cup of cold water, refreshed and crystallized from "the River of Life," counts more with the Great Reckoner than the rivers of blood that have been shed in the name of religion. It seems to be the necessary grace of the Divine perfection to give Himself for the well-being of others. God is doubtless well pleased with the lofty halleluias that swell from Heaven and earth into His great Spirit perpetually; and yet He is no exception to the grand truth that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." Such is God, and such are they that are God's. "Freely ye have received, freely give." If the Spirit of Christ really dominated all who profess His name, what a pentecost there would be, what an investment of greenbacks in Divine Government bonds, what a disseminating of Bibles and books and tracts and papers, as if a "rushing mighty wind" had swept the arches of Heaven. The Cross is omnipotent and ecumenical. Let it have unhindered sway, and it will enter every pocket and coffer, open every heart and hand, limber every joint, lubricate every cog and bearing, sanctify every mind, ignite every tongue, confound hell, and gladden heaven and earth with the consummation of the sublime and gracious purpose of Jehovah. O so feel as God feels, and act always in all things under His inspiration. This is "joy unpeakable and full of glory." This makes saints, fills the Lord's treasury, sends missionaries, builds Zion, and completes the satisfaction even of God Himself.

Our Parting.

BY M. HADY.

Bro. Quinter:—In reading your article in regard to removal from this place, we felt it our duty to give to the public some of our views, all we could not, and we would not if we could, express them here. We are certainly glad to know that you do appreciate some of our feelings, and what I say here on this subject, I think I am safe in saying are the feelings of this church, and especially the feelings of the friends alluded to in your article. We had a faint idea of what it would be, but when we had to realize this separation it was almost too much. We thought we loved you all dearly, but had no idea that the christian cord had bound us together so closely as it had in reality. We had experienced a great many partings with some of our dear friends, but nothing like this. We not only felt that two families of our best citizens were leaving us,—that our best neighbors, whose society we had enjoyed for a number of years, were now to be separated, not by death, in which case we could not have prevented it, but by a separation which might have been prevented.—But we thought of the many gospel sermons we heard preached by our brethren Quinter and Beer, the earnest appeals made to the careless christian and sinner in behalf of their spiritual welfare; we thought of the christian example given to all by our good and pious sisters, for truly sisters Quinter and Beer are examples in piety, and it would be well if all our sisters would follow them as they follow Christ. May God bless them in doing good wherever they are so that they may be to the world around them what the lighthouse is to the unlucky sailor. Then looking at all this, and looking back how we had slighted all these privileges, how poorly we had appreciated all these blessings showered upon us from on high, how good we might have grown, but how little progress we had made under all these favorable circumstances, no wonder our tears did flow as they did, when we had to think that now God would withdraw all, never to be returned.

You refer to the little meeting in Bro Dr. Beachly's parlor. That certainly was a little heaven below. Here were the brothers of fifty and the sisters of nearly the same age, and the little brethren and sisters of fourteen who had put on Christ in baptism only lately. If this was not enough to remind one of heaven, nothing will. Surely these young brethren and sisters, if they should live to be old in years, can never forget that meeting. We felt then as we never did. We certainly were glad that our heavenly Father knows our feelings, for while there at a throne of grace, we could express them. This was our feeling when parting with two of our most faithful ministers and their families.

How did the citizens feel about it? "We have lost two of our most respectable families of the town. The Dunkard Church has lost what they cannot regain." "Every person respected them." Such expressions we heard. One poor man said to me, "I am poor, but if you get those men back, I will give you fifty dollars in work to build a house for them to live in." These were the feelings and expressions of that class of persons. And how do we feel since you left? Do not imagine that our sorrows were only for a few days. We feel our loss more than we ever did. Some of us feel indeed like lost sheep. In looking back over the time we lived as near neighbors, your daily visits to our house, your words of encouragement in our troubles, your instruction in our regular meetings of worship, our Bible class, &c., cannot be forgotten. If we cannot claim to be better Christians than we were, we certainly cannot plead ignorance, for we certainly have received good instruction from you, and the best we can now do will be to put it to practice what we have learned. Although we feel our loss, we hope and trust it may work good in and for us. The tears which have been, and are yet shed, may they only bring us closer to Christ. And if we are faithful to our calling we may expect to meet, not where we must part against our wishes, but be together forever.

In conclusion I would say, if at any time it should please our heavenly Father to send you with the office back, we would hail the day with joy. In the meantime we wish you success in your new field of labor. That the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN family may be an instrument in the hands of God in doing good is our prayer. We hope the people will appreciate your labors and the church not only be increased, but all be made better Christians so as to be fully qualified to enter the company of saints and angels after our meetings and partings are over here. May the Lord help us to accomplish all this. Written by request of your friends here.

LIFE OF PAUL.

BY S. B. SHOOP.

He was a Benjamite, a native of Tarsus, Cilicia, and was born about A. D. 5, a free Roman citizen. He had a sister, and perhaps other sisters, as well as brothers, some of whose names may possibly be those given by Paul in his epistle to the Romans, as Junia Herodian. Tarsus was then the rival of Athens and Alexandria as a seat of learning, where Paul began that acquaintance with the classical writers which was continued when he went to Jerusalem as a pupil of Gamaliel, who was a strict Pharisee, and well-known by his title of "The glory of the Lord." It seemed to have been the intention of his parents to fit him for the rabbinical profession. It was the custom in those days to teach every son a trade, and he was brought up to the making of tent cloth. While yet a young man he showed a great zeal for the law of Moses, in consenting and assisting at the stoning of Stephen, by holding the cloaks of those who threw the stones.

Paul is almost unknown to us, unless we accept tradition and the statements of the ancients. From the Gospels we learn that he was of a subtle, tenacious and versatile intellect; intolerant before, but after his conversion, tolerant of the opinions of others. Paul's mission at Damascus was to arrest the disciples of Jesus there, and bring them to Jerusalem for trial and punishment, as apostates from the Jewish Church. On the way he was arrested by a miracle; converted by receiving a knowledge of the truth; consecrated by Ananias; and, after his recovery from the temporary blindness, began his work for the new cause, in the synagogue at Damascus, by preaching Jesus the Christ to the Jews, and Jesus the Son of God to the Gentiles. His preaching naturally excited the rage of his late friends and employes, who regarded him as an apostate and a dangerous man, and aimed at his life; when he was obliged to escape from the city by night. His return to Jerusalem, (after three years absence) as a disciple, only caused alarm to the brethren, who remembered his zeal against them. In the case of Stephen, and as the high-priest's officer, until he was introduced as a believer by Barnabas. Being driven out of the city in a short time by the Jews, he returned to Tarsus, from whence he was summoned by Barnabas to Antioch to help in the Gospel work. It was on the first missionary journey while they were in Cyprus, that his name was changed from Saul to Paul, which was the Greek form of the name. Again at Ephesus, he made so many friends that the idol-makers became alarmed for the business, and stirred up a tumult against Paul. After another visit to Macedonia, Greece and Illyria, he turned toward Jerusalem for the fifth and last time. On the way, at Miletus, the elders of the church at Ephesus had come to meet him. Then he was over sixty years of age, naturally feeble of body, always a hard worker, and it seemed that this was their last interview. He referred them to the dangers through which they all had passed, and those that the Holy Spirit had predicted were to come, and to his determination to press on, as though his life was in his hand, and entreated them to follow him for the sake of their Lord Jesus. His enemies had still determined on his destruction, and watched for an opportunity, and were finally compelled to invent an accusation on the pretext that Paul had taken some Greeks into the temple, and thereby had broken the law of Moses, and had polluted the holy temple. He was rescued from the furious mob of the Jews, by the Roman soldiers, and also protected on account of his Roman citizenship; but was for years kept in chains, without trial, with an occasional examination before the governor and the king, and was finally sent to Rome, on his appeal to Caesar. Of Paul's death almost nothing is known. Tradition affirms that he was beheaded at Rome, where a grave is now shown, which is honored with a monument.—Huntingdon Normal School

The Long-Buried Mother.

That life must be a strange and sad one indeed that can obliterate the recollections of a childhood passed under the influences of home piety. As a rule, early good impressions must bear fruit,—though the harvest be so long deferred that Time seems to have forgotten it.

A poor but praying widow died, leaving an only child. Alone and destitute, the orphan found no smiles to welcome him, and few hands to aid him, in the world where henceforth he must make his way by his own exertions.

But a sacred agency had appealed on high for him,—the forethought of a devout mother's love. Dying, she had committed him to God's keeping; and God opened a path for the lad, and gave him opportunities and friends. His health was good, and he worked hard and well, and found favor with all who employed him, so that he never knew actual want.

By the time he came of age he was in successful business. Years of prosperity followed, and he became a rich man. He was not a Christian; but he had not forgotten his Christian mother. His thoughts went back to her loving life, and lingered round her humble grave.

He was not satisfied that her remains should rest so far away, and he determined to remove them to the handsome cemetery where he had bought a lot for his family. He employed men, and went himself to superintend the disinterment.

The coffin had crumbled. Dust had almost returned to dust. The sad duty with which the man had charged himself filled with solemnity; and when it was over he could not shake off the thousand memories it awakened.

"My good mother! How truly she loved me; how faithfully she toiled for me; how tenderly she prayed for me! She was anxious for my earthly future, but her heart's great wish was that I might live not for this world, but for heaven. The first part of her prayer is answered. Why is not the last?"

The thought melted him. He sought his mother's God, whom he had so long neglected, and in penitence, consecration and love found acceptance with Him.

A voice out of silence had called the rich man to a new life and nobler duty. It was the voice of a mother twenty years buried in the ground.—Youth's Companion.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. Out Again.

It has been known by at least some of the readers of the Primitive Christian that our aged and esteemed brother Grabil Myers has been lying sick for a considerable length of time, but now we are happy to inform you that he is out again. Our meeting was at Lamersville to-day, where he was with us for the first time for about five months. We felt rejoiced to see our aged brother among us once more, with whom we have met so frequently, and worshipped together on former occasions. He informs us that he does not think of getting out much this winter on account of bodily weakness, which no doubt will be regretted by many of the brethren and friends. But we should ever be willing to bow to the irreversible decree of God's providence, knowing that he doeth all things well. Dear brother, if you chance to read these lines, take courage. And if you should never be permitted to resume your labors in this life, look forward with joyful anticipation to a happy reunion in heaven. Your unworthy brother has often been encouraged and edified by your kind words and good counsels, and I shall ever try to profit by the same.

Not all the Methodist Episcopal conferences, it seems are satisfied with the fraternization with the Southern churches on the basis lately recommended. The Central New York Conference has adopted a report with great unanimity, declaring that the commissioners who agreed upon a plan for fraternal relations between the Northern and Southern Churches "transcended the powers committed to them" by the General Conference, "doing violence to the history and principles of the Methodist Episcopal Church," conceding "the right of secession," either ecclesiastically or civilly, "and uttering sentiments which are 'replete with untold dangers, while unrebuked, to both church and state.'" The ministers of this conference risk for honesty's sake, some reputation, but time will give honor to the record they have made against a treaty of peace which bears marks of falsehood and dishonor.—Christian Cynosure.

It may be true that charity should begin at home, but it is equally true that it should go abroad.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
My Valley Visit.

BY JULIA A. WOOD.

On the morning of the 7th of Sept. I stepped aboard the packet boat; landed at Scottsville in the afternoon; spent the night there very pleasantly with friends, who never expected me. About light, next morning, I took the stage for Charlottesville. In four hours after my arrival there, I took the C. and O. train; arrived at Waynesboro, Augusta county, Va., between the hours of 4 and 5 o'clock same evening. There I was met by the very kind and hospitable family of brother Daniel Yount. We soon drove a distance of seven miles to his residence. Upon my arrival, I was most favorably impressed with everything. Instead of the "rude cabin built away down in an obscure bottom," as some speakers chose to describe the Brethren's so-called peculiar mode of living, I found matters of the kind diametrically opposite. I visited twenty-two families of them, besides having full view of a large number of others, of their farms and residences. I traveled over the most of Augusta, and a portion of Rockingham counties, a distance, back and forth, of 218 miles, by private conveyance. Ocular demonstration has given me undoubted proof that these widely misrepresented people, in almost every case, have extra fine stock, of different kinds; very rich and well located farms, beautifully cultivated, with the best improved farming implements; also handsome, spacious, convenient and most comfortable and thoroughly furnished dwellings from cellar to garret, (kitchen included.) In many cases, I found that numbers of them were living in far more comfort, taste and system than some who defame them and their widely misrepresented manner of living. From the dairy, laundry, pantry, kitchen and larder, much, very much of interest and importance can be learned. Their wives and daughters are model house keepers—they excel in neatness and system. While the poet says, "order is heaven's first law," some one has fitly said, "cleanliness is next to godliness." By a more intimate acquaintance with the daily life and management of these christian people, truly evil and unjustly prejudiced speakers could learn many a good lesson.

I am convinced that not a few of us might receive very important and profitable instructions. They are an industrious people. In obedience to Scripture, they "labor, working with their own hands." As a fruit of their labors, they are truly surrounded with plenty and prosperity. Indeed comparatively speaking, that section reminded me of the "land flowing with milk and honey." Providence has blessed them with temporals, and I was made happy to see that in various respects, they possessed a marked spiritual life. For scripture reasons, their majority dress plainly—they wear modest apparel,—all that is necessary, and not superfluous. Instead of that sacredly forbidden outward adorning, which causes millions to worship at the shrine of the goddess of fashion, they try to obey the sacred injunction of daily striving to adorn themselves with that meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God as of great price.—1 Peter 3: 3, 4. I was much pleased to find upon their tables, and in their libraries, numbers of the most select books—such as Histories, Biographies, Travels, &c. In no instance did I fail to find various kinds of religious books; and last but not least, the Holy Bible is daily their man of counsel.

Their knowledge of this book of all books is admirable, instructive and highly interesting. They are indeed a reading people, a correct people, and a pious and modest people. They seem ever more interested in attending to their own business instead of meddling with that of another. This is a true saying; "Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do." The Brethren—called by the world, "Dunkards," are the happiest looking body of people I have ever met. Peace, plenty and contentment are evidently the common lot of their majority. They are not so few in number as busy-bodies represented. In large numbers they are settled in seventeen or more States and Territories, also have some in Europe. Their ministers are chosen just as the apostles were, and labor as Evangelists. They have District Meetings, Annual Conference, besides weekly meetings and communion seasons. They strive to obey the plain teaching of the New Testament. The whole and not a portion of the Gospel is their faith and practice. My association with them gave me full proof that their well regulated households were strikingly scriptural and admirable to behold. Husbands and wives seemed so united and devoted; children and parents, with scarcely an exception, were alike true to each other. Obedience from children to parents is teeming with a rich promise. In this degenerate age, it is not so frequent as it should be. As was falsely reported, I was much gratified to find that they do not shut themselves out from social intercourse with other denominations.

As extensive opportunity was afforded me to prove that they not only interchange visits with other denominations in their vicinity, but have intermarried with them in various instances.

Why should we refuse to mingle with God's creatures of all sects? Did He not form all of us? Exclusiveness would debar us from many an opportunity of interchanging mutual benefits. When I advocate monasteries, then, and not until then can I endorse its opposite. I have fully ascertained to my glad surprise that these people are not what the false tongue of deceit and prejudice ascribed to them.

While upon earth Jesus was falsely accused, defamed and mocked; then of course, "they that will live godly in Christ Jesus will suffer persecution."

My visits, and daily associations with the Brethren, have since caused some conjectures and conclusions to be drawn therefrom. Viz: Satan employs emissaries to assail uprightness and to prejudice the unwary. The false reports and gross misrepresentations about these excellent and godly people must be a machination of this kind. Who answers to the call of Satan's servant in this matter? Whoever you are I warn you against a repetition of this unhalloved course; for "through God we shall be valiantly, for He it is that shall tread down our enemies."

Tribulations are often visited upon God's chosen people; but He says: "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." No human beings are infallible, but I can sincerely say this much: The more I see and know about these people, the more I am heartily convinced that they, as a body of Christians, not only profess religion, but daily practice it. "The path of the just is as a shining light." Among other things that I noticed they have a fondness for music. At one place I saw a piano, and parlor organs at different houses. When not the result of extravagance, nor for the love of display, these are desirable instruments in a family circle. No where did I detect a vain spirit in these things. Music has a sweet and sacred effect upon the majority of persons. It has been said that "he that loves not music has no soul." Who can justly condemn it, especially when it is not of that nature to encourage the giddy and the gay? Home should ever be our dearest spot on earth." Often when untoward circumstances have rendered it cheerless, music serves to make it more attractive and home-like. "Music has charms to sooth the savage breast." It touches and vibrates the tender chords of nature. I was glad to find all the brethren interested in the education of their children.

At the commencement of their respective school terms, the children zealously pursue their studies. They also attend Sabbath schools. We should warmly advocate them. The Sabbath schools are the nursery of the Church.

On the 11th of Sept., I visited the wonderful Wier's cave in Augusta Co. It is one and one-fourth miles long; with a large number of different apartments, containing various beautiful works of Nature. Its fluted columns, and handsomely wrought towers were as if some human hand had chiselled them out. In another apartment, there were perfect looking curtains, a yellowish limestone, almost transparent, hanging in long, flowing graceful folds from the roof. The stalactites and stalagmites presented a fine appearance. The "Niagara Falls"—a whitish limestone deposit; save the absence of its roar, was as natural looking as the foaming moving waters of a cataract. The "Winter scene," with its seeming drifts of snow, and its perfect looking transparent, long, pendant icicles, gave to the wondering beholder the appearance of a sudden transition into the polar regions. There was a hall measuring 275 feet long; and about 37 feet, each, in width and height. The rooms, with imitation of shells and coral were beautiful. This cave contains many other curiosities and beauties, such as the bridal veil and comb; sparkling waterfall, (solid limestone); "natural bridge;" a crescent,—the new moon, just above the limestone horizon, a suspended sword and shield; a mirror, a white fringed yellow curtain, all in limestone, and other things too numerous to detail. Truly a view of this handiwork of God is but another addition to incite us to marvel at His hand and might. Such scenes should inspire our hearts to love and serve this wonderful and almighty Being. Unhappily there are too many who admire the gifts and scenes, while they blindly overlook the Giver. To those contemplating a visit to this cave, I take pleasure in saying the old landlord, Mr. Mohler, who receives its visitors, is one of those good-natured looking specimens of humanity, who seems alive to justice, as well as to the pleasure of his guests. I have heard of special favors being extended to ministers of the Gospel. Such kindnesses are worthy of note. The guide, whose business is to pilot the way, and provide lights for viewing the cave, (it is dark as crepus) was quite courteous—explained every point with full satisfaction and much interest.

On the 26th of Sept., I attended one of our communion meetings at the "Brick Church," Augusta Co, a distance of six miles. A large audience was present. There were supposed to be about 250 communicants. Excellent sermons were preached. Here I had the pleasure of an introduction to a Presbyterian lady, whose general bearing gave evidence of much culture and refinement. For her unassuming courtesy and admirable spirit evinced, I deem it my duty to make a speciality of this matter. Thus: During intermission, she came into the apartment of our church, where arrangements were making for the communion, &c. She offered assistance to some of our officiating sisters. Her apparent goodness and kindness were so strictly set forth, that I could not refrain from saying to her: I admire your spirit. Good sense and high-toned principles will manifest themselves under all circumstances. A haughty spirit and a scornful look belongeth only to that class of people; in the Bible, appellation, "fools." Truly, every prudent man dealeth with knowledge; but a fool layeth open his folly; and readeth the words of Solomon. Some professors of Christianity look down with scorn upon certain unmistakable, meek and humble examples of Jesus. Such are carnally-minded—they need conversion! A passage of the Gospel reads thus: "Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me and of my words, in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father with his holy angels." Regardless of this false shame of carnal minds, let us, like obedient children, be found faithfully serving God according to the plain teachings and injunctions of His revealed Word, remembering that the wise man said: "The wise in heart will receive commandments; but prating fools shall fall. He that walketh uprightly, walketh surely." While it might be amusing to some, it is astonishing to me to hear the strange questions some people ask about our mode of worship. Many things reported against it is a palpable falsehood—Another contrivance of Satan to engender prejudice and persecution. Among some outsiders, the "Brethren" are falsely accused of certain observances of which they are entirely ignorant. The whole truth of the matter is this: They are prayerful Bible students; they take God at His word—they obey His examples and precepts with that described child-like simplicity. They do not spiritualize God's revealed Word, which inspiration says is for the way-faring man, though a fool—for the ignorant as well as the learned. To one of their communion meetings, go and hear the minister read the positive words of the New Testament; see the communicants observe the commanded ordinances of the Lord's house as sacredly recorded; also you, too, can note the absence of those observances maliciously charged to them. They do indeed stick to the undoubted words and requirements of the last Will and Testament of Jesus Christ—the Redeemer of sinful and depraved nature! There may be many ways to serve God; but depend upon it, there is a perfect plan of salvation—a sure way! It is following our Creator and not the creature. It is obedience; and obedience is sacredly said to be better than sacrifice!

On the 30th of Sept., at Mt. Vernon Church, Augusta—a distance of 16 miles, I attended another of our communion meetings. Owing to very inclement weather there was not a large congregation. About sixty communicants were thought to be present. Good order was preserved; exercises very interesting.

On 31 of October at "Garber's Church," Rockingham county, a distance of twenty-five miles, I attended another meeting of this kind. A very large concourse of persons assembled; a number of visiting ministers; about 300 communicants were thought to be there. Some excellent sermons were delivered; and the most admirable order throughout the whole audience. A more solemn and imposing scene I have never witnessed. At the hour of night, as described in the Gospel, the communion was observed. The reading of the different chapters of the New Testament by the ministers, relative to this commemorative occasion, then respectively put into literal practice by the communicants, added great life and truth to the recorded example and injunctions of Jesus. I was made to silently question: Who can view this sacredly described spectacle and venture to gainsay its truth and spiritual excellence? Jesus said: "Ye are, my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." St. John 14: 14; also: "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." St. John 13: 17. The ministers "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." In obedience to Scripture, they plead for the "ancient landmarks," and "old paths;" and daily strive to walk therein that they may hope to find the promised rest for their souls. It delights my heart when I notice good order at churches; and more especially at these meetings, as there were attendants from two large towns in that county. They truly seemed to have respect and reverence for God's house and his worshipping people. May He be pleased to bless them for this noteworthy behavior. Confusion and disorder of any kind, upon such solemn occasions, detract much from the sacredness of the exercises. God is not the author of confusion." Remember this you disorderly ones!

Oct. 4th, at "Barren Ridge Church," Augusta—a distance of 25 miles, I attended the fourth communion meeting. About 300 communicants were thought to be there. We had good order, excellent preaching and a large audience. A number of appointments for these communions, to be held in different sections of the Valley, were to be filled later in the month. As my visit was near its close, I had to reluctantly leave these meetings. My pleasure and satisfaction with them made me feel that it was being seated in "heavenly places." I was indeed loth to leave this lovely section of the great valley of Va., and its people whose great kindness, hospitality and unassuming piety I shall not soon forget. This visit to these unpretending, humble, and sincere followers of the meek and lowly Jesus has strengthened my faith. It has gone from strength to strength. Had I given credence to some outside evil speakers, I should have been deprived of that duty and pleasure of going and seeing for myself. The majority of reports were shamefully false—were very evidently the fabrication of wicked malice, and blind prejudice—and intrigue of the evil one! Jesus said: "If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but because I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you. If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you." As a reward for evil deeds of this kind, Jesus warningly said: "Whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea." "Woe unto the world because of offenses! But woe to that man by whom the offence cometh!"—Matt. 18. Ye persecuting ones, mark well that word, "woe," which is pronounced in that recorded message of Jehovah. Then, "cease to do evil; learn to do well!"

During my sojourn in the Valley, I visited the city of Staunton, Harrisonburg, Waynesboro, and several smaller towns; also passed the late war, battle-fields of Port Republic, Cross Keys, and Piedmont. I had a fine opportunity to see much of interest as well as importance.

Just here let me speak of something useful I saw: On the farm of Mr. Abraham Kendig, of Augusta, my eye was attracted towards a novelty. Upon enquiry, it proved to be a wind-pump. As well as being ornamental, it is very useful and of moderate cost, compared to the old and more laborious mode of drawing or pumping water. Those who advocate economy in expense, labor and time, why not have a wind-pump? The one alluded to cost $100. When at Staunton, I visited the Lunatic Asylum, and the Deaf and Dumb Institute. While admiring the beautiful grounds, and perfect order and comfort of each place, I was brought to see the wisdom of the State in caring for the unfortunates. The blind sing beautifully—their silvery voices rang out in bird-like and happy tones. Their bright faces wore a joyous expression of freedom from care. Even Providence opens a provision for these dependent creatures. He is the Author of every good and perfect gift. Among these blind songstresses, I was informed there was a sister of the church. Singing and music are a part of the different branches of their education. Some play upon the piano; also organ. If man, a finite being, has the wisdom to invent means for educating these dependent creatures, what must be the exceedingly great wisdom of that infinite and almighty Being, who out of chaos, made this earth, and out of darkness called the light? When meditating upon these things, we are made to ejaculate, great and marvellous are thy works and ways!

After a delightful visit of five weeks in the Valley, on the 10th of Oct., I bade farewell to this garden spot of Va., and its excellent people. From Waynesboro, I took the cars back to Charlottesville; from thence to North Garden. Upon arrival, I was surprised and disappointed not to meet the expected stage, nor to find a hotel. This dilemma was transient, as it was trying. An Episcopal minister's carriage was at the depot. I was kindly given a seat in that to his residence in Albemarle county—a distance of 9 miles. He and his very hospitable household gave me a cordial welcome to their home. I spent a pleasant night with them. This act of kindness and pleasure received is remembered with deep gratitude. I had again fresh proof that "the Lord will provide." That day a marriage party had just passed from that roof; and of course I enjoyed some of the luxuries of the feast, as well as pleasant company.

May God bless all who are kind and good, and remember those who are hospitable to entertain strangers. The next morning I was kindly conveyed down to Scottsville—a distance of 4 miles; there again spent a pleasant day and night with friends.

On the 12th of Oct., I returned back by the packet boat. Home again. I have often revisited, in thought, the various kind friends I met. Thank you all, dear, kind and good people, for every kindness received. I am grateful. Remember me in your daily prayers.

P. S. During my visit, there were several persons received into our church. May we all prove faithful in the discharge of our Christian duties, is my fervent prayer. Unless any claimed religion causes one to walk in "aewoes of life," it will dishonor to God. Regenerating, transforming religion is what is sadly needed to reform this wicked world! Let us have conversion! Let us take heed to God's word that we may be cleansed from sin. In His Word are written many and excellent things to counsel and knowledge. Let it become a lamp unto our feet, and a light unto our path. "Search the Scriptures."

Watch.

S. J. HARRISON.

Of all the demands of Christians, we believe none are of such vital importance as the one watch. It requires the utmost caution at every step of life to keep in the way of holiness; the moment we rest the eyes of our attention, we are certain to take a misstep. We will only be benefitted by watching ourselves. It is not our business to watch our brother or sister, other denominations, sects, societies and neighbors and then talk, teach or preach that. PREACH JESUS CHRIST.

We should not be watching our brother or sister's paths to see if it leads to shows, fairs, elections and to her worldly organizations or any place of sin, lest the devil might take us too; we have enough to do to watch our own path and see that we don't get on the wrong one. We ought not to be watching whether our brethren all get to preaching when they can, but whether we do. No difference if the command is plain, "For-sake not the assembling of yourselves together," watch that we do not violate it. Let us watch the dress, conversation, conduct and family privacies of our own selves. I learn that God will reward us according to the deeds done in the body, not in a or some one else's' body.

I fear we are not careful enough about who we watch, what we watch and where we watch; and as a result of this we censure, reprove, and rebuke each other when we ourselves need it. Nothing seems to be a more powerful weapon of the devil in the Church than this. How can we have charity (without which, Christ is become as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal upon which hangs our salvation) and be constantly finding fault with our brethren. Before we undertake to renovate our brother's soul, let us renovate our own. Who among us would dare to lay open his heart to God and ask its just dues? Let us come up to the standard our Savior required of those who were so eager to destroy the harlot. Let him that is without sin cast the first stone, so let him that hath no errors bring forth the accusation. I find no instance in the Holy Book that intimates that we are more than able to care for ourselves, but I do find it plainly taught that we are not able to take care of ourselves. Then let us cease to be fault-finders of others, but watch ourselves and work out our salvation with fear and trembling before God.

Educational Department.

EDITED BY J. M. ZUCK.

—Another of my pupils, a young man from Maryland, and one of my most faithful students, was baptized last Sabbath. Now that he has entered the school of grace, may he so live as to win the approbation of Him who has been styled the Great Teacher, and whose lessons if faithfully studied, will make wise even unto salvation.

—Would any brother who has some money lying around loose, like to make a capital investment and at the same time do a little good? If so, let him put $4400 in his pocket, come on here to Huntingdon and purchase a property worth at least double that amount, located in the most desirable part of town, within one square of the Brethren's Publishing House. There are two lots, each 50x150 feet, upon one of which there is a large, new, three story brick house, one of the finest, best built, and most conveniently arranged in West Huntingdon. It is said that the house alone cost between seven and eight thousand dollars. It was sold at sheriff's sale some time since, and for reasons that need not be stated here, can be bought for the sum stated above. The house would rent for such a sum as would pay a fair interest on the money invested, and hence the purchaser would risk nothing even though he did not wish to move to this place. There is a brother here now who would rent the house if he had any assurance of keeping it. Property, too, in West Huntingdon is destined to become much more valuable than it is now, as this part of town (and by far the most pleasant part) is just being built up. How the "good" alluded to can be accomplished will be explained at the proper time and to the proper party, but let me suggest that it is not wholly disconnected from an enterprise in which many intelligent and well meaning brethren and sisters are learning to take a deep interest. For further particulars address the writer or some of the parties connected with the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

—The Huntingdon county Teachers' Institute convened at this place on Monday, November 27th, and closed on Friday. The attendance throughout was quite good, both during the morning and evening sessions. The court-room was always about full and sometimes many were compelled to stand and could hardly find room to do even that. My school was in session during the forenoon of each day; in the afternoon, and sometimes in the evening we attended the Institute. Several of my students are preparing to teach, and for such a Teachers' Institute is one of the very best schools.

Besides it was the request of the County Superintendent, Prof. R. M. McNeal, (who, by the way, is an old friend and school mate, both of us having graduated in the same class at the Millersville State Normal School) that I should take some part in the exercises of the Institute. This, with the advice and consent of some of the brethren here, I consented to do, and was accordingly placed upon the programme as one of the instructors. My topic was Drawing, and was suggested to me by the Superintendent when on a visit to my school, several weeks ago. At first I declined this subject, but upon further thought I concluded to accept it, and make what preparation I could in the short time allotted for that purpose. Next week some extracts may be given from the reports that will be published in the county papers, showing the nature of my own work and also that of some others connected with the Institute. The following are some of the subjects discussed during the Institute:

1. Foundation Work—W. H. Sheeder
2. Parental Interference in School Work—M. F. Fleming.
3. Is Physical Training necessary in Country Schools?—D. M. Giles.
4. Value of Written Reviews—M. H. Black.
5. Relative Merits of the Topical, the Catechetical, and the Lecture Methods of Recitation—J. Irvin White.
6. Unpleasant Features in School Work—H. McKibben.
7. How can a Higher Standard of Honor and Greater Purity of Character be Maintained among Pupils?—Samuel Weight.

—The following essay on "Little Faults and Virtues" was written a month or two ago for the Bible class, by sister Ella J. Brumbaugh, the "better half" of brother J. B. B.

LITTLE FAULTS AND VIRTUES.

The common occurrences of the day make up the sum of human life. Trifles rule the world; and it is of more importance than we are aware, that we take care to practice the lesser virtues, avoid the lesser sins, and bear patiently inferior trials; for the sin of yielding, or the grace of resisting, in small points, tends in no small degree to produce that vigor or that debility of mind on which hang victory or defeat.

Our Creator has given us power to resist temptation, but he will not force us to use this power; it is our privilege to use it, and it is certainly our duty. If we adopt little virtues, this will crowd out little faults. If we are busily engaged in doing good, although we know that "evil is present" we will not accept it. We regard these little faults as insignificant things, too trivial to be weighed by the standard of Scripture. But will they remain small? No; all evil is of a progressive nature. The thief does not begin with stealing large sums of money; he first takes little things, of little value, and calls it a little fault. The drunkard does not begin with large drinks, but he takes little sips, and mark how the evil grows! Look at the result of temptation! These at first were little faults. Strive to avoid such little faults. By allowing negligence in small things, we are not aware how much we injure religion in the eyes of the world. We cannot expect people to believe that we are true Christians if we neglect these comparatively small points, and give heed only to the great and apparently more important points. Persons unknown to us hear of our respect, piety, and general character; they imagine us good and virtuous, expect us to be equal to our reputation, but how surprising it is, when acquaintance is made, to see that we cannot resist a trivial temptation, which would have been comparatively easy; and the same failings, littleness and bad temper, are discovered in us, which they have been accustomed to meet with in the most ordinary persons. It is no hard matter for us to appear good, virtuous and religious while out in public where we have the world's eye to control us, but these secret, little faults are ruinous. The large foxes can easily be penned out, but it is the little foxes that spoil the vines.

By neglecting inferior duties, we betray the trust of those around us, we mean those who are continually about us. If they see us weak and infirm of purpose, peevish, irresolute, passionate, or inconsistent in our daily conduct, which comes under their notice, they will not give us credit for those higher virtues which we may possess, and those superior duties which we may be more careful to fulfil. Our greater qualities will do them little good, while our smaller faults do them much injury. Observing that we come so short of duty, they will neither love nor esteem us enough to be influenced by our advice and instructions on these great points. By practicing these little virtues, we will be the better prepared for more important duties in life. Those who would be true Christians feel an interest in those around them, and are trying to devise some plan to get their neighbors to work in this field of labor. I would that we were all engaged in this noble work. But perhaps we are trying to accomplish some great good, which we hope will be the means of converting sinners. Alas! we aim too high. We reach away beyond these important little virtues, which have done so much good, and which we might obtain with very little effort. We need not strive to be equal in fame with the great evangelist Moody, but let us perform our part; where little is given little will be required. Words of love and little deeds of kindness we can all give, and if we fail to see their effects now, they will be revealed at some future time. If not before, they will be revealed in heaven. "For God shall bring every work into judgment with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil." Then, and there, will our little faults be revealed. We may succeed in concealing them now, or partially so at least; but in the day when the books shall be opened, and another book shall be opened, and we shall be judged according to our works, then when these little faults will have to be acknowledged before the Father, they will perhaps lose their insignificance, and may be the means of destroying all of our happiness in after life. Let us then give more attention to trying to find out what our little faults are, and resolve to crowd them out with little virtues.

RULES FOR AGENTS.

1. At the head of every letter give the name of your own post-office, county and State; and date on which it is written.
2. Write the name and give the full address of every subscriber you send, as legibly as you can.
3. Write "New" before the names of all new subscribers.
4. In ordering a change of address, give the post-office, county, and State, to which the paper is sent, as well as the post-office, county, and State to which it is to be sent.
5. Do not mix up different items of business; but take up and finish one item before you take up another.
6. Write items intended for publication on a separate slip.
7. Make every lawful effort to obtain subscribers, and to do good in whatever way you can.
8. Send money by drafts, post-office money orders, or registered letters.
9. Observe the above rules, and you will expedite business, save us from much trouble, and yourself and our subscribers from disappointments and vexation.

THE FRIENDS AND BAPTISM.

In the Friend's Review, of November 25th, we find an article under the head of Water Baptism and Missions in India, credited to the Christian World. This article is editorially noticed and approved of by the Review. And it was the editorial in the Review that arrested our attention, and impressed our mind in such a manner and to such a degree, that we feel like making some remarks upon it. We will give the article entire as it is not very lengthy, so that our readers may see how contemptuously, a Christian rite, first submitted to, and then commanded by the Son of God, is spoken of by a Christian journal, bearing the name of the Christian World.

The article alluded to reads as follows:

"It seems clear that the Friends are the proper persons to evangelize India. Mr. Vaughan, of the Church Missionary Society, tells us, over and over again, in his new book on Indian Missions, that baptism is the great hindrance to the public avowal of belief in Christianity, at least amongst the Hindoos, where caste is the strong fetter by which the people are bound. 'Belief in Christianity,' he says 'leaves caste unaffected. Consequently, it is no uncommon thing for a Hindoo father to be utterly unmoved by his son's heterodoxy so long as he keeps aloof from baptism.' But let him submit to this rite, and a heavy cross threatens him—he will be 'loathed by all who once loved him, mourned for as dead by her who bore him, have the finger of scorn pointed at him by all his associates, and be doomed for life to social ostracism as a polluted thing.' If this is not the penalty of conversion, but only of 'baptism,' are not Christian missionaries guilty of a grave offence in asserting either sprinkling or plunging to be a necessary act? Under such circumstances a representative of the Friends might well exclaim with Paul 'I thank God I came not to baptize, but to preach the gospel.' From the statements of Mr. Vaughan—who has been a missionary in India for nineteen years, and who evidently thinks baptism to be one of the very essentials of the Christian religion—we learn with the utmost distinctness, that a Hindoo might become a sincere disciple of Christ, and remain in his family to bless father and mother, wife and children, by his words of purity and wisdom, and by his renewed life, if only the missionaries would accept him as a Christian without the rite of baptism; and if this be really so, it is surely monstrous and wicked that missionaries should paralyze their own influence and hinder the progress of the gospel by what is and can be nothing but an outward sign of an inward grace. Societies that support such teachers might well be designated gospel hindlers, rather than gospel propagators."

Why the Hindoos have such an aversion to baptism, or to water in the Christian rite of baptism, and yet have the veneration they have for the water of the Ganges, seems to be strange and unaccountable. As baptism is the open profession of the religion of Christ, it is not unlikely that it is the making of the Christian profession by the son that makes the father manifest the opposition to him that Mr. Vaughan represents the father to feel toward the son when he is baptized. "Belief in Christianity," says Mr. Vaughan, "leaves caste unaffected. Consequently, it is no uncommon thing for a Hindoo father to be utterly unmoved by his son's heterodoxy so long as he keeps aloof from baptism." The way to a good many persons believe in Christianity, neither offends the devil nor any of their worldly associates—it is a belief that neither brings them out from the world, nor from their sins.

But we must proceed to notice the article in the Friend's Review, occasioned by the foregoing article from The Christian World. The Friends are engaged in the missionary cause, and they have missionaries in India. We are glad that the heathen will have some of the principles of the gospel preached to them by the Friends, which the ministers of other denominations do not commonly preach to them, such as non-resistance, non-swearing, and non-conformity to the world. But we are sorry that they entertain the views they do of a commandment of our divine Lord, and they sustain their position in regard to Christian baptism, in a way that seems to us very unsatisfactory, if not unfair.

The Review thus approvingly refers to the article in the Christian World, which we have quoted: "The article on a previous page, showing the impediment which water baptism appears to interpose to the spread of Christianity in India, is deserving of attention now that the Society of Friends is endeavoring to obey the abiding command of the Lord Jesus to his church, 'Go ye and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of Son, and of the Holy Ghost.' . . . . Our missionaries need no better example than that of Paul. After baptizing some with water, and finding how quickly it led to abuses, and that it was no part of the Christianity to be propagated among the Gentiles, he thanked God he had baptized so few, and affirmed that he had no commission from the Lord Jesus to baptize. . . . We may reasonably infer that he henceforth baptized no Gentiles with water, and so far as a judgment from the Scripture record goes, no one else administered baptism to his converts. If Paul had no commission from the Lord Jesus to baptize with water, surely no man since his day has had."

"It (baptism) was no part of the Christianity to be propagated among the Gentiles." So the Friend's Review affirms. And it does seem to us that the affirmation was made without a due regard to the divine authority, and teaching of the Scripture. It is probably known by the most of our readers that the Friends regard water baptism as a part of the ceremonial law of the Jews, and that it was to cease with that law, and was not designed by Christ to be continued in his church, as a Christian rite. It was not our intention when we took up our pen to notice and examine the different arguments used by the Friends to sustain their position in regard to water baptism.

What struck our mind very forcibly as an untenable position, is the affirmation already quoted, and contained in these words: "It (baptism) was no part of the Christianity to be propagated among the Gentiles." Baptism was undoubtedly a part of the Christianity of which the Lord Jesus Christ was the author and finisher. And the Christianity that was to be propagated among the Gentiles was the same Christianity that was to be propagated among the Jews. Hence the apostle Paul affirms, "There is one body, and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling: one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and father of all, who is above all, and in you all." Eph. 4: 4-6. That water baptism was a part of Christianity, there is ample testimony to prove. The disciples of Christ practiced it before his death, and no doubt it was by his authority. John 3: 26; 4: 1. And after his resurrection from the dead, when he gave the disciples their commission, he said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of thy Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Math. 28: 18, 19. The Friends do not regard the baptism of the commission as water baptism. But it surely was. On the day of Pentecost, when the apostles preached under the power of the Holy Spirit, Peter preached water baptism, when he said, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Acts 2: 38. That it was water baptism and not the baptism of the Holy Spirit, that Peter here preached, is very evident, for there could have been no propriety or consistency in him promising them the Holy Spirit after baptism if he meant they were to be baptized in the Holy Spirit, for had they been baptized in it they necessarily would have received it. It was then water baptism that Peter preached. And how did he preach it? 1. We remark he preached it when he was under the influence of the Holy Spirit. He therefore preached it under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. 2. Let it be noticed that Peter qualifies the command to be baptized, by the words "in the name of Jesus Christ," to show that it was under the authority of Jesus Christ that they were to be baptized. Does not this most conclusively show that baptism was preached, administered, and received under the authority of Jesus Christ?

And how was it when Christianity was preached to the Gentiles? Peter was sent by divine authority to the house of Cornelius, to tell him words whereby he and his house should be saved, Acts 11: 14. Peter went and preached Christ to Cornelius and his friends, and the Holy Spirit fell on them. "Then answered Peter, can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord." Acts 10: 46-48. It is plainly declared here that Peter commanded these Gentile converts to be baptized. Now the question is, what authority had he for thus commanding them? Friends say in substance, that it was his own authority and no higher, under which he spake, when he commanded these Gentiles to be baptized; that it was from his attachment to religious rites that he had learned as a Jew, and from which he had not yet been weaned since he embraced Christianity. But what was the authority under which Peter preached baptism according to Luke, or the writer of the Acts of the apostles? It was under the authority of Christ. For it is positively declared that Peter commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord; that is, under the authority of the Lord, as he had commanded the Jews on the day of Pentecost, when he said, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ." As Peter then commanded the first Gentile converts to be baptized in the name of the Lord, it is evident he had the Lord's authority for baptizing. For had he claimed the Lord's authority for water baptism when the Lord gave him no such authority, he would not have been true or faithful to his Lord. And where did he get the authority for commanding the Gentiles to be baptized? He evidently received it from the commission that he and the other apostles obtained from the Savior after his resurrection. The affirmation then, of the Friend's Review, that "It (baptism) was no part of the Christianity to be propagated among the Gentiles," seem to be contrary to the Scriptures. J. Q.

ALMANACS! ALMANACS!

We have just received a card from Funk & Bros., stating that they have shipped a box of almanacs, so in a few days they will be here and then all orders will be filled promptly. Those that have not yet ordered, should do so at once. We have published a large edition, and we hope our brethren and friends will try to sell them for us. Every family in the brotherhood should have one of the Brethren's Almanacs.

BROTHER Martin Cochran informs us that his address in the Brethren's Almanac is wrong. It is Farmington, W. Va., and should be Harrisville, Ritchie Co., W. Va. Those wishing to correspond with him will make a note of this.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

A FEW of our agents, it appears, did not receive a prospectus. All those that have informed us we have willingly supplied, and if there are others that have not received one, they will please inform us and we will send it immediately.

THE Young Disciple for December is now out, and is brim full of interesting and instructive matter for the young. We feel much interested in the success of this paper, and we hope our brethren, sisters, and friends will not fail to give it that encouragement and support that it so richly deserves.

SOME of our patrons want to know why it is that their paper comes nearly a week behind time. We shall not attempt to explain. Do not think we could make it intelligible to you, but if you could be here some day about half an hour, we think it would no longer be a query to your minds.

OUR contributors and correspondents will please not become impatient if their communications do not appear right away. We have so much matter on hands just now that we find it impossible to publish all, even that which should, on account of its nature, appear immediately. We hope our contributors will not become discouraged. We expect to enlarge soon, and then there will be more room.

DURING a series of meetings held at Conemaugh, Pa., over a hundred were baptized. The meeting was conducted by brother S. H. Bashor. This, we believe, is the largest number of accessions we have ever known at one time among the Brethren. We sincerely hope that they all have duly considered the matter, calmly and cautiously counted the cost, and that they may prove faithful to the captain of their salvation.

WE CAN not refrain from urging our agents to renewed efforts in securing subscribers. We do not have this anxiety merely from a business stand-point. Of course we feel anxious to succeed in our business, and every brother and sister should feel as much concern for the success of our enterprise as we do ourselves. The better we succeed the more good we can accomplish, and this we hope is our highest object. We therefore appeal to every brother and sister to make greater exertions to extend the circulation of our paper. We believe our paper carries with it the truth as it is in Jesus; and therefore upon every family, into which you introduce the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, you confer a blessing that cannot be computed by dollars and cents.

LOOK OUT FOR THE NEW PAPER.

One number more and then we expect to greet our thousands of readers with the new and enlarged paper. It will appear in an entirely new dress, head and all, and we hope to make it just such a paper as every brother and sister will want to read and everybody ought to read. We hope that all our former agents, for both papers, will make every effort to send us as many subscribers as possible, so that we may not lose by enlarging our paper. We think you will see the propriety of making a little extra effort for us, when you consider the extra expense we are making to give you a larger paper. Many of you urged and plead for a consolidated paper. Now please show that you were in earnest about it, by sending us greatly enlarged lists.

Gleanings and Gittings.

—Bro. Daniel Crefford of Johnstown, Pa., Nov. 23rd, says: According to previous arrangements Bro. S. H. Bashor planted the artillery of the gospel on the Benshoff hill, Conemaugh church, Cambria Co., Pa., where on the evening of the 11th inst. he commenced firing into the camp of sin with great vigor. The battle raged furiously until the evening of the 22nd inst. During this interval ninety-eight souls of the enemy's ranks fell, and sixty-two bodies of sin were buried in a small stream, we trust never to rise again. Six were reclaimed. Never did we witness such solemn meetings. Notwithstanding the rainy weather and the horrible condition of the roads, the house was utterly packed with people at every meeting. They flocked to the church from every direction, and in some instances it was impossible for them to gain access to the building, when they surrounded the house all eager to catch the solemn truths as they emanated from the man of God. Good order prevailed and great interest was manifested during all of these meetings, and the meeting could not be otherwise than successful. From here Bro. Bashor goes to the Brallier Meeting house in the same congregation, to continue his labors. May the blessing of God follow him whither he goes and make him instrumental in bringing many more souls into the fold of Christ is the prayer of your unworthy brother.

—Bro. B. C. Moomaw of Lexington, Va., Oct. 20, '76, says: I had the pleasure of attending the lovefeast of the Buffalo church, held in the southeastern portion of this county, on the 14th and 15th inst. The occasion was one of deep interest, and the spirit of the meeting was truly that of a lovefeast; all seemed to be impressed with the solemnities of the services, and sensible of its vital significance. One soul was added to the fold. Bro. Peter Niinger of the Botetourt church officiated very acceptably both at the water and at the table. All the incidents of the meeting were orderly and gratifying, and its spiritual influence refreshing to the soul. It is a source of regret that such seasons occur so unfrequently.

Brother J. H. Garman, of Sinking Springs, Ohio, November 1st, 1876, says:

As church news is the first thing that I look for in the Pilgrim, and thinking some of its many readers would like to hear from our branch of the church, I will drop a few remarks. Our lovefeast is among the things of the past. It commenced on the 21st of October and closed on the 24th, and truly we had a feast of love. It was held the Strait Creek Valley, in our new meeting-house. The attendance was quite large during the meeting, and the best order I ever saw at a communion meeting, at home or abroad. I have heard a number say that we had the best meeting that they ever attended. Brother Hixson was with us till Monday noon. He preached the word with power. After preaching, Sunday morning and exhortation by brother Malow, brother Hixson preached the dedicatory sermon which was very appropriate for the occasion. On Monday, one precious soul came out on the side of the Lord, and was buried with Christ by Christian baptism, and rose to walk in newness of life."

—Bro. Martin Grossnickle of Elletton, Md., Nov. 8th, says: We have quite an interesting meeting going on in our congregation at present. Bro. D. P. Sayler and brother Lint are with us. The brethren are free to declare the whole counsel of God.

Brother Addison Baker, of Missouri, says: "The grasshoppers have eaten up all our wheat in the ground; therefore, as well as I would love to read the Primitive Christian the coming year, money will be too scarce for us to take it, at least for the present. Our church, that of Spring River, has increased since its organization four years ago, from sixteen to about forty-five, mostly by emigration."

—Bro. W. B. Sell of Martinsville, Mo., says: I am slowly recovering of my spell of sickness which was of about two months duration. Thank God, as I have a family of six children and this has put me back. It will be hard on us this Winter, but if we trust in God he will never leave nor forsake us. Have not had any meetings for over three months.

—Bro. Stephen Hildebrand of Mineral Point, Pa., Nov. 17th, says:—On the 11th of Nov. Bro. Bashor commenced preaching for us in the Conemaugh church. The meetings were well attended and quite an interest manifested. Yesterday nine were received by baptism and one by letter. There are several more applicants.

—Bro. E. J. Holloway of Sumner, Kansas, says:—We would like if some minister would come here and make this his home. We number seven and more think of joining the church soon. Three have made up their mind to do so if spared. Good land can be had at $1.25 per acre, in a good wheat country. There are some brethren in Sedgwick Co., near Wichita. We are only 28 miles south-west of Wichita. We hope, some one will heed the call and come.

—Bro. James L. Fitzgerald of Upsher Co., W. Va., says:—We met at our church house and made arrangements to begin a meeting on the 15th of December, and on the night of the 12th held a lovefeast, to which we give our ministering brethren a hearty invitation. Now brethren I hope some of you can be with us at this meeting. We think there is a prospect for many additions to the church. We number about twenty-five members, all in love and union. Eld. Daniel Miller is our house-keeper. We are located in Upsher Co., W. Va., 12 miles north-east of Beckhannon. Come to brother Joseph Hauser's who lives within two miles of Beckhannon, and he will convey you to place of meeting. Our church is known to many by the name of Indian Branch church.

—Bro. D. R. Stitely says, we are getting along as usual. There are still some being added to our number. Yesterday was our regular appointment at the Beaverdam meeting-house. The day was cold and wet, yet two young sisters, one only eleven years old, was led into the flowing stream.

—Eld. Samuel Murray writing from the home of brother James Clive of Huntington Co., Ind., says: I am still travelling some by private conveyance. The roads are getting very bad. We have had only a few hours sunshine in eight days, hence it seems quite gloomy. The health is getting pretty good in this country. There are still a few cases of chills. The farmers are about through with their Fall work. On an average the corn crop is slim. The apple crop was very good. We wish our dear brethren of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN much success, and pray the Lord to bless them and their labors that much good may be done through their paper. We think it is now as it should have been years ago. O may the Lord help us all so to live that love and peace may abound throughout the whole Brotherhood.

—Sister Sarah M. Saunders of Stony Creek Ind., in speaking of the examination says: What a solemn thought! "Let every one examine himself and so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup." If the apostle had said, let every one examine his brother or his sister and let him say who shall and who shall not eat, how much more easy a task it would seem, and how much more willing would we, poor creatures be to perform the work. "Examine yourself," how hard a task to perform! If we would come right up to the work and search out every little thing that might be against us, I fear we would do like the men spoken of in the 8th chapter of John, 5th verse. We would "go out one by one beginning at the eldest." But how often do we meet at the places of worship to commemorate the death and sufferings of him we call our Lord and Master, which should be of all worship the most solemn, with a want of due consideration and seriousness. Of course, we meet our brethren and sisters there whom we have not seen for some time and we must inquire of their health, &c., but do we not do a great deal of unnecessary and even unbecoming talking in the house of God, and more especially while eating. Would it not be more proper to keep our minds more engaged in prayer to him who knows the very secrets of our hearts, better than we do ourselves, imploring him to blot out our many short comings and to fit and prepare us, to assemble at the Lord's table? Does it not show a lack of a proper appreciation of the solemnity of the occasion and set a poor example to those who come to the table after us, especially the young people? May the Lord help us all to rightly appreciate our calling and walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called is the humble prayer of your unworthy sister.

Notice.

According to appointment as published in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN under the head of "Last Call," a meeting of some of the delegates of the Middle District of Penn'a. was held in the Dry Valley church on the 21st of Nov. 1876, at which a number of churches were also represented by letter. (In all fourteen.) At this meeting the following named committee was elected and confirmed: elders Moses Miller, Daniel Eckerman, Geo. Brumbaugh, William Howe, Solomon Seiber and Daniel Keller, to act in the duties herein named. First to visit those churches which have proposed to take A. M. for 1877, and to locate the same as may seem best in their judgment. Second to instruct the church in which it is located to call a meeting of several of the adjoining churches with them to select a committee of arrangements to carry on the work further, instructing them to be governed by certain restrictions embodied in the plan adopted in 1856, and recommended in Art 24, A. M. of 1876, referring to a resolution to make no preparations to feed or entertain a mixed multitude at the place of meeting, and further that they make all possible efforts to economize in the expenses. And it shall be the duty of the committee first named to apportion the contributions necessary from each church to defray the expenses of the meeting, when ascertained by the committee of arrangements, which will be paid to their treasurer appointed by them for that purpose. The above committee of arrangements shall endeavor as soon as possible to ascertain the probable amount of money required to meet the expenses of the meeting and report to the first committee accordingly.

Geo. BRUMBAUGH Sec.

The committee named in the foregoing, having in the discharge of their duty, visited the places proposed to take the forthcoming A. M., decided in favor of the Yellow Creek congregation. Therefore, if the Lord willing, the Annual Meeting of the Brethren for 1877 will be held at the Snowberger meeting house, Yellow Creek church, Bedford Co., Penn'a.

From Tulpehocken.

Beloved in the Lord:—

It is quite a long time since anything was reported from the Tulpehocken church. And reporting is a little like the Centennial,—most always only the beautiful side is shown, which is also right and proper. To the Centennial were brought things from all parts of the earth; and these were prepared in such a way as to please the eye, and to reflect favorably on the exhibitor. Being also myself inclined to speak only well of things in which I am specially interested, I will only say in regard to the Tulpehocken church (of which I am a member) that sometime ago "there was a chunk in the wheel," but at present we seem to be prospering in the right direction again. This church has only several whom we would call aged brethren. Two of them are deacons. The ministry is quite young, and the youngest is the oldest. "Let no man despise thy youth." The membership is upwards of three hundred. We are steadily increasing. At present we have seven regular places for meeting, and there will soon be another. All our regular places for meeting are in meeting-houses. Properly, the territory is about five by twelve miles. Our meetings are pretty well attended when the weather is good. In the eastern part of the district where the body of the membership is, the turnout is also good on bad days, but in the western part it is not so praiseworthy.

To-day (Nov. 19) there was a meeting in each end of the district. In the western part of the district brother John Herr and the writer made their effort to a congregation of twenty, including the servants. The number was small, but the presence of the Lord was felt. Suitable to the occasion Bro. John selected (The spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets,) for his text Luke 12:32. "Fürchte dich nicht die kleine Herde, denn es ist eurer Vaters Wohlgefallen euch das Reich zu geben." His remarks were appropriate to the occasion, and edifying and encouraging to all present. For the absent we could only pray. May they reflect on the saying. Wenn die Liebe treibt, ist ihr kein Weg zu weit," and no weather too bad. Asking an interest in your prayers, I remain your trying-to-be faithful brother in Christ the Savior.

GEORGE BUCHER.

Bro. Quinter and Brumbaugh:—

By the request of many of your readers, I will, by your permission, give an account of my travels since the first of October. First, I filled a call in New Jersey, found the church in union and of considerable strength. This is as far East as the Brethren have an organization. Brother Israel Poulson is the bishop here; a strong worker and much esteemed by his members. All seem to be working for the Master with that zeal that should characterize God's people everywhere. Remained here at different points two weeks. From here went to the old Coventry church, the early home of brother Umstead, and I believe also of brother Quinter. Bro. John Price, brother to Isaac Price, is the bishop. The church here is one of the oldest in the East and numbers perhaps about two hundred and fifty. Many of them are old and feeble, just waiting for the message of death to call them home. Here I formed many associations which I hope to renew when I get home to the reward above. Remained with them ten days, preached as best I could and as many as believed were baptized; some four of the most intelligent young persons in the community being the number. From here I went to Philadelphia, but only remained in the city long enough to attend the Bible class and spend an hour with brother Hetric and family. Owing to the excitement occasioned by the Centennial, the city was full of visitors. After Bible class I took the train for McVeytown, but being weary I fell asleep, and was carried past several miles. I waited for a returning train and went back, was kindly cared for at the home of sister Miller until evening, when we all went out to the place of meeting where we found quite a number of brethren gathered to hold a lovefeast. It was a joyful season to me, being the first feast I was permitted to attend this season.

Bro. Joseph Hanawalt is the bishop here, but is getting old and feeble. He said when we parted, this he thought would be his last communion season until the great union above. May the church take the tender care of him he has of them in former years. I also met many young persons here that we saw but a short time ago, led into the water and baptized into Christ. Found them still determined to meet above. After night services went back to sister Miller's, and next morning at 6:30 a. m. took the train for Johnstown; went from there to Shade Creek, Cambria Co., where I began and closed after ten days a series of meetings with good results. Thirty-two were added to the fold of Christ. Several of them came over from other churches;

among them some Lutherans. This caused a stir among that class and I hear since I left that their minister has preached on baptism two Sundays in succession and is to yet preach one more discourse in reply to a little talk I had to the people on that subject. His chief argument against immersion is that Christ could not have been baptized in Jordan, from the fact that the banks of the river were so steep they could not get down to the water, but he had forgotten the man's name who gave the information. He said he had everything fixed up to do good, and the Dunkers have picked it to pieces. It seems by his story that those who were immersed by us will be lost as they were sprinkled when young. Paul set us the example down at Ephesus and I know he is right. Acts 19.

Brother Joseph Berkey is the elder here. After the close of this meeting I came to the Conemaugh church and commenced a series of meetings. We have had ten days meeting and with the assistance of God ninety-one have been immersed, five reclaimed, and one received by letter, and several others as applicants for membership. I will stay here until the 30th inst., and then close. The church here is a strong one, and has a strong ministry who labored hard with us for the conversion of their own, and their brethren's children. This is the most successful and joyous meeting I have ever held. Something near a score of other denominations have come over. One little bright eyed girl ten years of age was baptized. God will help her. When questioned she answers, beyond her years. There are only a few left. May God help them to come ere it is too late.

In conclusion I return my humble thanks to the many members who have treated me so kindly. Take care of those whom I delivered to your charge and the God of Peace will reward you.

I lost my diary while down east. If any of the brethren find it, will they send it to me. Had the most of my travels written it, and it is of some consequence to me while to others it may not be.

Now in reply to many, I will say that I will close my labors the first of January and rest during the winter. Those who have written to me will please excuse me until spring as I must have rest after fifteen months of incessant labor; I must rest for a while at least. Then if God spares me I will come to them. My address from December 15th until further notice will be Johnstown, Cambria Co., Pa. May God bless the union of the P. C. and P., to the edification of his people and the conversion of souls. The grace of our God be with you all. Amen.

S. H. BASHOR.

A Visit to the East.

HUNSON, ILL., Nov. 20th, 1876.

Immediately after our lovefeast, a notice of which has been given by brother Heiple of Penn'a., I in company with my son-in-law John L. Snarely and wife and little son, started on a visit to West Virginia, the place of my nativity. We left Bloomington Illinois on the 10th day of October at 12 o'clock, on the east bound train on the I. B. & W. R.R., got to Indianapolis at 6 o'clock P. M. Here we changed cars for Cincinnati, Ohio, which train took us to the city at 11:30 P. M. The east bound train having just left, we had to wait until 6 o'clock the next morning, when we set out for Parkersburgh Landing, where we arrived at 4:30 P. M. Here our coach was attached to another train which sped off up the Great Kanawha River into the mountains of West Virginia, where we were sometimes under a mountain, sometimes on the side of a mountain, and sometimes on the top of a mountain, until we found ourselves at Grafton. There we remembered the name of brother Z. Annon, only known to us by his name and address in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. Our train here was enlarged by adding more coaches, when we set off for Keyser, passing through Bollsburgh and Cranberry Summit. We thought of other dear names, such as Buckalew, Fike, Renour, Thomas, &c. But it was midnight, and on we went, down, and finally reached Piedmont, and at 8 o'clock A. M. arrived at Keyser. Here we sat till day, when we went two miles up the Creek to brother Samuel Arnolds, and was hospitably entertained till next day. Here we enjoyed ourselves very much with brother Samuel and the sister whose open heart and untiring hands had administered to our wants in days gone by. Here we were met by brother-in-law J. R. Reed, who took us in his conveyance eighteen miles to his house, our former home. Found all well. Here it was that we endured the waste of war, and here during that time our mother died, and was laid by the side of little David, our son, in the old garden. O how sacred the spot that marks their last resting place.

Next day (Saturday) we went to Greenland, where the brethren had already assembled to hold a lovefeast. A godly number of ministering brethren were present. Among the number was D. B. Arnold, S. I. Biser, Moses Fike and H. Lister from other churches. Very good order was observed during the exercises by the spectators. Good preaching by the brethren, while the ordinances pertaining to the occasion were carried out in gospel order. We commenced visiting here from house to house, as we had opportunity. We found in these mountains the same principle, perhaps in a larger degree, that has ever characterized the people of West Virginia. I mean hospitality and open-heartedness, for wherever we went, we found the kindest friends and a cordial welcome. I regret that we had not the time to visit more of our friends. Our visit to Alleghany was so hurried that it failed to relieve our mind of its anxiety, but we must be content. We attended twelve meetings of the Brethren, and saw unmistakable tokens of conviction in many. A good work is awaiting the laborers in Padesland especially; they are waiting for the moving of the waters. Brethren of Greenland be encouraged to work. O what a harvest is already ripe for gathering into the Lord's garner. Heaven bless the souls that are ready to enter into covenant with their God. Brethren, messengers of God, herald forth the glad sound, for it is God's power unto salvation to every one that believeth. We had the pleasure of seeing two precious souls unite with the people of God by baptism, a mother and her tender little daughter. O, the tears of joy that were shed upon that occasion! I could do nothing better at the scene than to look up to heaven and secretly say, God bless the little sister that has given her best days to the service of God; and also happy mother, who can watch over such a jewel. I would say to mother and daughter, keep yourselves unspotted from the world. Remember you may follow Jesus into the wilderness to be tempted, but always take Jesus along and you will all ways conquer through him. Talk much with God, tell him all your sorrows, tell him to bless your neighbors, pray for all men, for every body, and for me, that I may hold out faithful to the end.

We found general good health wherever we were. The people were blessed with an abundance of this world's goods. This season there is also an abundance of fruit, so much so that some of them are having it distilled, making of the good healthy apple that monster, called Alcohol, just because there is money in it; money that ought to be expended for clothing for the little daughter of the drunkard. O brother, have you any such money? If you have, think, O think, before it is too late.

On the 13th of November we took our leave of the friends and brethren, and we think the last farewell in this world. Brother Martin Cosner took us to Keyser in his own conveyance, where we took the parting hand. Took the cars at one o'clock P. M., Tuesday morning, and got home Friday evening. Found all well, thank the Lord.

THOS. D. LYON.

Dear brethren: On the 13th inst. two brethren, George Rest and Jacob Fanner, called upon us to go to Monticello Furnace, near the Alleghany River, Armstrong Co., Pa., a distance of about 12 miles, to visit a young man who has consumption and desired to be baptized. In company with the above named brethren and brother E. C. Wampler, we went in good faith. We arrived at the residence of the young man's father where we found him seated in an arm chair with a sorrowful heart. We soon learned that his desire was to unite with the church. After the necessary arrangements were made, he was carried out of his bed, placed upon a sled, hauled near to the river and there, by the brethren, carried down to the water-side. He was then taken into the water where he meekly and willingly submitted to the sacred ordinance of christian immersion as instituted by Christ, while a number of friends and neighbors were heard to weep. We felt that it was the work of the Lord, and our prayer to God is that this way be a means of bringing others to a saving knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. We had public services in the evening. Tarrying with the family until the next morning. Before we started for home the sick brother told us he felt much better. May the blessings of God attend him during his affliction that he may bear it with much patience, ever putting his trust in him that is able to save to the uttermost all that come unto him. May heaven's blessings be upon his parents and dear friends who manifest such a great interest in his welfare and may we all meet our dear brother when we shall have passed through the Jordan of death, on the shores of eternal deliverance where sin, sickness, sorrow, weeping and death can never come, but where our blessed Savior shall wipe all tears from every weeping eye. J. B. WAMPLER.

Dear Brethren:—

We hear from almost all the churches throughout the brotherhood, through our periodical, except those close around it. They remain silent. A new district is springing up out of a part of Yellow Creek and a part of Clover Creek district, Bedford Co., Pa., over which brother Jacob Miller from Yellow Creek is presiding. On Saturday the 11th ult., this body met for the first time in council. The meeting was conducted as follows: After a few preliminary remarks by brother Jacob Miller, singing, prayer, and a select portion of Scripture was read appropriate to the occasion. It being an organized body made up of two other branches, it was thought necessary that an action be taken. It was then requested that the members from the Clover Creek church rise to their feet as an expression of sentiment to go hand in hand with the brethren of Yellow Creek. The same was followed by the brethren of Yellow Creek. All seemed to be in love, union and harmony. The question of building a meeting-house was then taken up and it was decided to build a house as centerable as possible, 75x45 with basement at a supposed cost of $1,800, or $2,000. A building committee was then appointed, brethren John B. Replogle, Simon Snider and Adam Fredric, also a treasurer which was assigned to brother Jacob Guyer. Then came the trying time; freely ye have received, freely give. About $1,000 was subscribed. Many present did nothing. The time being short the meeting adjourned to view the grow upon which to build the house. The location was agreed upon on R. L. Replogle's farm along the turnpike near his house, within a half mile of Woodberry.

Brother Quinter:—

We send you a notice of the death of brother Henry M. Harshbarger. He died of brain fever Sept. 20th, 1876, aged 24 years, 5 months, and 15 days. He leaves a wife and an infant child with many friends, brethren and sisters in the church to mourn their loss. As he was the agent for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN and PILGRIM, you will see a change in your agent in our church, and you need hardly expect another to be his equal in that place, but we will still try and have your paper circulated among us. He was the Treasurer and Clerk in our church. Though young, he filled that place so well, that we greatly feel our loss. He was a good example for our young brethren, taking an active part and a deep interest in all the business of the church. You formed an acquaintance with him when you were at our communion some years ago, which has continued only as your agent since. How much good might young brethren do to work like him, as agent to circulate the publications of our Brethren. It suits their situation in life, and would be a benefit to them and the cause of truth. It will be some loss to you, a great less to the church and his family, to give up one so young and promising. He has been a member of the church about six years, was faithful and diligent during his short pilgrimage on earth. He is gone to his reward, and we hope his example may be the means of turning the hearts of his dear friends and relations more to the spirit world. I was from home at the time of his death and could not attend his funeral. It will be preached at some future time. Then, like Job, we will wait all the days of our appointed time, till our change come, when we hope to meet him where parting is no more.

"Hope bids the anguish'd heart rejoice;
Though earthly ties are riven,
We still may hope to meet again
In yonder peaceful heaven."

R. H. MILLER.

Mrs. E. K.

My dear mother:—I imagine that I can see you grasping the paper as soon as it arrives and closely scanning every page and column to see if you can catch but a word from me. I would like to write you a long letter and tell you many things which would be of interest to you, but my studies and exercises of different kinds require the time it would consume. May this suffice for the present, by telling you that I am well and hearty and have plenty of work to do. May this find you well and enjoying the blessings of our heavenly Father, is my prayer. Your affectionate son,

DAVID.

ADAM BEALMAN.

WOODS—RUPERT.—On the 30th ult., at the residence of the bride's parents, by Elder H. B. Brumbaugh, Mr. Thomas E. Woods of Ardenheim, to Miss Clara J. Rupert, of Henderson township, this county.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

FATICK.—In the Upper Fall Creek congregation, August 28th, 1876, sister Barbara Fatick, aged 80 years 2 months and 12 days.

The subject of this notice was born in Cumberland county, Pa.; was married in her sixteenth year, moved to Virginia in 1813, and in 1836 removed to this state. She was a consistent member of the Church of the Brethren, living in perfect faith of a blessed immortality. She leaves a family and a large circle of friends to mourn her departure. Funeral discourse by brethren George Hoover and J. W. McClure.
D. F. HOOVER.

REESE.—In the Thorn Apple District, in South Boston, Iowa county, Mich., Sept. 19th, 1876, Samuel, youngest son of friend Peter and sister Sarah Reese, aged 7 years 9 months and 4 days. Disease, inflammation of the bowels. Funeral services by the writer.
Geo. LONG.

MAY.—In Monroe county, Iowa, August 6th, 1876, brother Samuel May, aged 48 years 11 months and 24 days.

He was a minister of the gospel twenty-six years. He had spinal disease for four years and cancer in his throat the last three months. Funeral services by brethren David Sink, Daniel Miller and Hiram Bertman, from Rev 16: 13.
JOHN L. SWITZER.

HUFF.—In the Maumee district, Defiance county, Ohio, Charles Huff, son of John and Celesta Huff; aged 11 months and 8 days. Funeral services by the Brethren, from Matt. 18: 1-4.
JACOB KINTNER.

SHUS.—In the Suske Spring church, Bedford county Pa. Nov. 27th, 1876, sister Elizabeth, wife of brother Daniel Shus Disease, asthma and dropsy of the chest. Aged 67 years 1 month and 29 days. Occasion improved on the 30th by brother Jacob Miller and the writer, from Rev 14: 12, 13., to a very large audience. The following the writer was requested to notice: The deceased was the daughter of brother George Hunsberger, deceased. Her mother's maiden name was Mary Studebaker, daughter of brother Jacob Studebaker, deceased; consequently she had numerous relatives in the west, hence this particular notice. Her death was very unexpected at the time, only about half an hour's notice. She spoke but few words after her fatal attack which ensued great sorrow on the part of the husband and children. She left seven children, all married, and 23 grand-children to mourn their sudden loss. The children were all present at her funeral except John, who was in Nebraska. The subject of this notice being very strong in the faith undoubtedly died in the full triumph of her faith, hence we congratulate her sadly bereaved husband and children to acquiesce in God's providence, as her departure was a transition from a cheerful life to a happy one. And may it please God that this dispensation may solemnly and lastingly impress that part of her family that is yet out of the ark of safety to speedily turn to God, and prepare to meet her in that better world. The writer frequently stopped at her house, and it was a house of "Gaius mine host," as only ten days previous to her exit had the last conversation which turned chiefly on the conversion of her sons and daughter-in-law yet out of the church. May her concern and prayers in that direction, though she is now dead, yet speak, and in behalf of them be made effective that the church may realize an addition to her number, for her rejoicing, and heaven itself resound with joy.

LEONARD FURRY.

SELL.—Fell asleep in Jesus in the Snake Spring Valley church, Bedford county, Pa., August 21st, 1876, sister Estor Sell, wife of brother John Sell, aged 34 years 1 month and 1 day. Funeral services conducted by J. W. Brumbaugh and Henry Hershberger, to a large audience. Sister Sell was willing to die. She was confined five days before her death. She leaves a babe in the care of the bereaved husband. She also took erysipelas four days before her death and suffered greatly, but she bore it patiently, and fell asleep at one o'clock on Sunday night and slept as natural as usual until she drew her last breath, which was near four o'clock in the morning.
JACOB KEONS.

SIMMERS.—In the Astoria church, Fulton county, Ill., April 2nd, 1876, Emma J. Simmers, son of Elizabeth Simmers, widow of Christopher Simmers, deceased, aged 14 years 5 months and days. His disease was a spinal affection. Services conducted by brethren S. D. Hamm and David Miller, from the 100th Psalm.
JONAS BECK.

JONES.—At Vinton Grove, Iowa, August 6th, 1876, little Mary, daughter of George and Elizabeth Jones, aged 5 years 10 mos. and 8 days. Funeral by the writer to an attentive and sympathizing congregation. The parents of the above were once live members of the church, but alas! the tempter was too strong. May God help them to return.
E. TROXEL.

CRUMPACKER.—Died of Diphtheria on the 2nd of Nov., 1876, Mary Rebecca, daughter of Samuel and Mary Crumpacker, aged 4 years and 3 months.

MOOMAW.—Also on the 3rd of Nov., of the same disease, Iowa Ann, daughter of William P. and Lucinda N. Moomaw, aged 3 years and 4 months. Both funerals were preached on two succeeding days in the same house by brother Jonas Graybill.
B. C. MOOMAW.

STEWART.—Died in Jefferson, Green Co., Pa., Sept. 26th, 1876, sister Rachel F. Stewart, wife of M. Stewart and daughter of brother Samuel and sister Agnes Murry, aged 27 years and 6 months. Funeral text, "For me to live is Christ, but to die is gain."
P. WISE.

SHOEMAKER.—In the Squirrel Creek congregation, Wash Co., Ind., Sept. 3rd, 1876, of Asthma, brother Daniel

Shoemaker, aged 61 years 6 months and 11 days. Funeral services by David Bechtelheimer, from Job 14: 1.

SHELBY ARBUR.

PARIS.—In the Maquoketa District, Clinton Co., Iowa, Oct. 12th, 1876, infant daughter of friend John and Rebecca Paris, aged 5 weeks. Funeral discourse by the Brethren, from Matth. 19: 14.

ELIZABETH GABLE.

BASEHORE.—In the Newton Church District, Miami Co., Ohio, on the 16th of October, brother Benjamin Basehore, aged 84 years 8 months and 2 days.

HESS.—Also in the same District, Oct. 24th, 1876, brother John Hess, aged 30 years 9 months and 3 days.

SCHOFIELD.—Also in the Covington Church District, on the 31st of October, sister Mary Schofield, aged 59 years 6 months and 3 days. Funeral services of all the above by the Brethren.

SAMUEL MOHLER.

CLARK.—In the Ashland church, Ashland Co., Ohio, Oct. 3rd, 1876, brother D. S. Clark, son of friends Jesse and Hettie Clark, aged 40 years 4 months and 16 days. He leaves a widow and three small children and many friends to mourn their loss which we hope is his eternal gain. He lived for several years a consistent member of the Brethren church. His funeral was preached by the writer, assisted by brother P. D. Parker, from Amos 4: 12.

Not a Dye; makes harsh hair soft and silky cleanses the scalp from all impurities, causing the hair to grow where it has fallen off or become thin.

Can be applied by the hand as it does not stain the hand or soil the finest linc. As a Hair Dressing it is the most perfect the world has ever produced. The hair is renovated and strengthened, and natural color restored without the application of mineral substances.

Since the introduction of this truly valuable preparation into this country, it has been the wonder and admiration of all classes, as it has proved to be the only article that will absolutely without deception, restore gray hair to its original color, health, softness, lustre, and healthy, and produce hair on bald heads of its original growth and color.

This beautiful and fragrant perfume article is complete within itself, no washing preparation before or after its use, or application of any kind being required to obtain those desirable results.

HERE IS THE PROOF OF ITS

SUPERIOR EXCELLENCE.

Read this Home Certificate, testified to by Edward B. Garrigue, one of the most competent Druggists and Chemists of Philadelphia, an whose veracity none can doubt.

I am happy to add my testimony to the great value of the "London Hair Color Restorer," which restored my hair to its original color, and the hue appears to be permanent. I am satisfied that this preparation is nothing like a dye, but operates upon the secretions. It is also a beautiful hair dressing and promotes the growth. I purchased the first bottle from Edward B. Garrigue, druggist, Tenth and Coates streets, who can also testify my hair was quite gray when I commenced its use.

MRS. MILLER, No. 730 North Ninth St., Phila.

Dr. Swayne & Son—Respected friends: I have the pleasure to inform you that a lady of my acquaintance, Mrs. Miller, is delighted with the success of your "London Hair Color Restorer." Her hair was falling rapidly and quite gray. The color has been restored, the falling off entirely stopped and a new growth of hair is the result. H. B. GARRIGUES, Druggist, cor. Tenth and Coates, Phila.

BOSTON TESTIMONY.

July 22d, 1871.—Dr. Swayne & Son: Last winter, while in Trenton, N. J., I procured six bottles of London Hair Color Restorer, which I like very much, in fact better than anything I have used in the last nine years. If you please, send me one dozen bottles C. O. D., care of W. S. Fegler & Son druggists, No. 723 Tremont street, Boston. Respectfully yours,

ADA BAKER, No. 59 Rutland Square.

"London Hair Color Restorer and Dressing" has completely restored my hair to its original color and youthful beauty, and caused a rapid and luxuriant growth.

MRS. ANNIE MORRIS, No. 616 North Seventh street, Phila.

Dr. Dalton of Philadelphia, says of it: The London Hair Color Restorer is used very extensively among my patients and friends, as well as by myself. I therefore speak from experience.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

A Fragment.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To a Brother who is a living translation of 2 Cor. 9: 7.

The edible expression of your Christian sympathy went down the King's highway to day. May every particle be vitalized by the Holy Spirit, and come to second birth in exalted thoughts, holy purposes, and a sanctified life. I owe you a letter of thanks for your brotherly kindness. You have an enviable advantage over me. You can bathe yourself again and again in the luxury of Acts 20: 35. I have no doubt you have a glorious Cr. column in the chronicles of the great Registrar. The Secretary of Heaven keeps so accurate an account, that not a falling hair, or cup of water, is left out of the record. Neither is one sin omitted. Our very thoughts go into the Ledger of Jehovah, and will re-appear in the final judgment. Little things will then assume tremendous magnitude. The righteous will be surprised that Christ should put such a high value on their insignificant services; and the wicked will be amazed that their little failures and defects should bar the door of glory against them, and consign them forever to the companionship of devils, and the agonies of perdition. Matth. 25: 34—46. God accepts no moral cripples. "Without spot, without blemish:" this is the law of citizenship. The will and intent must be perfect, and the effort must be persistent and conscientious. "There is no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus." Rom. 8: 1. "If our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God." 1 John 3: 21. Thou art all fair, my love; there is no spot in thee." Sol. Song 4: 7. The wedlock of the soul must be complete. God accepts no divided heart, no partnership nuptials. It must be Sol. Song 2: 16, or nothing. It must be virgin love, an undefiled bridal. Sol. Song 1: 3, and 5: 2. If we do our best, our life will be bronzed and unwinsome enough; but the comeliness of perfect love transfigures it. Sol. Song 1: 5, 1 John 4: 18. We have a compassionate High Priest, a gracious Father, a tender Elder Brother, who is touched with the feeling of our infirmities. But he will not wink at heart defects. The best life is broken, but the root of being must be perfect. Ps. 51: 6, Matth. 5: 48. The Samaritan sorcerer's heart was not right in the sight of God. Acts 8: 21. It was not simply a blunder, but his purpose was diabolical. Judas Iscariot was a devil, not because he made a mistake, but because he sought the wrong, and did the evil with premeditation. Peter denied his Master with cursing and swearing, and yet lost not his title to the unfading inheritance, because his heart had no thought of endorsing the lie of his lips. He was only frightened out of his wits, and forgot both himself and his Lord. Sins great in the form may be forgiven, because the will was not in them wholly; while sins externally far less heinous are unpardonable, because the entire soul gives its consent. When one unpardonable sin is committed, then all sins henceforward are without atonement. So long as there is anything in the heart that does not go with the sin, there is hope. But as soon as sin has the full and unresisting amen of the will, there is no more sacrifice for sin. Heb. 10: 26. I do not believe that the Holy Ghost leaves any soul to reprobation so long as there is a single spark of possibility to good left. The Sanctuary was left unto the Jews desolate only after their deliberate and malicious rejection of the final offer of mercy. Luke 13: 34, 35. God is love, and his very love compels him to punish sin. What does He love but Righteousness? and this leaves him no choice whether to punish sin or not. If He could allow sin to share the rewards of holiness, He would not be God. There are multitudes who indulge in looseness of life, and comfort themselves with the thought that because God is Love, therefore they may at last be treated with clemency. But they forget that His love is the very reason why they can not be saved. God loves the sinner in his sins because of his constitution, and because the repulsions of His Divine Nature have been appeased in the sacrifice of His Son. But this love is not salvation until the sinner obtains that righteousness by which sin has been atoned. This he cannot get without faith, and faith he cannot have before he becomes righteous himself. There is so much said and written about salvation by faith, that the great truth is well nigh excluded from Christendom that we must first have a heart in perfect agreement with righteousness before we CAN believe. So long as this agreement remains, our faith has a subjective ground as well as an objective support; and just so soon as it fails, the Objective is of no avail because the personal conditions for its appropriation are wanting. Righteousness is the essence of religion, and the secret of holy joy. I have known white-headed saints of three score and ten as deeply swallowed up in condemnation and despair by the use of tobacco, as any soul ever was by drunkenness or adultery. As soon as the sense of right is invaded, all Christian joy is gone. This may be done at the table and in the markethouse no less than at the faro and in the house which is the gate of hell. Righteousness is the solid pearl of which God's Throne is built.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Murmuring.

BY NOAH LONGENECKER.

If every reader of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN would profit by the lesson contained in the article on discontent, which appeared a few weeks ago, we would all receive the worth of our subscription money; but for fear we should forget the lesson too soon, I will present a few lines on the above subject, which is but an out crop of the sin of discontent. Discontent is a sin which we are all, naturally, prone to. Had our federal head been content in his pristine state, he no doubt would not have coveted another; but no sooner had satan presented this bait to man than he received it, and put forth his hand to partake of the forbidden fruit, and thus in the end lost all. We are hard to please. It is not possible for any one to please us. We have an illustration of it in John the Baptist and Christ. "John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say, he hath a devil." Surely then if one should come eating and drinking, he would please; but not so, for "the Son of man came eating and drinking, and they say, behold a man gluttonous, and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners." To be content we know not by nature. It is a lesson that we all need to learn. Even Paul had to learn it. He says, "I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content." Godliness is good; but it is only "godliness with contentment" that "is great gain." But how few of us possess this to that degree which we should! This being the case, how necessary the admonition to "do all things without murmurings." Murmuring is a sin of no small magnitude. Paul warns us against it by referring us to the ensamples of the children of Israel. He says, "neither murmur ye, as some of them also murmured, and were destroyed of the destroyer."

Murmuring nearly always proved fatal to the children of Israel in the wilderness; and the severity with which God punished them for it, should be a warning to us all not to "fall after the same example of unbelief." God did not punish them so severely for their first murmuring, from the fact that they were, to some extent, ignorant of its sinfulness before God. But after this it was otherwise. Let us note a few of the ensamples: "When the people complained, it displeased the Lord; and the Lord heard it, and his anger was kindled, and the fire of the Lord burned among them, and consumed them that were in the uttermost parts of the camp." One would suppose that they would not soon forget this warning; but not so, for they soon complained that they had no meat to eat. "And the anger of the Lord was kindled greatly;" yea, "the wrath of the Lord was kindled against the people, and the Lord smote the people with a very great plague." Another remarkable ensample of their murmuring was at the report of the spies which had been sent to spy out Canaan. "All the children of Israel murmured against Moses and against Aaron." Their murmurings arose to such a height that if a Joshua and Caleb would still them, they were in danger of being stoned. They provoked the Lord to such an extent that He was about to "smite them with the pestilence, and disinherit them." What would have been the end of them, if they had no mediator? Nevertheless, those men who brought up the evil and slanderous report of the land of Canaan "died by the plague before the Lord;" and the whole congregation which murmured died and were consumed in the wilderness. Will this suffice to restrain them from their murmuring? Verily not. Here they murmur, and are destroyed by fiery serpents; there they complain, and the earth opens and swallows them up, and fire comes out from the Lord and consumes them. Awful! but still their murmurings continue. Considering all the murmurings of the children of Israel, and the awful punishments inflicted on them for the same, well may Paul say, "neither murmur ye, as some of them also murmured." Do we profit by these ensamples, and obey the injunction of Paul? If we are to judge the tree by his fruit, we answer no.

"Were halt the breath that's vainly spent," in the family circle by the way of murmuring.

"To heaven in supplication sent,
Our cheerful song would oft'ner be,
Hear what the Lord has done for me."

But murmuring is not confined to the family circle. It is a, if not the, prevailing sin of ecclesiastical and civil bodies. There may have been a time in America when it could be said, "the times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent" of the exceeding sinfulness of murmuring. I know Israel's destruction was awful; but Christ says unto us, "except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." Would that humanity would "do all things without murmurings and disputings." Phil. 2:14.

I thought of closing my remarks here, but I will add a few thoughts contained in the epistle of Jude. Jude informs us that "there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ. * * * * And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him. These are murmurers, complainers, &c. In the face of such punishments as those of the children of Israel for their murmurings; and the plain commands to profit by their ensamples, and to obtain from murmurings, as well as the awful doom that Jude predicts on all murmurers and complainers, how dare we presume on God's mercy, while we continue to provoke his justice by our continual murmurings of his divine providence?"

A Letter From Bro. and Sister Knisley.

On the 13th of Nov., my wife and I boarded the train at Plymouth, at 6 o'clock A. M., and arrived at Dr. Fahney's in Chicago about 10 o'clock same day. We found them all well, and were kindly received. We also visited Bro. Holsinger and found them all well. Bro. Holsinger and I went one evening to hear Moody preach, and Sankey sing. Sankey is a great singer, but I have heard better preaching by our brethren than Moody did on this occasion, because he told some things that are not Gospel. I never saw as many people at one meeting. There were some six thousand present, and they told me there has been as many more present at one time.

We remained in the City until Saturday the 18th, when we started home and arrived there in the evening. The next day, (Sabbath) not being well, and our meeting being at some distance, I remained at home. About noon we had a very pleasant visit from ten or twelve of our Sabbath School scholars. The oldest was not over sixteen years old and among them five belong to the church. We never enjoyed a visit better. We had many questions to ask, and read from the YOUNG DISCIPLE. The oldest of the five is going to get subscribers for it. They all seem to like the paper, but would like to have it weekly. Brethren and sisters how pleasant is the society of the Young, and how careful we should be to feed the lambs, and watch over them as a hen watches over her brood. I think Christians will do so. We should certainly be very much concerned about the young. Christian fathers and mothers should be concerned about their children, and talk much to them about Jesus. If we are kind and good, our children will not be afraid of us. This I know by experience, for I had a kind mother who often talked to me about heavenly things. Parents, let us all try to do better. Let us subscribe for the Brethren's papers for our children to read. Then too, try to get them to read the Bible, read verse about with them. In this way our children may become rich towards God.

From Dunning's Creek, Pa.

Our Communion meeting on the 27th of October was held in our new meeting house, near brother John Holsinger's, who is our bishop and is a father to us indeed. The time appointed to commence our meeting was 4 o'clock, and previous to the appointed hour, six young converts were baptized. The attendance was large. In the evening all the seats were occupied and both aisles crowded, and a number outside. Some of these were of the baser sort, as they kept running in and out and annoyed the meeting. There was preaching the next day, also on Saturday evening, Sunday, Sunday evening and Monday forenoon, after which eight more were baptized. Since then three more were baptized, making in all seventeen. Saints and angels were made to rejoice and sinners and the devil to tremble. The principle speakers present, were Brice Sell from Blair Co., and Joseph Burkhart, from Cambria Co. There were also some others present. The weather was pleasant the first evening, but after that rather gloomy and sometimes raining.

Of those that were baptized nine were probably under twenty years. A number of others expressed themselves willing so far as the faith is concerned, but there are other things in the way. May the Lord help them to drop these trifling excuses and come to Christ.

The health in general in this community is good. We have had a very moderate Fall until within a few days, we are having some rough weather. Times in this locality are apparently brightening up a little.

I am doing all I can to get subscribers to your paper, and when I get any I hand them to Bro. John B. Miller, your agent.

ALBERT BLACKBURN.

The Consolidation.

Editors of P. C. and P.,—

I wish to say to you that the consolidation of your papers will certainly meet the approbation of all the readers of both papers, and not only these, but also those that have been getting only one of the papers. After the Companion and Visitor were consolidated, now called the Primitive Christian, I worked for it, thinking that in a short time we would have but one paper. But I became somewhat discouraged when I heard that we were to have another one in the West called The Brethren at Work, gotten up by brethren from whom I loved to hear through your columns. There was also a considerable Tract Fund raised through your papers. But now, in due season comes out the consolidated paper which ought to give us all fresh courage. Now let the agents of the Pilgrim work and the agents of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN work, and then we will have what we need, a good church paper. Brethren and sisters let us all work, let the elders of the different districts work, or see that some brethren are at work in every church. And at the same time if there be any poor members that would like to read the paper their wants should be supplied. I feel that we need a good paper, one that holds forth the true doctrine of the Bible. A good many of our brethren and sisters have a long distance to preaching, and others cannot go on account of being delicate in health. Such should have a paper of this kind. Then too, our papers are read by others, besides members, and some that perhaps, never heard the Brethren preach, and therefore they should reflect the principles and doctrines of the church.

Now brethren and sisters let me entreat you once more to all put your shoulders to the wheel and work for the enlarged paper, and by so doing I think you will be working for the Lord. Let us ever have the good cause at heart and labor together and finally we will reap the reward.

JOHN R. DELINGER.

Gleanings and Gittings.

—Bro. J. P. Moomaw of Purple Cane, Dodge Co., Neb., says: Our crops were partly destroyed by the grasshoppers again this year, but our little church is still increasing. Two were added by baptism at our love-feast. We had a good meeting. The health is good and the weather is fine.

—Bro. E. W. Flora of Willow Springs, Kansas, says: We have fine weather this Fall. Wheat looks remarkably well—never saw it better. The grasshoppers did but little damage in Willow Springs, but west of us from four to six miles, there were a great many. They destroyed whole fields of wheat and rye. East of us there were but few. Corn is good. Potatoes are not a heavy crop, neither is there a great deal of fruit. The church is in a fair condition.

—Bro. John Studabaker, writing from South English Iowa, says: I have traveled through northern Illinois and different counties in Iowa, have visited many brethren, attended four communion meetings and the district meeting of southern Iowa. Found the brethren generally prospering and rich in the faith. Several persons were added to the church by baptism. I expect to move to Freeport Ill. We have already established our business at that point, and are prepared to fill orders for goods. Any of the brethren or friends desiring goods can have them ordered from me by addressing me at Freeport, Ill.

Brother A. Berkeybile of Delta, Ohio, says:

The consolidation of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN and the PILGRIM so far as heard from, meets the hearty approval of all, hence we feel encouraged to solicit subscribers. We have started the work and it looks encouraging. We will do the best we can for you. Why not have but one church paper? The Annual Meeting says it is an individual enterprise, but then as it concerns the whole church we think it is different to other enterprises. If all could afford to patronize the many papers we would not have a word to say, but such is not the case. We desire to have all the good that is done in the brotherhood, all the obituaries, &c., to reach every family.

—A brother of Carleton, Nebraska, sends us $6 for the Danish Fund, $4 for the Poor Fund, $4 for the Stein Fund, and annexes the following remarks: "I would say that I have been an inveterate othever and smoker for over fifteen years, and like many of my brethren, said I could not give up the habit, but when I remembered how my Master denied himself the sustenance of life forty days in the wilderness for me, could I not deny myself of this hurtful lust for him, was a query that presented itself. I quit and through Christ have gained the victory. I have been free from this servitude for more than a year. If Christ has made us free we are free indeed. My prayer is that all of my dear brethren who have thus been in bondage, may obtain this freedom.

The Brethren of the Ashland church, Ashland Co., Ohio, expect to commence a series of meetings at the Dickey meeting, house Dec. 17th, 1876, to which meeting we extend a hearty invitation to all that desire to be with us at that time. Now to our ministering brethren we would say, brethren come and help us.

J. D. PARKER.

My Visit to Ohio.

In compliance to arrangements made, my sister Missouri Fitzgerald and myself, started for Ohio October 20th, to attend several communion meetings in Darke and surrounding counties. We arrived at Dayton the same evening and was there met by brother George Garver, who conveyed us out to his house where we were cared for in the kindest manner. Next morning in company with brother and sister Garver, we visited the Soldier's Home, and I must say I was surprised to see the extensive and beautiful grounds and improvements that I have witnessed, and for beauty, neatness, order and system about all of the arrangements, I think it cannot be surpassed. There were over three thousand of those poor maimed creatures who had been led into an unholy warfare, and they must now spend the rest of their lives, some destitute of an arm, others of a leg, or in some way badly injured. The greatest object of sympathy I saw was one perfectly blind. He was sitting making bead work. He had several fancy articles thus formed. There he sat selecting his beads of different colors by the feel, and this brought the thought to my mind that although he had been deprived of the sense of sight, God in his goodness had made the sense of feeling so much more acute, that this poor solitary being could fill up his time and amuse himself by making himself useful in this way. Again I thought of the goodness of our God in putting into the hearts of the people to provide this beautiful home for these suffering beings. In the library of the home I noticed many donations that had been made by the devoted mother of Lieutenant Putnam, a promising young man brought to an early grave by "man's cruelty to man." It is well that man cannot rule the whole destiny of man, and that there is a good and merciful being that knows all of our thoughts and actions, and has promised to reward every one according to the deeds done in the body.

After looking through this charitable institution we returned to Dayton, and took the train for Manchester. There we were met by brother George V. Siber, who took us home with him. We there found a kind family. His wife, sister Siber, is a woman of superior qualities and a good sister. On Sunday evening brother Siber and his wife went with us to brother Jesse Stutsman's. Here again we were kindly received and well cared for. My sister was taken sick and was unable to proceed any farther. On Monday, in company with brethren Siber and Stutsman and sister Siber, I went to the Oakland communion meeting. Here I met with about two hundred brethren and sisters, and I was impressed with the idea as I noticed the bonds of union that existed among these loving brethren and sisters, that our blessed Redeemer knew when he instituted the ordinance of feet washing, the supper, and communion, just what it took to bind his people together in Christian charity and fellowship. How strange the professors of other sects cannot see this, and that they will allow themselves to be so blinded by their carnal natures. Oh! how I pity them, since God in his mercy has revealed to me these important truths in his holy word. After this meeting we returned to brother Stutsman's, found my sister some better. We moved her to brother William Cassel's, and there she became so sick that we found it would not do for her to ride about any more. The next day again in company with brother and sister Siber, I went to the River church communion meeting. Here again I was permitted to enjoy the pleasure of practicing this holy ordinance with about three hundred brethren and sisters. Here I met several of the brethren and sisters that had visited Kentucky, and it was truly a joyful meeting.

The next meeting we attended was at the Covington meeting house. Here I found something over four hundred brethren and sisters. Here again we practiced the holy ordinances as instituted by one blessed Redeemer when he was preparing to offer himself for our sins. With what feelings of humility should we go through this ordinance, remembering his words, If I your Lord and Master do these things, certainly we as his followers and people, should submit to it and be thankful that he has ordained something that will bring us to humility, Christian love and holiness. After the Covington meeting was over I was conveyed back to brother Cassel's by brother Enoch Beery; found sister Missouri better, and am grateful to the Giver of every good and perfect gift, for placing her among such kind friends during her illness. I next went to the Holler's communion meeting near Dayton. Here again we practiced this holy ordinance that is so well calculated to keep each member humble, loving and kind. Everything was so different from the cold, haughty manner in which the meetings are carried on in Kentucky, that I was deeply impressed with the idea that if some of our good people living here could attend some of these meetings and see the way these people live, their quiet, contented manners, they could not help but acknowledge they were controlled by a different spirit, and as our Savior went about doing good while on earth, we, if we have the Spirit of Christ, and are his true followers, should practice the same things that he did while here on earth.

At the Holler's meeting I again met the brethren and sisters from Clark county, those that visited Kentucky and some others. I went from there home with them and stayed several days visiting around among them, found all, without any exception, actuated by the same spirit which very fully convinced me that the church of the Brethren must come very near the practices of the primitive church in ancient times, if I had had any doubts before, this experience would have entirely removed them. My sympathies were drawn out for the minister's wives. I fear these noble-hearted sisters are not rightly appreciated, while their husbands are out on missions of love. These dear sisters have the whole burden of their families, their household duties to perform, together with their husband's affairs to attend to. There is indeed a weighty responsibility. As our works will bring their reward, great will be the reward of these loving sisters. May the Lord bless them, and I shall take this opportunity of thanking them for their kindness to my sister and myself, and if my humble prayers can avail anything they will be given that the choicest of heaven's blessings may rest upon them.

In some few of the brethren's houses I found rather more style than I anticipated from what I had learned from our old brethren. Not to place myself as a critic of other people's matters, but simply to give my opinion. I thought I noticed a little more restlessness among these than the other brethren. Among those that were living less in conformity to the ways of the world, there seemed to be a struggle, the yoke appeared to be burdensome; there was something yet to be learned of Jesus before the yoke could become light, while others that had submitted to the teachings of the Scriptures, and had put on the whole armor of Christ, were contented, trusting and happy. My dear brethren, it takes this to fight successfully. It will never do to fight with a part of the armor. We will certainly be vanquished by the enemy. I have found in my own experience the more I resist the influence of the Divine Spirit, the easier I am led into temptation, and I am thoroughly convinced we cannot serve two masters. If our aim in being Christians is to obtain a position in the world, we will certainly fail, as God will not be mocked, and it is a device of the wicked one to draw us from the faith. Let us be like one of old who said, "Let others do as they will, as for me and my house we will serve the Lord our God." My impression has long been that we should adorn our profession with a meek and a quiet spirit linked together with good works and strict observance of all the commands given in the holy Scriptures. By this course of life we not only secure our happiness here, but we are promised eternal happiness beyond the grave. It is a small sacrifice to make to gain so much.

Before closing this article, I wish to tender my sincere thanks to the brethren and sisters in Southern Ohio for their love and kindness to me during my visit among them, and I shall try to prove my gratitude by exerting myself in the cause of our blessed Master, believing that would be a more acceptable compensation than I could in any other way bestow, as I think the salvation of souls is nearest their hearts, not forgetting to look above from whence every good gift comes. I believe it is the Holy Spirit that has awakened a sympathy for the poor deluded souls of Kentucky in your noble bosoms, and if I can be an humble instrument in his hands of bringing some things right where I see so much wrong, happy shall I be. I have again resumed my home duties, and I crave an interest in your prayers that I may be able to fulfill them faithfully in the sphere the great Ruler of the Universe has placed me.

9. Observe the above rules, and you will expedite business, save us from much trouble, and yourselves and our subscribers from disappointments and vexation.

THE UNION OF BUSINESS AND RELIGION.

Not slothful in business; fervent in prayer; serving the Lord. Rom. 12: 11.

There is an allusion here to a union important, desirable, and certainly possible, or it would not be presented among the practical duties inculcated by the apostle in the closing part of the epistle in which it occurs. Business and religion are too often looked upon as in opposition to one another. They are by no means necessarily so. According to the present organization of things in the world, business is necessary that the designs of God may be answered in the promotion of the varied interests of man. The earth is to be cultivated, and the productions of one locality exchanged for those of another; this gives rise to trade and commerce. Various kinds of mechanism are both useful and necessary for the promotion of our comfort and safety. The arts and sciences, too, though often misapplied, may be made conducive to the well being and enjoyments of society. Occasion is therefore afforded for many kinds of business. And while there may be some kinds of business that are neither becoming to the Christian character, nor consistent with Christian principles, there are many that are, and as a matter of course the real and faithful Christian will only follow that kind which is consistent with his holy profession.

As a large proportion of professing Christians have always belonged to the lower classes of society, and these being necessitated to follow some business for procuring the comforts or necessities of life, the apostolic admonition "not slothful in business" seemed to be necessary. Business however is by no means confined to the lower classes of society. Wealthy men or capitalists, frequently are men of business, though they do not perform the actual labor. And the admonition applies also to them. It is of ten remarked that however good a business may be, if it is not properly attended to there may no profits arise from it; but on the contrary, it may, through a want of proper attention and judicious management, prove to be a losing business to the party conducting it. And this happening to a Christian, would be a cause of perplexity and embarrassment to him. And not only so, but it might prevent him from meeting his obligations and paying his debts, thus injuring his Christian character; and then would follow dishonor to his Christian profession. And all this would follow from a want of proper attention being given to his business. Hence the propriety of the admonition, "not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord." It is not only the loss of money, but the loss of Christian enjoyment, and even the loss of the soul, that may be caused by a neglect of business. But diligence in business, if it is a lawful one, and followed to the glory of God as it will be by the Christian, may prove remunerative to him who engages in it, and thus afford him the pecuniary means he may need to answer his own wants, and enable him also to contribute to the supplying of the wants of others, and by multiplying his facilities for usefulness, multiply his pleasures arising from that source.

But diligence in business is to be accompanied by fervency in spirit in serving the Lord. It is not at all uncommon to find Christians diligent in business. But it is not so common to find those who are diligent in business, also fervent in spirit in serving the Lord. These however should always go together. And the Christian being careful to keep them together, will find that they will help each other. And they also may be so used as to make them both promote the general Christian character. It often happens that diligence in business is found with coldness and lukewarmness in religion, rather than with fervency and zeal. And this will likely be the case if the Christian man of business does not labor with as much diligence to promote his spiritual interests, as he does to promote his temporal.

If the Christian man of business would maintain fervency of spirit in serving the Lord, while he is diligent in business, as the apostle makes it his duty to do, he must be as regular and persevering in his devotional exercises as in his business affairs. He must feel that he is serving God when he is engaged in his lawful business, as well as when he is engaged in his devotional duties. The apostle when giving directions to servants in regard to their duties, uses the following language: "Servants, obey in all things your masters according to the flesh; not with eye service, as men pleasers; but in singleness of heart, fearing God: and whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men; knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance: for ye serve the Lord Christ." Col. 3: 22—24. If Christian servants are serving the Lord when performing the lawful duties which they owe to their masters, it would seem to follow as a just inference that Christian masters are serving the Lord when performing their duties of a temporal or business character.

The Christian man of business should then feel that he is the Lord's servant at all times, and that he is serving the Lord in all that he does. And he should endeavor to maintain continually not only the spirit of a Christian, but also the spirit of devotion. In doing this, he will see the propriety and necessity, of cultivating a prayerful state of mind at all times. And this is probably what the apostle means, when he commands Christians to "pray without ceasing." 1 Thess. 5: 17. The Christian will "begin the day with God." Before he goes out in the morning to enter upon the labors of the day, and to encounter the temptations and trials of the day, he will have his devotional exercises, and seek divine protection, strength and guidance. And oftentimes when at work or at rest, he may lift his heart to God in prayerful thoughts and desires. This is called ejaculatory prayer, and means prayer uttered in short sentences. And it is a good practice for Christians to carry the Scriptures with them, and when they have a few minutes leisure they can read a few verses, and this will afford them subject-matter for holy thought, and will have a tendency to keep the mind on heavenly things, and to keep up a Christian feeling.

And by pursuing a course something like that suggested in the last paragraph, the Christian can be diligent in business, while he is "fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." He can carry a Christian feeling with him at all times, and have the advantage of it in his business to assist him, and under the protection of such a state of mind, "the care of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches" will not choke the divine plant of righteousness, which has been planted in his heart, and render it unfruitful, as is often done when business is not accompanied and sanctified by divine grace.

It is said that in the old market-towns of England there were crosses erected by the people, as if they would by this beautiful and expressive symbol, teach the buyers and sellers not to forget the cross and the Christian rules of life connected with it, when transacting their business. And the Israelites were commanded to preserve the remembrance of God's law, that they might never forget it, but always have it before them. They were directed as follows: "And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes. And thou shalt write them upon the posts of thy house, and on thy gates." Deut. 6: 8, 9. Such were the precautions that they were to use that they might not forget the duties enjoined upon them by the divine law, but have those duties before them at all times, and be as the righteous may be, and as they are commanded to be, "in the fear of the Lord all the day long." Prov. 23: 17.

"Take thy first walk with God!
Let him go forth with thee;
By stream or sea or mountain path,
Seek still his company."

THE READING OF THE BIBLE ONLY—A SUGGESTION.

A brother and subscriber writes as follows: "Dear brother Quinter, don't send me the paper for 1877, as I have neglected to read the scriptures by reading the papers; so I want to read the Bible and Testament, and study them this next year." One of the objects of a Christian Journal is to lead the reader to the Bible. And did we not think that this is the tendency of such a journal, we could not encourage it, much less assist in publishing it. The effect of Christian Journalism upon Christians should be similar to the effects of preaching. Sometimes when the minister opens and explains some text of Scripture, and brings out the precious pearls of truth, it endears the sacred volume to the Christian hearer, and he forms a new resolution to study the Bible more diligently than he has ever done. 2. Sometimes in hearing passages of Scripture explained by the ministers, the hearer has a clearer and more correct view of such passages than he previously had, presented unto him. So we are glad to know it often is in reading explanations and applications of texts of Scriptures in our Christian papers. Such has been our experience. We love to read the Scriptures, and we think that love has been increased rather than diminished by reading good Christian literature. The reading of the Scriptures is one of the Christian duties. And we want promptly to this duty, as well as to others, and we think the reading of Christian literature to a proper degree, and with a proper object in view, will prompt to this duty. As a general rule, we think it is not they who read nothing but the Bible, that read it most, or understand it the best.

DELAY IN SENDING OUT ALMANACS.

Near the beginning of the present month we received a notice from the publishers of our Almanacs that 2,000 had been shipped to us, but to the time of our writing, which is the 14th, they have not been received. We have been looking anxiously for them, and feel disappointed and mortified that there has been so much delay in them reaching us. We hope by the time this number of the paper will reach our subscribers, the Almanacs will also reach them. As soon as we receive them we will fill the orders on hand.

P. S. All large orders are being filled directly from place of publication, and no doubt have reached the persons who ordered them before this. We are making every effort to have all orders filled at the earliest possible time.

THE CLOSE OF THE VOLUME.

This being the last number of the present volume of both the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN and the PILGRIM, we would once more request all the subscribers to renew their subscriptions to the consolidated paper under the new arrangement. We have heretofore given our readers a cheap, and we have reason to believe, to our readers in general, an acceptable paper. We shall hereafter give them a cheaper, because we shall give them a larger paper. We also indulge the hope that we shall be able to give them a better paper. We shall at least use our utmost endeavor to do so.

For the past liberal patronage given us, we are very thankful, and shall be equally so for the continued patronage we solicit.

THE FIRST NUMBER OF THE NEXT VOLUME.

This number of our paper not having the usual amount of reading matter in it, owing to the circumstance that the indexes to the two papers are given in it, we shall for this and other reasons, send the first number of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN in its consolidated form, to all the present subscribers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN and PILGRIM. And we hope to have the pleasure of continuing to send our paper to our old subscribers and also to many new ones.

Brother J. D. Parker of Ashland, Ohio says: This part of the Master's fold has suffered much from the enemy during the last few years. The wolf has made inroads upon us, seeking the very life of God's chosen ones. Dark clouds have been hanging over us, but the clear sky is beginning to appear, for which we "thank God and take courage." We can now look forward into the dim vista of the future with a brighter hope and fairer prospects. With delight we report a successful meeting held on the North Eastern border of our territory in the Snowberger meeting house. Brethren D. N. Workman and Isaac Killheiner went there on the eve of Nov. 18th, and returned on the 20th, leaving appointments for the next Saturday evening and Sabbath morning. The weather was quite unfavorable, yet the attendance was good, and as brother Workman lifted his strong voice in defence of the pure gospel, the Lord made bare his arm in the rescue of five precious souls, and aroused many others from the lethargy of sin. The church had several accessions within the past year. May the Lord continue the work until all are safe in the fold of Jesus above. Brethren, let us "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," presenting an undivided front to the enemy, ever hearkening unto the voice of the Good Shepherd, and we shall be safe though ten thousand wolves prowl around the fold.

OBITUARIES.

FISHER—Nancy, wife of Wm. Fisher, and daughter of Peter and sister Sallie Fike, was born Jan. 15th, 1856, and died Nov. 25th, 1876, aged 20 years, 10 months, and 10 days. She had been confined four weeks when she died. The funeral was preached in the house of the deceased in the Cov., Garrett Co., Md., by Jeremiah Seeghly and the writer from Matt. 24: 42, 43, 44.

BOWERSOX—In the Macoupin Creek congregation, Macoupin Co., Ill., Oct. 17, '76, brother Jacob Bowersox, aged 73 years, and 2 days.

The subject of this notice was sick just three weeks. Disease, Gangrene. He suffered until the morning of the 17th when the messenger death summoned him, and he went the way of all the earth. We think he could say like one of old, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day." He leaves a widow and a family of grown children to mourn their loss, but we think their loss will be his eternal gain. Funeral occasion by the brethren.

D. B. STUBABAKER.

MYERS—In the Washington Creek Church, Kansas, Oct. 23rd, '76, John Myers, aged 19 years, 7 months and 12 days. Disease inflammation of the stomach and bowels and typhoid fever.

The deceased was a son of brother George and sister Nancy Myers. His sufferings were indescribable. He was from home near Topeka, Kansas, while ill. Father was sent for and when he saw him he said, "Father, do you think I can die happy?" Father replies, "I do not know, John, that is between you and your God." The son answered, "Father, I know I have not done what I ought, but I have not been a very bad boy, and I think there is a chance for me." Then he prayed earnestly for God to accept of him for Jesus' sake. He desired his father and all these in whom he had confidence to pray with him. He said he was willing to die and that he did not want to get well. He was in his right mind about all the time, telling his sisters and brothers that they would soon meet in that blessed world above.

His father, by his request, took his remains home to his mother. A short funeral discourse was delivered by the writer to a large number of friends and brethren from John 11: 25.

JAMES E. HILKEY.

LAMBERT—On the 9th of October, '76, in Stony Creek township, Somerset Co., Pa., Burtha May, daughter of K. L. and Susan E. Lambert, aged 4 years, 8 months and 12 days. Funeral discourse by Rev. J. H. Walterick, from 1 Cor. 7: 29. "But this I say, brethren, the time is short."

JOSEPH CALILE.

KNOBLOCK—In the Union District, Marshall Co., Ind., Nov. 3rd, '76, Sarah L., daughter of Washington and Rebecca Knoblock, aged 19 years, 7 months and 5 days.

Sarah was highly respected by everybody that knew her. She was quite an example to the young in morality. She was never found associating in bad company and before she died she exhorted all to meet her in heaven. Many tears were shed around her dying bed. She said she was going to meet loved ones that had gone before. Oh, may God enable all that heard her, to heed the instructions and prepare to meet her in heaven. Funeral discourse from John 11: 25, 26, to a large concourse of people.

ADAM APPELMAN.

FORD—In the Clover Creek church, Blair Co., Pa., Nov. 27, '76, of Typhoid fever, sister Magdalene, wife of brother Simon Ford and daughter of brother Christian and sister Magdalene Brumbaugh, aged 22 years, 7 months and 7 days. She bore her illness of two weeks with christian fortitude and expressed a willingness to depart.

She leaves a sorrowing husband and two children and many friends to mourn their loss which we have reason to hope is her great gain. Occasion improved by the brethren from Rev. 14: 13 to a large concourse of people.

T. B. MADDOCKS.

DOTTS—Nov. 8th, 1876, in Tuscarawas Co., Ohio, sister Susan Dotts, aged 43 years, 8 months and 11 days. Disease cancer of the breast. The deceased was baptized last June by the writer, and had, during the summer, suffered a great deal, yet bore her sufferings with christian fortitude and we fondly hope is now enjoying the rest of God's chosen ones. Funeral occasion improved by the writer, from Rev. 14: 13.

Wm. JOHNSON.

ROSENBERGER—In the Sugar Ridge congregation, Hancock Co., Ohio, of Typhoid Pneumonia, Eld. Daniel Rosenberger, aged 61 years, 2 months and 15 days.

He was respected both in and out of the church. He leaves a widow and 7 children, (all in the church) to mourn their loss, but we all feel assured that our loss is his great and eternal gain. Funeral occasion improved by Eld. J. P. Ebersole and the writer to a large and sympathizing congregation.

L. H. DICKEY.

MOHLER—Oct. 9th, 1876, Within the District of the Lower Cumberland Church, Cumberland Co., Pa., of abscess in the side of the abdomen; Solomon Mohler, aged 61 years, 9 months and 16 days.

The deceased was extensively known throughout the Brotherhood. Many of the brethren have shared largely of his hospitality, and the church and the neighborhood lose a benevolent friend. The widowed sister, the son, three daughters and grand-children mourn their loss, in which the church and the neighbors earnestly condole. Religious exorcises by Wro. Joseph Shery, and brother S. R. Zug, from Job 14: 1, 2.

TRIMMER—In the Lower Conawaga church, York Co., Pa., Nov. 6th, '76, brother Samuel B. Trimmer, aged 44 years, 6 months and 19 days. Funeral services by the brethren from 2 Cor. 4: 16.

HIMES—In the Lower Cumberland Church, Cumb. Co., Pa., Nov. 11th, 1876, of Consumption, sister Lydia Himes, aged 70 years, 11 months and 12 days. Funeral services by the brethren from 2 Cor. 4: 16.

The sister was a consistent member of the Church and very highly respected by all that knew her. She left a sorrowing and affectionate husband, possessing very pleasant and attractive qualities, though out of the church. God have mercy on him. She left nine children, thirty-seven grand-children and two great-grand-children. "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth" A. BEELMAN.

TILTON—In the Coventry church, Chester Co., Pa., Nov. 20th, '76, sister Mary, relict of the late John Tilton, aged 66 years, 4 months and 13 days.

The solemn occasion was improved to a large congregation by brethren John R. Price and Jacob Conner, from Isaiah 38: 1; "Set thy house in order, for thou shalt die and not live." The remains were interred in the Brethren's burying ground near by, beside her husband, there to await the resurrection morn, then to come forth robed in white to meet the Lord. Her affliction was marked by a patient submission to her heavenly Father's will. Her humility, obedience, and loving trust comfort the hearts of her mourning children, friends and brethren and sisters that she has washed her robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, and that if faithful they will one day meet her in that better land where parting is no more.

MAY—Died within the bounds of the Springfield church, in Sufferd, Portage Co., Ohio, Sept. 24, '76; brother John May, aged 30 years; 10 months and 9 days.

He was sick only five days. Disease, Typhoid fever. He leaves a young widow and two children to mourn their loss. Funeral occasion improved at the Springfield meeting house by brethren David Young and David Bower to a large and sympathizing audience, from John 3: 16; 17.

JACOB MISHLER.

STUDABAKER—In the Washington Creek District, Douglass Co., Kansas, Oct. 23, 1875, of Lung fever, sister Sarah, wife of brother Jacob Studabaker, and daughter of brother Moses and sister Barbara Flory; aged 21 years, 6 months and 7 days. She leaves a child one year old, a kind husband and many relatives and friends to mourn their loss. She was a kind wife, a devoted Christian and respected by all. She was ready to go at her Master's call. Services by Elds. P. Brubaker and I. Harshey.

KINSEY—In Mechanicsburg, Pa., in the Lower Cumberland church, sister Nancy Kinsey, aged 83 years, 9 months and 20 days. Funeral services from John 11: 25, by M. Miller and friend Rink of the Methodist Church. The deceased was never married, came to Mechanicsburg in 1818, and was a consistent member of the church for many years.

The Primitive Christian.

is published every Tuesday at $1.60 a year postage included.

This Christian journal is devoted to the defense and promotion of Primitive Christianity, as held and practiced by the Church of the Brethren, or German Baptists.

They accept the New Testament as the only proper rule of faith and practice, and hold to the observance of all its commandments and doctrines; among which are Faith, Repentance, Baptism by True Immersion, Prayer, the Washing of the Saints' Feet, the Lord's Supper, the Communion, Non-Resistance, Non-Conformity to the world, and the Perfecting of Holiness in the fear of the Lord.

As space will permit, some attention will be given to such secular matters as may be judged instructive to our readers.

Subscriptions may begin at any time. For urther particulars send for a specimen number.
